Ver. 9. Let not a widow be taken into the number, &c.] That is, of widows, to be maintained by the church; tho' ſome chuſe to underſtand theſe words of the number of ſuch who were made deaconeſſes, and had the care of the poor widows of the church committed to them; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, if a widow be choſen a deaconneſs; but the former ſenſe is beſt, for it appears from ver. 16. that the Apoſtle is ſtill ſpeaking of widows to be relieved: now ſuch were not to be taken under the church's care for relief, under threeſcore years old; for under this age it might be ſuppoſed they would marry, and ſo not be deſolate, but would have huſbands to provide for them; or they might be capable of labour, and ſo of taking care of themſelves. The age of ſixty years was by the Jews [x] reckoned, זקנה, old age, but not under. Having been the wife of one man; that is, at one time; for ſecond marriages are not hereby condemned, for this would be to condemn what the Apoſtle elſewhere allows, Rom. vii. 2, 3. Nor is the ſenſe only, that ſhe ſhould be one who never had more huſbands than one at once; for this was not uſual for women to have more huſbands than one, even where polygamy obtained, or where men had more wives than one; this rather therefore is to be underſtood of one who had never put away her huſband, and married another, which was ſometimes done among the Jews; ſee Mark x. 12. and this being a ſcandalous practice, the Apoſtle was willing to put a mark of infamy upon it, and exclude ſuch perſons who had been guilty of it, from the number of widows relieved by the church.

Ver. 10. Well reported of for good works, &c.] Both by the members of the church, and by them that were without: particularly if ſhe have brought up children; that is, well, as the Arabic verſion adds; in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; commanding them, as Abraham did, to keep the way of the Lord, and to do juſtice and judgment; training them up in the paths of religion and virtue, from which they will not ſo eaſily depart when grown up. If ſhe have lodged ſtrangers; as Abraham and Lot did, who entertained angels unawares: this may be underſtood of ſtrangers in common, but eſpecially of the brethren, miniſters, and others, who came from diſtant parts, and travelled about to ſpread the Goſpel of Chriſt. The [y] Jews ſay many things, בכבוד אכסניא, in honour of hoſpitality, or entertaining of ſtrangers, eſpecially of receiving into their houſes the diſciples of the wiſe men, and giving them food and drink, and the uſe of their goods; this was what gave perſons a very great character with them, and highly recommended them. If ſhe have waſhed the ſaints feet; which was uſual in thoſe hot countries, where they wore ſandals only, partly for refreſhment, and partly for the removal of duſt and filth, contracted in walking; inſtances of this we have in ſeveral places of ſcripture, Gen. xviii. 4. and xix. 2. It was ſuch a common piece of civility, that our Lord complains of the neglect of it towards him, Luke vii. 44. it was what he did to his own diſciples, and in ſo doing ſet them an example of what they ſhould do to one another, John xiii. 14. and being a mean and low office, and which very likely was done by the ſervants of the houſe; the ſenſe may be, if ſhe has condeſcended to do the meaneſt office for the ſaints. If ſhe have relieved the afflicted; either in body, with her purſe; or in mind, by viſiting them, and ſpeaking comfortably to them: in general, if ſhe have diligently followed every good work; not only have done good works at certain times, but has followed that which is good; has cloſely purſued it, and that with great eagerneſs and diligence; has been conſtant and indefatigable in the performance of it.

Ver. 11. But the younger widows refuſe, &c.] To admit them into the number of widows relieved by the church; partly becauſe they are fit for labour, and ſo can take care of themſelves; and partly becauſe they may marry, as the Apoſtle afterwards adviſes they ſhould, and ſo would have huſbands to take care of them: for when they have begun to wax wanton againſt Chriſt; that is, being at eaſe, and without labour, live a wanton, looſe, and licentious life, and in carnal luſts and pleaſures, contrary to the commands of Chriſt, and to the reproach and diſhonour of his name: they will marry; not that it would be criminal in them to marry, or that ſecond marriages are unlawful; for the Apoſtle afterwards ſignifies that it was right, fit, and proper that ſuch ſhould marry; but his ſenſe is, that marriage being the effect of wantonneſs, would not be ſo honourable in them, and eſpecially after they had made application to the church for relief, and had declared themſelves widows indeed, and deſolate, and ſuch as truſted in God, and gave themſelves up to ſupplication and prayer; wherefore it would be much better for them, and more to the credit of religion, to marry firſt, than afterwards, and would be beſt not to apply at all to the church; and if they ſhould, it would be moſt adviſeable to reject them, for the ſaid reaſons.

Ver. 12. Having damnation, &c.] Not for their ſecond marriage, but for their wantonneſs againſt Chriſt, or their ſinful and luxurious way of living contrary to the Goſpel of Chriſt: and this is to be underſtood not of eternal damnation, which cannot, with propriety, be ſaid to be had now; but either of the reproach and ſcandal caſt upon them, and religion, for their wantonneſs; or the judgment and cenſure of the church for the ſame; or having ſin, and the guilt of ſin upon them, in which ſenſe the word is uſed, Rom. v. 16. Becauſe they have caſt off their firſt faith; or that faith which they firſt profeſſed, even the doctrine of faith; which they may be ſaid to caſt off, becauſe they walked not according to it, their converſation was not becoming their profeſſion of it; and tho' they continued to profeſs the ſame faith, they did, in words, yet in works they denied it, or caſt it off; for which reaſon they fell under the notice, judgment, and condemnation of the church, as well as expoſed themſelves to the reproach of men.

Ver. 13. And withal they learn to be idle, &c.] Being at eaſe, and without labour, living at the expence of the church: wandering about from houſe to houſe; having nothing elſe to do: ſuch an one is what the Jews [z] call, אלמנה שובבית, the gadding widow; who, as the Gloſs ſays, "goes about and "viſits her neighbours continually; and theſe are "they that corrupt the world." Of this ſort of women muſt the Jews be underſtood, when they ſay [a], it is one of the properties of them to be, יוצאניות, going out, or gadding abroad, as Dinah did; and that it is another to be, דבריות, talkative, which agrees with what follows: and not only idle, but tatlers alſo; full of talk, who have always ſome news to tell, or report to make of the affairs of this, or the other perſon, or family: and buſy bodies; in the matters of other perſons, which don't concern them: ſpeaking things which they ought not; which either are not true, and if they are, are not to be ſpoken of, and carried from place to place: this is a very great inconvenience the Apoſtle obſerves, ariſing from the admiſſion of ſuch young widows to be relieved and maintained at the church's charge.

Ver. 14. I will therefore that the younger women marry, &c.] Or the younger widows rather; and ſo ſome copies read; for this is not the Apoſtle's advice to young women in general, tho' it will ſuit with them, but with younger widows in particular, of whom he is ſpeaking: bear children; and bring them forth, and feed, and nouriſh them, and bring them up in a religious way: guide the houſe; manage domeſtic affairs, direct, order, or do what is proper to be done for the good of the family; which is much more commendable than to throw themſelves upon the church, and live an idle and wanton life, and after that marry: and ſo give none occaſion to the adverſary to ſpeak reproachfully; that is, either that ſatan, the grand adverſary of the ſaints, might have no opportunity to reproach them, and caſt in their teeth their unbecoming walk, or accuſe them before the throne; or that any enemy of the chriſtian religion might have no room nor reaſon to ſpeak evilly of Chriſt, his Goſpel, truths, and ordinances, on account of the diſorderly converſation of any that profeſs his name; or that the ο αντικειμενος, the great oppoſer of Chriſt, the man of ſin, and ſon of perdition, even antichriſt, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. might have no handle from hence to ſpeak reproachfully of marriage, and forbid it, under a pretence of ſanctity, as in ch. iv. 3.

Ver. 15. For ſome are already turned aſide after ſatan.] Meaning ſome of thoſe younger widows, whom the Apoſtle knew, and had obſerved to have departed from the faith they firſt profeſſed, and turned their backs on Chriſt, and gave themſelves up to carnal luſts and pleaſures, and to an idle and an impure life and converſation, walked according to the courſe of this world, and the prince of it, by whom they were led captive at his will; for ſo every one that apoſtatizes from a profeſſion of Chriſt, and follows either falſe teachers, and their doctrines, as the Gnoſticks that condemned marriage, or any ſinful and impure way of life, may be ſaid to turn aſide after ſatan; and as the Apoſtle knew this to be fact, from his own obſervation, he therefore gives the above advice.

Ver. 16. If any man or woman that believeth have widows, &c.] That is, if any member of a church, whether a brother or a ſiſter, have mothers or grandmothers, or any near relations widows, in mean circumſtances, and uncapable of taking care of themſelves: let them relieve them; out of their own ſubſtance; which is what the Apoſtle before calls ſhewing piety at home, and requiting their own parents: and let not the church be charged; or burdened with the maintenance of them: that it may relieve them that are widows indeed; that the church may be in a better capacity, its ſtock not being expended on others, to ſupply the wants of thoſe who are really widows; who have neither huſbands, nor children, nor any relations, to provide for them; nor any thing in the world to ſupport themſelves with.

[a] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 45. fol. 40. 3.

Ver. 17. Let the elders that rule well, &c.] By whom are meant not elders in age; though ſuch ought to be honoured and reſpected, and to have a proper maintenance either from their children or the church, when reduced, and incapable of helping themſelves; but then this is what ſhould be done to all ſuch perſons, whereas the elders here, are particularly deſcribed as good rulers and labourers in the word and doctrine; beſides, elders in age are taken notice of before: nor are civil magiſtrates intended, ſuch as were called the elders of Iſrael; for though ſuch as diſcharge their office well, are worthy of honour; yet it does not belong to any of them to labour in preaching the doctrine of the Goſpel: nor are deacons deſigned, for they are never called elders in ſcripture; nor is their work ruling, but ſerving of tables; nor does the miniſtry of the word belong to them as ſuch; nor is any maintenance allowed them from the church on account of their office: nor are lay elders meant, who rule but teach not; ſince there are no ſuch officers appointed in the churches of Chriſt; whoſe only officers are biſhops or elders and deacons: wherefore the qualifications of ſuch are only given in a preceding chapter. There are no other that rule in churches, but ſuch who alſo ſpeak to them the word of God; wherefore by him that rules, and the labourer in word and doctrine, are not meant two diſtinct orders, but different perſons of the ſame order; ſome of theſe ruling well, but do not take ſo much pains in the miniſtry of the word; whilſt others of them both rule well and labour in the word, and who are to be reckoned deſerving of the honour hereafter mentioned. Theſe are called elders, becauſe they are commonly choſen out of the ſenior members of the churches, though not always, Timothy is an exception to this; and becauſe of their ſenile gravity and prudence, which were neceſſary in them: and they may be ſaid to rule, becauſe they are ſet in the higheſt place in the church, and over others in the Lord, who are to ſubmit themſelves to them, and obey them. Chriſt's church is a kingdom, he is king of it, and his miniſtring ſervants are rulers under him; and who rule well when they rule not with force and cruelty, or lord it over God's heritage; but when they govern according to the laws which Chriſt the king and lawgiver has preſcribed; when they explain and inforce thoſe laws, and ſhew them to the people, and ſee that they are put in execution; and when they diſcharge this part of their work with diligence and prudence. Now let ſuch be counted worthy of double honour; which ſome underſtand of honour in this world, and in the world to come, and which they have; they are honoured now by Chriſt, though reproached by the world, by being called unto, qualified for, and ſucceeded in the work of the miniſtry; and when they have faithfully diſcharged it, they will be honoured by him hereafter, and be introduced into his joy with commendation, and ſhine as the ſtars for ever and ever. But rather this is to be underſtood both of that outward reſpect that is to be ſhewn them, by words and actions; and of a ſufficient maintenance that is to be provided for them; in which ſenſe the word honour is uſed in this chapter before; ſee the note on ver. 3. and ſome think that the compariſon is between the widows before mentioned, and theſe elders; that if poor widows in the church are to be honoured and maintained, then much more the officers of it; theſe are worthy of more honour, even of double honour, or a larger, and a more honourable maintenance: and indeed this ſeems to be the meaning of the word double when uſed both in an ill and in a good ſenſe; ſee Rev. xviii. 6. 2 King. ii. 9. and is an alluſion to the firſt-born among the Jews, who was to have a double portion of his father's goods, Deut. xxi. 17. and ſo may here ſignify, that the miniſters of the goſpel ought not to have a ſhort and ſcanty, but a large and honourable maintenance. Eſpecially they who labour in the word and doctrine; which lies in a conſtant reading of the ſcriptures, the word of God, and diligently ſearching into them, and comparing them together, in order to find out the mind and will of God in them; in a daily meditation upon them, and ſtudy of them; and in frequent and fervent wreſtling with God, or prayer to him, to give an underſtanding of them; and in endeavouring to find out the ſenſe of difficult paſſages, which are hard to be underſtood; and in providing for the different caſes and circumſtances of hearers, that every one may have a portion; and in the choice of apt and proper words to expreſs truth in, to the capacities of all: this is labouring in the word in private; beſides which there is labouring in doctrine, in public; in preaching the goſpel conſtantly, boldly, and faithfully; in holding it faſt againſt all oppoſition, and in defending it by argument, both by word and writing. The phraſe ſeems to be Jewiſh, a like one is often to be met with in Jewiſh writings: Rabbenu was ſitting, לעי באורייתא "and labouring in the law before the congre-"gation of the Babylonians at Tzippore[b];" and again[c], "R. Jonah gave tithes to R. Acha bar "Aila, not becauſe he was a prieſt, but becauſe "he לעי באוריתא laboured in the law; and they ſay[d], "there is no greater reward for a man in "the world, as for him דלעי באוריתא who la-"bours in the law;" hence we read[e] of עמל תורה the labour of the law, which they ſay the mouth is made for, and of labourers in the law[f]; and ſuch perſons they judged worthy of the greateſt reſpect, and to be preferred to others. For they ſay[g], "if a congregation is obliged to give a ſa-"lary to a doctor (or ruler of the ſynagogue) and "to a miniſter of the congregation, and it is not in "their power to give to both; if the ruler is a "famous man, and great in the law, and ex-"pert in doctrine, he is to be preferred, but if "not the miniſter of the congregation is to be "preferred."

Ver. 18. For the ſcripture ſaith, &c.] In Deut. xxv. 4. thou ſhalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn; ſee the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 9, 10. The ox for its ſtrength and labour, is a fit emblem of a Goſpel miniſter; and its treading the corn out of the huſk and ear, aptly repreſents the beating out, as it were, of Goſpel truths by the miniſters of it, their making the doctrines of the goſpel clear, plain and evident to the underſtandings of men; wherefore as the ox was not muzzled when it trod out the corn, but might freely and largely feed upon it, ſo ſuch who labour in the preaching of the goſpel, ought to have a ſufficient and competent maintenance; for which purpoſe this citation is made, as alſo the following: and the labourer is worthy of his reward; which ſeems to be taken from Luke x. 7. which Goſpel was now written, and in the hands of the Apoſtle; who here, by two teſtimonies, the one from Moſes, and the other from Chriſt, ſupports the right of the honourable maintenance of the miniſters of the Goſpel.

Ver. 19. Againſt an elder receive not an accuſation, &c.] A charge of any crime: but before two or three witneſſes; good ſufficient ones, who are capable of well atteſting the fact: a charge againſt a paſtor of a church, is not to be eaſily received; it ſhould not be liſtened to privately, unleſs it clearly appears by ſuch a number of witneſſes; nor ſhould it be brought publickly before the church, until it is privately and previouſly proved by a ſufficient number of credible witneſſes, that it is really fact. The ſenſe is, not that judgment ſhall not paſs againſt him but by ſuch a number of witneſſes, or that the evidence upon his trial ſhall conſiſt of ſuch a number; for this is no other than what ought to be in the caſe of a private member, and of every man, according to Deut. xix. 15. But the ſenſe is, that the affair of an elder ſhall not be put upon a trial, much leſs ſentence paſs, until it has been privately proved againſt him, by proper teſtimonies beyond all exception; only in ſuch a caſe, ſhould a church admit a charge againſt its elder. The reaſon of this rule is, becauſe of his high office and the honour of the church, which is concerned in his, as well as of religion; for it carries in it ſome degree of ſcandal, for ſuch a perſon to be charged, even though he may be cleared; as alſo becauſe of his many enemies, who through envy, malice, and the inſtigation of ſatan, would be continually peſtering the church with charges, could they be eaſily admitted.

Ver. 20. Them that ſin rebuke before all, &c.] This the Apoſtle adds to the above rule, to ſhew that he was far from ſcreening wicked miniſters, or elders, guilty of flagitious crimes, and groſs enormities: for theſe words, though they may be applied unto, and may hold good of all offenders, that are members of churches; yet they ſeem chiefly to regard elders, even ſuch who ſin, who continue to ſin, who live in ſin, in ſome notorious ſin or another; which is evident and known, to the great ſcandal of religion, and diſhonour of the goſpel: and ſo ſome read the words, them that ſin before all, rebuke; not only admoniſh once and again, but degrade them from their office, and withdraw from them, as from other diſorderly perſons, and cut them off, and caſt them out of the church, and that in a public manner; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, before the congregation; which was done only in caſe of notorious offences: and which rule is obſerved by the Jews, and runs thus [h]; "a "wiſe man, an elder in wiſdom, and ſo a prince, "or the father of the Sanhedrim that ſins, they "don't excommunicate him, (with Niddui) al"ways בפרהסיא publickly, unleſs he does as Je"roboam the ſon of Nebat and his companions; "but when he ſins other ſins, they chaſtize him "privately." The end is, that others alſo may fear; that other elders, or other members of the church, or both, may fear to do the ſame evil things, leſt they incur the ſame cenſure and puniſhment: the Syriac verſion reads, other men; and the Arabic verſion, the reſt of the people. The phraſe ſeems to be taken out of Deut. xiii. 11. and xvii. 13.

Ver. 21. I charge thee before God, &c.] Who ſees and knows all things, and is a righteous and moſt impartial judge; with whom there is no reſpect of perſons, and in whoſe place and ſtead, the judges of the earth, both civil and eccleſiaſtical ſtand; and to whom they are accountable, for the judgment they paſs on men and things; and in whoſe houſe or church Timothy was, whoſe buſineſs he was doing, and which ought to be done, with a view to his glory; wherefore the Apoſtle gives him this ſolemn charge as in his ſight: and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; who alſo is God omniſcient; and is Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, the head of the church, and the judge of quick and dead; before whoſe judgment-ſeat all muſt appear; where there will be no reſpect of perſons, nor any partiality uſed. And the elect angels; by whom are meant not ſome of the angels, the more choice, excellent, and principal among them; as the ſeven angels in Tobit. xii. 15. among whom Raphael is ſaid to be one. But this is a ſpurious account, and not to be credited; nor was it an antient tradition of the Jews, that there were ſeven principal angels; ſee the note on Rev. i. 4. The Chaldee paraphraſe on Gen. xi. 7. is miſtaken by Mr. Mede, where not ſeven, but ſeventy angels are ſpoken of: but here all the good angels are deſigned, called ſometimes the holy angels, and ſometimes the angels in heaven; and here, by the Syriac verſion, his angels; either the angels of God, as they are ſometimes ſtiled; or the angels of Jeſus Chriſt, being made by him, and being miniſters to him, and for him; and alſo elect, becauſe choſen to ſtand in that integrity and holineſs, in which they were created; and to enjoy everlaſting glory and happineſs, whilſt others of the ſame ſpecies were paſſed by and left to fall from their firſt eſtate, and appointed to everlaſting wrath and damnation: ſo that it may be obſerved that God's election takes place in angels as well as in men; and which flows from the ſovereign will and pleaſure of God; and was made in Chriſt, who is their head, and by whom they are confirmed in their happy ſtate; and in which they muſt be conſidered in the pure maſs, ſince they never fell; and which may ſerve to illuſtrate and confirm the doctrine of election with reſpect to men. Now before theſe the Apoſtle charges Timothy; ſince they are near to the ſaints, encamp about them, miniſter unto them, and are concerned for their good; are ſpectators of their actions, and witneſſes of what is done in churches, ſince they frequently attend the aſſemblies of the ſaints, and will deſcend with Chriſt, when he comes to judge the world in righteouſneſs: the mention of them in this charge gives no countenance to the worſhipping of angels, ſince they are not ſet upon a level with God and Chriſt; nor is the charge delivered before them as judges, but as witneſſes; nor are the words in the form of an oath, but of a charge; the angels are not ſworn by, or appealed unto; only in their preſence is this ſolemn charge given; and it may be obſerved, that even inanimate creatures, the heavens and the earth are ſometimes called upon as witneſſes; and beſides, it was uſual with the Jews to make ſuch kind of obteſtations. So Agrippa [l], in his ſpeech to the Jews, exhorting them to fidelity to the Romans, beſeeches them by their holy things, ϗ τȣς ιερȣς αγγελȣς τȣ θεȣ, and the holy angels of God, and their common country, that is, the good of it, that they would remain ſtedfaſt. mount of this charge follows, that thou obſerve thoſe things; either all that are contained in the epiſtle, or more particularly, the rules preſcribed in this chapter; concerning rebuking members of a different age and ſex, providing for poor widows, and taking care of the miniſters of the Goſpel, and chiefly what regards the diſcipline of the church with reſpect to the elders of it; as not to admit an accuſation againſt them, unleſs it is ſufficiently evident, and yet not connive at notorious ſinners, but rebuke them publickly; and this charge belongs not only to Timothy, but to the whole church, and to all ſucceeding miniſters and churches in all ages. The manner in which theſe things are to be obſerved is, without preferring one before another; or, as the words may be rendered without prejudgment; that is, without prejudging a caſe, or determining before hearing, how it ſhall be; or as the Syriac verſion renders it, in nothing let thy mind be prepoſſeſſed: the ſenſe is, that he ſhould attend to any caſe that ſhould come before him in the church, without prejudice or prepoſſeſſion, and hearken to what is ſaid on both ſides; and judge impartially, and not in haſte, but weigh well and conſider the evidence that is given, and then determine as the caſe appears; ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, without haſte, or precipitancy; to which agrees the advice of the men of the great congregation, or Ezra's congregation, who were in his time, and ſucceeded him; הוו מתונים בדין be ſlow in judgment [k], or long at it; that ſo by ſtrict and cloſe examination, things not known at firſt, may be diſcovered; and when judgment is paſſed, it ſhould not be through affection to one party, and diſreſpect to another; which is called in ſcripture a reſpect of perſons, and here a preferring one to another; and which is further explained by adding, doing nothing by partiality; or by inclining to one ſide more than to another. A judge ſhould not preponderate to either ſide, but ſhould hold the balance of juſtice even, and do nothing to turn the ſcale one way or another, but as the weight and truth of the evidence direct; and ſuch a rule ſhould be obſerved in all church affairs.

Ver. 22. Lay hands ſuddenly on no man, &c.] Which is not to be underſtood of removing cenſures from off offenders, upon their repentance, which ſhould not be ſuddenly and haſtily done; and which it ſeems in later times has been done by impoſition of hands; but ſince no ſuch cuſtom obtained in the Apoſtle's time, and a taking off of cenſures is never in ſcripture ſignified by this phraſe, it cannot be intended here; but rather the admiſſion of perſons into the work of the miniſtry, and the inſtalling of them into the office of an elder or paſtor; upon whom, in theſe early times, hands were laid by the Apoſtles, whereby gifts were conveyed, as on Timothy; ſee the note on ch. iv. 14. And from this rite, this act was ſo called, as it might be when it was laid aſide; juſt as with the Jews, an ordination of one of their Doctors is called, סמיכה, impoſition of hands, tho' they performed it by words, and not by laying on of hands; which now by them is not judged neceſſary [l]: and then the ſenſe is, do not haſtily and at once admit any perſon into the ſacred work of the miniſtry, or conſtitute him an elder, or paſtor, over a church of Chriſt; but let him be firſt proved, and let it plainly appear, that he has the grace of God in him, and has gifts for publick ſervice beſtowed on him; that he is found in faith, and of a good life and converſation; and a man of uprightneſs and fidelity: neither be partaker of other mens ſins; of any of the members of the church; by doing the ſame, joining with them therein, or, by conſenting to them and taking pleaſure in them, as done by others; by conniving at them, and not reſtraining them, nor reproving for them: or rather, this refers to raſh and haſty ordinations of miniſters; and either regards the ſins of thoſe who lay hands ſuddenly on men, and with whom the Apoſtle would not have Timothy join, that he might not be a partner in their ſins; or elſe the ſins of thoſe that are ordained, and theſe, whether before or after their ordination; which ſuch involve themſelves in, who either raſhly and ignorantly ordain ſuch perſons; and much more if they do it, knowing them to be ſuch: and theſe ſins may include both immorality and error; ſee 2 John 10, 11. Keep thyſelf pure; not from his own ſins, the ſin of nature, indwelling ſin, and actual tranſgreſſions; no man is, or can be pure, from either of theſe; nor can any man keep himſelf; Chriſt only is able to keep him from falling. But the Apoſtle's meaning is, that he ſhould keep himſelf pure from the ſins of others, by not raſhly and ſuddenly admitting any into the miniſtry; juſt as the Apoſtle was pure from the blood of all men, by faithfully preaching the goſpel; ſo he ſuggeſts that Timothy would be pure from partaking of other mens ſins, by obſerving a ſtrict diſcipline in the houſe of God. Some refer this to chaſtity of body, in oppoſition to the ſin of uncleanneſs, which his youthful age and the temptations about him might expoſe him to the danger of; and which is ſcandalous and infamous in a miniſter of the word. Which ſenſe ſerves to ſhew the connexion of the following words, which otherwiſe ſeem to ſtand unconnected.

Ver. 23. Drink no longer water, &c.] Though it was commendable in him to keep under his body, as the Apoſtle did by abſtemious living, and not pamper the fleſh, and encourage the luſts of it, and ſo preſerve purity and chaſtity; yet it was proper that he ſhould take care of his health, that it was not impaired by too much ſeverity, and ſo he be uncapable of doing the work of the Lord. And it ſeems by this, that his long and only uſe of water for his drink, had been prejudicial to his health; wherefore the following advice was judged proper: but uſe a little wine; ſome by a little wine, underſtand not the quantity, but the quality of the wine; a thin, ſmall, weak wine, or wine mixed with water; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders the words, drink no more ſimple water, (or water only) but mix a little wine; though rather the quantity is intended, and which is mentioned. Not as though there was any danger of Timothy's running into an exceſs of drinking; but for the ſake of others, leſt they ſhould abuſe ſuch a direction, to indulge themſelves in an exceſſive way; and chiefly to prevent the ſcoffs of prophane perſons; who otherwiſe would have inſinuated that the Apoſtle indulged intemperance and exceſs: whereas this advice to the uſe of wine, was not for pleaſure, and for the ſatisfying of the fleſh, but for health, for thy ſtomach's ſake; to help digeſtion, and to remove the diſorders which might attend it: the Ethiopic verſion renders it, for the pain of thy liver, and for thy perpetual diſeaſe; which laſt might be a pain in his head, ariſing from the diſorder of his ſtomach: the laſt clauſe we render, and thine often infirmities; or weakneſſes of body, occaſioned by hard ſtudies, frequent miniſtrations, and indefatigable pains and labours he endured in ſpreading the goſpel of Chriſt.

Ver. 24. Some mens ſins are open before hand, &c.] Some men are ſuch open and notorious ſinners, that there is no need of any enquiry about them, or any examination of them; or any witneſſes to be called to their character, in order to paſs judgment concerning them; they even prevent and ſuperſede any formal proceſs about them. With ſuch perſons, the Apoſtle intimates, Timothy could have no difficulty upon him, what to do with them; ſhould they be propoſed for the miniſtry, he would know at once what to do with them; namely, reject them. There would be no danger of his laying hands ſuddenly on ſuch; for the following phraſe going before to judgment, is not to be underſtood of God's judgment, or of the laſt and future judgment of the great day, but of human judgment: it is true indeed that ſome mens ſins are manifeſt and barefaced, before that day comes; whilſt others are ſo private, that they will not be known, till that day declares them, and brings to light the hidden things of darkneſs: and much ſuch a way of ſpeaking is uſed by the Jews; who ſay, [m] "whoever committeth one tranſgreſſion, "(a notorious one) in this world, it joins to "him, and goes before him ליום הדין to the day "of judgment." But this ſenſe agrees not with the context; and with what propriety ſoever it may be ſaid, of ſome mens ſins going before to judgment, it cannot be ſaid with any, that others follow after judgment; ſince at the general judgment, every work, both good and bad, with every ſecret thing, will be brought into it; and nothing will follow after that: wherefore the next clauſe, and ſome men they follow after; that is, ſome mens ſins follow after, is to be underſtood of their following after human judgment; or of their appearing in the light after judgment has been paſſed upon them, which before were hid: and the ſenſe of the whole is this, that the characters of ſome men are ſo well known, and it is ſo plain a caſe, that they are deſtitute of the grace of God; have not miniſterial gifts; or are unſound in the faith; or are men of immoral lives and converſations; ſo that there can be no diſpute about them, whether they are to be admitted into the miniſtry of the word or rejected. But there are other perſons who may be propoſed, whoſe ſins or errors are ſo private, that they may not be known; and yet, may appear aſterwards; wherefore it is proper to take time, and not be too haſty, or lay hands ſuddenly on men.

Ver. 25. Likewiſe alſo the good works of ſome are manifeſt before hand, &c. The characters of ſome men on the other hand, are ſo fair and bright; and it is ſo clear a point, that they have received the grace of God in truth; and have a rich furniture for the miniſtry; and are ſound in the doctrine of faith; and are men of ſuch godly lives and converſations, that they prevent any formal enquiry, examination, and judgment; and there can be no difficulty in admitting them at once: and therefore the above rule is not deſigned for ſuch perſons, but to guard againſt thoſe with whom things don't appear ſo very clear and manifeſt: and they that are otherwiſe cannot be hid; if they are men of bad principles or practices, they will be diſcovered in time; for there is nothing hid that ſhall not be revealed; time will make all things manifeſt; their errors and ſins will break out, and be expoſed: and therefore it is right to wait a while, and not to be quick in the reception of them, into the Goſpel-miniſtry; for otherwiſe, much miſchief may be done to the ſouls of men, and much diſhonour brought on the ways and doctrines of Chriſt.

CHAP. VI.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle, gives ſome inſtructions to ſervants; lays down ſome rules, by which to judge of falſe teachers; adviſes to contentment; expoſes the ſin of covetouſneſs; exhorts Timothy to avoid ſin, and follow after things that are good, to be conſtant in his warfare, the iſſue of which would be eternal life; gives him a charge with reſpect to himſelf, and orders him what he ſhould enjoin others, particularly the rich, and what he ſhould do himſelf; and wiſhes grace unto him, to enable him to diſcharge his duty. The inſtructions to ſervants are of two ſorts; firſt, to ſuch who had unbelieving maſters, whom they ought to honour and obey; that the name and doctrine of Chriſt be not evil ſpoken of: and then to ſuch as had believing maſters, that they deſpiſe them not being brethren, but ſhould the more chearfully ſerve them; becauſe believers in Chriſt, beloved of God, and partakers of his grace; which duties are worthy to be inſiſted upon in the Goſpel miniſtry, ver. 1, 2. and ſuch who teach not theſe things, are to be accounted falſe teachers, whoſe characters are given in ſeveral particulars; as men unſound, proud, ignorant, quarrelſome and covetous, and to be withdrawn from, ver. 3, 4, 5. And from hence the Apoſtle exhorts to contentment; and argues for it, partly from the gain of it along with godlineſs; and partly from the conſideration of what men are, when they come into the world, and what they will be, when they go out of it; and alſo from having food and raiment, which include all the neceſſaries of life, ver. 6, 7, 8. And then he expoſes the folly and danger of covetouſneſs, being the root of all evil; an enemy to true religion and godlineſs; and the cauſe of ruin and deſtruction, ver. 9, 10. Wherefore he addreſſes himſelf to Timothy, in particular, to avoid every thing of this kind; and to follow the reverſe of thoſe things that were in the falſe teachers; to fight the good fight of faith, and then lay hold on eternal life; to which he encourages him, from his vocation, and the profeſſion he had made, in a very publick manner, ver. 11, 12. And then follows a ſolemn charge unto him, given him before God and Chriſt; that he would obſerve what had been commanded him in the moſt perfect manner, until the appearance of Chriſt; which is certain, and may be concluded will be, from the various epithets of God; who will make him manifeſt in his own time, ver. 13, 14, 15, 16. To which is added an injunction on Timothy, to charge rich men not to be elated with their riches, nor truſt in them, ſince they are uncertain things; but in God, from whom they have received ſuch a plentiful meaſure of them; that they be beneficent to others, which will turn to their own advantage in the iſſue, ver. 17, 18, 19. And to cloſe all, he is very urgent upon Timothy, to keep the goſpel pure and incorrupt, he was entruſted with; and avoid every thing that was oppoſite to it, as prophane and mere babling, and having only a ſhew of knowledge, but not that itſelf; and the rather, ſince ſome prophane teachers and profeſſors of the goſpel had erred from it: and concludes with wiſhing him grace, to enable him to attend to the ſeveral inſtructions which had been given him, ver. 20, 21.

[m] T. Bab. Sota, fol. 3. 2. vid. Avoda Zara, fol. 5. 1.

Ver. 1. Let as many ſervants as are under the yoke, &c.] Not under the yoke of the law of God, or under the yoke of Chriſt; though the ſervants here ſpoken of, were under both; but under the yoke of government, as the Arabic verſion renders it; that is, under the yoke of men, in a ſtate of ſervitude, under the government of maſters, and in their ſervice; being either apprentices to them, or bought with their money, or hired by them: count their own maſters worthy of all honour; and give it to them; which includes ſubjection to them; obedience to all their lawful commands, which are conſiſtent with religion and reaſon, with the laws of God, and with the light of nature; and all reverence of them, and reſpect unto them, expreſſed by words and geſtures: and all this is to be given to their own maſters to whom they belong; who have a property in them; whoſe money or goods they are; and that be they what they will, as to their religion and temper; whether they be believers or unbelievers; or whether they be good and gentle, kind and humane; or whether they be froward, peeviſh and ill-natured: that the name of God and his doctrine be not blaſphemed; by unbelieving maſters, who, ſhould their believing ſervants be refractory, diſobedient, rebellious, or diſrepectful, would be apt to ſay, what a God do theſe men ſerve? is this their religion? is this the goſpel they talk of? does their doctrine teach them ſuch things, to be diſobedient to their maſters, and carry it diſrepectfully to them? does it diſengage them from the laws of nature, and diſſolve the bonds of civil ſociety, and deſtroy the relation that ſubſiſts between man and man? If this be the caſe, away with their God and their doctrine too. Wherefore the Apoſtle exhorts, that if believing ſervants have any regard to that name they are called by, and call upon, and to the doctrine of the Goſpel they have embraced and profeſſed; that they would be obedient and reſpectful to their maſters; that they may have no occaſion to ſpeak reproachfully of God, and of the goſpel.

Ver. 2. And they that have believing maſters, &c.] That believe in one God, in oppoſition to the Gentiles, that held many Gods, and in Jeſus Chriſt, in diſtinction from the Jews; who believed in him with the heart, and profeſſed him with their mouths, and held the myſtery of faith in a pure conſcience. What is ſaid before, is ſaid to ſervants that had unbelieving maſters; who would be ready to blaſpheme, ſhould they act amiſs. Servants were under a ſnare both ways, through the inſinuations of falſe teachers; who ſuggeſted, that their ſervitude was not conſiſtent with their Chriſtian liberty; that they ought not to ſerve wicked men, becauſe being called of God, they were advanced above them; nor good men, becauſe they were upon a level with them. But the Apoſtle teaches another doctrine; let them not deſpiſe them, becauſe they are brethren; of the ſame family named of Chriſt, and of the ſame houſhold of God, and of faith, and have the ſame father; for though with regard to ſpiritual bleſſings, privileges, and ordinances, they were equal; yet not with regard to temporal and civil affairs; and therefore ſhould not treat them with leſs reſpect, or be more backward to obey their lawful commands, on that account: but rather do them ſervice; more heartily, and with a greater good-will, as to the Lord; theſe maſters belonging to him, and being engaged in his cauſe; which they their ſervants, by yielding a chearful obedience to them, are aſſiſting in: and the rather, becauſe they are faithful; in leſſer things, in giving to them, their ſervants, what is juſt and equal, proper food and ſuitable raiment, and their juſt wages; and in uſing their wealth and riches in a good way, for the intereſt of Chriſt, the aſſiſtance of the poor ſaints, and the ſpreading of the goſpel; and ſo in greater things, by holding faſt the profeſſion of their faith, adhering to Chriſt, his truths and ordinances: or becauſe they are believing, or believers; it is the ſame word, as before uſed; and therefore they ſhould be precious to them, and high in their eſteem; for faith is a precious grace, and ſuch as have it, are choſen of God, and precious: and beloved; of God, who had choſen them to ſalvation; and of Chriſt, who had redeemed them by his blood; and of the ſaints, who are taught of God to love one another: and this is another reaſon why they ſhould be ſerved, and not deſpiſed; and a third follows: partakers of the benefit; of the free grace of God; of redemption and ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt, and of all ſpiritual bleſſings in him; and therefore ſhould ſerve them the more chearfully. The Syriac verſion renders it, ſuch as enjoy reſt in, or are refreſhed by their ſervice; or by their ſervice to them, as the Arabic verſion: the ſenſe is, that when believing ſervants ſerve their believing maſters readily and faithfully, their maſters are well pleaſed with them, delight in their ſervice, and conſider it as a benefit to them, and a kindneſs done them; and which therefore ſhould animate and encourage them to ſerve them. Some underſtand theſe characters of faithful and beloved, of the ſervants themſelves; that becauſe they are ſuch, therefore they ſhould ſerve, and not deſpiſe their believing maſters; and particularly the laſt clauſe, which may be rendered, who in return receive a benefit from them, as food, raiment, and wages; and beſides, they are uſed with humanity and kindneſs, and in a manner becoming Chriſtians; to which agrees the Ethiopic verſion, which renders it, who will receive and help you; will take care of you, and aſſiſt you, and ſupply you with what is proper and neceſſary: theſe things teach and exhort; the Syriac and Arabic verſions add them; the ſervants. The Apoſtle was not above inſtructing and exhorting perſons of ſuch a capacity, and in ſo low a ſtate of life; and it became Timothy to do ſo likewiſe; and every miniſter of the word.

Ver. 3. If any man teach otherwiſe, &c.] Or another doctrine, as the Syriac verſion renders it; a doctrine different from what the Apoſtle had now taught, concerning the duty of ſervants to their maſters; as did the falſe teachers, who depiſed dominion or government; not only civil-government, and ſo ſpoke evil of rulers and magiſtrates; and church-government, and therefore reviled the Apoſtles, elders and paſtors of churches; but family-government, and encouraged diſobedience to parents and maſters; ſee 2 Pet. ii. 10. Jude ver. 8. or teach another doctrine, from that of the bible, of Chriſt and his Apoſtles: and conſent not to wholeſome words; ſuch as the doctrines of the Goſpel; they are food to the ſaints, milk for babes, and meat for ſtrong men; they are ſweet and ſavoury food to a ſpiritual taſte; they are nouriſhing, and the means of a ſpiritual growth; they are ſalutary and healthful; they have no corruption, taint, or poiſon in them: even the words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; the doctrines which he preached when on earth, who was anointed with the Spirit of God without meaſure, to preach the Goſpel, and by whom all the doctrines of grace and truth came; or the doctrines relating to Chriſt, to his perſon, offices, grace, righteouſneſs, ſacrifice and ſatisfaction; to what he is, has done, does, and will do. And to the doctrine which is according to godlineſs. The whole Goſpel is the myſtery of godlineſs; it is the truth that is after it, and it has a tendency to promote true godlineſs in heart and life: even ſuch is the nature of the more diſtinguiſhing doctrines of it, which are charged with licentiouſneſs; as the doctrine of eternal and perſonal election; for tho' it is not of works, but of grace, yet holineſs is a means fixed in election, and an end ſecured by it; it is the ſource and ſpring of all real holineſs; holineſs of heart is an evidence of it to believers themſelves; and holineſs of life is an evidence of it to the world; nor can any thing more powerfully engage men to it than the conſideration that they are choſen of God to grace and glory. The covenant of grace which is abſolute and unconditional, provides for both internal and external holineſs; and the promiſes of it under the influence of grace, powerfully operate in the minds of believers, to the cleanſing of them from all impurity of fleſh and ſpirit, and to the perfecting of holineſs in the fear of the Lord: and ſo the doctrines of free juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which does not make void the law, nor diſcourage good works; and of Chriſt's bearing the ſins of his people, and making ſatisfaction for them, that they being dead to ſin might live unto righteouſneſs; and of redemption of them by the blood of Chriſt from ſin, ſatan, and the law, which is done that they might be a peculiar people, zealous of good works; and of the effectual vocation of them, which is with an holy calling; and of their final perſeverance in grace and holineſs, are all of them doctrines according to godlineſs, and greatly encourage and promote it: now, whoever does not accede to theſe truths, and acquieſce in them, but differs from them, and teaches the reverſe of them, he is a falſe teacher, and is all that the Apoſtle ſays in the next words.

Ver. 4. He is proud, &c.] Or ſwelled and puffed up with a vain conceit of himſelf and his own notions, and treats with an haughty air, the faithful miniſters of the word. The doctrines of grace are of an humbling nature, eſpecially when they are ſpiritually and experimentally underſtood, and received; but notional knowledge, knowledge of natural things, and the doctrines of men, ſuch as are of their own invention, fill the mind with pride and vanity: knowing nothing; as he ought to know; not any thing that is ſolid and ſubſtantial; nothing of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt: he may have knowledge of natural and civil things, but not of ſpiritual ones; he may have collected a medley of knowledge, together, but what will be of no real uſe either to himſelf or others: but doting about queſtions and ſtrifes of words: or he is ſick or diſeaſed; his mind is diſtempered; he is like one in a fever, that is delirious; his head is light and wild; his fancy is roving, and he talks of things he knows not what; his head runs upon queſtions; fooliſh and unlearned ones, about the law and works, and the neceſſity of them to juſtification and ſalvation; concerning genealogies, and other fruitleſs and unprofitable ſubjects: and ſtrifes of words; mere logomachies; contending and quarrelling more about words, than things, which tend to no profit, but to the ſubverting and confounding of hearers. The ill effects of which are as follow: whereof cometh envy; at the ſuperior gifts and talents of others; at their ſucceſs, and any little degree of honour and reſpect they have from others; which ſhews that ſuch men, in whom this vice is a governing one, are carnal men, for this is a work of the fleſh; and that they are deſtitute of charity, or the grace of love, which envieth not: alſo from hence comes ſtrife; contention, quarrelling; the peace and comfort of particular perſons, and even of whole communities, are broken and deſtroyed hereby; for fooliſh and unlearned queſtions gender ſtrifes, 2 Tim. ii. 24, 25. which are very unbecoming the ſervants of the Lord, and very uncomfortable to the churches of Chriſt: yea, theſe alſo produce railings; at one another, and eſpecially at the faithful miniſters of the Goſpel; for when the falſe teachers cannot overcome them by ſcripture and argument, they fall to railing and reviling of them: or entertain evil ſurmiſes; groundleſs ſuſpicions: or from hence follow, as the words may be rendred, wicked opinions; concerning the being, perfections, purpoſes, and providence of God; concerning the perſon and offices of Chriſt; concerning the law and goſpel, grace and good works; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, an evil opinion of the mind.

Ver. 5. Perverſe diſputings of men of corrupt minds, &c.] Who being corrupt in their principles, and corrupters of the word of God, diſpute in a very froward and perverſe way; rubbing and galling one another, and ſo provoke to wrath and anger, and every evil work: and deſtitute of the truth of Chriſt, who is the truth, knowing nothing of him ſpiritually and ſavingly; and of the Goſpel, the word of truth; and alſo of the truth of grace, being carnal, ſenſual, and having not the ſpirit of God. Suppoſing that gain is godlineſs; ſuch were Simon Magus and his followers, and other falſe teachers, who made merchandize of men, looked every one for his gain from his quarter, and acted as if there was nothing in religion, but worldly profit and gain; theſe ſerved themſelves, their own bellies, and ſelfiſh intereſts, and not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Wherefore the Apoſtle gives the following advice to Timothy, and thro' him to all miniſters and churches, from ſuch withdraw thyſelf; do not come near them; have nothing to do with them; do not lay hands on them, or admit them into the miniſtry; do not ſuffer them to preach, or encourage them by hearing them: if in the church, caſt them out; have no communion with them, neither in a civil nor in a religious way; avoid all converſation with them. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions omit this clauſe; and it is wanting in the Alexandrian copy, and in Beza's Claromontane Exemplar, but is in other copies.

Ver. 6. But godlineſs with contentment is great gain.] By godlineſs is not meant any particular grace, but all the graces of the ſpirit of God; as faith, hope, love, fear, &c. the whole of internal religion, as it ſhews itſelf in outward worſhip, and in all acts of holineſs of life and converſation; and which the doctrine that is according to godlineſs, teaches and engages to; and this is gain, very great gain indeed. A man poſſeſſed of true godlineſs is a gaining, thriving man: ſuch as are godly, or truly gracious, they are come into good and happy circumſtances, and are poſſeſſors of the true, ſolid, ſatisfying, durable, and unſearchable riches of grace; all their debts are paid, they are richly clothed, and deliciouſly fed, and are in a good family, even the houſhold of God, who before were in debt, arrayed in rags, were in a ſtarving condition, and ſtrangers and foreigners; yea, they are heirs of God, joint-heirs with Chriſt, and have both a right and a meetneſs for the heavenly inheritance; they are now made kings and prieſts to God, and in the preſent ſtate of things, have God to be their portion, and exceeding great reward; they have an intereſt in Chriſt, and in all ſpiritual bleſſings in him, and have the Spirit as the earneſt of their future inheritance; they are rich in faith, and in good works; their ſouls, which were loſt, are gained, and ſhall be ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation; and e're long they will be poſſeſſed of all the riches of glory, ſignified by a houſe not made with hands, a city which has foundations, whoſe builder and maker is God, an incorruptible inheritance, and a kingdom and glory: how great is the gain of godlineſs! And what adds to this gain, and now goes along with it, is contentment; for this is not to be conſidered as the condition of godlineſs being great gain, as if it was not ſo without it; but as the effect of godlineſs, what that produces, and as a part of its gain. The word here uſed ſignifies ſufficiency; and ſo it is rendered in the Vulgate Latin verſion: it deſigns a competency of the good things of this life; and what that is, is expreſſed in ver. 8. and ſuch God gives to them that fear him, his godly ones, who ſhall lack no good thing convenient for them; for godlineſs has the promiſe of this life, as well as of that which is to come; and God does give to ſuch all things pertaining to life and godlineſs, even all things richly to enjoy. The word indeed properly ſignifies ſelf-ſufficiency, which in its ſtrict ſenſe only belongs to God, who is El-Shaddai, God all-ſufficient and ſelf-ſufficient; but here it intends ſuch a ſufficiency as a man himſelf judges to be ſo; for this phraſe does not ſo much deſign the thing itſelf, which is a ſufficiency, as the opinion, the ſenſe which the godly man has of it, who himſelf judges it, as Jacob did, to be enough; and ſuch a man is content with what he has, and thankful for it, ſubmits quietly to the will of God, and patiently bears every adverſe providence: and this is now the fruit and effect of godlineſs, or true grace, and is a conſiderable part of that gain which godlineſs brings with it; and ſuch a man is a happy man indeed, let his circumſtances be what they will. The Jews have a ſaying[n], that “ he is a rich man “ whoſe ſpirit reſts in, or is contented with his “ riches;” that is, as the Gloſs explains it, “ who “ rejoices in his portion, be it little or much:” thus, tho' godlineſs is not gain, nor gain godlineſs, in the ſenſe of the falſe teachers, yet is it true gain in a ſpiritual ſenſe.

Ver. 7. For we brought nothing into this world, &c.] Which is a reaſon both clearly ſhewing, that godlineſs is great gain, ſince thoſe who have it brought nothing into the world with them but ſin, and yet are now in ſuch happy circumſtances as before deſcribed; and that godly perſons ſhould be content with what they have, even of worldly things, ſeeing they are ſo much more than they had when they came into the world, into which they came naked; and which ſhould be a quieting conſideration under the moſt ſtripping providences; ſee Job i. 21. and it is certain we can carry nothing out: as men come into the world, ſo will they go out of it; nor will they need their worldly ſubſtance after death, any more than they did before they were born; and what they now have, and uſe not, will then be loſt to them, whatever gain it may be to others: wherefore it becomes them chearfully to uſe what they have, and be content therewith; ſee Eccl. v. 15, 16. The Jews have a ſaying like this[o], that “ as a man comes (into the world) בחליטין, ſimply or nakedly, ſo he goes “ out in like manner.”

Ver. 8. And having food and raiment, &c.] Food includes all things neceſſary to be eat and drank, of which there is a great variety, and is here expreſſed in the plural number; and raiment every neceſſary covering, as the word uſed ſignifies, and includes an habitation, which is a cover and ſhelter from the inclemencies of the weather. And now having all theſe comforts and neceſſaries of life, food to eat, and drink to extinguiſh thirſt and refreſh, raiment to put on, and a houſe to dwell in, let us be therewith content: there is very good reaſon why the ſaints ſhould be content; ſince more than theſe things cannot be enjoyed; and theſe they have with a bleſſing, and as a fruit and token of the love of God to them; theſe were all that Jacob deſired, Agur petitioned for, and Chriſt directs his diſciples daily to pray for; and which to have, is to have enough, a proper ſufficiency and competency: the words may be rendered, we ſhall be content with them; which the Apoſtle could ſay for himſelf, Timothy, and others, who had been content, even when they wanted theſe things. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, we are content; and the Syriac verſion, food and raiment are ſufficient for us; and ſo the Apoſtle ſets himſelf, and others, as examples of contentment to be imitated and followed.

Ver. 9. But they that will be rich, &c.] Not they that are rich; for ſome rich men are good men, and do much good with their riches; and are as free from temptations and ſnares; and fooliſh and hurtful luſts, as other perſons, as Abraham, Joſeph of Arimathea, Gaius, and others were; but ſuch that would be rich, who labour after, make haſte for it, and are reſolved upon it, at any rate, right or wrong, as there be thouſands who never attain to it; ſo that the Apoſtle does not point at rich men particularly, but at ſuch who are determined to be rich, whether they ever are ſo or no: theſe fall into temptation; not in ſuch ſenſe in which the phraſe is uſed in Jam. i. 2. but in ſuch ſenſe as Chriſt uſes it, Matt. vi. 13. namely, a falling into temptation to ſin, ſo as to be drawn away by it, and overcome with it: and a ſnare; the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, the ſnare of the devil, and ſo Beza's Claromontane copy; which perhaps is taken from ch. iii. 7. and tho' this ſeems not to be the genuine reading, yet it may give the true ſenſe: ſatan may be compared to a fowler; his temptations to ſin are his nets and ſnares; and they that will be rich, are the birds that are caught and entangled therein, out of which ſometimes it is impracticable to extricate themſelves: and into many fooliſh and hurtful luſts; carnal and worldly luſts, the luſts of the fleſh, the luſt of the eye, and the pride of life, which are the things that are in the world, and draw the affections to them; yea, what ſin is there but ſuch perſons may, and do fall into; as defrauding of the neighbour, oppreſſing the poor, lying, perjury, theft, murder, rapine, violence, and injuſtice of every kind; ſo that they may be ſaid to be many, and ſome of them are fooliſh. All ſin is folly, and every wicked man is a fooliſh one, and acts a part quite contrary to reaſon; but ſome evil ways are notoriouſly ſilly, weak and fooliſh, and which they that will be rich make uſe of to get money; tho' others of them are ſly and artful enough, and all of them are hurtful to their credit and reputation, or to the health of their bodies, and eſpecially to the welfare of their immortal ſouls. So the phraſe, יצריהון טפשא, their fooliſh luſt, is uſed by the Targumiſt in Ezek. xx. 25. and the corruption of nature in general, is by the Jews called the old and fooliſh king, in Eccl. iv. 13. They aſk [p], "why is he called a king? "becauſe all obey him; why is he called old? be-"cauſe he is joined to him (a man) from his birth "to his old age; and why is he called, כסיל, "fooliſh? becauſe he teaches him an evil way, "which he knows not how to warn him of again." Which drown men in deſtruction and perdition; that is, in utter ruin, in the ruin both of ſoul and body; and which is irrecoverable, like that of the drowning of a man in the ſea, with a milſtone about his neck; ſuch folly and danger do thoſe expoſe themſelves to, who will be rich at any rate.

[n] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 25. 2.

[o] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 42. fol 36. 3.

Ver. 10. For the love of money is the root of all evil, &c.] Of all the evils before-mentioned, and of others; not money itſelf, as ſilver and gold, which are God's creatures, and his gifts, and may be uſed to, and anſwer many good purpoſes; but the love of it, and not any love of it; for there may be a lawful love of it, and deſire after it, ſo far as it is requiſite to the neceſſaries of life, to anſwer the calls of providence, the duties we owe to God and men, to ſerve the intereſt of Chriſt, and do good to fellow-creatures and fellow-chriſtians: but it is an immoderate, inſatiable deſire after it, and an inordinate love of it, which is here meant, ſuch as is properly idolatry; as when a man loves it, not only beſides, but above God; ſerves it as if it was God, and places his truſt and confidence in it, independent of God, and his providence; ſuch love of it is the ſource and ſpring of all iniquity, as above; it was the ſin of Judas, and the root of all his iniquity. The phraſe is Jewiſh. So idolatry is ſaid to be, עיקר כל עונות, the root of all iniquities [q]; ſee Heb. xii. 15. which while ſome coveted after; in a greedy and inſatiable way: they have erred from the faith; the doctrine of faith. Obſerving that the profeſſors of it are generally poor, they have declined that path, and have not ſo much as heard the word; and if they have heard and embraced it, yet when perſecution ariſes becauſe of it, they drop their profeſſion of it; or elſe their minds are ſo filled with worldly cares, and deceitful riches, that the word is choaked, and becomes unprofitable, and by and by, Demas like, they forſake it, having loved this preſent world. And pierced themſelves thro' with many ſorrows; riches are therefore fitly compared to thorns, which give great trouble and uneaſineſs, both in getting and keeping them; and oftentimes the reflexion upon the unlawful ways and means made uſe of to obtain them, gives very pungent pain and diſtreſs; ſee Job xx. 15—29. The Apoſtle ſeems to allude to the Hebrew word, בצע, uſed for a covetous man, which ſignifies one that pierces, cuts, and wounds, as ſuch an one does both himſelf and others.

Ver. 11. But thou, O man of God, &c.] Not only by creation, as every man is; nor merely by ſpecial grace, as every one is, that is choſen of God, redeemed by Chriſt, and regenerated and ſanctified by the Spirit; but by his peculiar office, as an Evangeliſt and miniſter of the word, being qualified for, and devoted to, and employed in the ſervice of God. The phraſe is taken out of the Old Teſtament, where the prophets, Elijah and Eliſha, are ſo called, 2 Kings i. 9. and iv. 7, 9. flee theſe things; the Arabic verſion reads, theſe abominations; namely, all queſtions and ſtriſes of words, from whence ſo many evils follow, ver. 4, 5. and all worldly gain, ſelfiſh intereſt, and mercenary views in religion; a wicked reſolution to be rich, at any rate, and an immoderate love of the things of the world, and an eager purſuit after them, which expoſe to great danger, and even utter ruin; things very unbecoming any profeſſor of religion, but much more a miniſter of the Goſpel. And follow after righteouſneſs; not for juſtification before God, that he had followed after, and attained unto, which is the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and not of the law; but for the honour of religion before men; and intends the doing of juſtice between man and man, giving every one their own, which an undue affection for the world ſometimes leads men from: godlineſs; ſpiritual religion, holineſs of heart, and converſation, which has the promiſe of this life, as well as of the other, and with contentment is great gain; wherefore to purſue this is much better than greedily to run after the riches of this world, or with the falſe teachers to ſuppoſe that godlineſs lies in worldly gain, or in ſecuring to a man his worldly intereſt: faith; the grace of faith, which looks not to things ſeen, which are temporal, but to things not ſeen, which are eternal; and leads off the mind from ſublunary enjoyments to God, and Chriſt, and the glories of another world; and is the leading grace to all others, and the foundation of good works, without which there is no pleaſing God in acts of moral righteouſneſs, or in any acts of religious worſhip, which may be called godlineſs: love; to God, which is inconſiſtent with ſerving mammon, or with an immoderate love of money; and to Chriſt, which will put a man on ſeeking, not his own things, but the things of Chriſt; and to the ſaints, which will direct him to ſerve them by acts of beneficence and liberality: patience; in bearing reproaches and indignities; in ſuffering injuries, loſs of goods, impriſonment, and every ſort of perſecution, for the ſake of the Goſpel, which a covetous diſpoſition will not admit of: laſt of all meekneſs; or humility, not ſeeking great things, but being content with a lower ſtation of life; for generally 'tis pride that puts men upon a determination to be rich at any rate: it may alſo deſign meekneſs in inſtructing the ignorant, in refuting error, and in reproving offenders.

Ver. 12. Fight the good fight of faith, &c.] The Apoſtle ſuggeſts to Timothy, that he had other buſineſs to do than to mind the things of this world; his life was a ſtate of warfare; he was a ſoldier, and was not to entangle himſelf with the things of this life; he had many enemies to engage with, as ſatan, and his principalities and powers; ſin, and the luſts of the fleſh; the world, and the men of it, and a great fight of afflictions to endure with them; as alſo falſe teachers, with whom particularly he was to fight the good fight of faith, that ſo the truth of the Goſpel, which they reſiſted, might continue with the ſaints. This fight is called the fight of faith; partly in oppoſition to the law, and to מלחמתה של תורה, the fight, or war of the law, the Jews[r] ſo much talk of; and in which the falſe teachers, in the Apoſtle's time, were ſo much engaged, and againſt whom the Apoſtles ſet themſelves; and partly becauſe the doctrine of faith, the faith of the Goſpel, the faith once delivered to the ſaints, is what they earneſtly contended, ſtrove, and fought for; and becauſe the grace of faith, as converſant with the ſcriptures of truth, was the weapon they fought with: and this may be called a good fight, becauſe it is in a good cauſe, the cauſe of God and truth; and under a good captain, Jeſus Chriſt the captain of our ſalvation; for which good weapons are provided, even the whole armour of God, and which are not carnal, but ſpiritual and mighty; to which may be added, that thoſe who are engaged in this fight may be ſure of victory, and the crown of glory, life, and righteouſneſs: ſo that when they have done fighting, they have nothing elſe to do, but to lay hold on eternal life; as Timothy for his encouragement is here bid to do. Eternal life is the prize of the high calling of God, which is held up, and held forth to thoſe who are fighting the Lord's battles; and this they ſhould look unto as the recompence of reward; and this they may lay hold upon, even now by faith, believing their intereſt in it, their right unto it, and that they ſhall enjoy it; of which they may be the more aſſured, becauſe of their effectual vocation: whereunto thou art alſo called; not barely by the external miniſtration of the Goſpel, in which ſenſe many are called, but few choſen and ſaved; but internally, by the ſpecial grace and power of the Spirit of God; and ſuch who are ſo called, are not only called to grace, but to eternal glory; and the God of all grace, who has called unto it, of his ſovereign good-will and pleaſure, is faithful, and will beſtow it. The word alſo is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Vulgate Latin, and in all the Oriental verſions; but it ſeems to be emphatical, and is uſed to ſtrengthen Timothy's faith, as to the enjoyment of eternal life; ſince it was not only the reward of grace, following upon the good fight of faith, but was that alſo to which he was called by the grace of God: and haſt profeſſed a good profeſſion before many witneſſes; both before the brethren at Lyſtra, at his baptiſm and admiſſion into the church, before whom he gave an account of his faith, and made a profeſſion of it; and who, upon this, and his agreeable life and converſation, gave a good report of him to the Apoſtle Paul, Acts xvi. 1, 2. and before the Apoſtle, and the reſt of the elders, when they laid their hands on him, whereby an extraordinary gift was conveyed unto him, 1 Tim. iv. 14. 2 Tim. i. 6. or it may be before the men of the world, ſome violent perſecutors, before whom he bravely, and with great intrepidity, profeſſed his faith in Chriſt Jeſus; and which he continued conſtantly to do, in every place whereever he came; and which being done ſo often, and ſo publickly, is a reaſon why he ſhould keep on till the battle was over.

[p] Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 70. 2.

[q] R. David Kimchi in Iſ. xxvii. 9.

Ver. 13. I give thee charge in the ſight of God, &c.] Who is omniſcient and omnipotent: who quickeneth all things; all creatures, for all animate creatures have their life, motion, and being in him; and who quickeneth all his people, at firſt converſion, when dead in ſin, and afterwards when dull and lifeleſs; and who will quicken the dead at the laſt day. This ſeems to be mentioned to ſtrenghthen Timothy againſt the fears of death, that ſhould he die in fighting the Lord's battles, he was able to raiſe him from the dead, and would do it. And before Chriſt Jeſus, who before Pontius Pilate witneſſed a good confeſſion; or rather under Pontius Pilate; or, as the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions render it, in the time of Pontius Pilate; for this may refer not only to the confeſſion Chriſt made in his preſence, at his examination by him, when he owned himſelf to be a king, declared the nature of his kingdom, and ſignified that the end of his incarnation was to bear a teſtimony to the truth; but it may alſo refer to the faithful, plain, and open witneſs Chriſt bore to truth throughout the whole of his miniſtry, under Pontius Pilate, by his doctrine and miracles, and at laſt by his ſufferings and death, which he endured under him; and this is mentioned for Timothy's imitation, and to encourage him, and all other ſaints, to hold faſt the profeſſion of their faith to the end.

Ver. 14. That thou keep this commandment, &c.] Meaning either what he had now laſt of all enjoined him, to fight the good fight of faith; or the whole of the orders he had given him throughout the Epiſtle, relating both to the doctrine and diſcipline of the houſe of God; or rather the work and office of preaching the Goſpel, which was committed to him by the Holy Ghoſt, and enjoined him by the commandment of the everlaſting God: and this the Apoſtle, before God and Chriſt, charges him to obſerve and keep, in the following manner, without ſpot, and unrebukeable; the ſenſe is, that he would diſcharge his miniſterial function with all faithfulneſs and purity; that he would ſincerely, and without any adulteration, preach the pure Goſpel of Chriſt; and that he would ſo behave in his life and converſation, that his miniſtry might not he juſtly blamed by men, or he be rebuked by the church here, or by Chriſt hereafter: and this he would have him do, until the appearing of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; to judge the quick and dead at the laſt day, and which will be very illuſtrious and glorious. Now Chriſt is hid from the eyes of men, but to them that look for him, he'll appear a ſecond time in great glory; in the glory of his Father, and of his own, and of the holy angels; and when his ſaints will appear with him in glory: and this the Apoſtle the rather mentions, ſince every man's work and miniſtry will then be made manifeſt; this bright day of Chriſt's appearing will declare it, and every one muſt give an account of himſelf, and his talents unto him: and this ſhows that the Apoſtle did not deſign this charge, and theſe inſtructions, for Timothy only, but for all other miniſters of the Goſpel, till the ſecond coming of Chriſt; tho' this was then, as now, ſo much unknown, when it would be, that it could not be ſaid but Timothy might live unto it.

Ver. 15. Which in his times he ſhall ſhew, &c.] For tho' the time of Chriſt's appearing is unknown, yet the thing itſelf is certain; God will bring it about, and make it manifeſt in his own time, in the time that is fixed and appointed by him; and which is only known unto him, and which he keeps in his own power, and has reſerved in his own breaſt: who is the bleſſed; the Syriac verſion reads, the bleſſed God; who is bleſſed in himſelf, in his Son and Spirit, in the perfections of his nature; who is God all-ſufficient, has enough in himſelf for himſelf, and for all his creatures; who is the fountain and the author of all bleſſedneſs, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal, which any of them are, or ſhall be poſſeſſed of: and only potentate; or governour of the whole world, which can be ſaid of none but himſelf: he is the governour among the nations, and over all the nations of the earth; his kingdom rules over all other kingdoms; and he has his power and government from himſelf, whereas all other potentates have their power from him, as follows: the king of kings, and lord of lords; from whom they receive their ſceptres, crowns, and kingdoms; by whom they reign, and are continued in their power; for he ſets up kings, and removes kings at his pleaſure, and to him they muſt be accountable for all their adminiſtrations another day; and at preſent they are under his influence, and at his controul; he has their hearts, and their counſels, as well as kingdoms, in his hands, and under his over-ruling providence; and cauſes all to anſwer his wiſe and eternal purpoſes. Theſe titles are uſed by the Jews, who ſtile him, אדון כל האדונים מלך על כל המלכים, Lord of all Lords, King over all Kings[a]. The ſame name is given to Chriſt, Rev. xix. 16. which ſhews him to be equal with the Father.

Ver. 16. Who only hath immortality, &c.] Angels are immortal, and ſo are the ſouls of men, and ſo will be the bodies of men after the reſurrection; but then neither of theſe have immortality of themſelves, they have it from God; who only has it, of himſelf, originally, eſſentially, and inderivatively. Dwelling in that light which no man can approach unto; in this preſent, frail, and mortal ſtate; yea, angels themſelves can't bear the luſtre of it, but cover their faces with their wings; for God is light itſelf, as well as clothes himſelf with light, as with a garment; and is the Father and fountain of lights to all his creatures. Whom no man hath ſeen, nor can ſee; no where but in Chriſt, at leaſt ſpiritually and ſavingly; and that but very imperfectly in the preſent ſtate: the ſin, frailty, and mortality of human nature muſt be taken away, in order to inherit the kingdom of God, and enjoy the beatific viſion of him; which ſaints in heaven have, who ſee him as he is, and in ſuch ſort, as no man now does, or can ſee him: to whom be honour and power everlaſting, Amen. Which may be conſidered either as a wiſh, that ſuch honour, power, and glory might be aſcribed unto him, as we ſupply it; or as an aſſertion that it is given to him, as it is by the angels, and by the ſaints in heaven and in earth.

Ver. 17. Charge them that are rich in this world, &c.] Or in the things of this world. The Arabic verſion reads, in this preſent world; in diſtinction from the world to come: ſome are poor in this world, and rich in another; others are rich in this world, and poor, and wretched, and miſerable in the world to come: ſome are rich in both worlds, and ſuch were at leaſt ſome of thoſe, the Apoſtle here refers to, who were members of the church at Epheſus, which was a rich city, and ſome rich men in it were called by the grace of God; and to diſtinguiſh theſe from others, who, tho' poor in this world, were rich in grace and in ſpiritual gifts, he ſo calls them; as well as to obſerve that their riches were like the world they were in, deceitful, empty, unſatisfying, and periſhing: theſe the Apoſtle would have not only ſpoke to, inſtructed, exhorted, and intreated, but ſtrictly charged and commanded, without paying any regard to their worldly grandeur and riches, that they be not high-minded; the Ethiopic verſion reads, that they be not lifted up in this world; with their wealth and worldly ſubſtance, and look down from the heighth of their honour and riches with contempt upon the poor; entertaining high thoughts of themſelves, as if their bodies were of another matter and make, when they have all one maker, are of one blood, and of the earth, earthly, and muſt return to it; or as if their ſouls were more large and capacious, and they were wiſer and more knowing, whereas riches are not always to men of underſtanding, a fool may be rich, and a wiſe man poor; or as if they were the peculiar favourites of heaven, when, for the moſt part, God chuſes and calls the poor of this world; or as if others were unworthy of their looks, company, and converſation. Riches produce pride; rich men are apt to be proud of themſelves, and deſpiſe others; and therefore this evil is taken notice of, as what they are to be cautioned againſt, and charged to the contrary: nor truſt in uncertain riches; or in the uncertainty of riches; they are here to-day, and gone to-morrow; no man that is poſſeſſed of them, can be ſure of them a moment; they make themſelves wings and flee away; he that gives them, can take them away at pleaſure: and there are various ways by which they are ſuddenly, and at once taken from the owners of them; as by loſs in trade, by ſhipwrack, by inundations, by fire, by thieves, &c. and yet men are apt to promiſe themſelves a continuance of them, and to have their dependance upon them, and place their truſt and confidence in them, yea, even good men; and that very much to the neglect of, and diſregard to the providence of God, which is always beſt and ſafeſt in every circumſtance and ſtation of life to depend upon, as follows: but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; almoſt every word carries in it an argument or reaſon why he ſhould be truſted, becauſe he is God, and not a creature; the living God, who has life in himſelf, eſſentially and originally; is the author, giver, and maintainer of life in others; and who always is, ever continues unchangeably the ſame: and giveth all things; every good gift comes from him; all the gifts of nature, and bounties of providence; and as he gives, he can take away, and therefore ſhould be only regarded: and he gives all things richly, largely, and plenteouſly; what is neceſſary and convenient, and abundantly more than men deſerve: and that to enjoy; not to lay up, but to uſe for ſupport, refreſhment, and pleaſure, tho' not to abuſe.

Ver. 18. That they do good, &c.] Rich men ſometimes do much ill to themſelves, to the hurt of their bodies, by luxury, intemperance, and debauchery, and to their ſouls, to the ruin of them, and to others by fraud, oppreſſion, and violence; for it is in the power of their hands to do much evil, and alſo to do much good, as they ſhould; and much is required of them, ſince much is given them to do good with, and for which they are accountable: it becomes them, and eſpecially ſuch as believe in Chriſt, to do every good work in general, and to do acts of beneficence in particular, both to all men, and to the houſhold of faith. That they be rich in good works; or abound in the performance of them, as Dorcas is ſaid to be full of good works and alms-deeds; and to reckon that their true riches lie more in the exerciſe of grace, and in the fruits of it, doing good works, than in their worldly enjoyments. The phraſe ſeems to be Rabbinical. Frequent mention is made of, עשיר בתורה, rich in the law, and, עשיר במצות, rich in the commandments [t]; and it is ſaid [u], no man is poor but he that is without the law, and good works, for the riches of a man are the law, and good works. Ready to diſtribute; unaſked; and when they are aſked, do not turn away, and put off, but give at once, and without grief, and with chearfulneſs; want no arguments to preſs them to it, nor uſe any againſt it. Willing to communicate; of their good things to the neceſſities of the poor, making them common to them, and them partakers of them. Some render the word, ſociable, in oppoſition to that moroſeneſs, ſtiffneſs, and thoſe haughty and forbidding airs, with which rich men are apt to treat the poor, when they ſhould be affable and courteous to them, and admit them to a free converſation with them.

[a] Zohar in Num. fol. 100. 2.

Ver. 19. Laying up in ſtore for themſelves, &c.] Laying up a treaſure in heaven, which will be for themſelves to enjoy to all eternity; whereas what they lay up here is for others, for their children or friends, and ſometimes for ſtrangers, and they know not who, whether for a wiſe man or a fool, yea even for enemies: ſo it is ſaid of king Munbaz, when he diſperſed his father's treaſures to the poor, his brethren and friends came about him, complaining of it; to whom he ſaid [w], "my fathers treaſured up below, I treaſure up above.——My fathers treaſured up for others, I treaſure up, לעצמי, for myſelf; my fathers treaſured up for this world, I treaſure up for the world to come." So it follows here, a good foundation againſt the time to come; by which is meant, not a foundation of happineſs, for that is laid already, and by God himſelf; and much leſs by doing acts of beneficence is that foundation laid; for there is no other foundation of happineſs, life, and ſalvation, that can be laid, beſides what is laid, which is Jeſus Chriſt: nor is the Apoſtle ſpeaking of laying a foundation here, to build upon, but of laying up a foundation in heaven, by which he intends happineſs itſelf; and which he calls a foundation, becauſe it is ſolid and ſubſtantial, permanent and durable, in oppoſition to the uncertain, precarious, tranſitory, and periſhing enjoyments and treaſures of this life; and good, becauſe profitable, when the laying up of worldly riches is often to the hurt of its owners, and will be uſeful, when they will not profit; and beſides, will always continue, and be a foundation that will always ſupport them, and never give way: now to lay up this, is no other than to ſeek thoſe things which are above, to ſhew a concern for them, and to ſet the affections on them, and live in the comfortable hope and expectation of enjoying them. The phraſe is the ſame with that in Matt. vi. 19, 20. and takes in a regard to ſpiritual riches, the riches of grace now, ſuch as ſanctifying, juſtifying, and pardoning grace through Chriſt; which will be a good foundation againſt the time to come; and will give both a right and meetneſs for the enjoyment of the heavenly treaſures, which will be for futurity, even to all eternity. That they may lay hold on eternal life; not by way of merit, but as the free gift of God, which the riches of grace give a title to, and a fitneſs for; and which ſhall be laid hold upon, and enjoyed by all that ſeek the true riches. The Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, true life; for the preſent life is rather a ſhow, an appearance of life, than life itſelf.

Ver. 20. Keep that which is committed to thy truſt, &c.] That is, the Goſpel; ſee ch. i. 11. which is a rich treaſure put into earthen veſſels, and ought to be kept pure and incorrupt, and faithfully diſpenſed, and diligently preſerved, that ſo it may be continued genuine and ſincere, and not be either adulterated and depraved, or be taken away by falſe teachers. And it may alſo include his gifts for the miniſtration of it, which were to be kept in uſe, and ſtirred up, and not neglected, but cultivated and improved to the advantage of the church, and of the intereſt of Chriſt: avoiding prophane and vain bablings; about the law, and circumciſion, and other things, which the falſe teachers inſiſted much on, and amuſed their hearers with; and which were vain, empty, uſeleſs, and unprofitable talk. Some copies, and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion, read, prophane newneſſes of words; or new words, which ought not to be introduced, for they often bring in new doctrines: the form of ſound words, the wholeſome words, the words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the words which the Holy Ghoſt teacheth, ſhould be held faſt; and eſpecially all new words ſhould be avoided, which are contrary to them, or in the leaſt weaken them, or detract from them. And oppoſitions of ſcience falſly ſo called; the falſe teachers boaſted of their ſcience and knowledge, but it was not true, ſolid, ſpiritual, and ſaving; it was not an experimental knowledge of the Goſpel; it was not the excellent knowledge of Chriſt, which has eternal life connected with it; it was merely notional and ſpeculative; it was idle, empty, and uſeleſs, mere pagan philoſophy, and vain deceit, upon which they formed antitheſes, or oppoſitions and objections to the truths of the Goſpel; and even oppoſed themſelves, and the word of God, as well as the faithful miniſters of it.

Ver. 21. Which ſome profeſſing, &c.] Pretending to be maſters of the above ſcience, boaſting and making great ſhow of it, and valuing themſelves upon it: have erred concerning the faith; have wandered from the way of truth, and gone into the path of error; have fallen from the doctrine of faith, and made ſhipwrack of it, and become entire apoſtates: from the danger attending vain jangling, the uſe of new words, the profeſſion of a falſe ſcience, and making objections from it againſt the truth, does the Apoſtle diſſuade Timothy from them, ſince they generally iſſue in apoſtacy. Grace be with thee. Amen. This the Apoſtle wiſhes to him, that he might be enabled to diſcharge every branch of his duty he had pointed to him in this Epiſtle, and to keep him from all evil, and every falſe way, and preſerve him ſafe to the kingdom and glory of God. And which he doubted not but would be his caſe, and therefore puts his Amen to it. The Alexandrian copy, and Arabic verſion read, grace be with you. Amen.

The firſt to Timothy was written from Laodicea, which is the chiefeſt city of Phrygia Pacatiana. This laſt clauſe is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and Syriac verſion; and indeed, in the Apoſtle's time, Phrygia was not known by ſuch an appellation as Pacatiana, which was given it ſome years after by the Romans; and which ſhows, that the ſubſcriptions to the Epiſtles are not only of human authority, but of later date, at leaſt ſome of them. The Arabic verſion calls it the metropolis of Phrygia, and leaves out Pacatiana; and one of Beza's manuſcripts, inſtead of Laodicea, reads Macedonia, from whence, as from Philippi, or ſome other city there, he thinks it was written; and ſeveral learned men have been of opinion, that it was written from Philippi.

AN EXPOSITION, &c.

The Second Epiſtle of PAUL the Apoſtle to TIMOTHY.

THAT this Epiſtle was written to Timothy, whilſt he was at Epheſus, where the Apoſtle in his former Epiſtle had deſired him to ſtay, is evident from his making mention of ſome perſons in it, who were Epheſians; as Oneſiphorus, whom he commends, and Alexander the copperſmith, of whom he complains: and that this Epiſtle was written by the Apoſtle, when he was at Rome, is no leſs evident; for he expreſly calls himſelf a priſoner, ch. i. 8. and ſpeaks of being then in trouble, and in bonds, ch. ii. 9, 10. and the perſons that ſend their ſalutations in it to Timothy, were Romans, ch. iv. 21. but at what time it was written, is not ſo certain: it ſeems by ch. iv. 7. that it was but a little time before his martyrdom; tho' thoſe words may only ſignify, that he was now very much on the decline of life, was now grown an old man, and in continual expectation of death, and was in a conſtant readineſs for it, come when it would; having faithfully diſcharged his duty, and his warfare being as good as accompliſhed, and his race almoſt run out; for he afterwards preſſes Timothy to come to him, and that before winter; and deſires him to bring with him his cloak, books, and parchments, which one would think he ſhould have little occaſion for, if juſt upon his martyrdom: beſides, he ſays he was delivered out of the mouth of the lion, that by him the preaching of the Goſpel might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear it; and expreſſes his confidence, that he ſhould be again delivered, ver. 9, 13, 17, 18. And it looks as if this Epiſtle was written before the Epiſtles to the Philippians, Coloſſians, and Philemon, ſince it appears that Timothy did come to him at Rome, as here deſired, and is joined with the Apoſtle in thoſe Epiſtles. Some therefore have placed this Epiſtle in the year 58, or 59, about the fourth or fifth of Nero's reign. The deſign of it is to ſtir up Timothy to the faithful and diligent diſcharge of his duty, as a miniſter of the Goſpel; to abide conſtantly by the truths of it, and to animate him to ſuffer patiently, chearfully, and courageouſly for the ſake of it; and to warn him againſt falſe teachers, and their errors, who were already riſen, and would afterwards ariſe, and be followed by ſuch who had itching ears, and could not bear ſound doctrine; but this ſhould be no diſcouragement to him in the proſecution of his work; and laſtly, to deſire his preſence with him at Rome, being now deſtitute of his ſeveral aſſiſtants.

CHAP. I.

IN this chapter, after the inſcription and ſalutation, the Apoſtle expreſſes his great affection for Timothy, and highly commends him; exhorts him to various things relating to his office, as a preacher of the Goſpel; and concludes with taking notice of the kindneſs ſhewn him by Oneſiphorus. The inſcription and ſalutation are in ver. 1, 2. and then follows the preface to the Epiſtle, in which the Apoſtle teſtifies his great love to Timothy, and commends him; by declaring his thankfulneſs to God, that he had reaſon always to remember him in his prayers; by his deſire to ſee him again, who had ſhed ſo many tears for him, that his joy might be filled; and by taking notice of his unfeigned faith, the ſame with that which had dwelt in his anceſtors, ver. 3, 4, 5. And then he proceeds to exhort him to the exerciſe and improvement of his miniſterial gift; to ſhew a fortitude of mind, and a manly ſpirit in the cauſe of Chriſt; and to ſuffer chearfully for the ſake of it, ver. 6, 7, 8. and in order to animate and encourage him to the ſame, he gives a ſummary of the Goſpel, as containing in it the great doctrines of ſalvation, and eternal life, according to the free grace of God through Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 9, 10. and obſerves, that he himſelf was appointed a preacher of it to the Gentiles, ver. 11. and inſtances in himſelf, as ſuffering for it, without being aſhamed; and as having a ſtrong confidence in Chriſt, as able to keep him, and what he had committed to him, ver. 12. and then returns to his exhortation to Timothy to hold faſt the Goſpel of Chriſt; to which he urges him from the conſideration of the nature and value of it, being a form of ſound words, and that famous good thing, and of the means and manner in which he came to the knowledge of it; and chiefly from its being committed to him by the Holy Ghoſt, that dwelt in him; and alſo becauſe of the general defection of the Aſian profeſſors from it, ver. 13, 14, 15. but he excepts one perſon, Oneſiphorus by name, whom he commends for his kindneſs to him both at Epheſus and at Rome; and therefore intreats of the Lord mercy, both for him and his houſe, at the great day, ver. 16, 17, 18.

Ver. 1. Paul an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] Not of men, nor by men, but by Jeſus Chriſt, from whom he was ſent; by whom he was qualified; in whoſe name he came, and miniſtred; and whom he preached. Of his name Paul, and of his office, as an Apoſtle, ſee the note on Rom. i. 1. into which office he came by the will of God; not by the will of man, no not of the beſt of men, of James, Cephas, or John, or any of the other Apoſtles; nor by his own will, he did not thruſt himſelf into this office, or take this honour upon himſelf; nor was it owing to any merits of his, which he always diſclaims, but to the will and grace of God; it was by the ſecret determining will of God, that he was from all eternity ſeparated unto the Goſpel of Chriſt; and it was by the revealed will of God to the church, that he, with Barnabas, was ſet apart to the miniſtry of the word; ſee Rom. i. 1. Acts xiii. 2. According to the promiſe of life which is in Chriſt Jeſus; or with reſpect unto it: this points at the ſum and ſubſtance, or ſubject-matter, and end of his Apoſtleſhip, for which this grace was given to him, which was to publiſh the free promiſe of life and ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt. By life here is meant, not this corporal life, which, and a continuation of it, were promiſed in the covenant of works, on condition of man's obedience to it; but eternal life, the promiſe of which is a free promiſe made by God, of his own free ſovereign will and pleaſure, in the covenant of grace, from everlaſting; and is an abſolute and unconditional one, not at all depending upon the works of the law, or obedience to it; ſee Rom. iv. 14, 16. Gal. iii. 18. and this promiſe is in Chriſt, in whom all the promiſes are yea and amen; for it was made before the world began, Tit. i. 2. when the perſons on whoſe account it was made, were not in actual being; but Chriſt, their head and repreſentative, then exiſted; and to him it was given, and into his hands was it put for them, where it is ſure to all the ſeed; and not only the promiſe, but the life itſelf is in him, and which is here intended. Chriſt, as mediator, aſked it of his Father for all his people, and he gave it to him, where it is hid ſafe and ſecure. Chriſt is the prince or author of life; he is the procuring cauſe of it; he was ſent, and came, that his ſheep might have it; he gave his fleſh, his human nature for it; and by his ſufferings and death removed all obſtructions which ſin had thrown in the way, and opened the way for their enjoyment of it; and he is the giver of it to as many as the Father has given him; nor is it to be had in any other way, or of any other, but of him; and it lies in the knowledge of him, communion with him, and conformity to him. Now it is the buſineſs of Goſpel-miniſters, not to direct perſons to work for life, or to ſeek to obtain eternal life by their own works of righteouſneſs, but to hold forth the word of life, or to ſhew men the way of life and ſalvation by Chriſt alone.

Ver. 2. To Timothy, my dearly beloved ſon, &c.] Not in a natural, but in a ſpiritual ſenſe; and not on account of his being an inſtrument of his converſion, but by reaſon of that inſtruction in the doctrines of the Goſpel which he gave him, it being uſual to call diſciples children; and he calls him ſo, becauſe as a ſon, he being young in years, ſerved with him, and under him, as a father, in the Goſpel of Chriſt; for whom he had a very great affection, on account of his having been a companion with him in his travels, and very uſeful to him in the miniſtry, and becauſe of his ſingular and eminent gifts, great grace, religion, and holineſs: Grace, mercy, and peace, &c. ſee the note on 1 Tim. i. 2.

Ver. 3. I thank God, &c.] After the inſcription and ſalutation follows the preface to the Epiſtle; which contains a thankſgiving to God upon Timothy's account, and has a tendency to engage his attention to what he was about to write to him in the body of the Epiſtle. God is the object of praiſe and thankſgiving, both as the God of nature and providence, and as the God of all grace; for every good thing comes from him; and therefore he ought to have the glory of it; nor ſhould any glory, as tho' they had not received it: and he is here deſcribed, as follows, whom I ſerve from my forefathers with pure conſcience; the Apoſtle ſerved God in the precepts of the law, as in the hands of Chriſt, and as written upon his heart by the Spirit of God, in which he delighted after the inward man, and which he ſerved with his regenerated mind; and alſo in the preaching of the Goſpel of Chriſt, in which he was very diligent and laborious, faithful and ſucceſsful: and this God, whom he ſerved, was the God of his forefathers, of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and of Benjamin, of whoſe tribe he was, and alſo of his more immediate anceſtors. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, from my original; for tho' he preached the Goſpel of Chriſt, and aſſerted the abrogation of the ceremonial law, yet he worſhipped the one, true, and living God, the God of Iſrael, and was not an apoſtate from the true religion, as his enemies would inſinuate: and this ſervice of his was performed with a pure conſcience: every man has a conſcience, but the conſcience of every natural man is defiled with ſin; and that is only a pure one, which is ſprinkled and purged with the blood of Chriſt; and whereby a perſon is only fitted to ſerve the living God, without the incumbrance of dead works, and ſlaviſh fear, and with faith and chearfulneſs; and ſuch a conſcience the Apoſtle had, and with ſuch an one he ſerved God. For this refers not to his ſerving of God, and to his conſcience, whilſt a Phariſee and a perſecutor; for however moral was his conduct and converſation then, and with what ſincerity and uprightneſs ſoever he behaved, his conſcience was not a pure one. He goes on to obſerve what he thanked God for, that without ceaſing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day; that God had laid him upon his heart, and that he had ſuch reaſon to remember him at the throne of grace continually. We learn from hence, that the Apoſtle prayed conſtantly night and day, and if ſo great a man as he ſtood in need of continual prayer, much more we; and that in his prayers he was not unmindful of his friends, tho' at a diſtance from him; and in both theſe he is to be imitated: it becomes us to pray without ceaſing, to pray always, and not faint and give out, to pray every day and night; and to pray for others as well as for ourſelves, for all the ſaints, yea, for our enemies, as well as for our friends.

Ver. 4. Greatly deſiring to ſee thee, &c.] In his former Epiſtle he had deſired him to ſtay at Epheſus, there being ſome work for him to do, which made it neceſſary he ſhould continue; but now having anſwered the Apoſtle's purpoſe, and he ſtanding in need of him at Rome, being without any aſſiſtant there, ſome having left him, and others were left by him in other places, and others were ſent by him elſewhere; and it having been ſome time ſince he ſaw Timothy, he longed for a ſight of him: being mindful of thy tears; ſhed either at the afflictions and ſufferings of the Apoſtle, of which Timothy, being his companion, was an eye-witneſs, and he being of a truly chriſtian ſympathizing ſpirit, wept with thoſe that wept; or at their parting from each other, as in Acts xx. 37, 38. that I may be filled with joy; at the ſight of him, and not at the remembrance of his tears; for the laſt clauſe is to be read in a parentheſis, and theſe words ſtand not connected with that, but with the preceding part of the text. The Apoſtle intimates, that a ſight of his dearly beloved ſon Timothy would fill him with joy amidſt all his troubles and afflictions he endured for the Goſpel: this is an inſtance of hearty, ſincere, and ſtrong affection.

Ver. 5. When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, &c.] This cauſed him to give thanks to God for it, whoſe gift it is, and made him the more deſirous of ſeeing one, who was a true believer, and an Iſraelite indeed. This is to be underſtood of the grace of faith, which was implanted in the heart of Timothy, by the Spirit of God, and was genuine and ſincere; he believed with the heart unto righteouſneſs; his faith worked by love to God, and Chriſt, and to his people, and was attended with good works: which dwelt firſt in thy grandmother Lois; who was his grandmother, not by his father's ſide, who was a Greek, but by his mother's ſide; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, thy mother's mother; who, tho' ſhe might not know that the Meſſiah was come in the fleſh, and that Jeſus of Nazareth was he, yet believed in the Meſſiah to come, and died in the faith of it, and in a dependance upon righteouſneſs and ſalvation by him; and ſo her faith was of the ſame kind with Timothy's; and which dwelt in her, and continued with her to the laſt: and thy mother Eunice; who was a Jeweſs, and a believer in Chriſt, Acts xvi. 1. tho' her name is a Greek one, and ſo is her mother's name; hers ſignifies good victory, and is the name of one of the Nereides, the daughters of Oceanus [a]; and her mother's ſignifies better, or more excellent. She lived, it ſeems, if her mother did not, to know that Chriſt was come, and that Jeſus, the ſon of Mary, was he; and ſhe believed in him for righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation; and in her this faith dwelt and abode to the end. And I am perſuaded that in thee alſo; not only that faith was in him, and that that was unfeigned, but that it alſo dwelt, remained, and would continue with him to the end of life; for true faith is an abiding grace, it is a gift of God, that is irrevocable, and without repentance: Chriſt is the author and finiſher of it, and prays that it fail not, whoſe prayers are always heard: it is begun, carried on, and performed by the power of God, and has ſalvation inſeparably connected with it. Now when the ſame faith is ſaid to dwell, firſt in his grandmother, and in his mother, and in him, this is not to be underſtood as if this grace was conveyed from one to another by natural generation; for grace comes not that way, only ſin; men are not born of blood, but of God; but the ſenſe is, that the ſame like precious faith was obtained by one, as by another. This was a rich family-mercy, and deſerved ſpecial notice, as being a thing uncommon, and required a particular thankſgiving; and is deſigned as a motive and encouragement to ſtir up Timothy to the exerciſe of that grace, and every other gift, God had beſtowed upon him, as in the following verſe.

Ver. 6. Wherefore I put thee in remembrance, &c.] Becauſe of the great affection the Apoſtle had for Timothy, and becauſe of that confidence he had of him, that unfeigned faith dwelt in him, as well as becauſe this had had a place in his relations before him; he therefore acts the part of a kind monitor to him, and upon theſe conſiderations, doubts not of ſucceeding in his following admonition: that thou ſtir up the gift of God which is in thee; by the gift is meant his miniſterial gift; for what qualifies men for the miniſtry, is not any thing natural in them, nor acquired by them, but what is given unto them, and that of God: and this was in him; it continued with him; it was not loſt by him, nor taken from him, as gifts may be, when they are not uſed; and yet it ſeems as if there was ſome decline, ſome backwardneſs and indifference as to the exerciſe of it: he might be too remiſs, negligent, and forgetful of it; wherefore the Apoſtle puts him in mind to ſtir it up: there is in the word uſed a metaphor taken from coals of fire covered with aſhes, as if almoſt extinct, and need to be blown up into a flame, and a very apt one it is; ſince the gifts of the Spirit, eſpecially his extraordinary ones, ſuch as miniſters in thoſe times had, are compared to fire; ſee Matt. iii. 11. Acts ii. 3. and theſe may be re-inflamed or increaſed, when they ſeem on the decline, by reading, meditation, prayer, and the frequent exerciſe of them. Agreeable to this the Arabic verſion renders it, that thou kindle the fire of the gift of God which is in thee; and the rather the Apoſtle took this freedom with Timothy, not only becauſe of his ſuperior age and office, but becauſe this gift was thro' his means: by the putting on of my hands; tho' not alone, but with the reſt of the preſbytery; ſee the note on 1 Tim. iv. 14.

Ver. 7. For God hath not given us the ſpirit of fear, &c.] A puſillanimous, cowardly ſpirit, ſo as to be afraid of men or devils, of what they will ſay or do; and ſo as to be diſcouraged in, ſink under, or be deterred from the work of the Lord, the preaching of the Goſpel, oppoſing the errors of falſe teachers, and reproving men for their ſins, and doing other parts of the miniſterial function; ſuch a ſpirit is not from God, and ſuch a fear brings a ſnare: but of power; and ſuch is the Spirit of God, who is called power from on high, Luke xxiv. 49. by which the minds of Chriſt's ſervants are fortified againſt reproaches and perſecutions for his ſake, and are ſtrengthened to reſiſt ſatan's temptations, to endure hardneſs as good ſoldiers of Chriſt, to quit themſelves like men, in oppoſition to falſe teachers, and to do the will and work of God: and of love; to God, and Chriſt, and his church, and which is a fruit of the holy Spirit; and ſuch who have it, ſeek not their own eaſe and credit, but the glory of God, the intereſt of Chriſt, and the good of ſouls; and having ſuch a ſpirit, and fired with ſuch love, they are not eaſily intimidated by the adverſary: and of a ſound mind; in the principles and doctrines of the Goſpel; and which ſhows itſelf in a prudent conduct and behaviour; in ſobriety, moderation, temperance, purity, and honeſty; all which may be ſignified by the word here uſed: and thoſe who have ſuch diſpoſitions and qualities from God, will not eaſily give way to the enemies of religion, or decline their duty for fear of them.

Ver. 8. Be not thou therefore aſhamed of the teſtimony of our Lord, &c.] Either that teſtimony which Chriſt bore perſonally by his doctrine and miracles, and by his ſufferings and death; or rather the Goſpel ſo called, becauſe it comes from Chriſt, and becauſe it is a teſtimony concerning him; concerning his perſon, his offices, his righteouſneſs, blood, ſacrifice, and ſatisfaction; concerning his obedience, ſufferings, death, reſurrection, aſcenſion, ſeſſion at God's right hand, interceſſion for his people, and ſecond coming to judgment; and concerning life and ſalvation by him: and which no preacher or profeſſor of Chriſt has reaſon to be aſhamed of, it being ſo true in itſelf, ſo great, ſo glorious, and ſo uſeful; and whoever is, Chriſt will be aſhamed of him another day: nor of me his priſoner; for Paul was now a priſoner at Rome, but not for any capital crime, or for any immorality, but for the ſake of Chriſt, and for preaching his Goſpel; wherefore none of his friends had any reaſon to be aſhamed of him; he was ſuffering in a glorious cauſe, and ſetting a noble example to others; it looks as if Timothy was ſomewhat blame-worthy in this reſpect. But be thou partaker of the afflictions of the Goſpel; the Goſpel is here repreſented as a perſon ſuffering afflictions, and the Apoſtle would have Timothy ſuffer them as that did, and along with it; he means thoſe afflictions which come upon men for preaching and profeſſing the Goſpel; for tho' the Goſpel is a Goſpel of peace, yet thro' the corruption and depravity of men, it brings a ſword, diviſion, and trouble. Tribulation ariſes on account of it; and this ſhould be endured patiently, and conſtantly, for the ſake of it: according to the power of God; which is only ſufficient to enable perſons to bear them; and is mentioned for the encouragement of Timothy and others, to endure them chearfully.

Ver. 9. Who hath ſaved us, and called us, &c.] And therefore ſhould not be aſhamed of his Goſpel, but ſhould readily partake of the afflictions of it, depending on his power to ſupport under them. There is a ſalvation previous to vocation: there is a temporal ſalvation; a ſpecial providence attends the elect of God, as ſoon as born; God's viſitation in a very ſpecial manner preſerves their ſpirits; they are kept from many imminent dangers, and ſome of them from the groſſer immoralities of life; and there is a chain of providences, as the fixing of their habitations, bringing to ſuch a place, and under ſuch a miniſtry, with various other things, ways, and methods, which lead on to effectual vocation: and there is a preſervation of them in Chriſt Jeſus, antecedent to vocation, Jude 1. God had a mind to ſave ſome; he pitched on his own Son to be the ſaviour of them; he put thoſe perſons into his hands, where they are ſafely preſerved; ſo as not to be damned, and everlaſtingly periſh, notwithſtanding their fall in Adam, their original corruption, and actual tranſgreſſions, until called by grace: yea, that ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, which is by Jeſus Chriſt, is before calling; this was reſolved upon from eternity; a council of peace was formed; a covenant of grace was made; a promiſe of life given; perſons were fixed upon to be ſaved; a ſaviour was appointed, and bleſſings of grace were put into his hands; and all according to an eternal purpoſe. Salvation was not only reſolved upon, but the ſcheme of it was contrived from eternity, in a way agreeable to all the divine perfections, in which ſatan is moſt mortified, the creature abaſed, and the elect effectually ſaved; nay, ſalvation is obtained before calling, for Chriſt being called to this work, and having undertook it, was in the fulneſs of time ſent to effect it, and is become the author of it: the thing is done, and all that remain are the application of it, which is in effectual vocation, and the full poſſeſſion of it, which will be in heaven. The calling here ſpoken of is not to an office, nor a mere call by the external miniſtry of the word, but a call by ſpecial grace, to ſpecial privileges, to grace and glory; and is an high and heavenly one, and is here called holy; for it follows, with an holy calling. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, with his holy calling: the author of it is holy; it is a call to holineſs, and the means of it are holy; and in it perſons have principles of grace and holineſs implanted in them; and are influenced to live holy lives and converſations: not according to our works; neither ſalvation nor vocation are according to the works of men: not ſalvation; works are not the moving cauſe of it, but the free love and favour of God; nor the procuring cauſe of it, but the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; nor the adjuvant or helping cauſe of it, for his own arm brought ſalvation alone: nor vocation; which muſt be either according to works before, or after; not according to works before calling, for ſuch are not properly good works, being deſtitute of faith in Chriſt, and proceeding neither from a right principle, nor to a right end; not according to works after calling, for as they are after it, they are the fruits of calling grace, and cannot be the cauſe, or rule, and meaſure of it: but according to his own purpoſe and grace; ſalvation is according to both: it is according to the purpoſe of God; God reſolved upon the ſalvation of ſome; in purſuance of this reſolution, he ſet up Chriſt as the mediator; and it being neceſſary that he ſhould be man, this was agreed to, and a body was prepared him; the time of his coming was fixed, called the fulneſs of time; and his ſufferings and death, with all the circumſtances of them, were determined by God. And it is according to grace; the reſolution for it, and the contrivance of it are owing to the grace of God; and which alſo appears in the making of a covenant; in ſetting up Chriſt as the mediator of it; in the miſſion of him into this world; and in all the parts and branches of ſalvation: in the choice of perſons to it; in the redemption of them by Chriſt; in their juſtification by his righteouſneſs; in the pardon of their ſins thro' his blood; in their adoption, regeneration, ſanctification, and eternal glory; and the end of it is the glory of the grace of God. Vocation is alſo according to both the purpoſe and grace of God: it is according to his purpoſe; the perſons called are fixed upon by him; whom he predeſtinates he calls; none are called, but whom God purpoſed to call; and for their calling no other reaſon can be aſſigned, but the ſovereign will of God, nor can any other reaſon be given, why others are not called; the time of their vocation is fixed in the decrees of God; and the place where, and means whereby, and occaſion whereof, all are predetermined by him: and this is alſo according to grace; the author of it is the God of all grace; and in it is made the firſt diſcovery of grace to ſinners; nothing out of God could move him to do it, and ſo it is ſovereign grace; it is of ſome men, and not all, and ſo is diſtinguiſhing grace; it is of ſinners, and ſo is free grace; and it is both to grace and glory, and ſo is rich grace: and it is according to grace which was given us in Chriſt Jeſus before the World began; it is a gift, and a free gift, not at all depending upon any conditions in the creature, and entirely proceeding from the ſovereign will of God; and it was a gift from eternity; there was not only a purpoſe of grace in God's heart, and a promiſe of it ſo early, but there was a real donation of it in eternity: and tho' thoſe to whom it was given, did not then perſonally exiſt, yet Chriſt did, and he exiſted as a covenant-head and repreſentative of his people; and they were in him, as members of him, as repreſented by him, being united to him; and this grace was given to him for them, and to them in him; in whom they were choſen, and in whom they were bleſſed with all ſpiritual bleſſings. The Ethiopic verſion reads, in Chriſt Jeſus, who before the world was; but without any foundation.

Ver. 10. But is now made manifeſt by the appearing of our ſaviour Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] The grace, according to which the elect of God are ſaved and called, tho' it was given to them in Chriſt, before the world was, yet lay hid in the heart of God; in his thoughts, council and covenant; and in Jeſus Chriſt; and in the types, ſhadows, ſacrifices, prophecies, and promiſes of the Old Teſtament; but is now made manifeſt in the clearneſs, freeneſs and abundance of it by the appearance of Chriſt, as a ſaviour in human nature; who is come full of grace and truth, and through whom there is a plentiful exhibition of it to the ſons of men: who hath aboliſhed death; the law of ſin and death, which is the cauſe of death; and has deſtroyed him which has the power of it, the devil; he has aboliſhed corporal death with regard to his people, as a penal evil, he has took away its ſting, and removed its curſe, and made it a bleſſing to them; and he has utterly, with reſpect to them, aboliſhed the ſecond death, ſo as that it ſhall have no power over them, or they ever be hurt by it; all which he did by dying, and riſing again: for tho' he died, yet he continued not under the power of death; but roſe again and triumphed over it, as having got the victory of it; and the keys of it are in his hand: and hath brought life and immortality to light through the goſpel. Chriſt was the firſt that roſe again from the dead to an immortal life; the path of life was firſt ſhewn to him, and brought to light by him; and tho' the doctrine of the reſurrection of the dead was known by the Old Teſtament ſaints, yet not ſo clearly as it is now revealed in the Goſpel; and in which is ſo fully atteſted the reſurrection of Chriſt, and of many of the ſaints with him, as well as the general reſurrection at the laſt day: and beſides eternal life, which is the free gift of God, lay hid in his purpoſe, promiſe, and covenant, and in his Son Jeſus Chriſt, into whoſe hands it was put; and which he has brought to light in a more clear manner, than ever it was before; by his appearance in human nature, by his perſonal miniſtry, by his death and reſurrection from the dead, and through the Goſpel, as preached by his miniſters; which gives an account of the nature of it, ſhews the way unto it, and points out and deſcribes the perſons that ſhall enjoy it.

Ver. 11. Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, &c.] Both from eternity, in the counſel and purpoſe of God, Acts ix. 15. and in time, by the church at Antioch, and the prophets in it, according to the expreſs order of the Holy Ghoſt, Act. xiii. 2. And if ever there was a preacher of the Goſpel, Paul was one; he preached purely, powerfully, publickly, conſtantly, boldly, and with all faithfulneſs and integrity: and an Apoſtle; that is of the Gentiles, as follows, and as he elſewhere ſtiles himſelf, Rom. xi. 13. for it does not run ſo ſmooth and eaſy to connect this with the word, Goſpel. In ver. 1. he is called the Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, becauſe he was ſent by him; and here the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, becauſe he was ſent to them; and this by the ſame appointment, by which he became a preacher: and a teacher of the Gentiles; tho' all the Apoſtles, by their commiſſion, were ſent to teach all nations, or the Gentiles in the ſeveral parts of the world, as well as Jews; yet the Apoſtle was eminently a teacher of them; his work chiefly lay among them; the Goſpel of the uncircumciſion, or the miniſtration of the Goſpel to the uncircumciſed Gentiles, was committed to him; and he was a teacher of them in faith and verity, as in 1 Tim. ii. 7. The Alexandrian copy only reads, and a teacher.

Ver. 12. For the which cauſe I alſo ſuffer theſe things, &c.] The preſent impriſonment and bonds in which he now was; theſe, with all the indignities, reproaches, diſtreſſes and perſecutions, came upon him, for the ſake of his being a preacher of the Goſpel; and particularly for his being a teacher of the Gentiles: the Jews hated him, and perſecuted him, becauſe he preached the Goſpel, and the more becauſe he preached it to the Gentiles, that they might be ſaved; and the unbelieving Gentiles were ſtirred up againſt him, for introducing a new religion among them, to the deſtruction of their idolatry and ſuperſtition: and theſe ſufferings which he endured were many; and he was appointed to them, as well as to the Goſpel, which he preached. Nevertheleſs I am not aſhamed; neither of the Goſpel, and the truths and ordinances of it, for which he ſuffered; but he continued to own and confeſs it, conſtantly, and to preach it boldly; none of theſe things moved him from it: nor of the ſufferings he endured, for the ſake of it; ſince they were not for murder, or theft, or ſedition, or any enormity whatever, but in a good cauſe; wherefore he was ſo far from being aſhamed of them, that he took pleaſure in them, and gloried of them. Nor was he aſhamed of Chriſt, whoſe Goſpel he preached, and for whom he ſuffered; nor of his faith and hope in him. For it follows, for I know whom I have believed. A ſpiritual knowledge of Chriſt is neceſſary to faith in him: an unknown Chriſt cannot be the object of faith, tho' an unſeen Chriſt, as to bodily ſight, may be, and is. Knowledge and faith go together: they that truly know Chriſt, believe in him, and the more they know him, the more ſtrongly do they believe in him: ſuch who ſpiritually and ſavingly know Chriſt, have ſeen the glories of his perſon, and the fullneſs of his grace; and they approve of him, as their ſaviour, being every way ſuitable to them, and diſapprove of all others; they love him above all others, and with all their hearts; and they put their truſt in him, and truſt him with all they have; and they know whom they truſt, what an able, willing, ſuitable, and compleat ſaviour he is. This knowledge which they have of him, is not from themſelves, but from the Father, who reveals him to them, and in them; and from himſelf, who gives them an underſtanding that they may know him; and from the ſpirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of him: and be it more or leſs, it is practical, and leads to the diſcharge of duty, from a principle of love to Chriſt; and is of a ſoul-humbling nature, and appropriates Chriſt to a man's ſelf; and has always ſome degree of certainty in it; and tho' it is imperfect, it is progreſſive; and the leaſt meaſure of it is ſaving, and has eternal life connected with it: and that faith which accompanies it, and terminates on the object known, is the grace, by which a man ſees Chriſt in the riches of his grace; goes to him in a ſenſe of need of him; lays hold upon him as a ſaviour; receives and embraces him; commits its all unto him; truſts him with all; leans and lives upon him, and walks on in him till it receives the end of faith, even eternal ſalvation. And I am perſuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him againſt that day. By that which he had committed to him, is meant, not the great treaſure of his labours and ſufferings for Chriſt, as if he had depoſited theſe in Chriſt's hands, in order to be brought forth at the great day of account to his advantage; for tho' his labours and ſufferings were many, yet he always aſcribed the ſtrength by which he endured them, to the grace of God; and he knew they were not worthy to be compared, nor made mention of, with the glory that was to be revealed in him. Rather this may be underſtood of the ſouls of thoſe he had been inſtrumental in the converting of, whom he had commended to Chriſt, hoping to meet them as his joy and crown of rejoicing another day; tho' it ſeems beſt of all to interpret it either of his natural life, the care of which he had committed to Chriſt, and which he knew he was able to preſerve, and would preſerve for uſefulneſs until the day appointed for his death; or rather his precious and immortal ſoul, and the eternal welfare and ſalvation of it: and the act of committing it to Chriſt, deſigns his giving himſelf to him, leaving himſelf with him, truſting in him for eternal life and ſalvation, believing he was able to ſave him to the uttermoſt; even unto the day of death, when he hoped to be with him, which is far better than to be in this world; and unto the day of the reſurrection, when both ſoul and body will be glorified with him; and to the day of judgment, when the crown of righteouſneſs will be received from his hands. And what might induce the Apoſtle, and ſo any other believer, to conclude the ability of Chriſt to keep the ſouls of thoſe that are committed to him, are, his proper deity, he having all the fulneſs of the godhead, or the perfections of deity dwelling in him; his being the creator and upholder of all things; his having accompliſhed the great work of redemption and ſalvation, by his own arm; his mediatorial fullneſs of grace and power; and his being truſted by his father with all the perſons, grace and glory of the elect, to whom he has been faithful. And now the conſideration of all this, as it was a ſupport to the Apoſtle, under all his afflictions, and ſufferings for the goſpel, and in a view of death itſelf, ſo it may be, as it often has been, a relief to believers, under all the ſorrows of this life, and in a proſpect of death and eternity. Philo the Jew [b] ſpeaks in like manner, as the Apoſtle here of παρακαταθηκη ψυχης, the depoſitum of the ſoul; tho' he knew not where to commit it for ſafety, as the Apoſtle did, and every true believer does.

Ver. 13. Hold faſt the form of ſound words, &c.] By words are meant, not mere words, but doctrines; for the ſervants of the Lord ſhould not ſtrive about words, to no profit, or be too tenacious of them. Indeed when words have long obtained, and have been very uſeful to convey juſt ideas of truth to the mind, they are not to be eaſily parted with, tho' they are not ſyllabically expreſſed in ſcripture, unleſs other and better words can be ſubſtituted in their room; and eſpecially they are to be tenaciouſly abode by, when the apparent deſign by dropping or changing them is, to ſet aſide the truths ſignified by them; ſuch as, trinity, unity, eſſence, perſon, imputed righteouſneſs, ſatisfaction, &c. But here words deſign doctrines, the words of faith and good doctrine, the wholeſome words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and which are ſaid to be ſound, in oppoſition to the words and doctrines of falſe teachers, which are corrupt and unſound, and are pernicious, and eat as do a canker; and becauſe they are ſo in themſelves; they are not only ſweet and pleaſant, but ſalutary and nouriſhing; they are milk for babes, and meat for ſtrong men; they are food for faith, and nouriſh up to eternal life. The form of them either intends the manner of teaching them, which ſhould be in apt and acceptable words, plain and eaſy to be underſtood, and not with the enticing words of mens wiſdom; or a brief ſummary, a compendium of Goſpel truth. It was uſual with both Jews and Chriſtians to reduce the principles of their religion into a narrow compaſs, into a ſhort form, or Breviary. The Jew had his form of knowledge, and of the truth in the law, Rom. ii. 20. which was a rule to himſelf, and an inſtruction to others; and ſuch a form, or Jewiſh creed, may be ſeen in Heb. vi. 1, 2. The Apoſtle Paul gives a ſummary of the Goſpel, which he preached, and which he reduces to two heads; repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Acts xx. 20. and an excellent compendium and abridgment of the Goſpel, and a glorious form of ſound words, we have in Rom. viii. 29, 30. and ſuch an one, Timothy had heard and received from the Apoſtle, as a pattern for him hereafter to preach by, as this word ſignifies; and as it is rendred in 1 Tim. i. 16. There ſeems to be an alluſion to painters, who firſt make their outlines, and take a rough-draught before they lay on their colours and beautiful ſtrokes; and which rough-draught and firſt lines are the rule and pattern of their after-work; and which they never exceed, but keep within the compaſs of: ſo there is a ſett of Goſpel-truths, which may be called the analogy or proportion of faith, which are a rule and pattern, as for hearers to judge by, ſo for miniſters to preach according to, 1 Tim. vi. 3. Gal. i. 8, 9. 2 John 9. 10. And ſuch a form or pattern, was the Apoſtle's doctrine to Timothy, and which he full well knew: and this form includes the doctrines concerning the trinity of perſons in the Godhead, Father, Son, and Spirit, and the proper deity and diſtinct perſonality of each of them; concerning the everlaſting love of the three perſons to the elect, the covenant of grace, and the tranſactions in it relating to them; their perſonal and eternal election in Chriſt, and his ſuretyſhip engagements for them; the ſtate and condition of men by the fall, and through ſin, as that Adam's ſin is imputed to all his poſterity, and a corrupt nature propagated from him, and that man is altogether impure, and intirely impotent to all that is ſpiritually good; as alſo ſuch doctrines as concern particular redemption by Chriſt, ſatisfaction for ſin by his ſacrifice, free and full pardon by his blood, and juſtification by his imputed righteouſneſs; regeneration and ſanctification by the powerful and efficacious grace of the ſpirit of God; and the final perſeverance of the ſaints to eternal glory, as the free gift of God. And this is a form never to be departed from, but to be held faſt, as Timothy is exhorted; which ſuppoſes that he had it, as he had, not only in his head, but in his heart; and that there was danger of dropping it through the temptations that ſurrounded him, the reproach and perſecution the Goſpel lay under, and through the ſlight of falſe teachers, who lay in weight to deceive, and to take every opportunity of wringing it out of his hands; and therefore it became him, as he had it, not only to hold it forth, and publiſh it, but to hold it faſt, in oppoſition to any wavering about it, or cowardice in it, or departure from it in any degree. And the argument to hold it faſt follows, which thou haſt heard of me; both in private converſation, and in the public miniſtry of the word; and which the Apoſtle had not from men, but by the revelation of Chriſt; and therefore was to be depended upon, and to be abode by, or held faſt, in the manner next directed to: in faith and love which is in Chriſt Jeſus; in the exerciſe of faith, and from a principle of love; which two graces always go together, and have Chriſt, as here, for their object: tho' this clauſe may be connected with the word heard, and the ſenſe be, either that Timothy had heard Paul preach theſe ſound doctrines with great faith and faithfulneſs, and with much fervency and affection to Chriſt, and the ſouls of men; or Timothy had heard them himſelf, and embraced and mixed them with faith, and received them in love: or it may be read in connexion with the form of ſound words; the ſum of which is faith in Chriſt, and love to him; the Goſpel is the doctrine of faith; and it puts men on diſcharging their duty from love to Chriſt.

Ver. 14. That good thing which was committed to thee, &c.] By which he means either his miniſterial work and office, which is a good work, the diſpenſation of which was committed to him, and which it became him ſo to obſerve, as that the miniſtry might not be blamed; or elſe the good and excellent gifts of the ſpirit, which qualified him for the diſcharge of that work, and which were not to be neglected, but to be ſtirred up, exerciſed, and improved, leſt they ſhould be loſt, or took away; or rather the Goſpel, which was committed to his truſt, to preach: and this may be called a good thing, from the author of it, who is good, whence it is named the Goſpel of God, and the Goſpel of Chriſt; and from the matter of it, it conſiſts of good things come by Chriſt, the High-prieſt, and which it publiſhes, ſuch as peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and eternal ſalvation by him; and from the end and uſe of it, it being both for the glory of God, the magnifying the riches of his grace, and the exaltation of Chriſt; and alſo is the power of God in regeneration and ſanctification unto ſalvation to every one that believes. And it being ſaid to be committed to Timothy, denotes the excellency of it; that it is a treaſure, as indeed it is a rich one, it contains the riches of grace, even the unſearchable riches of Chriſt, and is more valuable than thouſands of gold and ſilver; and that it is a truſt, and requires faithfulneſs in miniſters, who are the ſtewards of it; and that it is to be accounted for. Wherefore great care ſhould be had in diſpenſing and keeping it: keep by the Holy Ghoſt. It ſhould be kept pure and uncorrupt, free from all the adulterations and mixtures of men; and ſafe and ſound, that it be not ſnatched away from the churches by falſe teachers. And whereas the Apoſtle knew, that neither Timothy, nor any other, were ſufficient of themſelves, for theſe things, he directs to the keeping of it by the Holy Ghoſt; who makes men overſeers of churches, beſtows gifts upon them, to fit them for their work, and leads them into all the truths of the Goſpel; and under his influence and teachings, and by the aſſiſtance of his grace, are they enabled to diſcharge their truſt, abide by the Goſpel, and perſevere in the miniſtration of it to the end. Which dwelleth in us; in all believers, who are the temples of the Holy Ghoſt; and in all the churches, which are built up by him, an habitation for God; and in all the miniſters of the word, to direct, inſtruct, ſupport, and uphold them; and who dwells with them, and continues in them, and that for ever, John xiv. 16, 17.

Ver. 15. This thou knoweſt, that all they which are in Aſia, &c.] Either thoſe that followed the Apoſtle from Aſia to Rome; or who came from thence thither, upon buſineſs, and were upon the ſpot when the Apoſtle was in his greateſt troubles, and yet all forſook him and no man ſtood by him; or elſe the churches and miniſters in Aſia, that is, a great number of them; for it cannot be ſaid of every miniſter and church, and of all the members of churches there, what follows, be turned away from me; were aſhamed of him, becauſe of his chain, and deſpiſed him under his afflictions, and had him in abhorrence and contempt, and revolted from his doctrine; tho' the defection was very general, and the Apoſtle appeals to Timothy for the truth of it, as a fact well known to him: this thou knoweſt; Timothy being at Epheſus, which was in Aſia; and ſince there was ſo great an apoſtacy in the country, where he was, the above exhortations were very ſeaſonable, to hold faſt the form of ſound words, and keep the good thing committed to him; ſeeing ſo many were falling off from the truth of the Goſpel: of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes; who very likely were miniſters of the word, and who had ſhone for a while, but were now ſtars fallen from heaven, had erred from the faith, and were become apoſtates, and proved men of corrupt minds, and deceivers of the people; and it may be that theſe were more open and infamous, than ſome others, or might be more known to Timothy, and therefore are particularly mentioned. They are both of them ſaid to have been of the ſeventy diſciples; ſee the note on Luke x. 1. and afterwards followers of Simon Magus. The name of the firſt of theſe ſignifies a fugitive, and ſuch was he from the cauſe of Chriſt. Pliny [c] makes mention of a town in Aſia, called Phygella, from the fugitives which built it: and the latter ſignifies born of Mercury; there was one of the name in Tertullian's time againſt whom he wrote.

Ver. 16. The Lord give mercy to the houſe of Oneſiphorus, &c.] Who ſeems to have been one of Aſia, and of Epheſus, and is an exception from the general apoſtacy, or from thoſe that turned away from the apoſtle; and therefore he prays that the Lord would ſhew mercy to his family; that he would give regenerating grace and mercy to ſuch of them as were without it, or pardoning grace and mercy, or the great mercy of eternal life and ſalvation by Chriſt; and this doubtleſs was a prayer in faith, upon the promiſes of God, and upon inſtances and examples, in which God has remarkably ſhewn mercy to the families of good men, who have faithfully ſerved him, and abode in his intereſt in times of trouble; thus the houſe of Obed Edom was bleſſed for the ſake of the ark, that was taken care of by them; the reaſons of this prayer and good wiſhes follow: for he oft refreſhed me; both with his Chriſtian viſits, and ſpiritual converſation, which to the Apoſtle, in the heat of his affliction and perſecution, were like a fan in hot weather, cooling and reviving, as the word ſignifies; and alſo by ſupplying him with the neceſſaries of life, as food and raiment, or money to purchaſe them with. He anſwered to his name, which ſignifies, one that brings profit: he is ſaid to be one of the ſeventy diſciples; ſee the note on Luke x. 1. and afterwards to be biſhop of Corone: and was not aſhamed of my chain; the Syriac verſion adds, with which I am bound; in which he lay, or by which he was held, and led by a ſoldier; ſee Acts xxviii. 16, 20. Oneſiphorus was not aſhamed of the Apoſtle, tho' he was bound with a chain; nor was he aſhamed of the cauſe for which he ſuffered: and the Apoſtle propoſes him, to Timothy, as an example worthy of imitation, in thoſe times of defection. See ver. 8.

[c] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 29.

Ver. 17. But when he was in Rome, &c.] Upon ſome buſineſs or another, where the Apoſtle was a priſoner: he ſought me out very diligently, and found me; as there might be many priſons in Rome, he went from one to another, till he found him; and was one of thoſe to whom Chriſt will ſay hereafter, I was in priſon and ye came unto me, Matt. xxv. 36. or the reaſon of his going from place to place in queſt of him was this; the Apoſtle was not in any particular place of confinement, but had a lodging where he was kept by a ſoldier, and which with ſome difficulty Oneſiphorus found out: the manner of his bonds was this; he had a long chain faſtened at one end to his right arm, and at the other to the left arm of the ſoldier that kept him, who conſtantly attended him in this form, wherever he went; and it is poſſible that in this way he might have liberty to go about and viſit his friends; and this might ſtill make it more difficult for Oneſiphorus to find him.

Ver. 18. The Lord grant unto him that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day, &c.] In return for his diligent ſeeking till he found the Apoſtle. By mercy, he means the mercy of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt unto eternal life; or that crown of righteouſneſs and everlaſting glory and happineſs, which will be a grant from the Lord, or a free gift through Jeſus Chriſt; the effect of pure grace and mercy, and not of merit. The Apoſtle does not propoſe to requite him himſelf; he knew it was out of his power; but he had an intereſt in the Lord, and at the throne of grace; and he makes uſe of that in his favour, and prays the Lord that he might find mercy of him: and the meaning is either, that he prayed to God that he might find mercy of him; or he prayed particularly to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt to act the part of a mediator for him, with his father, that he might enjoy eternal life through him; or he prayed to God the Father, that he would grant that he might find mercy at the hands of Jeſus Chriſt his ſon, the judge of quick and dead, who at the great and laſt day, will give the crown of righteouſneſs to all that love him, and his appearance: and in how many things he miniſtred unto me at Epheſus, thou knoweſt very well; or better. Timothy being at Epheſus, of which city Oneſiphorus ſeems to have been, and that when the Apoſtle was there, he very freely communicated to him, as Timothy, who was with him there, knew very well: the Apoſtle does not forget, but remembers former kindneſſes, as well as takes notice of preſent favours, and which ſhews a grateful mind. The phraſe, unto me, is not in the Greek copies, tho' it is in the Vulgate Latin and in all the oriental verſions; wherefore the words may be underſtood of the things which Oneſiphorus had miniſtred to Timothy, and to the church at Epheſus, and to the poor ſaints there; which Timothy was better acquainted with than the Apoſtle could be, he being on the ſpot: and now ſince there were ſo many fallen off, and ſo few that remained hearty and faithful, but one Oneſiphorus to all them that were in Aſia; the Apoſtle exhorts to firmneſs and conſtancy, in a dependance on the ſpirit and grace of God, as follows.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle continues his exhortations to Timothy, with reſpect both to his office and his converſation, and cloſes with the character of a miniſter of the Goſpel. The Apoſtle having exhorted Timothy, in the former chapter, to abide by the Goſpel, notwithſtanding whatſoever he might ſuffer for it, here points out to him that grace and ſtrength in Chriſt, which he would have him have recourſe unto, to enable him to diſcharge his duty, ver. 1. and that the Goſpel might continue, he adviſes him to take care of a ſucceſſion, and to commit the Goſpel preached by him to others, whoſe qualifications for it are faithfulneſs and aptitude to teach, ver. 2. and in order to animate him to labour diligently in the Goſpel, and ſuffer chearfully for it, he obſerves to him that he was a ſoldier, and muſt endure hardſhips, and not indulge to the eaſe and pleaſures of life; was a runner in a race, and therefore muſt ſtrive before he received the crown; and was as an huſbandman that muſt firſt labour before he partakes of the fruit: which things he would have him ſeriouſly conſider; and deſires that the Lord would give him underſtanding in them, ver. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. and then with the ſame view, to encourage him to ſuffer for the Goſpel of Chriſt, he puts him in mind of the incarnation and reſurrection of Chriſt, as a ſummary of the Goſpel, and a ſpecimen of what he had heard of him, ver. 8. and inſtances in his own ſufferings for it, the nature, uſe, and end of them, by way of example and imitation, ver. 9. 10. and for the ſame purpoſe mentions ſeveral uſeful ſayings and pithy ſentences, as true and to be depended on, ver. 11, 12, 13. which he would have Timothy put his hearers in mind of, and eſpecially thoſe to whom he committed the Goſpel to preach; charging them, in a ſolemn manner, not to ſtrive about words, which is not only unprofitable, but hurtful, ver. 14. and with reſpect to himſelf, he exhorts him to diligence and ſtudy, in interpreting and explaining the word of God, that ſo he might be approved unto God, and not be aſhamed before men, ver. 15. and on the contrary, to avoid falſe doctrines, as being prophane, empty, and mere babble; and as tending to greater impiety; and as being dangerous and threatning, like the ſpreading canker; of which he gives inſtances in Hymeneus and Philetus, ver. 16, 17. whoſe error was, that the reſurrection was already paſt; and ſucceeded in the ſpreading of it, to the ſubverſion of the faith of ſome, ver. 18. However, for the comfort of real believers, 'tis obſerved, that notwithſtanding ſuch errors, and the ſucceſs of them, the foundation ſtands ſure; God has a certain knowledge of his own people, and will keep them; and therefore it becomes ſuch who either call on the name, or are called by the name of Chriſt, to depart from ſuch evil doctrines, ver. 19. and that ſuch things happening in the world, and in churches, ſhould not be thought ſtrange, the Apoſtle illuſtrates the caſe by a ſimile of a great houſe, which has veſſels of all ſorts in it, and for different uſes and purpoſes, ver. 21, 22. Wherefore to conclude his exhortations to Timothy, he adviſes him to flee thoſe luſts which are incident to youth; to follow things that are good, and to avoid fooliſh and unlearned queſtions, which tend to ſtrife, ver. 22, 23. which leads him on to give the character of a ſervant of the Lord, or a preacher of the Goſpel; that he muſt not ſtrive, but be gentle, patient, and meek, in inſtructing adverſaries; for which he ſhould have an aptneſs; and is encouraged to act this part, from the conſideration of ſucceſs under a divine bleſſing; namely, bringing ſuch perſons to repentance, and to own the truth, and the recovery of them out of the ſnare of the devil, ver. 24, 25, 26.

Ver. 1. Thou therefore my ſon, &c.] The illative particle therefore, ſhews the connexion between this and the preceding chapter; the appellation, thou my ſon, expreſſes the Apoſtle's tender affection for Timothy, and is the rather uſed to engage his attention to the advice he was about to give him; which is, that ſince he had received the true grace of God, and unfeigned faith dwelt in him; and ſince he had ſuch gifts, qualifying him for the work of the miniſtry; and ſince ſo good a thing as the glorious Goſpel of the bleſſed God was committed to his truſt; and ſince there were ſo many who had departed from it, and ſo few that abode by it, he would have him be ſtrong in the grace that is in Chriſt Jeſus; by which may be meant either the free favour and love of God in Chriſt, Rom. viii. 39. which is in itſelf always ſtrong, immoveable, and unalterable; and is the ſtrength and ſecurity of the ſaints, tho' they have not always the ſame ſtrong believing views of it; and to be ſtrong in it, is to be rooted and grounded in it, and to have a ſtrong ſenſe and firm perſuaſion of intereſt in it, and that nothing can ſeparate from it: or elſe the Goſpel, which is a declaration of grace, and is in Chriſt, and comes by him; and to be ſtrong in it, is to preach it boldly, to defend it bravely, and courageouſly oppoſe every error and hereſy, and every abettor thereof; and it alſo becomes every private believer to hold it faſt, ſtand faſt in it, abide by it, and earneſtly contend for it; and ſo the phraſe may ſtand oppoſed to תקיף באוריתא or גבר one ſtrong in the law, which is ſo often uſed by the Jews[d]: or rather by grace is meant the fullneſs of grace which is in Chriſt, for the ſupply of his people; for in that grace which is in him, and not in that which is in themſelves, ſhould their dependance be. It is very agreeable to be ſtrong in grace received, in point of exerciſe, but not in point of contentment; ſo as to reſt ſatisfied with the preſent meaſure of it, without growing in it, and going on to perfection; and much leſs in point of conſolation, ſo as to derive peace and comfort from it; and ſtill leſs in point of truſt and confidence in it; for it is but a creature, tho' a very glorious one, being the workmanſhip of God, and very variable as to its exerciſe, and as yet imperfect; and not that but the object of it is to be truſted in: tho' indeed a perſon's enjoyment of everlaſting glory and happineſs may be ſtrongly concluded from the work of grace which is begun in him; that being an immortal ſeed, and a well of living water ſpringing up into eternal life; and with which, glory is inſeparably connected. But grace in Chriſt is what believers ſhould always have recourſe unto, and exerciſe faith on; and not only believe that there is ſuch a fullneſs of grace in Chriſt, which they have both heard of and ſeen, and which they know is laid up for them, and given to them, and is ſufficient for them; but they ſhould go forth out of themſelves unto it, and draw water with joy out of the full wells of ſalvation in Chriſt: and this grace is of a ſtrengthening nature, both to miniſters of the word, to enable them to fulfil their miniſtry, to bear reproaches, afflictions, and perſecution for the Goſpel, and the infirmities of weak brethren; and to private believers, to ſtrengthen them againſt every corruption, temptation, and ſnare, to exerciſe every grace, and diſcharge every branch of duty.

Ver. 2. And the things that thou haſt heard of me, &c.] Meaning the doctrines of the Goſpel, the form of ſound words. The Arabic verſion renders it, the ſecrets, or myſteries that thou haſt heard of me; the myſteries of the grace of God, which he had often heard him diſcourſe of, unfold and explain: among many witneſſes; or by them; which ſome underſtand of the teſtimonies out of Moſes, and the prophets, with which the Apoſtle confirmed what he delivered; for the doctrines of juſtification, pardon of ſin, &c. by Chriſt, were bore witneſs to by the prophets; tho' rather the many perſons who with Timothy, heard the Apoſtle preach, and were, and would be ſufficient witneſſes for Timothy, on occaſion, that what he preached and committed to others, were the ſame he had heard and received from the Apoſtle Paul; unleſs reference ſhould be had here to the time of impoſition of hands upon him, when he received ſome miniſterial gifts, or an increaſe of them; at which time, the Apoſtle might deliver to him the form of doctrine he was to preach, and that in the preſence of the preſbytery, who joined in the action, and ſo were witneſſes of what was ſaid to him: the ſame commit thou to faithful men; who not only have received the grace of God, and are true believers in Chriſt, but are men of great uprightneſs and integrity; who having the word of God, will ſpeak it out boldly, and faithfully, and keep back nothing that is profitable, but declare the whole counſel of God, without any mixture or adulteration; for the Goſpel being committed to their truſt, they would become ſtewards, and of ſuch it is required that they be faithful; and therefore this is mentioned as a neceſſary and requiſite qualification in them; and not only ſo, but they muſt be ſuch who ſhall be able or ſufficient to teach others alſo. No man is ſufficient for theſe things of himſelf, but his ſufficiency is of God; it is he who makes men able miniſters of the word, by giving them gifts ſuitable for ſuch work; ſo that they have a furniture in them, a treaſure in their earthen veſſels, an underſtanding of the ſacred ſcriptures, a gift of explaining them, and a faculty of ſpeaking to edification; and ſo are apt to teach men, to their profit and advantage. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, who are fit to teach the fooliſh..

Ver. 3. Thou therefore endure hardneſs, &c.] Or afflictions; as in ch. iv. 5. The ſame word is uſed there as here ,and properly ſignifies, ſuffer evil; and means the evil of afflictions, as perſecutions of every kind, loſs of name and goods, ſcourging, impriſonment, and death itſelf, for the ſake of Chriſt and the Goſpel: as a good ſoldier of Jeſus Chriſt. Chriſt is the captain of ſalvation, the leader and commander of the people, who are made a willing people in the day of his power; or when he raiſes his forces, and muſters his armies, theſe are voluntiers, who willingly enliſt themſelves into his ſervice, and under his banners fight his battles; and ſuch who manfully behave againſt ſin, ſatan, and the world, are his good ſoldiers; ſuch are all true believers in Chriſt, and particularly the miniſters of the word, whoſe miniſtry is a warfare, and who fight the good fight of faith; and beſides the above enemies which they have in common with other ſaints, have to do with falſe teachers, who are wolves in ſheep's clothing.

Ver. 4. No man that warreth, &c.] Who is a ſoldier, and gives himſelf up to military ſervice, in a literal ſenſe: the Vulgate Latin verſion, without any authority, adds, to God; as if the Apoſtle was ſpeaking of a ſpiritual warfare; whereas he is illuſtrating a ſpiritual warfare by a corporal one; and obſerves, that no one that is in a military ſtate, entangleth himſelf with the affairs of this life; with civil affairs, in diſtinction from military ones. The Roman ſoldiers might not follow any trade or buſineſs of life, or be concerned in huſbandry, or merchandize of any ſort, but were wholly to attend to military exerciſes, and to the orders of their general; for to be employed in any ſecular buſineſs, was reckoned an entangling of them, a taking of them off from, and an hindrance to their military diſcipline: and by this the Apoſtle ſuggeſts that Chriſt's people, his ſoldiers, and eſpecially his miniſters, ſhould not be involved and implicated in worldly affairs and cares; for no man can ſerve two maſters, God and Mammon; but ſhould wholly give up themſelves to the work and ſervice, to which they are called; and be ready to part with all worldly enjoyments, and chearfully ſuffer the loſs of all things, when called to it, for the ſake of Chriſt and his Goſpel: that he may pleaſe him who hath choſen him to be a ſoldier; his captain, or general, who has enliſted him, inrolled and regiſtered him among his ſoldiers; whom to pleaſe ſhould be his chief concern; as it ſhould be the principal thing attended to by a chriſtian ſoldier, or miniſter of the Goſpel, not to pleaſe men, nor to pleaſe himſelf, by ſeeking his own eaſe and reſt, his worldly emoluments and advantages, but to pleaſe the Lord Chriſt, in whoſe book his name is written.

Ver. 5. And if a man alſo ſtrive for maſteries, &c.] In the Olympic games, by running, wreſtling, leaping, &c. yet is he not crowned; with a corruptible, fading crown, a crown made of herbs and leaves of trees, as parſly, laurel, &c. except he ſtrive lawfully; according to the laws and rules fixed for thoſe exerciſes; ſo no man that calls himſelf a chriſtian, miniſter, or any other, can expect the crown of life, the prize of the high calling of God, except he runs the race ſet before him, in the right way; looking to Chriſt, the mark, preſſing through all difficulties, towards the prize, and holds on and out unto the end.

Ver. 6. The huſbandman that laboureth, &c.] In manuring his ground, in plowing, in ſowing, in weeding, in reaping, &c. muſt be firſt partaker of the fruits; of his labour, before others; and the deſign may be to obſerve that the miniſters of the word, ought firſt to be partakers of the grace of God, the fruits of the Spirit, and of the Goſpel, and rightly and ſpiritually underſtand it, before they preach it to others; or that ſuch who labour in the word and doctrine, ought in the firſt place to be taken care of, and have a ſufficient maintenance provided for them, 1 Cor. ix. 7, 11. or that as they ſhall have in the firſt place ſome ſeals and fruits of their miniſtry, in the converſion of ſouls, ſo they ſhall ſhine in the kingdom of heaven as the brightneſs of the firmament, and as the ſtars for ever and ever. Tho' the words may be rendered, and which ſeems more agreeable to the context, and to the Apoſtle's argument, the huſbandman muſt firſt labour before he partakes of the fruits; ſo a miniſter of the Goſpel muſt firſt labour, and endure hardſhips in this life, before he ſits down in the kingdom of heaven, and takes his reſt, and enjoys the crown of glory, which fades not away, which the chief ſhepherd ſhall give unto him.

Ver. 7. Conſider what I ſay, &c.] The advice given by the Apoſtle to Timothy, to be ſtrong in the grace of Chriſt; to commit the doctrines of the Goſpel to faithful and able men; and to endure hardneſs for the ſake of it: as alſo the characters which he bore as a ſoldier, a runner in a race, or a wreſtler, and an huſbandman; and therefore muſt not expect eaſe and reſt, but war, difficulties, toil, and labour: and likewiſe under what titles Chriſt was to be regarded; as his general, and captain of ſalvation, that commanded him; as the righteous judge, that held the prize and crown for which he was running; and the chief ſhepherd, who would reward all his labours: and moreover, the glorious reward of grace itſelf, he might expect, as eternal life, when he had fought the good fight; the crown of righteouſneſs, when he had finiſhed his courſe, or run his race; and a crown of glory that fades not away, when the chief ſhepherd ſhould appear: and by putting him upon the conſideration of theſe things, he ſuggeſts, that they were matters of moment and importance, and would be of great uſe to him in aſſiſting and encouraging his faith, amidſt all trials and exerciſes; and whereas they were expreſſed in figurative terms, taken from the ſoldier, the runner in a race, and the huſbandman, they might not at firſt view be ſo eaſy to be underſtood; and therefore he would have him think of them, and meditate upon them, and weigh them in his mind; as well as he would not have him take things upon truſt from him, but examine them whether they were right or no; tho' he doubted not but that they would be found to be agreeable to the ſtandard of truth: wherefore he prays as follows, and the Lord give thee underſtanding in all things; in all the above things, and in all others; in all the doctrines and myſteries of grace, and in all the rules of conduct in life. No man has of himſelf an underſtanding in ſpiritual things; this is the gift of God; and where it is given there is need of an increaſe of it, and always of ſuch a prayer for it. The Alexandrian copy, Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions read, the Lord will give thee, &c. and ſo the words are a promiſe, an encouragement to Timothy, to conſider well of theſe things; for he might aſſure himſelf, that in ſo doing, God would give him more underſtanding in them.

Ver. 8. Remember that Jeſus Chriſt of the ſeed of David, &c.] This is ſaid either as an encouragement to ſuffer hardneſs in the cauſe of Chriſt; ſince he, who tho' he was of the ſeed of David, of the blood royal, and heir to his crown, yet ſuffered and died; and whereas he roſe again from the dead, thoſe who ſuffer for his ſake, ſhall riſe alſo, and live and reign with him for ever: or elſe as a ſpecimen of the form of ſound words, or of the things which Timothy had heard of the Apoſtle; for this with what follows, is a ſummary of them: Chriſt being of the ſeed of David, according to the fleſh, or human nature, is expreſſive of his incarnation; ſhews that he was really come in the fleſh, and was truly man; and that he aſſumed human nature with all its frailties and infirmities, excepting ſin, and was like David, a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with griefs; and it includes his whole life, and his righteouſneſs, and obedience to the law of works, and points him out as the true Meſſiah, who was well known to the Jews by the name of the ſon of David. And now the Apoſtle puts Timothy in mind, that he was raiſed from the dead; which implies that he died; and ſo includes all the doctrines relating to his death; as that he died to make reconciliation, atonement, and ſatisfaction for the ſins of his people, and to procure peace for them, and the full remiſſion of all their iniquities; and to obtain redemption for them, from ſin, ſatan, the law, and its curſes; as well as it expreſſes his reſurrection from the dead, for their juſtification: and this being his firſt ſtep to glory, has connected with it his aſcenſion to heaven, ſeſſion at the right hand of God, interceſſion for the ſaints, and his ſecond coming to judgment; and is therefore particularly mentioned, becauſe it is an article ſo comprehenſive, and is a fundamental one, and of the greateſt importance to faith, and was what was ſtruck at in thoſe times: the Apoſtle adds, according to my Goſpel; meaning not the Goſpel of Luke, in which there is a clear account given of the reſurrection of Chriſt, ſaid to be written by him, at the inſtigation, and under the direction of the Apoſtle, and publiſhed with his approbation, as ſome think; but the doctrine of the Goſpel, and which he calls his, not becauſe he was the author, or the ſubject of it; for in theſe reſpects it is the Goſpel of God, and of Chriſt; but becauſe it was committed to him, and he was intruſted with it, and fully and faithfully preached it; and in diſtinction from another Goſpel, that of the falſe teachers; and agreeable to this doctrine, which the Apoſtle every where taught, Chriſt was raiſed from the dead; ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, as I have taught.

Ver. 9. Wherein I ſuffer trouble as an evil doer, &c.] As a malefactor, as if guilty of ſome capital crime; as an enemy to the law of Moſes, a peſtilent fellow, a mover of ſedition every where, and a ringleader of the ſect of the Nazarenes, Acts xxiv. 5. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, as a thief. The trouble he ſuffered were reproaches, perſecutions, whipping, beating, ſtoning, impriſonment: for he adds, even unto bonds; for he was now a priſoner, and in chains; nor was it the firſt time, he was in priſons frequent; and all this for the ſake of the Goſpel, which he preached, concerning the incarnation, death, and reſurrection of Chriſt: but the word of God is not bound; for the Apoſtle, whilſt a priſoner at Rome, had the liberty of dwelling by himſelf, in his own hired houſe, tho' held in chains, and guarded by a ſoldier, and of receiving his friends, and of preaching the Goſpel to as many as would come to hear him, Acts xxviii. 16, 17, 23, 30, 31. as well as of ſending letters to the churches; for ſeveral of his Epiſtles were written by him when a priſoner, as thoſe to the Epheſians, Philippians, and Coloſſians; and this to Timothy, and alſo that to Philemon: ſo that the Goſpel was not reſtrained, or the Apoſtle reſtrained from publiſhing it, both by word of mouth, and by writing; which was a great ſupport to him under his troubles. Moreover, the Goſpel was the more ſpread thro' the bonds of the Apoſtle, and met with great ſucceſs; it became known in Cæſar's palace, and was the means of the converſion of ſome of his houſhold; and many of the brethren, through his bonds, became bolder to preach the Goſpel of Chriſt; ſo that it had a free courſe, and was glorified: and ſometimes ſo it is, that perſecution is a means of the greater ſpread of the Goſpel; which was an effect that followed upon the perſecution raiſed againſt the church at Jeruſalem, upon the death of Stephen, Acts viii. 1, 2, 3, 4. And indeed, when God opens an effectual door, none can ſhut it, though there be many adverſaries; and when he gives the word a commiſſion, there is no ſtopping it; when it comes in power, it bears down all before it; it can't be fettered and bound by men, tho' men may be fettered and bound for the ſake of it.

Ver. 10. Therefore I endure all things for the elects ſake, &c.] There is a certain number of perſons whom God has choſen in Chriſt from everlaſting unto ſalvation, who ſhall certainly be ſaved; for theſe Jeſus Chriſt ſuffered and died; and on their account is the Goſpel ſent, preached, and publiſhed to the world; for their ſakes are miniſters fitted and qualified for their work, and have their miſſion and commiſſion to perform it, and ſuffer what they do in the execution of it; and ſince it was for the ſake of ſuch, whom God had loved and choſen, that the Apoſtle endured all his reproaches, afflictions, and perſecutions, he was the more chearful under them; and the conſideration of it was a ſupport unto him: that they may alſo obtain; as well as himſelf, and other choſen veſſels of ſalvation, who were called by grace already; for the Apoſtle is ſpeaking of ſuch of the elect, who were as yet in a ſtate of nature: the ſalvation which is in Chriſt Jeſus with eternal glory; ſalvation is only by Chriſt Jeſus, and in him; and this is only for the elect of God; and it is publiſhed in the Goſpel, that they might obtain it; and in all ages they do obtain it, or enjoy it: the thing itſelf is obtained by Chriſt for them, thro' his obedience, ſufferings, and death; and it is publiſhed in the everlaſting Goſpel, that they might come to the knowledge of it; and in effectual vocation it is brought near by the Spirit of God, and applied unto them; and they have now both a meetneſs for it, and a right unto it, and ſhall fully enjoy it in heaven: for it has eternal glory, or heavenly glory, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, annexed to it; or rather the full enjoyment of it will conſiſt in an eternal and heavenly glory, which will be put upon the ſaints, both in ſoul and body, and remain to all eternity.

Ver. 11. It is a faithful ſaying, &c.] This may refer either to what goes before, that all things, all reproaches and ſufferings, thro' the miniſtration of the Goſpel, are endured for the elects ſake; and that they ſhall certainly obtain ſalvation in Chriſt, and enjoy eternal glory, to which they are predeſtinated: or to what follows, which being of moment and importance, and difficult to be believed, as that death led to life, and ſufferings were the way to the kingdom; the Apoſtle prefaces it in this manner, affirming the truth of it, that it was ſure and certain, and to be believed, and depended on as ſuch. For if we be dead with him; with Chriſt, as all his people are, by virtue of union to him; they are dead with him, he and they being one, in a legal ſenſe; when he died, they died with him; being crucified with him, as their head and repreſentative, their old man, their ſins, were alſo crucified with him, being imputed to him, and laid upon him; and thro' the efficacy of his death, they became dead to ſin, both to its damning and governing power, and ſo are planted together in the likeneſs of his death; ſo that as he died unto ſin once, and lives again to die no more, they die unto ſin, and are alive to God, and ſhall live for ever. Moreover, this, agreeable to what follows, may be underſtood of the ſaints dying for Chriſt's ſake, and the Goſpel, whereby they are conformed unto him, and feel the fellowſhip of his ſufferings, and ſo may be ſaid to be dead with him: and ſuch may aſſure themſelves of the truth of what follows, we ſhall alſo live with him; as many as were crucified with Chriſt, and buried with him, roſe with him from the dead, and were juſtified in him, as their head and repreſentative; the free gift came on them to juſtification of life; and they that are dead to ſin, thro' the efficacy of his death, live a life of ſanctification, which they have from him, and is maintained and ſupported by him, and is to his glory; and they live a life of communion with him, in whoſe favour is life; and tho' they die, and for his ſake, they ſhall riſe again; and becauſe he lives, they ſhall live alſo, even a life of glory, happineſs, and endleſs pleaſure. And this is part of the faithful ſaying, and to be believed, and is believed by the ſaints; ſee Rom. vi. 8. Moreover, ſince the word him is not in the original text, and the elect are ſpoken of in the preceding verſe, what if the ſenſe ſhould be this, this is true doctrine, and a certain matter of fact, if we and the elect of God die together in the ſame cauſe, and for the ſake of Chriſt, and the Goſpel, we ſhall live together in everlaſting bliſs and glory?

Ver. 12. If we ſuffer, &c.] With him, with Chriſt, as in Rom. viii. 17. all the elect ſuffered with Chriſt when he ſuffered; they ſuffered in him the whole penalty of the law, all the righteouſneſs, ſtrictneſs, and ſeverity of it; and they are partakers of the benefits of his ſufferings, as peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, redemption, and everlaſting ſalvation. And ſuch being called by grace, and having made a profeſſion of Chriſt, they ſuffer ſhame and reproach, loſs of credit and reputation, and ſometimes loſs of goods, and corporal puniſhment, and even death itſelf: but tho' they do, and if they ſhould, they may be ſatisfied of the truth of this, we ſhall alſo reign with him; they reign with him now in the kingdom of grace; grace reigns in their hearts, where Chriſt, the king of glory, has entered, and has ſet up his throne, and where he dwells by faith, they being made kings and prieſts unto God by him; and they ſhall reign with him in his kingdom here on earth, for the ſpace of a thouſand years; and they ſhall reign with him in glory to all eternity: this is certain, for this kingdom is prepared for them, it is given to them, they are called unto it, and have both a right unto, and meetneſs for it; ſee Rom. viii. 17. if we deny him, he alſo will deny us; there is a denying of Chriſt in words; ſo it is denied by the Jews that Chriſt is come in the fleſh, and that Jeſus is the Meſſiah; and ſome that have bore the chriſtian name, tho' very unworthily, have denied his true deity, his real humanity, proper Sonſhip, and the efficacy of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, for pardon, juſtification, and atonement: and there is a denying of him in works; ſo ſome that profeſs to know him, and do own him in his perſon and offices, yet in works deny him; their converſation is not becoming their profeſſion of him; they have the form of godlineſs, but deny the power of it: there is a ſecret and ſilent denying of him, when men are aſhamed of him, and do not confeſs him; and there is an open denying of him, by ſuch who ſet their mouth againſt the heavens, and their tongue walketh throughout the earth; there is a partial denying of Chriſt, which was Peter's caſe, tho' his faith in him, and love to him, were not loſt; and there is a total denying of him, a thorough apoſtacy, and from which there is no recovery; and if there be any ſuch apoſtates among thoſe who have named the name of Chriſt, he will deny them, he will not own them for his another day; he will ſet them at his left hand; he will declare he knows them not, and will baniſh them from his preſence for evermore. This is another branch of the faithful ſaying; this will certainly be the caſe; Chriſt himſelf has ſaid it, Matt. x. 33.

Ver. 13. If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful, &c.] The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, if we believe not him. This may be underſtood, either of ſuch who are altogether deſtitute of faith, who do not believe in Chriſt at all; and particularly do not believe what was juſt now ſaid concerning his denying ſuch that deny him, but mock and ſcoff at his coming, and at a future judgment: this unbelief of theirs won't make void his faith or faithfulneſs; ſee Rom. iii. 3. he'll abide faithful to his word of threatening; and what he ſays in Mark xvi. 16. will be found to be an everlaſting truth: or it may be underſtood of true believers, whoſe faith ſometimes is very low, as to its exerciſe on Chriſt, and with reference to their future glory and happineſs; but Chriſt is faithful to all his covenant-engagements for them, to bring them to glory, and to every word of promiſe concerning their happineſs, and to every branch of the faithful ſaying above-mentioned; and he is ever the ſame in his love to them, and in the efficacy of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice; and his ſalvation is an everlaſting and unchangeable one; nor do the ſaints intereſt in it, and ſecurity by it, depend upon their acts of believing, or their frames, but upon the firmneſs and unchangeableneſs of Chriſt, the object of faith. He cannot deny himſelf; he can't go contrary to his word; that would be to act contrary to his nature, and perfections, and would be a denying of himſelf, which is not poſſible; wherefore his faithfulneſs will never fail, even tho' the faith of his people does, as to the exerciſe of it.

Ver. 14. Of theſe things put them in remembrance, &c.] Meaning either his hearers, or thoſe to whom he was to commit the things he had heard of the Apoſtle, and who muſt expect to ſuffer afflictions, and endure hardſhips, for the ſake of Chriſt, and his Goſpel; wherefore to remind them of the above ſayings, might be of uſe and comfort to them. This clauſe is wanting in the Arabic verſion. Charging them before the Lord; the omniſcient God, as in his ſight, as they will anſwer it to him another day; ſee 1 Tim. v. 21. and vi. 13. that they ſtrive not about words; it became them to ſtrive and contend for the form of ſound words, for the wholeſome words or doctrines of our Lord Jeſus, but not about mere words, and eſpecially ſuch as were to no profit; to no advantage to truth, nor to themſelves nor others; were not to edification, to ſpiritual edification, to godly edifying, which is in faith: but to the ſubverting of the hearers; the confounding of their minds, miſleading their judgments, and overthrowing their faith; and therefore were not only unprofitable, but hurtful and pernicious, and by all means to be avoided.

Ver. 15. Study to ſhew thyſelf approved unto God, &c.] The Alexandrian copy reads, to Chriſt; ſee Rom. xvi. 10. Not unto men, as pleaſing them; for ſuch who ſtudy to pleaſe men, are not the ſervants of Chriſt; and ſometimes thoſe that are approved to and by men, are diſapproved of by God and Chriſt: but unto God, ſhewing all fidelity and uprightneſs; ſpeaking out the Goſpel openly, and freely, with all ſincerity, as in the ſight of God; commending themſelves to him, and to every man's conſcience, by manifeſtation of the truth; and ſuch will hear, well done good and faithful ſervant another day. A workman that needeth not to be aſhamed; the miniſtry of the word is a work, and it is a good work; and thoſe that perform it aright are worthy of honour and eſteem; and it requires induſtry, diligence, and application, and for which no man is ſufficient without the grace of God; and thoſe who are employed in it are workmen, workers together with God, and labourers in his vineyard: and ſuch who are faithful and diligent ones, need not to be aſhamed; ſuch do not cauſe ſhame, neither in themſelves nor in others, as falſe teachers do, who foam out their own ſhame, and as negligent miniſters of the word, and ſuch whoſe lives are not agreeable to the doctrines they preach; nor have they any reaſon to be aſhamed, neither of the Goſpel, which they preach, nor of their ſufferings, which they endure for the ſake of it, nor of their upright miniſtrations of the word; and as they are not afraid to ſuffer ſhame for the ſake of Chriſt now, they'll not be aſhamed before him at his coming. Rightly dividing or cutting the word of truth; that is, the ſcriptures of truth, Dan. x. 21. which come from the God of truth, are concerning Chriſt, who is the truth, and are dictated and led into by the Spirit of truth, and contain in them nothing but truth: to divide the word, is not merely to divide the text into its proper parts, tho' care ſhould be taken that this be done aright; and ſome think, that the alluſion is to the verſes of the Hebrew bible, which are called, פסוקים, diviſions, ſections, or cuttings, from the word, פסק, to cut or divide, being cut or divided one from another; hence thoſe that were employed in the law, and were converſant with the ſacred writings, and exerciſed therein, were called, פוסקים בתורת, cutters, or dividers of the law [e]; and ſo, בעל פסוק, is one that is well verſed in the bible, and knows every part of it, and readily uſes it, in ſpeaking or writing; and ſuch an one was Timothy, ch. iii. 15. tho' I rather think the Apoſtle refers to a wrong way of dividing the ſcriptures by the Jews, to which he oppoſes the right dividing of them. They had uſed not only to take away a letter out of one word, and add it to another, and ſo expound the text, but to remove words in it, and make that which went before to go behind, and that which was behind, to go before; and this they call a ſharp knife, which, הותך ומפסיק הכתוב, cuts and divides the ſcriptures [f]: but this way, which his countrymen uſed, the Apoſtle would not have Timothy, and other Goſpel-miniſters, make uſe of; for this is not rightly to divide, but to mangle and tear in pieces the word of truth. Moreover, to divide the word of truth, or to cut it, is to cut it open, and diſſect its ſeveral parts, and ſearch and look into the inſide and bottom of it, for to find out every truth contained in it, and lay them open to others; and may be, as ſome have thought, an alluſion to the cutting open the ſacrifices, and laying the parts of them aright, and in a decent manner: to which may be added, that ſince miniſters of the Goſpel are ſtewards, and who, when wiſe and faithful, give to every one of the houſhold their portion of meat in due ſeaſon; the metaphor may be taken from ſuch; and from maſters and governours of families, who cut up the food, and diſtribute it to each, according to their age and appetite; and ſo the miniſters of the Goſpel are to diſtribute the ſpiritual food of the word, to babes in Chriſt, and to grown chriſtians, according to their capacities, and ſuitable to their caſes and circumſtances, dividing to every one what is proper for him: in ſhort, one that divides the word of truth rightly, is, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, one that rightly handles; or, as the Syriac verſion, that rightly preaches the word of truth; who gives the true ſenſe of ſcripture, does not pervert and wreſt it, and take from it, or add to it; who points out the truth in it, and ſhews unto men the way of ſalvation, and plainly and faithfully preaches the Goſpel contained in it, without keeping back any thing that is profitable, but declares the whole counſel of God. This ſame Greek word is uſed by the Septuagint in Prov. iii. 6. and xi. 5. where it anſwers to the Hebrew word, ישר, which ſignifies to direct the way, and make it plain; and may here deſign a plain and open interpretation of the word of God: and to anſwer theſe ſeveral characters in the text ſhould be the ſtudious concern of every Goſpel-miniſter; and ſtudy is neceſſary thereunto; it requires great care, that a man take heed to himſelf, and to his doctrine; and great induſtry, diligence, and application, and much reading, meditation, and prayer.

Ver. 16. But ſhun prophane and vain bablings, &c.] The miniſtry of falſe teachers is mere babbling; a voice, and nothing elſe, as the man ſaid of his nightingale; a ſound of words, but no ſolid matter in them; great ſwelling words of vanity, like large bubbles of water, look big, and make a great noiſe, but have nothing in them; contain nothing but vain, empty, idle, and trifling ſtuff; what is unprofitable and unedifying, yea, what is prophane, contrary to the nature and perfections of God, and not agreeable to the doctrine which is according to godlineſs; and being palmed upon the holy ſcriptures, is a prophanation of them. And all ſuch wicked and empty prate, and babbling, is to be ſhunned, avoided, and diſcouraged, refuſed, and rejected; and, as much as can be, a ſtop ſhould be put to it, both by miniſters and hearers of the word. For they will increaſe unto more ungodlineſs; meaning either that ſuch babblings, if uſed and encouraged, will grow more and more prophane and wicked; or the perſons that uſe them, the unruly and vain talkers, will grow more daring, bold, and impudent, will wax worſe and worſe, and from one error will proceed to another, for ſuch ſeldom ſtop; and having abuſed one paſſage of ſcripture, will go on to attack another, and will not ceaſe, till they have wreſted the whole ſcripture to their own deſtruction, and that of others.

Ver. 17. And their word will eat as doth a canker, &c.] Or gangrene, which gnaws and feeds upon the fleſh, inflames and mortifies as it goes, and ſpreads ſwiftly, and endangers the whole body; and is therefore to be ſpeedily taken notice of, and ſtopped. It is wrongly rendered canker, which is a different diſeaſe. "The word gangrene is Greek [g], "and is derived by ſome authors from the Paphlagonian gangra, a goat; it being the character "of a goat to brooze the graſs all around without "ſhifting. It is juſter, perhaps, to derive it from "the Greek word, γϱαω, γϱαινω, manduco, conſumo, I "eat, I conſume. The gangrene is a diſeaſe in "the fleſh of the part which it corrupts, con"ſumes and turns black, ſpreading and ſeizing it"ſelf of the adjoining parts, and is rarely cured "without amputation.—— By the microſcrope, a "gangrene has been diſcovered to contain an infi"nite number of little worms ingendred in the "morbid fleſh; and which continually producing "new broods, they ſwarm, and over-run the ad"jacent parts: if the grangrene proceed to an utter "ſphacelation (or mortification) and be ſeated in "any of the limbs, or extreme parts, recourſe "muſt be had to the operation of amputation."

And ſo the errors and hereſies of falſe teachers worm and ſpread, and feed upon the ſouls of men, and eat up the vitals of religion, or what ſeemed to be ſuch, and even deſtroy the very form of godlineſs; and bring deſtruction and death, where'ere they come; and when they get into chriſtian churches, threaten the ruin of them; and therefore are to be oppoſed in time, and thoſe infected with them to be cut off. Of whom is Hymenæus and Philetus; theſe were ſome of the principal among the falſe teachers, the chief authors and ſpreaders of error and hereſy: the former of theſe is mentioned before in 1 Tim. i. 20. along with Alexander, as guilty of blaſphemy, and as delivered up to ſatan for it. Philetus is a Greek name as well as the other, tho' it is ſometimes found in Roman inſcriptions[h]: it is very likely that theſe were both in Aſia, and probably in Epheſus, or near to it, ſince the Apoſtle mentions them by name to Timothy, that he might beware of them.

Ver. 18. Who concerning the truth have erred, &c.] That is, the two perſons juſt mentioned; they fell from the truth, wandered and departed from it; they did not keep to the ſcriptures of truth, but deviated from them; they miſſed that mark, and went aſtray into groſs errors and miſtakes; rejected the Goſpel, the word of truth, in general, and particularly in ſaying, that the reſurrection is paſt already; and no other is to be expected; or that there was no future reſurrection of the dead: their error was, as ſome think, that there is no other reſurrection than that of parents in their children, who, tho' they die, live in their poſterity; or than the reſurrection of Chriſt, and of the ſaints, that roſe at the ſame time; or rather, that there is no other reſurrection than the ſpiritual one, or regeneration, which is a quickening of dead ſinners, or the reſurrection of them from the death of ſin, to a life of grace; which ſeems to be the trueſt account of their principle, ſeeing this is what has been received and propagated by others ſince: tho' ſome have thought that they gave into the Palingeneſia of the Pythagoreans, who ſuppoſed that when men die, their ſouls go into other bodies; and that theſe men imagined, that this is all the reſurrection that will be: and others have been of opinion, that their notion was, that whereas the deliverance of the Jews out of the Babyloniſh captivity, is ſignified by a reſurrection of them, in Ezek. xxxvii. that this is the reſurrection they meant was paſt, and no other to be looked for; but that which has been fixed upon ſeems to be the trueſt account: and overthrow the faith of ſome; the Ethiopic verſion reads, of many; that is, of nominal profeſſors of religion; not of true believers, for true faith cannot be overthrown. Hence it follows,

Ver. 19. Neverthele'ſs, the foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, &c.] That faith, which is the faith of God's elect, is of the operation of God, and is the gift of his grace, and of which Chriſt is the author and finiſher, is firm and immoveable as a foundation; it is ſolid and ſubſtantial; it is the ſubſtance of things hoped for; and it is permanent and abiding; it ſtands ſure, being ſupported by the power of God, and prevalent mediation of Jeſus Chriſt; and ſo cannot be overthrown by falſe teachers, when an hiſtorical faith, or the faith of temporary believers may: or the doctrine of the reſurrection of the dead is here meant, which was ſaid to be paſt by the above falſe teachers; which is a fundamental doctrine of the Goſpel, without which the preaching of it is vain, and faith is vain; and which is a doctrine of God, of pure revelation; and this will be effected by his power: this ſtands ſure upon the teſtimony of the patriarchs, prophets, and of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles; upon the ſure word and writings both of the Old and New Teſtament; and will ſtand its ground againſt all oppoſition, and will have its certain effect; for the Lord Jeſus knows who are his diſtinctly and perfectly; nor will he loſe them, nor any thing that belongs to them; not their bodies, any more than their ſouls, nor any duſt of theirs, but will raiſe it up at the laſt day. Or elſe the doctrine of eternal election may be here deſigned; which is the foundation of all ſpiritual bleſſings, of faith and of holineſs, of joy and comfort here, and happineſs hereafter, and even of compleat and everlaſting ſalvation; and is of God's laying, and is owing to his ſovereign pleaſure and free rich grace; and ſtands ſure, not on the foot of works, but upon the unchangeable and unfruſtrable will of God; and this ſecures from a final and total deception by falſe teachers: and alſo into the account may be taken the perſons of God's elect themſelves; who are of God's founding, and are as immoveable as the firmeſt foundation whatever, even as rocks and mountains, and ſtand ſure upon the rock of ages, Chriſt Jeſus, and ſhall never periſh; nor can they be deceived by falſe Chriſts and falſe prophets, but will remain ſafe and ſound, when the faith of ever ſo many is ſubverted by them. Having this ſeal, the Lord knoweth them that are his: faith is ſealed and enſured to God's elect, by his fore-knowledge and predeſtination of them; ſo that they certainly have it, and ſhall never loſe it: and their election is according to God's fore-knowledge of them; which deſigns not a foreſight of their faith, holineſs, and good works, as the motives of his chuſing them; nor a bare preſcience of their perſons; but ſuch a fore-knowledge as includes ſpecial love to them, which is diſtinguiſhing, unchangeable, and everlaſting; and this being a ſeal affixed to all the elect, ſhews the diſtinguiſhing grace of God in their election, the ſecrecy of it, and its firmneſs and irrevocableneſs, and alſo the ſafety of the choſen ones; things being ſealed, to diſtinguiſh one thing from another, and to keep things ſecret, or to render them firm and authentic. So among the Jews, ſeals were uſed in buying and ſelling, that it might be known what was bought, and to confirm the purchaſe[i]. The inference from this comfortable doctrine is, and let every one that nameth the name of Chriſt; or of the Lord, as the Alexandrian copy, and others, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions read; that is, whoever either are called by the name of Chriſt, or chriſtians, or whoever call upon his name: let them depart from iniquity; both from doctrinal iniquity, the errors and hereſies of the above falſe teachers, which increaſed to ungodlineſs, and eat as a gangrene, and were the ſubverſion of the faith of ſome; and from all practical iniquity, which thoſe men, and their followers, eſpecially the Gnoſticks, were guilty of; and generally ſpeaking, when men make ſhipwrack of faith, they put away a good conſcience: and the Apoſtle may alſo mean, that all ſuch ſhould depart from iniquitous men, from men, whether of bad principles, or practices, or both, and have no fellowſhip with them, it being unworthy of the name by which they were called. Some reference ſeems to be had to Num. xvi. 5, 26. and ſo the falſe teachers, and their followers, may be compared to Korah, and his company, and the elect of God to Moſes, and the Lord's people, who were bid to depart from the tents of thoſe wicked men; and who ſtood firm, ſure, and ſafe, when the earth opened, and ſwallowed up the others.

Ver. 20. But in a great houſe, &c.] This ſimile the Apoſtle makes uſe of to ſhow, that it need not ſeem ſtrange, nor ſhould it be diſtreſſing to any one's mind, to hear that men of ſuch wicked principles and practices ſhould be in the church of God, who are before-mentioned; ſince in every great houſe or palace, the houſe of a nobleman, or palace of a king, there is a variety of veſſels of different matter, and for different uſes, and ſome are mean, deſpicable, and diſhonourable; and ſo it is in the church of God: for by this great houſe, in the application of the ſimile, is not meant the world, as ſome think; for tho' that is a houſe built by God, who built all things; and is a very large one, and full of inhabitants, comparable to veſſels; and there are in it both good and bad, as always have been; yet it is no ſtartling thing to any man, that there ſhould be bad men in it; rather the wonder is, that there ſhould be any good; but by this houſe is meant the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of truth, 1 Tim. iii. 15. ſee the note there. There are not only veſſels of gold and of ſilver; perſons who are members of the viſible church, who are comparable to gold and ſilver, for their worth and value, and preciouſneſs in the ſight of Chriſt, who accounts them his jewels, and peculiar treaſure; and for their excellency and uſefulneſs in the church, by reaſon of thoſe differing gifts beſtowed upon them; and for their luſtre and purity, both of doctrine and of life; and for their ſolidity and duration: but alſo of wood, and of earth; there are others in a viſible church-ſtate, who are like to dry wood, deſtitute of the grace of God, and are fit matter for ſatan to work upon, and by them raiſe and increaſe the flames of contention and diviſion, and will be fit fuel for everlaſting burnings; and there are others who are ſenſual, and carnal, and worldly, who mind earth, and earthly things, and have no ſpirituality, nor ſpiritual mindedneſs in them: and ſome to honour; who are deſigned for honourable ſervice, and behave honourably, and are worthy of honour in the church; are honourable officers, or members in it; and are to the honour of Chriſt, and the Goſpel; and ſhall at laſt enjoy honour, glory, immortality, and eternal life. And ſome to diſhonour; who are to the diſreputation of the church, the diſhonour of religion, and ſcandal of the Goſpel; by them God is diſhonoured, his ways evil ſpoken of, his doctrines blaſphemed, and his name reproached; and who are themſelves diſhonourable among men now, and will be covered with ſhame and everlaſting contempt hereafter.

Ver. 21. If a man therefore purge himſelf from theſe, &c.] That is, if a man clears himſelf, and keeps himſelf clear from ſuch men, as Hymenæus and Philetus, who are comparable to wooden and earthen veſſels, and are diſhonourable ones; if he ſhuns their defiling company, and polluting principles; if he keeps clear of their hereſies, and is not carried away with the errors of theſe wicked men, and is not drawn aſide by them into immoral practices, but ſtands faſt in the faith, and departs from iniquity: he ſhall be a veſſel unto honour; he will be made manifeſt, and appear to be a veſſel choſen to honour; and will be an honourable member of the church here, and will be honoured by Chriſt hereafter: ſanctified; he will appear to be one that is ſet apart by God the Father, and whoſe ſins are purged away by the blood of Chriſt, and who is ſanctified internally by the Spirit of God; for external holineſs ſprings from internal holineſs, and is an evidence of it: and meet for the maſter's uſe; the uſe and ſervice of Chriſt, who is the maſter of the houſe; either for the miniſtry of word, the adminiſtration of ordinances, or for ſome ſervice or another, which he calls him to, and employs him in. And prepared unto every good work; which an unregenerate man is not; he is to every good work reprobate; he is not capable of performing good works; he is not prepared for them, nor ready at them; but a true believer, one that is regenerated, and ſanctified by the Spirit of God, he is created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works; and has in the performing of them right principles, aims, and ends, as well as a ſupply of grace, by which he is enabled to do them.

Ver. 22. Flee alſo youthful luſts, &c.] Meaning not luſts of uncleanneſs, laſciviouſneſs, and filthineſs; nor any of thoſe follies and vanities which the youthful age uſually luſts and deſires after, to which Timothy was not inclined; but ſuch luſts as are apt to prevail with young miniſters of the Goſpel, ſuch as vain-glory, popular applauſe, ſeeking to have the pre-eminence, contentions with, and contempt of others, and the like. But follow righteouſneſs; the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; or doing that which is juſt between man and man, and as one man would chuſe another ſhould do to him; or rather integrity and faithfulneſs in the miniſtry of the word, without ſeeking honour from men: faith; both as a doctrine and grace; or veracity and truth in preaching the Goſpel, ſtriving for that, and not thro' ambition, and for the pre-eminence: charity; or love, to God and Chriſt, and to his people; without which all gifts and works are of no avail; and which will engage a man to bear much, and to hope and believe all things: peace with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart; peace is to be purſued and followed after with all men, as much as poſſible, but eſpecially with the ſaints, the true worſhippers of God; who draw nigh to him with true hearts, and call upon him in the ſincerity of their ſouls: great care ſhould be taken that peace be maintained with them; for they have great intereſt at the throne of grace; and God is nigh unto them, and hears their prayers. The Alexandrian copy reads, with all that love the Lord.

Ver. 23. But fooliſh and unlearned queſtions avoid, &c.] Such as have no ſolid wiſdom in them, and are foreign from the Goſpel, the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, and are unuſeful and unedifying; ſuch ought to be avoided, publickly and privately; they ſhould not be ſtarted in the publick miniſtry, nor attended to in private converſation; as being unworthy of the notice of a miniſter of the Goſpel wiſe and learned, and uſeleſs to the church, and to his hearers. Knowing that they do gender ſtrife; about words, and contentions, which break the peace of churches, and hinder the profit of ſouls, and the progreſs of the Goſpel.

Ver. 24. And the ſervant of the Lord muſt not ſtrive, &c.] By the ſervant of the Lord is not meant any believer in common, but a miniſter of the word, as Timothy was; ſuch an one ought not to ſtrive about words to no profit, about mere words, and in a litigious, quarrelſome manner, and for maſtery and not truth; tho' he may, and ought to ſtrive for the faith of the Goſpel; this is praiſeworthy in him: but be gentle unto all men; not only to troubled minds, and wounded conſciences, by ſuppling them with the precious promiſes and truths of the Goſpel; and to backſliders, by reſtoring them in a ſpirit of meekneſs; but even to thoſe who contradict the truth, and themſelves, by mild and kind inſtructions. Apt to teach; ſhewing a willingneſs to inſtruct the ignorant and obſtinate, and making uſe of abilities given for that purpoſe, notwithſtanding all diſcouragements; for it follows, patient, or bearing evil; not only the infirmities of weak brethren in the church, and the reproaches and perſecutions of prophane men in the world; but alſo the contradictions and oppoſitions of the adverſaries of truth, ſo as not to be be irritated and provoked, or to be diſcouraged, and deſiſt from the defence of the Goſpel.

Ver. 25. In meekneſs inſtructing thoſe that oppoſe themſelves, &c.] To the truth; reſiſt it and deny it; or contradict ſome other tenets and principles of theirs, or the ſcriptures, which they themſelves allow to be the word of God, and the rule of faith and practice, and ſo are ſelf-convinced and ſelf-condemned. Theſe are to be inſtructed, being ignorant, and in a tender and gentle manner, tho' very perverſe and obſtinate. If God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth: repentance here, deſigns a repentance of errors in principle, a change of mind upon conviction, and ſuch as iſſues in a free and ingenuous confeſſion, and acknowledgment of the truth before oppoſed; and ſuch a repentance is the gift of God: it is he that opens the eyes of the underſtanding, and works conviction in the mind, and leads into all truth, as it is in Jeſus; and induces men to repent of their errors, confeſs their miſtakes, and own the truth; even as repentance of evil practices is not owing to the power of men, nor to the bare influence of means, but to the efficacious grace of God, it being a grant from him. And tho' this is not certain, that God will give repentance to ſuch contradictors and blaſphemers of his Goſpel; yet as it is his will, that all his choſen ones ſhould come to repentance, and that ſome of all ſorts ſhould be ſaved, and come to the knowledge of the truth; and ſeeing theſe things have been brought about under, and by the miniſtry of the word, it is an encouragement to the miniſters of the Goſpel to continue their inſtructions in the manner here directed.

Ver. 26. And that they may recover themſelves, &c.] Or awake, and come to themſelves, and appear to be ſober, and in their right mind: the metaphor is taken from drunken men, who are over-charged, and are not in their ſenſes, and being ſtupified fall aſleep; and like theſe, are perſons intoxicated with errors and hereſies, who when their minds are enlightened, and they are convinced of their evil tenets, repent of them, come to themſelves, and acknowledge the truth, and ſo eſcape out of the ſnare of the devil; for as carnal luſts and pleaſures are the ſnares and nets, in which ſatan, who may be compared to a fowler, catches ſome; ſo errors and hereſies are thoſe with which he enſnares others: who are taken captive, or alive, by him at his will; ſuch are taken in his nets and ſnares, as creatures are taken alive, by fowlers, and huntſmen; and they are held faſt, and become his captives, and his ſlaves, and do his will, being led by him to whatſoever he pleaſes; he works powerfully in them, and they readily comply with him, and obey his luſts. Tho' ſome underſtand this, not of the will of the devil, but of the will of God; and that the ſenſe is, that ſuch perſons are held captive by ſatan, as long as it is the pleaſure of God, and no longer; when the prey is taken from the mighty, and the lawful captive is delivered; and ſo it is an encouragement to the miniſters of the word, to go on in inſtructing, hoping this may be the caſe. Others connect this phraſe, to his will, or according to his will, as they differently render it, with the word, recover; and then the meaning is, that ſuch repenting of their errors, might eſcape out of the ſnare of ſatan, in which they were taken alive; that ſo they might do the will of God, by profeſſing and holding faſt his truths; or that their repentance, recovery, and eſcape out of ſatan's ſnare, and captivity, are according to the will of God, and his ſovereign good pleaſure.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle delivers out a prophecy of the laſt days, ſhewing how perilous the times will be, deſcribing the perſons that will live in them, and what will be their end; and in oppoſition to theſe men, propoſes himſelf an example in doctrine and ſufferings; and encourages Timothy to perſevere, and highly commends the ſacred writings. The prophecy begins ver. 1. the deſcription it gives of hypocrites, formal profeſſors, and falſe teachers, that ſhould riſe up in the laſt days, and perilous times ſpoken of, is in ver. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. And theſe are compared to the magicians of Egypt for the corruption of their minds, the badneſs of their principles, and their oppoſition to truth, and for their exit, and the iſſue of things; they will be ſtopped in their progreſs, and their folly expoſed, ver. 8, 9. and as the reverſe of theſe men, the Apoſtle gives an account of his own doctrine, converſation, and ſufferings; which he propoſes to Timothy for imitation, as being well known to him, and as alſo the common ſtate of all godly perſons in this life, being a ſuffering one, ver. 10, 11, 12. nor can it be expected that it ſhould be otherwiſe, ſince falſe teachers, who are wicked and deceitful men, grow worſe and worſe, ver. 13. And then the Apoſtle exhorts Timothy to abide by, and continue in the doctrines of the Goſpel, from the aſſurance he had of the truth of them, from the conſideration of his having learned them of the Apoſtle, and eſpecially from their agreement with the holy ſcriptures, which he had knowledge of from a child, ver. 14, 15. which ſcriptures are commended, partly from the uſeful effect of them, making men wiſe unto ſalvation; and chiefly from the author of them, being by the inſpiration of God; and alſo from the profitableneſs of them, both for doctrine and manners, and eſpecially to furniſh a Goſpel-miniſter for the work he is called unto, ver. 15, 16, 17.

Ver. 1. This know alſo, &c.] That not only men of bad principles and practices are in the churches now, as before deſcribed in the preceding chapter, but that in ſucceeding ages there would be worſe men, if poſſible, and the times would be ſtill worſe; this the Apoſtle had, and delivered by a ſpirit of prophecy, and informed Timothy, and others of it, that he and they might be prepared for ſuch events, and fortified againſt them: that in the laſt days perilous times ſhall come; or hard and difficult times to live in; not by reaſon of outward calamities, as badneſs of trade, ſcarcity of proviſions, the ravages of the ſword, &c. but by reaſon of the wickedneſs of men, and that not of the prophane world, but of profeſſors of religion; for they are the perſons afterwards deſcribed, who will make the times they live in difficult to others, to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly; the days will be evil, becauſe of theſe evil men: or they will be troubleſome times, very afflicting and diſtreſſing to pious minds; as the places and times, and men and cuſtoms of them were to Lot, David, Iſaiah, and others: and alſo dangerous ones to the ſouls of men; who will be beguiled by their fair ſpeeches, and ſpecious pretences, to follow their pernicious ways, which will bring deſtruction upon them; their doctrines will eat as a gangrene, and their evil communications will corrupt good manners, before obſerved. And theſe times will be in the laſt days of the apoſtolic age, and onward to the end of the world: the Jews generally underſtand by this phraſe, when uſed in the Old Teſtament, the days of the Meſſiah; and which are the laſt days of the world, in compariſon of the times before the law, from Adam to Moſes, and under the law, from thence to Chriſt; and even in the times of the Apoſtles, at leaſt towards the cloſe of them, great numbers of men roſe up under the chriſtian name, to whom the following characters well agree, as the Gnoſticks, and others; and who paved the way for the man of ſin, the Romiſh antichriſt, whoſe prieſts and votaries are here likewiſe deſcribed to the life: ſo that theſe laſt days may take in the general defection and apoſtacy of the church of Rome, as well as thoſe times, which followed the Apoſtles, and thoſe which will uſher in the ſecond coming of Chriſt. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, in the latter days will come an evil, or bad year.

Ver. 2. For men ſhall be lovers of their ownſelves, &c.] Not in a good ſenſe, as men may be, and as ſuch are, who love their neighbours as themſelves, and do that to others they would have done to themſelves; and who take all prudent and lawful care to preſerve the life and health of their bodies, and ſeek in a right way the ſalvation of their immortal ſouls: but in a bad ſenſe, as ſuch may be ſaid to be, who only love themſelves; their love to God, and Chriſt, and to the ſaints, being only in pretence, not in reality; and who do all they do in a religious way, from a principle of ſelf-love, and to ſelfiſh and mercernary ends; either to gain glory and applauſe from men, or to merit ſomething for themſelves at the hands of God, without any view to the glory of God, the honour and intereſt of Chriſt, and the good of others; and aſcribe all they have and do to themſelves, to their induſtry, diligence, power, free-will, worth, and merit, and not to the grace of God: and this character may be ſeen in the principles and practices of the church of Rome, in their doctrines of merit and free-will, in works of ſupererogation, &c. Covetous; lovers of ſilver, greedy of filthy lucre, doing nothing but for money; every one looking for his gain from his quarter; making merchandize of the ſouls of men; and which are reckoned among the wares of Babylon, the Romiſh antichriſt, Rev. xviii. 13. No penny, no pater-noſter. Boaſters; of their wealth and riches, of their honour and grandeur; I ſit a queen, &c. Rev. xviii. 7. of their numbers, of their holineſs, of the infallibility of their popes, of their having the true knowledge, and certain ſenſe of the ſcriptures, and of having all power in heaven and in earth. Proud; as have been the popes of Rome; exalting themſelves above all that is called God, above all princes, kings, and emperors of the earth; depoſing one, excommunicating another, treading upon their necks, obliging them to hold their ſtirrups whilſt they mounted their horſes; the pride of the popes, cardinals, prieſts, and the whole clergy of the church of Rome, is notorious. Blaſphemers; of God, and of his Son Jeſus Chriſt; ſitting in the temple as God, as antichriſt does, ſhewing himſelf that he is God; aſſuming that to himſelf which belongs to God only, which is to forgive ſin; calling himſelf Chriſt's vicar on earth; taking upon him to enact new laws, and to diſpenſe with the laws of God, and Chriſt; and has a mouth ſpeaking great things, and blaſphemies againſt God, his name, his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. Rev. xiii. 5, 6. Diſobedient to parents; as many of the votaries of the antichriſtian church have been; who have withdrew themſelves from under the care of their parents, and their fortunes too out of their hands, when they have been in their power; and have ſhut themſelves up in cloyſters, monaſteries, and nunneries, without the leave and conſent, or knowledge of their parents. Unthankful; to God, for what is enjoyed by them, aſcribing all to themſelves, and to their merit and good works; and to men, to the princes of the earth, by whom they were firſt raiſed to, and ſupported in their dignity; as the popes of Rome were by the Roman emperors, and whom they in return tyrannized over, and dethroned at pleaſure. Unholy; notwithſtanding his holineſs the pope at the head of them their holy father, and holy mother church, and holy prieſts, and holy orders they talk of; yet are without the fear of God, or any regard to him, living moſt unholy lives and converſations, Dan. xi. 37.

Ver. 3. Without natural affection, &c.] To parents, or children, or wife; parents thruſting their children into religious houſes, cloyſters, &c. againſt their wills; children leaving their parents without their knowledge or conſent; married biſhops and prieſts being obliged to quit their wives, and declare their children ſpurious; with many other ſuch unnatural actions. Truce-breakers; or covenant-breakers; ſtirring up princes to break thro' their treaties and covenants with one another; diſſolving the allegiance of ſubjects to their ſovereigns, and moving them to rebellion againſt them; looſing the marriage-bond between huſband and wife; making void all oaths, contracts, and agreements among men, which ſtand in the way of their deſigns; teaching that no faith is to be kept with hereticks. Falſe accuſers; or devils, being like ſatan, the accuſer of the brethren, charging all that depart from their communion with ſchiſm and hereſy. Incontinent; tho' they pretend to the gift of continency, yet give themſelves up to all laſciviouſneſs, and work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs; or intemperate in eating and drinking, indulging themſelves in rioting and drunkenneſs: ſhe hath lived deliciouſly, Rev. xviii. 7. Fierce; like beaſts of prey; ſuch was Rome pagan, in the times of the ten perſecutions; and ſuch has been Rome papal, exerciſing the greateſt cruelties and barbarities on the ſaints, being drunk with their blood. Deſpiſers of thoſe that are good; or without love to good; both to good works, to which they are reprobate, notwithſtanding all their pretenſions to them, and bluſter about them; and to good men, whom they hate.

Ver. 4. Traitors, &c.] To their princes and ſovereigns, whoſe deaths they have contrived and compaſſed, and whom they have aſſaſſinated and murdered; and have been betrayers of the ſecrets of perſons, which they have come at by auricular confeſſion to them; and of their beſt and neareſt friends, to preſerve and ſecure themſelves. Heady; raſh, daring, bold, and impudent, fit to ſay and do any thing, tho' ever ſo vile and wicked. High-minded; puffed and ſwelled up with a vain conceit of themſelves, and ſpeaking great ſwelling words of vanity: lovers of pleaſure more than lovers of God; lovers of ſinful pleaſures, or the pleaſures of ſin, which are but for a ſeaſon, and not God; ſerving divers luſts, and pleaſures, and not God; making a God of their belly; ſenſual idolaters, delighting themſelves in their carnal luſts, and not in the ſervice of God.

Ver. 5. Having a form of godlineſs, &c.] Either a mere external ſhew of religion, pretending great piety and holineſs, being outwardly righteous before men, having the maſk and vizor of godlineſs; or elſe a plan of doctrine, a form of ſound words, a ſcheme of truths, which men may have without partaking of the grace of God; and which, with reſpect to the doctrine of the Trinity, the church of Rome has; or elſe the ſcriptures of truth, which the members of that church have, and profeſs to hold to, maintain and preſerve; and which contains doctrines according to godlineſs, and tend to a godly life and godly edification: but denying the power thereof; tho' in words they profeſs religion and godlineſs, the fear of God, and the pure worſhip of him, yet in works they deny all; and tho' they may have a ſett of notions in their heads, yet they feel nothing of the power of them on their hearts; and are ſtrangers to experimental religion, and powerful godlineſs: or tho' they profeſs the ſcriptures to be the word of God, yet they deny the uſe, the power, and efficacy of them; they deny the uſe of them to the laity, and affirm that they are not a ſufficient rule of faith and practice, without their unwritten traditions; and that they are not able to make men wiſe, or give them a true knowledge of what is to be believed and done, without them; and that the ſenſe of them is not to be underſtood by private men, but depends upon the infallible judgment of the church or pope: from ſuch turn away; have no fellowſhip with them, depart from their communion, withdraw from them, and come out from among them: this paſſage ſufficently juſtifies the reformed churches in their ſeparation from the church of Rome.

Ver. 6. For of this ſort are they which creep into houſes, &c.] Privily and unawares, in a clandeſtine manner, and inſinuate themſelves into families, by fawning and flattering, and under ſpecious pretences to knowledge and virtue. The Syriac verſion uſes a word, from whence comes, חולדא, Chulda, which ſignifies a weaſel; ſuggeſting, that their entrance into houſes was like to the way of that creature, which is ſometimes covered, and ſometimes open: there was alſo a gate of the temple, which was called Huldah; whether there is any alluſion in the word to that, may be enquired [k]. And lead captive ſilly women; the coming of antichriſt is after the working of ſatan; as ſatan attacked the woman, and not the man, and beguiled Eve and not Adam, ſo theſe his inſtruments and emiſſaries, work themſelves into the affections of the weaker veſſel, and into the weaker ſort of women, as the diminutive word here uſed ſignifies; and gain upon them, inſtil their principles into them, attach them to their intereſts, captivate them to them, and lead them as they pleaſe: laden with ſins; covered with them, full of them, and ſo ready to receive any ſett of principles that would encourage them to continue in them; or elſe were preſſed down with a ſenſe of them, their conſciences being awakened, and they under ſome concern on account of them, and ſo fit perſons for ſuch deceivers to gain upon, by pretending to great ſanctity and religion, and by providing them with pardons and indulgences, and putting them upon pennance, &c. tho' the former ſenſe ſeems moſt agreeable, and is confirmed by what follows, led away with divers luſts. The Alexandrian copy adds, and pleaſures; that is, ſinful ones; tho' this may be underſtood, not of unclean luſts, but of the itch and deſire after new teachers, and new doctrines, and practices, which prevail in weak women, and by which they are governed and led away.

Ver. 7. Ever learning, &c.] Some new notion and practice or another: and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth; partly becauſe of the teachers, which they heap up to themſelves, who are unapt to teach, are blind and ignorant guides, and know not the truth, but are enemies to it, and reſiſt it; and partly becauſe of themſelves, the ſins they are laden, and the luſts they are led away with, which hinder them from coming to the knowledge of the truth.

Ver. 8. Now as Jannes and Jambres withſtood Moſes, &c.] Theſe were not Jews, who roſe up and oppoſed Moſes, as Dathan and Abiram did, as ſome have thought; but Egyptian magicians, the chief of thoſe that Pharoah ſent for, when Moſes and Aaron came before him, and wrought miracles; and who did in like manner by their inchantments, Exod. vii. 11. upon which place the Targum of Jonathan has theſe words: "and Pharoah called the "wiſe men and the magicians; and Janis and Jambres, the magicians of the Egyptians did ſo by "the enchantments of their divinations." And the ſame paraphraſt on Exod. i. 15. calls them by the ſame names; and this ſhows from whence the Apoſtle had theſe names, which are not mentioned in any place in the Old Teſtament; namely, from the traditions and records of the Jews, with which he was well acquainted: there is no need to ſay he had this account by divine revelation, for ſome of the heathens had knowledge of this ſtory ſome ſuch way. Numenius, the philoſopher, ſpeaks of Jannes and Jambres as Egyptian ſcribes, and famous for their ſkill in the magic art; and who oppoſed themſelves to Moſes when the Jews were driven out of Egypt [l]. Pliny alſo makes mention of Jamne and Jotape as magicians; tho' he wrongly calls them Jews, and places Moſes with them [m], as Jannes likewiſe is by Apuleius [n]. It is commonly ſaid by the Jews [o], that theſe were the two ſons of Balaam, and they are ſaid to be the chief of the magicians of Egypt [p]; the latter of theſe is called in the Vulgate Latin verſion Mambres; and in ſome Jewiſh writers his name is Mamre [q], by whom alſo the former is called Jochane or John; and indeed Joannes, Jannes, and John, are the ſame name; and R. Gedaliah [r] ſays, that their names in other languages are John and Ambroſe, which is not unlikely. Mention is made of the ſons of Jambri in 1 Maccab. ix. 36. whom Joſephus [s] calls the ſons of Amaræus. Theſe are ſaid to be the perſons that told Pharaoh, that a child ſhould be born among the Iſraelites, by whom the whole land of Egypt ſhould be deſtroyed, and which was the reaſon of Pharoah's giving ſuch a charge to the Hebrew midwives[t]; alſo the making of the golden calf is aſcribed to them[u]; for, according to the Jews, they afterwards became proſelytes; but theſe things are not to be depended on: however, certain it is, that they withſtood Moſes by their inchantments, and hardened Pharaoh's heart, ſo that, for a while, he would not let the children of Iſrael go. Now between theſe magicians, and the Papiſts before deſcribed, there is a very great agreement; as theſe men were Egyptians, ſo the Papiſts may be called, ſince Rome is ſpiritually called Sodom and Egypt, Rev. xi. 8. as the one were, ſo the other are idolaters, who worſhip devils, idols of gold, ſilver, braſs, ſtone, and wood, Rev. ix. 20. and both ſorcerers, uſing the magic art, Rev. ix. 21. and they both pretended to miracles; tho' what they did were no other than lying wonders, 2 Theſſ. ii. 9. Rev. xiii. 13, 14. and both agreed to keep the people of God in bondage, as much, and as long as they could: and particularly, as the magicians of Egypt withſtood Moſes, ſo do theſe alſo reſiſt the truth; the truth of one God, by their worſhipping of images; and of one mediator, by making uſe of angels, and ſaints departed, to intercede with God for them; and of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, by introducing the doctrine of works, of merit, and ſupererogation; and of pardon and cleanſing by the blood of Chriſt, and atonement by his ſacrifice, by their pardons, indulgences, pennance, purgatory, and the ſacrifice of the maſs; yea, they reſiſt the ſcriptures of truth, not allowing them to be a ſufficient rule without their unwritten traditions, and even Chriſt, who is truth itſelf, in all his offices, prophetic, prieſtly, and kingly. Men of corrupt minds; of bad principles, holding antichriſtian tenets, derogatory to the grace of God, and glory of Chriſt; giving heed to ſeducing ſpirits, and doctrines of devils; like Jannes and Jambres, who were given to magic arts, and were under the influence of ſatan: reprobate concerning the faith; men of no judgment in the doctrine of faith; who have not their ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern good and evil, to try things that differ, and approve the more excellent, but call good evil, and evil good: or as thoſe who are diſobedient and wicked in their lives, are ſaid to be to every good work reprobate, Tit. i. 16. ſo theſe are ſaid to be reprobate to the faith; that is, to have no liking of it, or value for it, but deſpiſe it, hate it, and reject it; and upon that account, as they are like reprobate ſilver, whom God has rejected, they ought to be rejected by men.

Ver. 9. But they ſhall proceed no further, &c.] They may proceed to more ungodlineſs, and wax worſe and worſe in error; but they ſhall proceed no further than the magicians of Egypt, who did lying wonders, hardened Pharaoh's heart, and deceived him and the Egyptians; but could not deſtroy the Iſraelites, nor hinder their departure out of Egypt, when their time was come: ſo theſe wicked men do falſe miracles, harden the popes of Rome, and deceive the nations ſubject to them; but they can't deceive the elect of God, nor deſtroy the church of God, againſt which the gates of hell cannot prevail; nor could they hinder the reformation, or the departure of the Lord's people out of Babylon. For their folly ſhall be manifeſt unto all men, as theirs alſo was; as the folly of Jannes and Jambres was, when Aaron's rod devoured theirs; and when they could not produce lice, but was obliged to own to Pharaoh, that that plague was the finger of God; and when they could not ſtand before Moſes, becauſe of the boil that was upon them, Exod. vii. 12. and viii. 18, 19. and ix. 11. And ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, as is manifeſt the folly, or madneſs of theſe two; and it is notorious in how many inſtances the frauds, impoſtures, tricks, and villanies of the church of Rome, and its votaries, have been detected and expoſed; which have been the means of hindering them from proceeding any further than they have. The Alexandrian copy reads, their underſtanding; that which they pretended to have of divine things.

Ver. 10. But thou haſt fully known my doctrine, &c.] This, with what follows, is ſaid in oppoſition to the characters, principles, and practices of the above wicked men, and for the imitation and encouragement of Timothy, and of others, whether miniſters or private believers: the Apoſtle calls the doctrine he delivered, my doctrine; not becauſe he was the author of it, or that it was a ſcheme of principles formed and contrived by him; but becauſe it was the doctrine which he had received from God, which was given him to preach, and which he did preach purely and faithfully; otherwiſe it was the doctrine of Chriſt, and the ſame with that which was preached by the reſt of the Apoſtles; and which was the doctrine of the ſcriptures, and was according to godlineſs; and as preached by him, was all of a-piece, and without any adulteration, or mixture, and was open and manifeſt, and well known to Timothy, and others; for he uſed no hidden things of diſhoneſty, nor did he conceal his principles, or keep back any thing that was profitable. And as well known was his manner of life; both his civil life, how he ſpent his time, not in eaſe and idleneſs, but oftentimes in labour with his own hands; nor did he live in a ſenſual and voluptuous manner, but frequently was in hunger, and thirſt, and nakedneſs; and likewiſe his religious life, and converſation, not only in the church, which was ſpent in the miniſtry of the word, and ordinances; but in the world, which, by the grace of God, was in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, in a very juſt, holy, and unblameable manner: his life was agreeable to his doctrine, and ornamental to his profeſſion: and even the ſecrets of his mind, his views, his aims and ends in all he did, which are ſignified by his purpoſe, were open and manifeſt; and which were not to obtain glory and applauſe from men, nor to gather wealth and riches for himſelf; but that God might be glorified in the ſalvation of men; that Chriſt might be magnified both in his life and death; that his Goſpel might be ſpread, his kingdom be enlarged, and that many ſouls might be converted and brought to the knowledge of him; and hence he became all things to all, that he might gain ſome. And as the doctrine of faith, embraced, profeſſed, and preached by him, was well known, ſo no leſs conſpicuous was the grace of faith in him, with reſpect to his intereſt in God's everlaſting love, in ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt, and in eternal glory and happineſs; of which he had a full aſſurance, and which remained conſtant and firm in him to the end. Unleſs, rather his faithfulneſs in the diſcharge of his miniſterial work ſhould be here deſigned, for which he was very remarkable; as alſo for his long-ſuffering both towards thoſe that were without, the open enemies and perſecutors of the Goſpel, and towards them that were within, the brethren, whoſe infirmities he bore; and alſo for the ſucceſs of the Goſpel, as the huſbandman has long patience, and waits long for the former and latter rain: to which is added charity; which ſuffers long, and is kind; and may include his love to God, to Chriſt, and to the ſouls of men; which was very great, and particularly to his countrymen, the Jews, and alſo to the Gentiles; and eſpecially to the churches he was more immediately concerned with, and even to all the ſaints: this is left out in the Alexandrian copy: it follows, patience; in bearing all indignities, reproaches, afflictions, and perſecutions for the ſake of Chriſt and his Goſpel; by which he was not in the leaſt moved, but perſevered with great courage and conſtancy to the end.

[u] Zohar in Exod. fol. 75. 1. & in Num. fol. 78. 3. Shalſheleth, ib.

Ver. 11. Perſecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch, &c.] In Piſidia; where the Jews that contradicted and blaſphemed his doctrine, and envied his ſucceſs, ſtirred up the chief of the city, both men and women againſt him, and Barnabas; who perſecuted them, and expelled them out of their coaſts, Acts xiii. 45, 50. and alſo at Iconium; where both Jews and Gentiles made an aſſault upon them, to uſe them ill, and ſtone them, Acts xiv. 5. and likewiſe at Lyſtra; where the Apoſtle was ſtoned, and drawn out of the city, and left for dead, Acts xiv. 19. And theſe inſtances are the rather mentioned becauſe they were done in thoſe parts, where Timothy had lived, Acts xvi. 1. and ſo knew the truth of theſe things, not only from the Apoſtle's mouth, but from the teſtimonies of others; and perhaps he might have been a witneſs to ſome of them himſelf: what perſecutions I endured; not only in the above places, but elſewhere; ſee a detail of them in 2 Cor. xi. 23—28. but out of them all the Lord delivered me; ſee 2 Cor. i. 10. 2 Tim. iv. 17, 18. this he ſays to the glory of the grace and power of God, to whom he aſcribes all his deliverances; and for the encouragement of Timothy, and other ſaints, under ſufferings, who may hope and believe, that the Lord will deliver them in his own time and way, Pſ. xxxiv. 19.

Ver. 12. Yea and all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, &c.] All that live according to the will of God revealed in his word; and to the glory of God, as the end of all their actions; and which the grace of God in the Goſpel, and in their own hearts teaches them; and who have the principles of a godly life from Chriſt, and derive the freſh ſupplies of grace and life from him, to maintain it; in whom their life is hid, and who live by faith upon him; all ſuch that live, and that will live ſo, are deſirous of living after this manner; in whom God has wrought in them both to will and to do, and are concerned when it is otherwiſe with them: theſe ſhall ſuffer perſecution; it is the will of God, and the appointment of heaven; Chriſt has foretold it, that ſo it ſhall be; and he the head has ſuffered it himſelf, and it is neceſſary that his members ſhould, that they may be conformed unto him; it is the way Chriſt himſelf went to glory, and through many tribulations his people muſt enter the kingdom; and this is the common lot and certain caſe of all the ſaints, in one ſhape or another; for tho' all do not ſuffer confiſcation of goods, beating, ſcourging, impriſonment, or a violent death; yet all are more or leſs afflicted and diſtreſſed by wicked men, and are ſubject to their reproaches and revilings, which are a branch of perſecution; and that for profeſſing Chriſt, and living a godly life in him, and under his influence: and ſince ſuch ſuffer as chriſtians, and not as evil doers; and this is the common condition of the people of God in this world, it ſhould not be thought ſtrange, but be chearfully endured; to encourage to which, is the Apoſtle's view in this paſſage.

Ver. 13. But evil men and ſeducers ſhall wax worſe and worſe, &c.] By evil men are meant, not ſinful men in common, as all are by nature and practice; nor only open prophane ſinners, but rather wicked men under a form of godlineſs, as before; and who are full of wickedneſs and malice againſt truly godly perſons, even as the devil himſelf, of whom the ſame word is uſed, when he is called the wicked one; and this is a reaſon why true profeſſors of religion muſt expect perſecution, ſeeing as there ever were, ſo there ever will be ſuch ſort of men, who will not grow better, but worſe and worſe. The word for ſeducers, ſignifies ſorcerers, inchanters, a ſort of juglers; and as the other, it well ſuits with the eccleſiaſticks of the church of Rome, who pretend to miracles, and do lying wonders, and by their ſorceries deceive all nations, Rev. xviii. 23. and theſe ſhall wax worſe and worſe; in principle and in practice, in ungodlineſs, and in error, in wickedneſs and malice againſt the ſaints, and in the arts of deceiving; ſo the church of Rome is never to be expected to be better, but worſe; at the time of the fall of Babylon ſhe will be an habitation of devils, the hold of every foul ſpirit, and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird, Rev. xviii. 2. deceiving; not God, but themſelves and others, even all nations, excepting the elect of God; which they do by their good words and fair ſpeeches, and by their ſhew of devotion and religion, and by their pretended miracles and lying wonders: and deceived; by the old ſerpent, the devil, under whoſe power and influence they are, in whoſe ſnare they are taken, and by whom they are led captive, and will at laſt ſhare the ſame fate with himſelf, and be caſt into the ſame lake of fire and brimſtone.

Ver. 14. But continue thou in the things, &c.] That is, in the doctrines of the Goſpel, and not be moved away from them, either through the malice or perſecutions, or the cunning ſleight of men that lie in wait to deceive; and which is an exhortation ſuitable to the godly in all ages: and what follow are ſo many reaſons enforcing it: which thou haſt learned; not merely in a theoretical way, as arts and ſciences are learned, but in a ſpiritual and experimental manner; a comfortable knowledge and experience of which, he had attained unto; and were not like thoſe in ver. 7. who had been ever learning, and yet could not come to the knowledge of the truth: and ſince therefore he had learned the truths of the Goſpel, and had attained to a good underſtanding of them, it was his duty, as it is the duty of all ſuch to abide by them: and haſt been aſſured of; the doctrines of the Goſpel are certain things; they are truths without controverſy; there is a full aſſurance of underſtanding of them, which men may arrive unto, and which miniſters ſhould, ſince they are to affirm them with certainty. Scepticiſm is very unbecoming one that calls himſelf a miniſter of the Goſpel; and when a man is aſſured of the truth and reality of Goſpel doctrines, it would be ſhameful in him to drop them, or depart from them: knowing of whom thou haſt learned them. The Apoſtle means himſelf, tho' he modeſtly forbears the mention of himſelf: and it is another argument why Timothy ſhould continue ſtedfaſtly in the doctrines of the Goſpel, ſeeing he had learned them of ſo great an Apoſtle of Chriſt; whoſe miſſion, as ſuch, was abundantly confirmed, by miracles and ſucceſs, and who had received theſe doctrines by immediate revelation from Chriſt; ſo that it was all one as if Timothy had learned them from Chriſt himſelf. The Alexandrian copy reads the word whom, in the plural number, as if the Apoſtle referred to more teachers of Timothy than himſelf; however, he doubtleſs was the principal one.

Ver. 15. And that from a child thou haſt known the holy ſcriptures, &c.] And therefore muſt know that the doctrines he had learned were agreeable to them; and ſo is another reaſon why he ſhould continue in them. The Jews very early learned their children the holy ſcripture. Philo the Jew ſays[w], εκ πρωτης ηλικιας, from their very infancy; a phraſe pretty much the ſame with this here uſed. It is a maxim with the Jews,[x] that when a child was five years of age, it was proper to teach him the ſcriptures. Timothy's mother being a Jeweſs, trained him up betimes in the knowledge of theſe writings, with which he became very converſant, and under divine influence and aſſiſtance, arrived to a large underſtanding of them; and it is a practice that highly becomes chriſtian parents; it is one part of the nurture and admonition of the Lord they ſhould bring up their children in: the Wiſe Man's advice in Prov. xxii. 6. is very good. From hence the Apoſtle takes occaſion to enter into a commendation of the ſacred writings; and here, from the nature and character of them, calls them the holy ſcriptures; to diſtinguiſh them from prophane writings; and that becauſe the author of them is the holy Spirit of God; and even the amanuenſes of him, and the penmen of them were holy men of God; the matter of them is holy, both law and Goſpel; and the end of writing them, is to promote holineſs; the precepts, promiſes, and doctrines contained in them are calculated for that purpoſe; and even the account they give of the ſins and failings of others, are for the admonition of men: and next theſe ſcriptures are commended from the efficacy of them: which are able to make thee wiſe unto ſalvation. Men are not wiſe of themſelves; they are naturally without an underſtanding of ſpiritual things; and the things of the ſpirit of God cannot be known by natural men, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned; particularly they are not wiſe in the buſineſs of ſalvation, of which either they are inſenſible themſelves, and negligent; or fooliſhly build their hopes of it upon their civility, morality, legal righteouſneſs, or an outward profeſſion of religion: but the ſcriptures are able to make men wiſe and knowing in this reſpect; for the goſpel is one part of the ſcriptures, which is the Goſpel of ſalvation, and ſhews unto men the way of ſalvation. The ſcriptures teſtify largely of Chriſt, the ſaviour; and give an ample account both of him, who is the able, willing, ſuitable, compleat, and only ſaviour, and of the ſalvation which is wrought by him; and deſcribe the perſons who do, and ſhall enjoy it: not that the bare reading of the ſcriptures, or the hearing of them expounded, are able to make men wiſe in this way; but theſe, when accompanied with the ſpirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of Chriſt are; when he who endited the ſcriptures removes the veil from their eyes, opens their underſtandings, and gives them light and knowlege in them: and then may perſons be ſaid to be wiſe unto ſalvation, when they not only have a ſcheme of it in their heads, but are in their hearts ſenſible of their need of it, and know that there is ſalvation in no other but in Chriſt; and when they look to him for it, to his righteouſneſs for juſtification, to his blood for peace, pardon, and cleanſing, to his ſacrifice for atonement, and to his fulneſs of grace for a continual ſupply, and to him for eternal life and glory; when they rejoice in him and his ſalvation, and give him all the glory of it: the Apoſtle adds, through faith which is in Chriſt Jeſus; wiſdom to ſalvation lies not in the knowledge of the law, the Jew boaſted of; nor in the works of it, at leaſt, not in a truſt and confidence in them for ſalvation; for by them there is no juſtification before God, nor acceptance with him, nor ſalvation: but true wiſdem to ſalvation lies in faith, which is a ſpiritual knowledge of Chriſt, and a holy confidence in him; and that ſalvation which the ſcriptures make men wiſe unto, is received and enjoyed through that faith, which has Chriſt for its author and object; which comes from him, and centers in him, and is a looking to him for eternal life.

Ver. 16. All ſcripture is given by inſpiration of God, &c.] That is, all holy ſcripture; for of that only the Apoſtle is ſpeaking, and he means the whole of it; not only the books of the Old Teſtament, but of the New, the greateſt part of which was now written; for this Second Epiſtle to Timothy is by ſome thought to be the laſt of Paul's epiſtles; and this alſo will hold good of what was to be written; for all is inſpired by God, or breathed by him: the ſcriptures are the breath of God, the word of God and not men; they are written by the ſpirit, as the Syriac verſion renders it; or by the ſpirit of God, as the Ethiopic verſion. The ſcriptures are here commended, from the divine authority of them; and which is atteſted and confirmed by various arguments; as the majeſty and loftineſs of their ſtyle, which in many places is inimitable by men; the ſublimity of the matter contained in them, which tranſcends all human underſtanding and capacity ever to have attained unto and diſcovered; as the Trinity of perſons in the Godhead, the incarnation of Chriſt, the reſurrection of the dead, &c. The purity and holineſs of them before obſerved, ſhew them to be the word of him that is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity; as alſo their harmony and agreement, tho' wrote by different perſons, in different places, and ages, and at ſundry times, and in divers manners; what ſeeming inconſiſtencies are obſerved in them, may with labour and induſtry, by divine aſſiſtance, be reconciled. The predictions of future events in them, as particularly concerning Joſiah and Cyrus, by name, long before they were born, and eſpecially concerning Jeſus Chriſt, and which have had their accompliſhment, and many others in the New Teſtament both by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, are a proof that they could not be the writings of men, but muſt have the omniſcient God for their author; the impartiality of the writers of them, in not concealing the mean extract of ſome of them, the ſins of others before converſion, and even their ſins and failings afterwards, as well as thoſe of their neareſt relations and deareſt friends, ſtrengthens the proof of their divine authority; to which may be added, the wonderful preſervation of them, through all the changes and declenſions of the Jewiſh church and ſtate, to whom the books of the Old Teſtament were committed; and notwithſtanding the violence and malice of heathen perſecutors, particularly Diocleſian, who ſought to deſtroy every copy of the ſcriptures, and publiſhed an edict for that purpoſe, and notwithſtanding the numbers of hereticks, and who have been in power; as alſo the apoſtacy of the church of Rome; and yet theſe writings have been preſerved, and kept pure and incorrupt, which is not the caſe of other writings; nor are there any of ſuch antiquity as the oldeſt of theſe: to which may be ſubjoined, the teſtimony of God himſelf; his outward teſtimony by miracles, wrought by Moſes and the prophets, concerned in the writings of the Old Teſtament, and by the Apoſtles in the New; and his internal teſtimony, which is the efficacy of theſe ſcriptures on the hearts of men; the reading and hearing of which, having been owned for the converſion, comfort and edification of thouſands and thouſands, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand: and is profitable for doctrine; for the diſcovering, illuſtrating and confirming any doctrine concerning God, the being, perſons, and perfections of God; concerning the creation and fall of man; concerning the perſon and offices of Chriſt, redemption by him, juſtification by his righteouſneſs, pardon by his blood, reconciliation and atonement by his ſacrifice, and eternal life through him, with many others. The ſcripture is profitable for miniſters to fetch doctrine from, and eſtabliſh it by; and for hearers to try and prove it by: for reproof; of errors and hereſies; this is the ſword of the Spirit, which cuts all down. There never was, nor is, nor can be any error or hereſy broached in the world, but there is a ſufficient refutation of it in the ſcriptures; which may be profitably uſed for that purpoſe, as it often has been by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and others ſince in all ages: for correction; of vice; there being no ſin, but the evil nature of it is ſhewn, its wicked tendency is expoſed, and the ſad effects and conſequences of it are pointed out in theſe writings: for inſtruction in righteouſneſs; in every branch of duty incumbent upon men; whether with reſpect to God, or one another; for there is no duty men are obliged unto, but the nature, uſe, and excellency of it, are here ſhewn: the ſcriptures are a perfect rule of faith and practice; and thus they are commended from the uſefulneſs and profitableneſs of them.

Ver. 17. That the man of God may be perfect, &c.] By the man of God, may be meant, every one that in a ſpecial relation belongs to God; who is choſen by God the father, redeemed by the Son, and called by the Spirit; but more eſpecially a miniſter of the Goſpel; for as it was uſual to call a prophet under the Old Teſtament by this name, it ſeems to be transferred from thence to a miniſter of the New Teſtament, ſee 1 Tim. vi. 11. and the deſign of the ſcriptures, and the end of writing them are, that both preachers of the word, and hearers of it, might have a perfect knowledge of the will of God; that the former might be a compleat miniſter of the Goſpel, and that nothing might be wanting for the information of the latter: thoroughly furniſhed unto all good works, or every good work; particularly to the work of the miniſtry, which is a good one; and to every part and branch of it, a thorough furniture for which lies in the holy ſcriptures; from whence as ſcribes well inſtructed in the kingdom of heaven, do Goſpel miniſters bring forth things new and old, both for delight and profit: tho' this may be alſo applied to all good works in common, which the ſcriptures point unto, give directions about, as well as ſhew where ſtrength is to be had to perform them.

CHAP. IV.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle charges Timothy to perform his office as an Evangeliſt, with great diligence, conſtancy, and faithfulneſs, with reaſons for it; gives ſome hints of ſeveral particular perſons mentioned, which made him very deſirous that Timothy would come quickly to him; relates how things were with him when he made his firſt defence at Rome; and concludes the epiſtle with ſalutations, and his uſual bleſſing. The charge is made in the moſt ſolemn manner in the ſight of God, and of Chriſt, as judge of quick and dead; and directs to the ſeveral parts of the miniſterial work, and the manner in which they ſhould be performed, ver. 1, 2. The reaſon of which charge is, becauſe the time was haſtening on, that ſound doctrine would not be endured, and men would depart from the truth to fables and falſe teachers, ver. 3, 4. Wherefore the Apoſtle repeats his charge and exhortation to Timothy, tho' in other words, to be vigilant, patient, courageous and faithful in the diſcharge of his office, ver. 5. adding a freſh reaſon moving to it, taken from the Apoſtle's death being at hand; which is expreſſed by a ſacrifice, and by a departure out of the world, ver. 6. which leads him to give an account of his paſt conduct in fighting the good fight, finiſhing his courſe, and keeping the faith, ver. 7. and of his firm belief of eternal glory and happineſs, ver. 8. and next, he deſires Timothy to uſe all diligence to come quickly to him, ver. 9. his reaſons for which were, becauſe he had ſcarce any body with him: one had forſook him through love of the world; another was gone to Theſſalonica; a third, to Galatia, and a fourth to Dalmatia; only Luke the Evangeliſt was with him; and as for Tychicus, he had ſent him to Epheſus: he therefore deſires he would bring Mark with him, and his cloak, books, and parchments he had left at Troas, ver. 10, 11, 12, 13. and then takes notice of perſons that had uſed him ill, particularly Alexander the copper-ſmith; he wiſhes juſtice might be done him; and adviſes Timothy to beware of him, becauſe of his oppoſition to the doctrines of the Goſpel, ver. 14, 15. and alſo of others that neglected him, who forſook him when he defended himſelf: however, he prays that this might not be charged upon them; and obſerves the goodneſs of God in ſtanding by him and delivering him; and expreſſes his faith and confidence that he ſhould be delivered and preſerved ſafe to eternal glory, ver. 16, 17, 18. and next follow the Apoſtle's ſalutations of ſome perſons at Epheſus, and an account of two others, one at Corinth, and another at Miletum; and a repetition of his requeſt to Timothy, to come quickly to him, and before winter; and then ſome ſalutations of perſons at Rome, ſent by Timothy; and the whole is concluded with the Apoſtle's uſual benediction, ver. 19, 20, 21, 22.

Ver. 1. I charge thee therefore before God, &c.] Whoſe word the ſcriptures are, and by whom they are inſpired; who had made Timothy an able miniſter of the New Teſtament, and to whom he was accountable for his miniſtry: and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; who is equal with God, and beſtows miniſterial gifts on men, and from whom Timothy had his; whoſe Goſpel he preached; in whoſe cauſe he was imbarked; and before whom he muſt appear, to give an account of his miniſtry, talents, and ſouls under his care: who ſhall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; it is certain there will be a general judgment; the day is appointed, and Chriſt is ordained the judge of all men; all judgment is committed to him, and he is ready to exerciſe it; for which he is abundantly qualified, being God omniſcient and omnipotent; and which he will execute in the moſt righteous and impartial manner. The perſons that will be judged by him are, the quick and the dead; by which are meant, not the different parts of men, their ſouls which are living and immortal, and their bodies which die and will be raiſed from the dead, tho' they will be judged in their whole perſons; nor the different ſorts of men, as good men, who are made alive by the ſpirit and grace of God, and evil men, who are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, and die in their ſins; tho' this is a truth that God will judge both the righteous and the wicked: but rather by the quick, are meant, ſuch as will be found alive at Chriſt's coming; and by the dead, ſuch as having been dead, will be raiſed by him; and in ſhort, the characters include all mentioned; who muſt all ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt. The time when this will be, is, at his appearing and his kingdom; which may be conſidered as an Hendyadis, expreſſive of one and the ſame thing; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, at the revelation of his kingdom; or as two things, the one as antecedent and preparatory to the other; the former refers to the appearance of Chriſt at the laſt day. He appeared frequently to the Old Teſtament ſaints in an human form; and he really appeared in human nature in the fulneſs of time; and after his reſurrection to his Apoſtles and others, and even after his aſcenſion to ſome; and he appears in a ſpiritual manner to believers in all ages; but to them that look for him, he will appear a ſecond time in perſon, in a moſt glorious manner: for the preſent he is received up into heaven, where he is as it were hid, and is unſeen to corporeal eyes; but in his due time he will be manifeſted in his own and his father's glory, and in the glory of his angels; and this appearance will be greatly to the advantage of the ſaints, who will then appear in glory, and be like him, and ſee him as he is, and hence they look for it, and love it; and at this time will be the judgment, and then will the kingdom of Chriſt take place. Chriſt has a kingdom now, and ever had, which is not of this world, but is of a ſpiritual nature, and which will be more manifeſt in the latter day, by the ſpread of the Goſpel, the numerous inſtances of converſion, and the revival of powerful religion and godlineſs, which we commonly call the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt; but the kingdom here deſigned, is the perſonal reign of Chriſt, for a thouſand years; at the beginning of which will be the judgment of the ſaints, who having the crown of righteouſneſs given them by the judge, will reign with him as kings and prieſts; and at the end of this period will be the judgment of the wicked. The charge made before theſe two divine perſons, God and his ſon Jeſus Chriſt, follows.

Ver. 2. Preach the word, &c.] Either Chriſt the eſſential word, who is the ſum and ſubſtance of the Goſpel miniſtry; or the word of truth and faith, the Goſpel of ſalvation, the word of righteouſneſs, peace, and reconciliation by Chriſt; which is to be preached, or publiſhed, in like manner as heralds proclaim the will of their princes; openly, publickly, and with a loud voice, without adding to it, or taking from it; ſpeaking out the whole, and keeping back no part of it; and that with all courage and boldneſs: ſome copies read, the word of God; and the Ethiopic verſion, his word; that is, the word of Chriſt: be inſtant in ſeaſon, out of ſeaſon; that is, be conſtant and aſſiduous in the work of the miniſtry; be always and wholly in it, either preparing for it, or performing it; or doing thoſe things which are annexed to it, or follow upon it; redeem time, and take every opportunity of diſpenſing the myſteries of grace, as a faithful ſteward of them; not only make uſe of the common and ſtated ſeaſons for the miniſtration of the word and ordinances, but embrace every other that offers; make uſe not only of thoſe ſeaſons which may ſeem commodious and advantageous both to preacher and hearer, and promiſe uſefulneſs and ſucceſs, but even ſuch as may ſeem incommodious and diſadvantageous to fleſh and blood; ſuch as times of perſecution and oppoſition; but none of theſe things ſhould deter and move from the preaching of the Goſpel. Several parts of the miniſterial function to be inſiſted on and attended to, are next mentioned, as being within the ſolemn charge given before God and Chriſt: reprove; errors, and men for their errors and hereſies; make uſe of convincing arguments taken out of the ſcriptures, which are profitable for reproof of this kind; and which reproof ſometimes is to be given with ſharpneſs, as the caſe requires, that men may be ſound in the faith. Rebuke; or chide for ſin; ſome privately, others more publickly, according to the nature and circumſtances of the offence; ſome more gently, others more roughly, as is needful. Exhort; to all the duties of religion reſpecting God and man; to ſhew love, and to do good works; to hold faſt the profeſſion of faith, and walk as becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt; and to perſevere in faith and holineſs: or comfort, as the word may be rendered; for as the miniſters of the Goſpel are in ſome caſes to be Boanergeſſes, ſons of thunder, ſo in other caſes they ſhould be Barnabaſſes, ſons of conſolation; and comfort diſtreſſed minds, by preaching the comfortable doctrines of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs and ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt: with all long-ſuffering; or patience. The ſucceſs of the Goſpel miniſtry ſhould be patiently waited for, as huſbandmen do for the fruits of the earth. Thoſe that give into error, and oppoſe themſelves to the truth, ſhould be inſtructed in meekneſs; and thoſe who are overtaken in a fault ſhould be gently rebuked, and reſtored in ſuch a ſpirit; and every exhortation ſhould be preſſed as perſons are able to bear it: and doctrine; in a way that is inſtructive and teaching, and in agreement with the doctrine of the ſcriptures, which are profitable for that purpoſe.

Ver. 3. For the time will come, &c.] This is a reaſon of the ſolemn charge above given: the time referred to was future, when the Apoſtle wrote, but quickly came on; and the characters of it have appeared more or leſs in all ages ſince; and in none more than in ours: when they will not endure ſound doctrine; the Goſpel which contains the wholeſome words of Chriſt, and is ſound itſelf, having no corruption in it, and ſalutary in its effects to the ſouls of men; and yet ſuch is the depravity of ſome men, both in principles and practice, that they cannot receive it, nor bear to hear it, turn their backs on it, expreſs their indignation at it, and treat it, not only with neglect, but with ridicule and contempt: but after their own luſts ſhall they heap to themſelves teachers; not being content with the miniſtry of one man only, or of a few, tho' of their own ſort; but muſt follow many, and have heaps of them; which ſeems to expreſs not only the number of falſe teachers which they accumulate to themſelves, but the confuſed and indiſcreet choice they make of them: and that after their own luſts; chuſing to hear ſuch as either indulge them in their ſinful luſts and pleaſures; or are agreeable to their private corrupt ſentiments, in oppoſition to the generally received doctrine of faith. It is a bleſſing to have paſtors and teachers after God's heart, and who preach according to the word of God; theſe feed men with knowledge and underſtanding, Jer. iii. 15. but it is a curſe upon a people, when they are left to chuſe teachers after their hearts luſts: having itching ears; always deſirous of new things, as the Athenians of old; or loving to have their ears ſcratched and tickled with ſmooth things, that are pleaſing and agreeable to natural men, and carnal minds; as the purity of human nature, the power of man's free-will, the excellency of his righteouſneſs, and the merit of his works, and the like; ſee Iſ. xxx. 9, 10. Now, this being the caſe, ſhould not diſcourage, but rather animate the miniſters of the Goſpel to preach it; for ſhould they deſiſt, in all likelihood the Goſpel would ſoon be gone.

Ver. 4. And they ſhall turn away their ears from the truth, &c.] The ſolid truths of the Goſpel, not being able to bear the hearing of them: and ſhall be turned unto fables; things idle, trifling, uſeleſs, and unprofitable; and which are no better than old wives fables: ſome reſpect may be had either to Jewiſh fables, or to the fabulous mythologies of the Gentiles, or of the Gnoſtics, and others; but in general, it includes every thing that is vain, empty and ſenſeleſs; and this is to be conſidered as a juſt judgment upon them; that ſince they like not to retain the knowledge of the truth, but turn away their ears from it, God gives them up to a reprobate mind, a mind void of ſenſe and judgment, to attend to things idle and fabulous.

Ver. 5. But watch thou in all things, &c.] Relating to himſelf, his doctrine, and converſation; and to others, to feed the flock of God under his care, to know the ſtate of them, and care for them; to give the time of night, and notice of approaching danger, and ſee the laws of Chriſt put in execution; either in alluſion to ſhepherds, who watch over their flocks night and day; or to watchmen that are upon the walls of cities, or go about them; or to the prieſts and Levites in the temple: endure afflictions; the Alexandrian copy adds, as a good ſoldier of Jeſus Chriſt, as in ch. ii. 3. meaning reproaches and perſecutions for the ſake of the Goſpel, from without, and all trials and exerciſes from within, through the infirmities and ill conduct of the ſaints themſelves; all which are to be endured patiently, chearfully, and courageouſly; ſo as not to be moved by them, to deſiſt from the work of the miniſtry: do the work of an evangeliſt; which may deſign either an officer, then in the church, diſtinct from apoſtles and prophets on the one hand, and paſtors and teachers on the other; and was below the former, and above the latter; and was aiding and aſſiſting to the Apoſtles, and ſuch an one Timothy may be thought to be: or it may intend a preacher of the Goſpel in common; and to do the work of ſuch an one is not to read lectures of morality, or to preach up juſtification and ſalvation by the works of the law; or to mix law and Goſpel together, and confound them both; but to preach peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation alone by Jeſus Chriſt, and through the free grace of God: make full proof of thy miniſtry; the work of the miniſtry, which lies in preaching the Goſpel, and adminiſtring ordinances, and doing all the duties belonging to it, which is to fulfil it, or diſcharge it; and which gives full proof of a man's being a true and faithful miniſter of the word; particularly when he diligently and conſtantly attends to his work; ſeeks not his own things, but the things of Chriſt; chearfully and patiently ſuffers for Chriſt and his Goſpel, and lives an agreeable life and converſation.

Ver. 6. For I am now ready to be offered, &c.] Or poured out, as a libation, or a drink-offering; or as the blood was poured out at the bottom of the altar; which is expreſſive of martyrdom, and ſhews that the Apoſtle knew what death he ſhould die; for which he was habitually ready: and this ſacrifice of himſelf was not to atone for ſin, his own, or others; Chriſt's death was the only ſacrifice for ſin, and that is a compleat one, and needs no other to be added to it; but this was in the cauſe of Chriſt, and for the confirmation of the Goſpel, and the faith of the ſaints in it: ſo covenants have been confirmed by libations or drink-offerings of wine; and this was an offering acceptable unto God, in whoſe ſight the death of his ſaints is precious; as the wine in the drink-offering is ſaid to chear God, that is, to be acceptable to him: and the time of my departure is at hand; death is not an annihilation of man, neither of his body, nor of his ſoul; the one at death returns to duſt, and the other to God that gave it: death is a diſſolution of ſoul and body, or a diſſolving of the union that is between them, and a reſolution of the body into its firſt principles; hence the Syriac verſion renders it, the time in which I ſhall be diſſolved; and the Vulgate Latin verſion, the time of my reſolution. Death analyſes men, and reduces them to their firſt original earth; it is a removing of perſons from one place and ſtate to another; from an houſe of clay, from this earthly houſe of our tabernacle, to an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, to everlaſting habitations, and manſions in Chriſt's father's houſe. This phraſe, a departure, is an eaſy repreſentation of death, and ſuppoſes an exiſtence after it; ſee the note on Phil. i. 23. Now there is a time for this; ſaints are not to continue here always; this is a ſtate of pilgrimage, and a time of ſojourning, and which is fixed and ſettled: the time for going out of this world, as well as for coming into it, is determined by God, beyond which there is no paſſing; the number of mens days, months, and years, is with him; and the Apoſtle knew partly from his age, and partly from his ſituation, being in bonds at Rome, and it may be by divine revelation, that his time of removing out of this world was very near; and which he mentions, to ſtir up Timothy to diligence, ſince he would not have him long with him, to give him counſel and advice, to admoniſh him, or ſet him an example.

Ver. 7. I have fought a good fight, &c.] The fight of faith; the ſame as in 1 Tim. vi. 12. ſee the note there: I have finiſhed my courſe, or race; the race of life ſet before him, his courſe of years; his days were extinct, the grave was ready for him, and he for that; his laſt ſands were dropping, and he was juſt going the way of all fleſh; or elſe he means, the courſe of his miniſtry, which he deſired to finiſh with joy, and was now finiſhing; ſee Acts xiii. 25. and xx. 24. he was now got to the end of his line, to Rome, where he was to be a martyr for Chriſt, Acts xxiii. 11. ſo that he now concluded his work was done, and his warfare accompliſhed: I have kept the faith; by which he means, not ſo much the grace of faith, that was kept by Chriſt, the object, author and finiſher of it, and through his effectual grace and powerful interceſſion; but rather the profeſſion of faith, which he had held faſt without wavering; and chiefly the doctrine of faith, which was committed to his truſt, which he had kept pure and uncorrupt againſt all oppoſition; unleſs his faithfulneſs and integrity in the miniſterial work ſhould be thought rather to be intended; and which ſenſe is favoured by the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, which render it, I have kept my faith; or have been faithful to my truſt, as a good ſteward of the myſteries of God; not concealing and keeping back any thing that was profitable, but declaring the whole counſel of God; and now what remained for him was the crown of righteouſneſs; and this he ſays for the comfort and encouragement and imitation of Timothy and others. The phraſe ſeems to be Jewiſh; it is ſaid[y] by the Jews, that he that does not keep the feaſt of unleavened bread, is as he who does not נטיר מהימנותא keep the faith of the holy bleſſed God.

Ver. 8. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs, &c.] The happineſs of the future ſtate of the ſaints is ſignified by a crown, on account of the glory and excellency of it; and in perfect agreement with the character of the ſaints, as kings; and who are raiſed to ſit among princes, and to inherit the throne of glory, and have a kingdom prepared for them: and this is called a crown of righteouſneſs, becauſe it comes through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; it is that which gives a right unto it, and without which it cannot be enjoyed; and becauſe it is obtained and poſſeſſed in a righteous way, and not by force and uſurpation, as crowns ſometimes are: it is God the father's free gift unto his children, what they are born heirs unto, and have a meetneſs for, through regenerating and ſanctifying grace, and have a legal title to it through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt. Moreover, this may be expreſſive of the perfect holineſs and righteouſneſs of the heavenly ſtate, and of the ſaints in it, wherein will dwell none but righteous perſons, and who will be intirely without ſin. And this happineſs ſignified by a crown, is laid up; in the covenant of grace for the ſaints, which is ordered in all things and ſure; and in Chriſt, in whoſe hands their perſons are, and their grace is, and with him alſo is their life of glory hid and ſecured: and this alſo is laid up in heaven, and reſerved there, and that for me, and thee; for particular perſons, for all the veſſels of mercy, for all that are choſen in Chriſt Jeſus, and redeemed by his blood, and ſanctified by his ſpirit: which the Lord, the righteous judge ſhall give me at that day. By the Lord, is meant the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; as is evident from his character, as a a judge, for the father judgeth no man; and from mention being made hereafter of his appearing: Chriſt is ordained judge of quick and dead, for which he is abundantly qualified, and a righteous one he will be; he is righteous as God, and as man, and as mediator in the diſcharge of all his offices, and ſo he will be as a judge, in the adminiſtration of that office; righteouſneſs will be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulneſs the girdle of his reins; and from Chriſt, under this character, the Apoſtle expected to receive all his future glory and happineſs; and that both in a way of gift, as a free grace gift from him, and through him, and in a way of righteouſneſs; and this ſeems to be a Jewiſh way of ſpeaking. One of the ſeptuagint interpreters whom Ptolomy king of Egypt ſent for from Judea, to tranſlate the law of Moſes into Greek, in anſwer to a queſtion put to him by the king, uſes this phraſe of ϛεφανος δικαιοσυνης, a crown of righteouſneſs; and which he repreſents as the gift of God[z]: at that day; either at the day of death, the time of his diſſolution, which was at hand; or at the day of the reſurrection, and of the laſt judgment, when Chriſt will appear under the above character: and the Apoſtle further obſerves, to the comfort and encouragement of Timothy, and others, that this happineſs was not intended and prepared for himſelf only, but for others: and not to me only, but unto all them alſo that love his appearing; that is, his appearing at his ſecond coming; which is to be loved, and ſo looked for by the ſaints, not only becauſe it will be glorious in itſelf, in its attendants and conſequences, but will be of great advantage to the ſaints; Chriſt will appear unto ſalvation to them, and ſo to their joy; they will appear with him in glory, and be like him, and enjoy the everlaſting viſion of him. The devils believe this appearance of Chriſt, but tremble at it; wicked men will behold him, and fear; ſaints know, believe, and love both Chriſt and his appearing; and ſuch will wear that crown: the Ethiopic verſion renders it, who love him at his coming; all that love him now, will love him then.

Ver. 9. Do thy diligence to come ſhortly unto me.] From Epheſus, where Timothy was, to Rome, where the Apoſtle was; and this requeſt did not ariſe purely from a deſire of ſeeing Timothy, as in ch. i. 4. but rather becauſe he had ſome things to ſay to him, relating to the care of the churches, and the good of the intereſt of Chriſt, which he choſe not to write with ink and paper; and he deſires the rather that he would uſe diligence, and haſten his coming to him; partly becauſe winter was coming on, when travelling would not be ſo ſafe and comfortable, ver. 21. and partly becauſe the time of his death was at hand, ver. 7. and alſo becauſe he was almoſt alone.

Ver. 10. For Demas hath forſaken me, &c.] Of this perſon, ſee the note on Col. iv. 14. It does not appear by what is ſaid in this clauſe, and in the following, that he entirely apoſtatized; he might forſake the Apoſtle, and yet not forſake Chriſt and his intereſt, or make ſhipwreck of faith and a good conſcience: his faith might be right, tho' low, and his love ſincere, tho' not fervent; and through a fear of perſecution, and loſs of life, he might be tempted to leave the Apoſtle, and withdraw from Rome, for his own ſafety; which tho' it was far from being commendable in him, yet may be accounted for in this ſtate of frailty and imperfection, conſiſtent with the grace of God; and it ſhould ſeem that he afterwards was delivered from this temptation, and returned to the Apoſtle, Col. iv. 14. Philem. 24. for when thoſe epiſtles were written, both Timothy and Mark, who are here wrote for, ver. 9, 11. were with the Apoſtle, Col. i. 1. and Philem. i. and eſpecially he ought to be thought very well of after all this, if Demas is only a contraction of Demetrius, and he is the ſame who is ſo much commended many years after this, in 3 John v. 12. having loved this preſent world; not the ſins and corruptions of the world, the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life; ſuch a love is inconſiſtent with the love of the father and the grace of God; nor an immoderate love of worldly ſubſtance, or of money, which is the root of all evil; but a love of life, or of a longer life in this preſent world; he was deſirous of living longer in this world, and choſe not to hazard his life by ſtaying with the Apoſtle, a priſoner at Rome; and therefore left him, and provided for his own ſafety and ſecurity: and is departed unto Theſſalonica; which perhaps was his native country; and however he was at a ſufficient diſtance from Rome, where he might judge himſelf ſafe; and if he was a worldly and earthly-minded man, this was a fit place for him, being a place of trade and buſineſs: and this doubtleſs gave riſe to a tradition, that he afterwards became a prieſt of the idol gods among the Theſſalonians. Epiphanius[a] places him among the hereticks Ebion and Cerinthus, as if he was one of them. Creſcens to Galatia; he might not depart on the ſame account as Demas, but might be ſent by the Apoſtle to Galatia, to viſit the churches there, to ſet things in order, and eſtabliſh them in the faith, and bring an account of their ſtate. Epiphanius[b], inſtead of Galatia, reads Gallia, or France; and ſo does Euſebius[c] and the Ethiopic verſion; and Jerom aſſerts[d], that Creſcens preached in France, and was there buried; though others ſay he was biſhop of Chalcedon in Galatia, and put him among the ſeventy diſciples; ſee the note on Luke x. 1. The Syriac verſion calls him Criſpus, and the Arabic verſion Priſcus. Titus to Dalmatia; who Titus was is well known; the place he went to, Dalmatia, is a country in Europe, a part of Illyricum, where the Apoſtle had preached, Rom. xv. 19. ſee the note there. Pliny ſays[e], that part of Pannonia, which lies to the Adriatic ſea, was called Dalmatia; it had its name from Dalmius, a city in it. The Alexandrian copy reads Dermatia. Here the Apoſtle had doubtleſs been uſeful for the converſion of ſouls, and planting of churches, and therefore ſent Titus thither, to aſſiſt them in their ſtate and condition, and bring him an account of them. For in the ſecond and third centuries we read of churches in Dalmatia; and likewiſe in the fourth century; for there were biſhops from Dalmatia in the ſynod at Sardica; and in the fifth century, Glycerius was biſhop of Salo, a city in this country; and in the ſixth century, one Malchus was biſhop of the Dalmatian church[f].

Ver. 11. Only Luke is with me, &c.] The beloved phyſician, who wrote the Goſpel that bears his name, and the Acts of the Apoſtles, and was a conſtant companion of Paul's in his travels and ſufferings: take Mark, and bring him with thee; who might be at Epheſus, or ſomewhere in Timothy's way, as he came to Rome. This ſeems to be the ſame with John Mark of Jeruſalem, the ſon of Mary, the ſiſter of Barnabas, and who was with Paul and Barnabas in their travels, and who parted from them at Pamphylia; on whoſe account, and for that reaſon there was ſo great a difference between Paul and Barnabas, as to ſeparate upon it; but now the Apoſtle had entertained a better opinion of him, and was reconciled unto him, and was very deſirous of his company and aſſiſtance; and which he had, Col. iv. 10. Philem. 24. For he is profitable to me for the miniſtry; that is, of the Goſpel, to aſſiſt in preaching it.

Ver. 12. And Tychicus have I ſent to Epheſus.] To ſupply the place of Timothy, whilſt he came to Rome, and continued there: ſo careful was the Apoſtle of the church there, that they might not be without the miniſtry of the word during his abſence; ſee Eph. vi. 20, 21.

Ver. 13. The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, &c.] About the word here rendered a cloak, interpreters are not agreed: ſome take it for a garment, and about this they differ; ſome would have it to be a dignified robe, ſuch as the Roman conſuls and ſenators of Rome wore; which is not likely, this being not ſuitable to the Apoſtle's character, ſtate, and circumſtances. Others take it to be a coarſer and meaner garment, wore in cold and rainy weather, to preſerve from the inclemencies of it; and winter now coming on, ver. 21. the Apoſtle ſends for it; which he perhaps had left at Troas in the ſummer ſeaſon, as he came: but others take it to be a kind of deſk or ſcrutore, to put papers in, or a cheſt for books, a book-preſs; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it; and which agrees with what follows. Jerom underſtands it of a book itſelf, of the Hebrew volume of the Pentateuch[g]. Troas, where this cloak, or book-preſs, or book was, was a city in Aſia Minor, that ſtood upon, or near the ſame place where old Troy ſtood, and from whence it ſeems to have had its name, and lay in Timothy's way from Epheſus to Rome; ſee the note on Acts xvi. 8. and xx. 7. and as for Carpus, he was Paul's hoſt when he was at Troas. Some make him to be firſt biſhop of Laodicea, and then of Crete; he is reckoned among the ſeventy diſciples, and is ſaid to be biſhop of Berytus in Thrace; ſee the note on Luke x. 1. When thou comeſt, bring with thee; he would have him call for it at Troas as he came by, and bring it with him: and the books; that were in it, or were there, beſides the Hebrew Pentateuch: the Apoſtle was a great reader of books, of various ſorts, both Gentile and Jewiſh, as appears by his citations out of the Heathen poets, and his acquaintance with Jewiſh records, Acts xvii. 28. 1 Cor. xv. 33. Tit. i. 12. 2 Tim. iii. 8. And tho' he was now grown old, and near his exit, yet was mindful and careful of his books, and deſirous of having them to read; and herein ſet an example to Timothy and others, and enforced the exhortation he gave him, 1 Tim. iv. 13. But eſpecially the parchments; which might contain his own writings he had a mind to reviſe before his death, and commit into the hands of proper perſons; or ſome obſervations which he had made in his travels, concerning perſons and things; tho' it is moſt likely that theſe were the books of the Old Teſtament, which were written on parchments, and rolled up together; and hence they are called the volume of the book; and theſe the Apoſtle had a ſpecial regard for, that whatever was neglected, he deſired that theſe might not, but be carefully brought unto him.

Ver. 14. Alexander the copperſmith did me much evil, &c.] This ſeems to be the ſame perſon that was at Epheſus in the tumult, when the Apoſtle was there, Acts xx. 33, 34. and whom he afterwards delivered to ſatan, along with Hymenæus, for blaſphemy, 1 Tim. i. 20. It is very likely he had lately been at Rome, tho' now returned to Epheſus, and had done great injury to the Apoſtle's character, and had reproached and reviled him as a man of bad principles and practices; his buſineſs is mentioned, to diſtinguiſh him from any other of that name, and to ſhew the inſolence of the man, that tho' he was an illiterate perſon, and in ſuch a mean ſtation of life, yet took upon him to reſiſt the Apoſtle and his doctrine. The Lord reward him according to his works; which may be conſidered either as an imprecation upon him, as knowing him to be a wicked blaſphemer, and a reprobate perſon; and which aroſe, not from private reſentment, and on account of the private injury he had done to him; but from a pure zeal for the glory of God, and the honour of his name, without mingling his own ſpirit and paſſions with it: or as a prophecy, or declaration of what would be; and ſo the Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read, the Lord will render to him, &c.

Ver. 15. Of whom be thou ware alſo, &c.] For he was now at Epheſus; and ſince he was ſuch a malicious, ill-natured, and troubleſome perſon, as well as a blaſphemer, an heretick, and had been delivered up to ſatan, it was very adviſeable to ſhun his company, and have no converſation with him, and be upon the guard againſt him, that he might have no opportunity of doing hurt to him, or to the church at Epheſus: for he hath greatly withſtood our words; or doctrines; the truths of the Goſpel preached by Paul and Timothy, which he oppoſed himſelf to, and reſiſted with all his might, and endeavoured to confute and overthrow; and wherein he was deficient in argument, he made up with railing and blaſphemy; and this was the true reaſon of the Apoſtle's imprecations on him, and why he would have Timothy beware of him, and avoid him, and not the perſonal injury he had done him.

Ver. 16. At my firſt anſwer no man ſtood with me, &c.] Meaning, that when he made his firſt defence againſt the charges laid unto him in one of the courts of judicature in Rome, no man appeared in his cauſe, to ſpeak to his character, to be a witneſs for him, or plead his cauſe: but all men forſook me; all his friends, all that came with him from Judea, or from Aſia; ſee chap. i. 15. being timorous of coming into danger, and of the loſs of their lives; as the diſciples of Chriſt were, when he was apprehended, who all at that time forſook him and fled: I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge; that this ſin may not be imputed to them, or they be puniſhed for it, but that it might be pardoned; ſo differently does he expreſs himſelf on the account of theſe, than on the account of the copperſmith; he ſinning thro' malice, wilfully and obſtinately, theſe thro' ſurprize, temptation, and weakneſs.

Ver. 17. Notwithſtanding the Lord ſtood with me, &c.] Either perſonally appearing to him, as in Acts xxiii. 11. or by the miniſtry of an angel, Acts xxvii. 23, 24. or elſe by granting him his gracious preſence, which was what Chriſt had not, when he was forſaken by his diſciples: the preſence of God or Chriſt is more than all friends whatever, and is often enjoyed by the believer, when they drop him; and is a bulwark againſt all enemies and fears of them; if God is with him, and on his ſide, tho' friends fail, and enemies rage, he has nothing to fear: and ſtrengthened me; inwardly with ſtrength in his ſoul, with might in his inward man, unto all long-ſuffering with joyfulneſs: he was weak in himſelf, and could do nothing without Chriſt; Chriſt was his ſtrength, in him it lay, and to him he looked for it; of which he often had experience, and now afreſh: he ſtrengthened him to plead his own cauſe, to make his defence without fear; he gave him preſence of mind, boldneſs, courage, and intrepidity, freedom of thought and expreſſion; and put it into his heart what he ſhould ſay, and gave him a mouth and wiſdom, which his adverſaries could not reſiſt. All which he takes notice of with thankfulneſs, admiring the divine goodneſs to him, and taking nothing to himſelf: and the end of this was, that by me the preaching might be fully known; that is, that the doctrine of the Goſpel, preached by him, might be made fully known by him; as to the author and original of it, to be of God, and not of men; and as to the matter of it, to be ſpiritual, and not concerning the things of the world; and as to the effects and conſequences of it, to have no tendency to raiſe ſedition and diſturbances in commonwealths, but, on the contrary, promote peace and love: and that all the Gentiles might hear; in Cæſar's palace, or in the courts of judicature at Rome, and all over Rome, and from thence in other parts of the empire, what a Goſpel it was that was preached by the Apoſtle; and if not by his perſonal miniſtry, at leaſt by his Epiſtles he afterwards wrote in priſon: however, the effect of his defence, the Lord being with him, and ſtrengthening him, was his deliverance: and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion; from death he was threatened with, which, like a lion, gaped upon him to devour him; or from ſatan the roaring lion, who deſired to have had him, and ſought to have intimidated him, and brought him to have denied his Lord, to have deſerted his cauſe, and blaſphemed his name; or elſe from Nero the Roman emperor, ſo called from his power and fierceneſs. So Tiberius is called by Marſyas, Agrippa's freeman, when he brought the news of his death to his maſter [g]; and Ahaſuerus by Eſther [h]; and Nero himſelf is called a civil beaſt by Apollonius Tyanæus [i]; though ſome think that not Nero, but Helius, whom he had appointed governour in his room, he being at this time in Greece, is here meant, before whom Paul was tried, and out of whoſe hands he was delivered.

Ver. 18. And the Lord ſhall deliver me from every evil work, &c.] From wicked and unreaſonable men, and all their attempts upon him, and from all afflictions by them; not but that he expected afflictions as long as he was in the world, but he knew that God would ſupport him under them; and in his own time and way deliver out of them; and at laſt entirely by death, when he ſhould be no more attended with them; and from all the temptations of ſatan, and his evil deſigns upon him, and from ſin and iniquity; not that he expected to live free of ſatan's temptations, or without ſin, but he believed that he ſhould be kept from ſinking under the former, and from being under the dominion of the latter; and ſhould not be left to deny his Lord, deſert his cauſe, blaſpheme his name, and apoſtatize from him: and will preſerve me unto his heavenly kingdom; the ultimate glory and happineſs of the ſaints in heaven; ſo called, both becauſe of its nature and place, and to diſtinguiſh it from the church, which is Chriſt's kingdom in this world, tho' it is not of it; and from his perſonal reign with his ſaints on earth, for the ſpace of a thouſand years; whereas this will be for ever: and unto this the Apoſtle believed he ſhould be preſerved, as all the ſaints will be, notwithſtanding the perſecutions of the world, the temptations of ſatan, and their own corruptions; for they are ſecured in an everlaſting covenant, and in the hands of Chriſt; and have not only angels to encamp about them, and ſalvation, as walls and bulwarks to them, but God himſelf is a wall of fire around them, and they are kept by his power unto ſalvation: and beſides, this heavenly kingdom is prepared for them, and given to them; they are choſen to be heirs and poſſeſſors of it; they are called unto it, and Chriſt is gone to receive it in their name, to prepare it for them, and will come again and introduce them into it: to whom be glory for ever and ever, Amen; of the preſent deliverance, and of all others he had, or ſhould receive, as well as of the proviſion of the heavenly kingdom for him, and of his preſervation to it.

Ver. 19. Salute Priſca and Aquila, &c.] The ſame with Priſcilla and Aquila; and ſo the Complutenſian edition, and ſome copies read here; who were of the ſame occupation with the Apoſtle, and with whom he wrought at Corinth, and whom he left at Epheſus; and who ſeem by this ſalutation to have continued there, Acts xviii. 2, 3, 18, 19. And the houſhold of Oneſiphorus; who alſo lived at Epheſus, and whoſe kindneſs to the Apoſtle, when he was at Rome, is before mentioned, ch. i. 16, 17, 18.

Ver. 20. Eraſtus abode at Corinth, &c.] He was chamberlain of that city, Rom. xvi. 23. who being ſent along with Timothy into Macedonia, Acts xix. 22. very probably went from thence into Achaia, to Corinth, his native place, where he ſtaid. But Trophimus have I left at Miletum ſick. Trophimus was an Aſian, of the city of Epheſus, the ſame that is ſpoken of in Acts xx. 4. and xxi. 29. Some ſay he ſuffered martyrdom the ſame day the Apoſtle Paul did; but others ſay, that after that time he was biſhop of Arles in France. This man went with the Apoſtle into Aſia, and from thence to Jeruſalem, and came along with him in his voyage to Rome, but falling ſick by the way, was left at Miletum. Some, inſtead of Miletum, would read Melita, that being the iſland, Paul, and the ſhip's company, eſcaped to, when they were ſhipwracked, Acts xxviii. 1. here it is ſuppoſed Trophimus was left ſick. Others have obſerved, that there was a city called Miletus in the iſland of Crete, under which Paul ſailed, Acts xxvii. 7. ſee Plin. l. 4. c. 12. and is the place intended; but there is no need to ſuppoſe either of theſe; no doubt Miletum, near to Epheſus, is meant; and as the Apoſtle ſailed by the coaſt of Aſia, Acts xxvii. 7. on which ſhore Miletum was, there's no difficulty in ſuppoſing him put aſhore there. The Alexandrian copy reads Melotus.

Ver. 21. Do thy diligence to come before winter, &c.] When travelling would not be ſo ſafe and comfortable: the Apoſtle conſults Timothy's good, as well as his own advantage. Eubulus greeteth thee. Euſebius[k] makes mention of one of this name of Manganæa, who ſuffered martyrdom with one Adrian at Ceſarea; but he can't be thought to be the ſame with this, ſince he ſuffered in the times of Diocleſian. And Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia; the firſt of theſe is ſaid to be a perſon of figure at Rome, and of the ſenatory order, and the father of two pious virgins, Praxis and Pudentiana. He is put among the ſeventy diſciples; ſee the note on Luke x. 1. Mention is made by Pliny the younger[l], of Servilius Pudens, a Roman; and Martial, a poet of thoſe times, ſpeaks[m] of the marriage of Pudens and Claudia, and of Aulus Pudens. Linus is ſaid to be the firſt biſhop of Rome after the martyrdom of Peter and Paul[n]. Tho' ſome will have it, that he was biſhop of Rome in the time of Peter, and that he, and one Cletus, were co-paſtors with Peter; and Platina, who wrote the lives of the popes, firſt makes Peter to conſecrate Clement his ſucceſſor, and to commend the chair, and the church of God, to him, and yet afterwards places Linus, and not Clement, as his immediate ſucceſſor; yea, puts Cletus alſo before Clement; ſo much are the Papiſts at a loſs about, and ſo little account can they give of the boaſted ſucceſſion of their popes from Peter, that they are not agreed about his immediate ſucceſſor. This Linus is ſaid to be born at Volterra in Tuſcany, and to be of the family of the Moors, whoſe father was one Herculaneus, who ſent him at twenty-two years of age to Rome, for the ſake of his ſtudies; at which time, as is pretended, Peter came thither, by whom he was converted, and with whom he continued as a fellow-helper in the Goſpel. He is moreover ſaid to be biſhop of Rome ten years, (Platina ſays eleven) three months, and twelve days, and to have ſuffered martyrdom under Saturninus the conſul, whoſe daughter he had delivered from a diabolical poſſeſſion, and was buried in the Vatican. He is reckoned among the ſeventy diſciples of Chriſt, but very wrongly; ſee the note on Luke x. 1. The name is a Latin one, and is often mentioned by Martial the poet. And Claudia is the name of a woman, very likely of conſiderable note. Some think ſhe was the wife of Pudens, the ſame Martial ſpeaks of, and is ſaid to be a Briton. And all the brethren; that is, of the church of Rome, theſe all ſent greeting to Timothy.

Ver. 22. The Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with thy Spirit, &c.] To counſel and adviſe in every difficult matter; to comfort under every diſtreſs; to ſupply with all grace in every time of need; and to ſtrengthen and fit for every part and branch of duty. Grace be with you, Amen; which is the Apoſtle's common ſalutation in all his Epiſtles. The Syriac verſion renders it, grace be with thee; but the Greek copies read in the plural, with you; which ſhows that the Epiſtle was deſigned for the uſe of the whole church, as well as of Timothy. The ſubſcription follows, which is not in many ancient copies, and is not to be depended on.

The ſecond Epiſtle unto Timotheus; ſo far is right; this is certainly the ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy: ordained the firſt biſhop of the church of the Epheſians; this is omitted in the Syriac verſion; nor is it likely, much leſs certain, that he ever was biſhop of Epheſus, or ordained as a biſhop of any place, but was rather an Evangeliſt, ch. iv. 5. was written from Rome: this is evident from his being a priſoner, when he wrote it, ch. i. 8. And yet in the Alexandrian copy it is ſaid to be written from Laodicea: when Paul was brought before Nero the ſecond time; but whether he was before Nero at all is a queſtion, or only before a Roman governour or judge.

AN
EXPOSITION, &c.

The Epiſtle of PAUL to TITUS.

T*ITUS*, to whom this Epiſtle is inſcribed, was a Greek, an uncircumciſed Gentile, and ſo remained; nor did the Apoſtle circumciſe him, as he did Timothy, when he became his companion; nor did the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem oblige him to be circumciſed, when Paul took him with Barnabas along with him thither, Gal. ii. 1, 3. He was a man of great grace, and large gifts, and very dear to the Apoſtle: he calls him his brother, his partner, and fellow-helper, and ſays he walked in the ſame ſpirit, and in the ſame ſteps, 2 Cor. ii. 13. and viii. 23. and xii. 18. He was employed by the Apoſtle much, and ſent into various parts, on different occaſions: he ſent him to Corinth to finiſh there the collection for the poor ſaints at Jeruſalem, 2 Cor. viii. 6, 16, 17. and to Dalmatia, to know the ſtate of the ſaints there, and to confirm them in the faith, 2 Tim. iv. 10. As he was a Greek, ſo his name is a Greek name, yet uſed among the Romans, as Titus Veſpaſian, and others [a]; and among the Jews, ſo we read of R. Chijah bar טיטס, Titas [b], and of R. Judah ben Titas [c]: when and where this Epiſtle was written, is not very eaſy to determine; ſome think it was written between the firſt and ſecond time the Apoſtle was in bonds at Rome; and certain it is, that he was not in bonds when he wrote it, for he deſires Titus to meet him at Nicopolis, ch. iii. 12. from whence ſome have ſuppoſed it to be written, as the ſubſcription ſhows; but others think it was wrote much earlier, and when the Apoſtle was at Epheſus, towards the cloſe of his three years ſtay there, before he went into Macedonia; but it ſeems rather, that it was written when he returned from Macedonia into Greece: he left Titus at Crete, and ſtaying in Greece three months, he intended to have ſailed to Syria, but was prevented by the Jews lying in wait for him, upon which he ſteered his courſe to Macedonia again; and as he was going there, or when there, writes this letter to Titus, to come to him at Nicopolis. The occaſion of it was partly the judaizing preachers, and falſe teachers, that got into that iſland, and were corrupting the principles of the people; and partly the unbecoming converſation and practices of ſome profeſſors of religion: and whereas the Apoſtle had left Titus in Crete, to finiſh what he had begun, and to put the churches in order, and ſee that they had proper officers, particularly paſtors over them, that they might be taken care of, both with reſpect to doctrine and practice; the deſign of this Epiſtle is to lay before Titus the ſeveral qualifications of a paſtor, which might be an inſtruction to him, and to the churches, in the choice and ordination of them; and to ſtir him up to zeal and diligence in refuting falſe teachers, and dealing with hereticks; and to put him upon exhorting the ſaints to the diſcharge of their duty, in every branch of it, from the beſt principles, by arguments taken from the grace of God, and the doctrines of it. This Epiſtle is ſuppoſed to be written about the year 55.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter contains the inſcription of the Epiſtle, the Apoſtle's ſalutation and preface to it; an account of the qualifications of an elder, or paſtor of a church; a deſcription of falſe teachers; and a charge to Titus to rebuke the Cretians for their errors and immoralities. The inſcription and ſalutation are in ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. in which the writer of the Epiſtle is deſcribed by his name and office; by the faith and hope he had; and by the miniſtration of the Goſpel, committed to him by the order of Chriſt: and the perſon to whom it is written, is mentioned by name; and is deſcribed by the ſpiritual relation he ſtood in to the Apoſtle, and to whom he wiſhes grace, mercy, and peace: the preface to the Epiſtle is in ver. 5. which gives the reaſon of the Apoſtle's leaving Titus in Crete, which was to ſet things in order there, and to ordain elders in all the churches; which leads him to point at the neceſſary qualifications of them for his direction; ſome of which reſpect their moral life and converſation, and others their doctrine, and are in ver. 6, 7, 8, 9. and on occaſion of the latter, and which

which is a reaſon why the elders ſhould be ſound in the faith, and hold it faſt, the Apoſtle takes notice of the falſe teachers that were in Crete, whom he deſcribes by their noiſy, vain, and deceitful talk; by their being pernicious and hurtful to whole families; and by their covetouſneſs and ſenſuality, which is confirmed by a teſtimony out of one of the Cretian poets, ver. 10, 11, 12. wherefore he charges Titus ſharply to rebuke either theſe falſe teachers, or thoſe they had corrupted, that they regard ſound doctrine, and not Jewiſh fables, and the commandments of erroneous men, ver. 13, 14. and inſtances in things forbidden in the law of Moſes as unclean, which were not now to be attended to by thoſe who were pure in heart, and ſound in faith, to whom all things were pure and lawful; and as for others that were impure, whoſe minds and conſciences were defiled, and were unbelieving, nothing was pure to them, ver. 15. and who are further deſcribed as profeſſors in words, of the true knowledge of God, and yet practically were deniers of him; and as abominable in their nature and actions, diſobedient to law and Goſpel, and unfit for any good work whatever, ver. 16.

Ver. 1. Paul a ſervant of God, &c.] So James ſtiles himſelf, Jam. i. 1. and others of the Apoſtles, as Peter and Jude, call themſelves the ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt; and as does the Apoſtle Paul alſo; and both ſeem to be eſteemed by them as high characters and titles of honour, by which they choſe to be deſcribed and known. Paul, before his converſion, was a ſervant of ſin, of divers luſts and pleaſures, and which he owns in this Epiſtle, ch. iii. 3. but being called by grace, he became free from the vaſſalage of ſin, and became a ſervant of God, and of righteouſneſs; and henceforward, from a principle of grace, and being conſtrained by love, ſerved the Lord, and yielded obedience to his commands and ordinances, with all readineſs and chearfulneſs: though this character belongs to him in a higher ſenſe than it does to believers in common; and reſpects his miniſterial ſervice, or his ſerving God in the Goſpel of his Son; in which he, and others, were eminently the ſervants of the moſt high God, whoſe buſineſs greatly lay in ſhewing unto men the way of ſalvation. And an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt; conſtituted, qualified, and ſent by him to preach his Goſpel; and who had his miſſion, commiſſion, and doctrine from him; and was an ambaſſador of his, who perſonated him, and preached him; and had a power of working miracles to confirm his miſſion and miniſtry; and ſo had all the ſigns and proofs of an Apoſtle in him; ſee the note on Rom. i. 1. And according to the faith of God's elect; which may either denote the agreement there was between the miniſtry of the Apoſtle, and the faith of the choice and eminent ſaints of God, under the former diſpenſation; he ſaying no other things than 622. what Moſes, and the prophets did; and laying no other foundation of ſalvation than they did, and which is therefore called the foundation of the Apoſtles and prophets; and directing ſouls to the righteouſneſs, ſacrifice, and blood of Chr[illegible], the Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world, to which the faith of Old Teſtament ſaints looked, and by whoſe grace they were juſtified, pardoned, and ſaved, as we are: or elſe the way and manner in which he became an Apoſtle; it was by, in, or through the faith of God's elect, as the Syriac verſion renders it; he was choſen of God, and brought as ſuch to believe in Chriſt, and then called to be an Apoſtle: or rather this may regard the end of his Apoſtleſhip, and be rendered, unto the faith of God's elect; that is, either he was appointed an Apoſtle, to preach the doctrine of faith, which once he deſtroyed, and which is but one, and is common to all the elect, and what is commonly received, and embraced by the elect of God, in all ages; or to be a means and inſtrument of bringing the elect of God to that faith in Chriſt, which is peculiar to them; ſee Rom. i. 5. and x. 17. There are ſome perſons who are ſtiled the elect of God; theſe are not all men, ſome are veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction, ungodly men fore-ordained to condemnation, and given up to believe a lye, that they might be damned; nor the Jews only, nor all of them, for though, as a nation, they were choſen, above all others, to many outward privileges, yet they were not all choſen to ſpecial grace, and eternal glory; only a remnant, according to the election of grace: but theſe are ſome of both, Jews and Gentiles; ſome of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation; theſe were choſen in Chriſt from eternity, and are the peculiar objects of the affection and care of God, whom he calls, juſtifies, and glorifies: and there is a ſpecial faith that belongs to theſe; which is a ſpiritual looking to Chriſt, a going to him, a laying hold and leaning on him, and truſting in him for ſalvation; and this faith is peculiar to the elect of God; all men have it not, and thoſe that have it, have it thro' the free gift of God; nor is it given to any but to the choſen ones. The reaſon why the Jews did not believe in Chriſt was, becauſe they were not of this number, John x. 26. And this faith is ſecured and made ſure to them by their election; they are choſen to it, and thro' it to ſalvation; they believe in conſequence, and by vertue of it; and certainly obtain it in all ages, as well as righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation; and it is that by which they are known to be the elect of God: and the Apoſtle mentions it in this form, and manner, to diſtinguiſh it from other faith; the faith of devils, and of reprobates, and the hiſtorical and temporal faith of hypocrites, and nominal profeſſors. And the acknowledging of the truth; by which is meant the Goſpel, often called the truth, and the word of truth; in diſtinction from that which was ſhadowy, the ceremonies of the law; and in oppoſition to that which is falſe, it being from the God of truth, concerning Chriſt, who is the truth; and containing nothing but truth, and what is led into by the Spirit of truth. Now to preach, ſpread, and defend this, was the Apoſtle conſtituted in his office as ſuch; and which he did preach with all clearneſs and faithfulneſs, to bring ſouls to a ſpiritual and experimental knowledge of it, and ſo to an acknowledgment, a public owning and profeſſing of it: which is after godlineſs; the Goſpel is a doctrine according to godlineſs; the truths of it have an influence, both on internal and external godlineſs; they direct to, and promote the worſhip and fear of God, and a religious, righteous, ſober, and godly life and converſation.

Ver. 2. In hope of eternal life, &c.] Or for the hope of eternal life; in order to bring ſouls to the hope of it: this is another end of the Goſpel-miniſtry, as to bring God's elect to faith in Chriſt, and to the knowledge and acknowledgment of the truth, as it is in Jeſus, ſo to the hope of eternal glory and happineſs: in a ſtate of nature, they are without the grace of hope, or any true ground and foundation of it; and tho' it is the gift of God's grace, and is implanted in the ſoul by the Spirit of God in regeneration; yet the Goſpel is the means of producing it at firſt, as well as afterwards of encouraging and increaſing it; for in it, Chriſt the foundation of hope, is propoſed, and ſet forth before awakened and convinced ſinners: the object of this hope is eternal life; not any thing now ſeen and enjoyed, for that is not hope; not any thing in this preſent life, but ſomething future; a life of perfect bliſs and happineſs with Chriſt to all eternity; which is a hope laid up in heaven, an inheritance reſerved there; a life which is ſecured in the hands of Chriſt, which he has a power to give, and does give to all his ſheep, and is the gift of God thro' him: and of which it is further ſaid, which God, that cannot lye, promiſed before the world began; eternal life is a promiſe, and ſo of free grace, and not by the works of the law, which is inconſiſtent with a promiſe: it is the promiſe of God, who is faithful to his word, and cannot lye; being the God of truth, that can neither deceive, nor be deceived: this does not contradict his omnipotence, but argues the perfection of his nature, which cannot admit of any thing that implies weakneſs and mutation: and this promiſe was made before the world was, as early as the choice of God's elect in Chriſt, and the gift of grace to them in him; as early as the covenant was made with him, and he was ſet up as the mediator of it; who was preſent to receive this promiſe as their head and repreſentative for them, and to whom it was made as federally conſidered in him, and in whom it was ſecured for them; ſee 2 Tim. i. 1.

Ver. 3. But hath in due times manifeſted his word, &c.] Either Chriſt, his eſſential Word; or the word of truth, the Goſpel of ſalvation; or rather his word of promiſe of eternal life in Chriſt Jeſus: thro' preaching; thro' the miniſtry of the word by the Apoſtles; in which Chriſt is revealed in the glory of his perſon, and the fulneſs of his grace, and in the efficacy of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice; and in which the Goſpel, that was ordained before the world was, and is the fellowſhip of the myſtery which was hid in God, is publiſhed; and in which the promiſe of eternal life, which lay in God's heart, in the covenant of grace, and in the hands of Chriſt, and which with Chriſt, and his Goſpel, were hid under the dark types, ſhadows, and ſacrifices of the law, is clearly made known: in due times; appointed by God, agreed on between the Father and the Son, and ſuitable to the ſtate, caſe, and condition of men; when the law of Moſes, and the light of nature, legal ſacrifices, and moral power, had been ſufficiently tried, the one in the Jewiſh, the other in the Gentile world; and after that the Son of God was become incarnate, which was in the fulneſs of time; and when he had ſuffered for the ungodly, which was in due time; ſee 1 Tim. ii. 6. Which is committed unto me; that is, which preaching or miniſtry of the word, the Goſpel, and the diſpenſation of it, which, as a truſt, was depoſited in the hands of the Apoſtle, and of which he was a faithful ſteward: according to the commandment of God our Saviour; either God the Father, ſo called, ch. iii. 4. compared with ver. 6. and who is the ſaviour of all men in a providential way, and of all the elect in a way of ſpecial grace, by his Son Jeſus Chriſt; and by whom the Apoſtle was appointed and ſeparated to the preaching of the Goſpel; and by whom this was committed to his truſt: or rather the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is truly and properly God, the great God, and our Saviour, ch. ii. 13. and who is the only Saviour of loſt ſinners; and he it was that perſonally appeared to Paul, and made him a miniſter of the word, committed the Goſpel to him, and gave him a commandment, and orders to preach it among the Gentiles, Acts xxvi. 15, 16, 17, 18.

Ver. 4. To Titus mine own ſon after the common faith, &c.] Not in a natural, but in a ſpiritual ſenſe; the Apoſtle being the inſtrument of his converſion, as he was of the converſion of Oneſimus, and of many of the Corinthians, and therefore is ſaid to beget them, Philem. ver. 10. 1 Cor. iv. 15. and ſo was their ſpiritual father, and they his children: Titus was, in this ſenſe, his own ſon, or a true ſon, a legitimate one; a true convert; one really born again; a ſincere believer, an Iſraelite indeed: and this he was after the common faith; either the doctrine of faith, which is but one, and is common to all the ſaints; or the grace of faith, which tho' different in degrees, yet is alike precious faith in all; the ſame for nature, kind, object, operation, and effects: and this phraſe is uſed to ſhow in what ſenſe Titus was ſon to the Apoſtle; as he was a believer, and no otherwiſe. Grace, mercy, and peace, &c. which is the Apoſtle's uſual ſalutation; ſee 1 Tim. i. 2. The word mercy is left out in the Claromontane copy, and in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions.

Ver. 5. For this cauſe left I thee in Crete, &c.] Not in his voyage to Rome, Acts xxvii. 7. but rather when he came from Macedonia into Greece, Acts xx. 2. Crete is an iſland in the Mediterranean ſea, now called Candy; ſee the note on Acts ii. 11. Here Paul preached the Goſpel to the converſion of many; but not having time to finiſh what he begun, left Titus here for that purpoſe: that thou ſhouldſt ſet in order the things that are wanting; that is, form the young converts into Goſpel order, into a regular Goſpel church-ſtate; ſettle a proper diſcipline among them; inſtruct them more largely into the doctrines of the Goſpel; and correct their manners, and direct them in every thing, both with reſpect to faith and practice: and ordain elders in every city; for this iſland, though it was not above fifty miles in breadth, and two hundred and ſeventy in length, yet had an hundred cities in it[d]; and it ſeems as if the Goſpel had been preached in moſt, if not all of them, and churches were formed: however, in as many of them as there were churches, the Apoſtle would have Titus ſee to it, and take care, that they had proper officers fixed in them, particularly elders, paſtors, or overſeers, to preach the Goſpel, and adminiſter the ordinances to them, to watch over them in the Lord, and put the laws of Chriſt's houſe in execution, and keep up a ſtrict diſcipline in it, according to the will of God. What Titus was to do in this affair, was to put the churches upon looking out, and chuſing from among themſelves proper perſons for ſuch ſervice, and to direct, aſſiſt, and preſide at the elections and ordinations of them; for we are not to ſuppoſe, that the ordination of elders was the ſole act of Titus, or alone reſided in him; but in like manner as Paul and Barnabas ordained elders in every church, by the ſuffrages of the people, ſignified by the ſtretching out of their hands; in which they directed, preſided, and alſo aſſiſted in prayer, with faſting, Acts xiv. 23. as I had appointed thee; when he left him at Crete; when he gave him orders and inſtructions, both with reſpect to the perſons, and their qualifications, whom he would have ordained, and with reſpect to the manner in which it ſhould be done: the former of theſe he repeats in the following verſes. From all which it clearly appears, that there were churches in Crete, and paſtors placed over thoſe churches; very probably the Cretes, who were at Jeruſalem on the day of Pentecoſt, Acts ii. 11. and heard Peter's ſermon, and were converted by him, ſome of them returning to their own country, might firſt bring the Goſpel to this iſland, and lay the foundation of a Goſpel church-ſtate here. It ſeems by what is ſaid in this text, that the Apoſtle Paul was in this iſland himſelf, and preached the Goſpel, and after him Titus, whom he left behind; and if any credit is to be given to the ſubſcription of this Epiſtle, he was the firſt biſhop of the church in it: and it is certain, that in the ſecond century there were churches in this iſland, particularly at Gortyna, and other places, to whom Dionyſius [e], biſhop of Corinth, wrote letters, in which he greatly extols Philip their biſhop; and in another letter of his to the Gnoſſians, or to the church at Gnoſſus, another city in Crete, he makes mention of Pinytus as their biſhop, and whom he commends for his orthodox faith, great knowledge of divine things, and care of his flock; and both theſe lived in the times of the emperors Antoninus Verus and Commodus [f]; which churches, no doubt, continued in the third century, ſince in the fourth we read of biſhops ſent from Crete to the ſynod at Sardica: and in the fifth century, a biſhop of Gortyna in Crete is reckoned among the biſhops in the council of Chalcedon: and in the ſixth century Theodorus, biſhop of the ſame place, ſubſcribed in the fifth ſynod at Conſtantinople: and in the ſeventh century, Paul archbiſhop of Crete, Baſil biſhop of Gortyna, with ſeveral other biſhops of churches in the iſland, were preſent at the ſixth ſynod at Conſtantinople: and in the eighth century, as appears from the acts of the Nicene ſynod, Helias was biſhop of Crete, Anaſtaſius biſhop of Gnoſſus, a city in it, and Melito, Leontius and Galatas biſhops of other places in the ſame iſland: and in the ninth century, a biſhop of Gortyna, in defence of the cauſe of Chriſt, became a martyr [g]; ſo far churches, and biſhops, bearing the chriſtian name, are to be traced in this iſland.

[d] Plin. l. 4. c. 12. Mela, l. 2, c. 14. Solin, c. 16.

Ver. 6. If any be blameleſs, &c.] In his outward life and converſation, not chargeable with any notorious crime; ſee the note on 1 Tim. iii. 2. the huſband of one wife; ſee the note as before: having faithful children; legitimate ones, born in lawful wedlock, in the ſame ſenſe as ſuch are called godly and holy, in Mal. ii. 15. 1 Cor. vii. 14. for by faithful children cannot be meant converted ones, or true believers in Chriſt; for it is not in the power of men to make their children ſuch; and their not being ſo, can never be an objection to their being elders, if otherwiſe qualified; at moſt the phraſe can only intend, that they ſhould be brought up in the faith, in the principles, doctrines, and ways of chriſtianity, or in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Not accuſed of riot; or chargeable with ſins of uncleanneſs and intemperance, with rioting and drunkenneſs, chambering and wantonneſs; or with ſuch crimes as Eli's ſons were guilty of, from which they were not reſtrained by their father, and therefore the prieſthood was removed from the family: or unruly; not ſubject, but diſobedient to their parents; ſee the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 4, 5.

Ver. 7. For a biſhop muſt be blameleſs, &c.] This ſhows that a biſhop and an elder is the ſame; and the Syriac verſion here renders it, an elder; the character or qualification neceſſary to him, is the ſame as before, and in like manner to be underſtood; unleſs it ſhould more particularly refer to his faithfulneſs in the diſcharge of his office: ſince it follows, as the ſteward of God; one appointed by God over his houſhold and family, the church, to give to every one their portion of meat in due ſeaſon; one that diſpenſes the manifold grace, or various doctrines of the grace of God, and myſteries of Chriſt; and of ſuch an one it is required, that he be faithful, both to his Lord and maſter, to the truſt committed to him, and to the perſons under his care. Not ſelf-willed; not doing things in the worſhip and houſe of God, in the miniſtry of the word, and adminiſtration of ordinances, according to his own will, but according to the will of God, revealed in his word; otherwiſe what he does will come under the name of will-worſhip: or obſtinate, ſtubborn, and inflexible, conceited of his own ſenſe and judgment, and reſolute to have his own will and way in all things relating to the affairs of God's houſe. The word ſignifies one that is pleaſed with himſelf, has an over-weening opinion of himſelf, is proud and haughty, and deſpiſes others: not ſoon angry; but ſlow to wrath, which ſhows a man to be a man of underſtanding, and fit to teach others, which an angry man is not. It is a ſaying of R. Hillell [h], that "neither one that is "aſhamed (to aſk queſtions) learns well, nor one "that is angry teaches well." And the Jews ſay [i], that "the law is not rightly explained but by one "that is not angry." Hence, that direction [k], "for ever let a man be meek as Hillell, and not "angry as Shammai;" who were two of their principal doctors, the heads of their ſchools, in the times of Chriſt: a man that rules his own ſpirit, and has the command of his temper, and paſſions, is fit to govern in the church of God. Not given to wine, no ſtriker, not given to filthy lucre; ſee the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 3.

Ver. 8. But a lover of hoſpitality, &c.] See the note on 1 Tim. iii. 2. a lover of good men, or of good; the Syriac verſion renders it, of good things; as prayer, preaching, reading, meditation, ſpiritual converſation, and every religious exerciſe: or of good men; for ſuch an elder or biſhop has chiefly to do and converſe with; and if he is not a lover of them, their company will be diſagreeable to him, and he will be of no advantage to them; and if he does not love the ſouls of men, he will not naturally care for their ſtate, or be concerned for their good. Sober; in body, uſing moderation in diet and dreſs; and in mind, being prudent, modeſt, and humble, and thinking ſoberly of himſelf, and others, as he ought. Juſt; righteous in his dealings with men, giving to every one their due; upright and ſincere in his converſation with the ſaints; and faithful in his counſel, admonitions, and reproofs. Holy; devout towards God, conſtant in all religious exerciſes in the cloſet, family, and church; and living ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in the world. Temperate; in eating and drinking; continent from the luſts of the fleſh; and even abſtaining from thoſe things which might be lawfully uſed, though inexpedient, for the ſake of the weak, the peace of the church, and the glory of God.

Ver. 9. Holding faſt the faithful word, &c.] The doctrine of the Goſpel, ſo called becauſe it is true, and to be believed; it is the word of truth, and truth itſelf, and contains nothing but truth; and becauſe it never deceived any that gave credit to its doctrines, and its promiſes; and becauſe it is pure, unmixed, and unadulterated, and is the ſincere milk of the word; and becauſe in it is a glorious diſplay of the faithfulneſs of God, to his perfections, to his holineſs and juſtice, to his law, and to his covenant, word, and oath; and of the faithfulneſs of Chriſt, to him that appointed him, and to his covenant-engagements, and which has appeared in the diſcharge of his ſeveral offices: and this is not only to be held forth by the elder, but to be held faſt, and tenaciouſly abode by; in oppoſition to all wavering about it, departure from it, dropping or concealing any part of it, and puſillanimity concerning it; whatever temptations there may be to the contrary, through popular applauſe on the one hand, and reproaches and perſecutions on the other; and tho' there may be many that may endeavour to wring it out of his hands; ſee 2 Tim. i. 13. as he hath been taught; or according to doctrine; that is, according to the doctrine of the ſcriptures, Chriſt, and his Apoſtles; according to the doctrine that lies in the ſcriptures, that was delivered by Chriſt, and preached by his Apoſtles; whatever is according to that ſhould be held faſt: or which is for doctrine; which tends to teach, inſtruct, and edify the minds of men, that ought to be conſtantly abode by: or as the elder himſelf has been taught, not by men, in a theoretical way, as logic, rhetoric, and other arts and ſciences are taught; for ſuch who are only taught the faithful word in this way, are not likely to hold it faſt, in a time of temptation; but as he has been taught it experimentally by the Spirit of God; and ſuch an one, who has not only the knowledge of it in his head, but the experience of it in his heart, will hold it, and hold it faſt againſt all oppoſition: that he may be able, by ſound doctrine, both to exhort and to convince the gainſayers; ſound doctrine is the faithful word, the wholeſome words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which being retained, qualify an elder to diſcharge the following branches of his office; to exhort the members of churches to their duty, according to their age, ſex, ſtate, and condition, as in ch. ii. to which the doctrines of grace influence and engage; or to comfort them, as the word alſo ſignifies, and the Alexandrian copy reads, to comfort them in all tribulation; and this is one conſiderable part of the elder's work, to comfort ſouls under affliction, whether of body or mind; and ſound doctrines, or the doctrines of the Goſpel, are wonderfully ſuited to ſuch a purpoſe: and the other part of his work is, to convince gainſayers; ſuch who reſiſt the truth, oppoſe themſelves to it, cavil at it, and object againſt it; theſe are to be refuted, and convinced by the ſcriptures, and arguments taken from them, as the Jews were by Apollos, Acts xviii. 28. and nothing is ſo powerful to do it, as ſound doctrine, and holding faſt the faithful word.

Ver. 10. For there are many unruly, &c.] Perſons who are not ſubject to the law of God, or Goſpel of Chriſt; whoſe ſpirits are not ſubject to the prophets; and who will not ſubmit themſelves to them that have the rule over them, nor attend to the admonitions of the church, nor be brought into any regularity and order; and there were many of this ſort, who were not ſent forth by Chriſt, or his churches, but went forth of themſelves, and were corrupters of the word; and therefore Chriſt's miniſters ought to hold faſt the faithful word, and convince ſuch oppoſers by ſound doctrine: and vain talkers; who deliver out in their diſcourſes empty, trifling, ſuperficial, and frivolous things; which have no ſolidity and ſubſtance in them, nor do they tend to edification; only great ſwelling words of vanity, vain jangling and babbling about things to no profit. And deceivers; both of themſelves and others; who lie in wait to deceive, and are deceitful workers; and by their good words, and fair ſpeeches, deceive the hearts of the ſimple; and ſo are dangerous perſons, and of pernicious conſequence: eſpecially they of the circumciſion; or of the Jews, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; that is, not the unbelieving Jews, but ſuch as profeſſed chriſtianity, judaizing chriſtians, who joined Moſes and Chriſt, and blended the law and goſpel together; who taught that circumciſion, and the obſervance of other ceremonies of the law, were neceſſary to juſtification and ſalvation; and hereby did a great deal of miſchief among the churches.

Ver. 11. Whoſe mouths muſt be ſtopped, &c.] Or they be ſilenced, by reaſons and arguments fetched out of the word of God; as were the Sadducees and Phariſees by Chriſt, ſo that they durſt aſk him no more queſtions; and as the Jews at Damaſcus were by Saul, who confounded them, proving in the cleareſt and ſtrongeſt manner, that Jeſus was the very Chriſt: who ſubvert whole houſes; into which they creep; that is, whole families, whoſe principles they corrupt, whoſe faith they overthrow, and carry them away with their own errors; and therefore, ſince this was the caſe not of a ſingle perſon, or of a few, but of whole families, it was high time to attempt to convince them, and ſtop their mouths, that they might proceed no further: teaching things which they ought not; which were not agreeable to the perfections of God, to the ſcriptures of truth, to ſound doctrine, and which were hurtful and pernicious to the ſouls of men: and that only for filthy lucre's ſake; having no regard to the glory of God, the honour and intereſt of Chriſt, or the good of immortal ſouls; only ſeeking to gain popular applauſe and honour from men, and to gather and increaſe wordly ſubſtance. Covetouſneſs was a ſin which the Cretians were remarkably guilty of[l].

Ver. 12. One of themſelves, even a prophet of their own, &c.] This was Epimenides, in whoſe poems ſtand the words here cited; the Apoſtle rightly calls him one of themſelves, ſince he was a Cretian by birth, of the city of Gnoſſus; it is reported of him, that being ſent by his father to his ſheep in the field, he by the way, at noon, turned aſide into a cave, and ſlept fifty-ſeven years[m]: and he is very properly called a prophet of their own; for in Crete Jupiter had his prophets[n], and he might be one of them: the prieſts among the heathens were called prophets; ſo Baal's prieſts are called the prophets of Baal, and the prophets of the groves, 1 Kings xviii. 19. Beſides, Epimenides was thought to be inſpired by the gods: he is is called by Apuleius[o], a famous fortune-teller; and is ſaid by Laertius[p] to be very ſkilful in divination, and to have foretold many things which came to paſs; and by the Grecians was ſuppoſed to be very dear to the gods: ſo Balaam, the ſoothſayer and diviner, is called a prophet, 2 Pet. ii. 16. Add to this, that the paſſage next cited, ſtands in a poem of this writer, intitled, concerning oracles; and it is eaſy to obſerve, that poets in common were uſually called vates, or prophets; ſo that the Apoſtle ſpeaks here with great propriety. Now concerning the inhabitants of Crete, Epimenides, a native of the place, and a perſon of great character and repute among them, ſaid, the Cretians are always liars: lying is a ſin common to human nature, and appears in men as early, or earlier than any other; and all men are guilty of it, at one time or another; but all are not habitually liars, as it ſeems theſe Cretians were: lying was a governing vice among them; they were not only guilty of it in ſome particular inſtances, but always; not only for ſaying that Jupiter's ſepulchre was with them, when it was the ſepulchre of Minos his ſon, which they had fraudulently obliterated; and for which [q] Callimachus charges them with lying, and uſes theſe very words of Epimenides; though he aſſigns a different reaſon from that now given, which is, that Jupiter died not, but always exiſts, and therefore his ſepulchre could not be with them: but this ſingle inſtance was not ſufficient to faſten ſuch a character upon them; it was a ſin they were addicted to: ſome countries are diſtinguiſhed by their vices; ſome for pride; ſome for levity, vanity, and inconſtancy; ſome for boaſting and bragging; ſome for covetouſneſs; ſome for idleneſs; ſome for effeminacy; ſome for hypocriſy and deceit; and others, as the Cretians, it ſeems, for lying; this was their national ſin [r]; and this is ſaid by others, as well as Epimenides. Crete is, by Ovid [s], called, mendax Creta, lying Crete. Hence, with the Grecians, to cretize, is proverbially uſed for to lye; this is a ſin, than which nothing makes a man more like the devil, or more infamous among men, or more abominable to God. The Ethiopic verſion, inſtead of Cretes, or Cretians, reads hypocrites. Other characters of them, from the ſame heathen poet, follow, evil beaſts, ſlow bellies; by evil beaſts are meant beaſts of prey, ſavage and miſchievous ones; ſee Gen. xxxvii. 20, 33. and are ſo called, to diſtinguiſh them from other beaſts, as ſheep, and the like, which are not ſo; and perhaps Crete might abound with ſuch evil beaſts; for the Cretians are ſaid [t] to excel in hunting; and to theſe they themſelves are compared, by one of their own prophets, for their cruelty, and ſavage diſpoſition: ſo cruel perſecutors are compared to beaſts, 1 Cor. xv. 32. and the falſe teachers, the Apoſtle has reſpect to in citing this paſſage, were cruel, if not to the bodies, yet to the ſouls of men, whom they poiſoned and deſtroyed. And the Cretians are called, by the poet, ſlow bellies; partly for their intemperance, their gluttony and drunkenneſs; which ſuited with the falſe teachers, whoſe God was their belly, and which they ſerved, and not the Lord Jeſus; and partly for their ſloth and idleneſs, eating the bread of others without working.

Ver. 13. This witneſs is true, &c.] The Apoſtle confirms what the poet had ſaid; he knew it to be fact from his own experience, and by the obſervation he had made when in the iſland: he does not ſay, that all that Epimenides had ſaid, in the poem referred to, was true; but this character, which he had given of the Cretians, and which he cites, and uſes to a good purpoſe; from whence it may be obſerved, that the writings of the heathen poets may be read with profit, and be uſed to advantage, if carefully and prudently attended to; for what is truth, let it come from whom, or by what means it will, ought to be received. Wherefore rebuke them ſharply; not merely upon the teſtimony of the poet, but upon the confirmation of it by the Apoſtle; and not becauſe of theſe general and national characters, but becauſe theſe things perſonally and particularly belonged to the perſons before deſcribed; whom the Apoſtle would have rebuked, both for their bad principles, teaching things that they ought not; and for their immoralities, their lying and deceit, their intemperance, luxury, and idleneſs, things very unbecoming the chriſtian name; and therefore ſince their offences were of an heinous nature, and they lived in them, and were hardened and obſtinate, and were like to have a bad influence on others, they muſt be rebuked ſharply: rebukes ought to be given according to the nature of offences, and the circumſtances of them, and the offenders; ſome are to be given privately, others publickly; ſome ſhould be reproved with gentleneſs and meekneſs, and be uſed in a tender and compaſſionate way; others more roughly, tho' never in a wrathful and paſſionate manner, yet with ſome degree of ſeverity, at leaſt with great plainneſs and faithfulneſs; laying open the nature of the evils guilty of in all their aggravated circumſtances, without ſparing them in the leaſt; doing, as ſurgeons do by wounds, though they take the knife, and uſe it gently, yet cut deep, to the quick, and go to the bottom of the wound, and lay it open: and ſo the phraſe may be rendered here, rebuke them cuttingly; cut them to the quick, and ſpare them not; deal not with them as Eli with his ſons, 1 Sam. ii. 23. but ſpeak out, and expoſe their crimes, ſeverely reprove them, that others may fear: and that they may be ſound in the faith; that they may be recovered from their errors, to the acknowledgment of the truth; that they may receive the ſound doctrine of faith, the wholeſome words of Chriſt, and ſpeak the things which become them, and uſe ſound ſpeech, which cannot be condemned; and that they may be turned from their evil practices, and appear to be ſound, as in the doctrine, ſo in the grace of faith; or that that by their works may appear to be genuine, true, and unfeigned; and that they may be ſtrong and robuſt, hale and healthful, and not weak and ſickly in the profeſſion of their faith. Rebukes being to perſons infected with bad principles and practices, like phyſic to ſickly conſtitutions, a means of removing the cauſes of diſorder; and in rebukes, admonitions, and cenſures, this always ought to be the end propoſed, the good of the perſons rebuked, admoniſhed, and cenſured.

Ver. 14. Not giving heed to Jewiſh fables, &c.] Concerning God himſelf, the angels, and the creation of man; concerning the giving of the law at mount Sinai; concerning the Meſſiah, and his earthly kingdom, and the feaſt that will be made for the righteous in his days, which will conſiſt of fleſh, fiſh, and fowl, Behemoth, Leviathan, and Zuz, and of wine kept in the grape from the foundation of the world; and concerning the rolling of the dead thro' the caverns of the earth at the reſurrection, with a multitude of other things which were traditionally received. And commandments of men; the traditions of the elders, which the Jews charged the diſciples of Chriſt with the tranſgreſſion of; and he, on the other hand, very juſtly reproached them with breaking the commands of God, by attending to them, Matt. xv. Theſe were the laws and traditions of the fathers, which the Apoſtle Paul was brought up in, and was zealous of, before his converſion, Acts xxii. 3. Gal. i. 14. and which theſe judaizing preachers and profeſſors, he here has reſpect to, were fond of, tho' they were made by men, that turn from the truth; or hate it, as the Syriac verſion renders it; who were enemies unto it, as Hillell and Shammai, the heads of the traditional doctors, and as the Jews, and their Rabbins in general were; and therefore their commandments, of all men, ſhould not be given heed to, by thoſe that bear the chriſtian name.

Ver. 15. Unto the pure all things are pure, &c.] The Apoſtle having made mention of Jewiſh fables, and the traditions of the elders, takes notice of ſome darling notions, that theſe judaizing chriſtians had imbibed or retained; that there were ſome things, which being touched, or handled, or taſted, occaſioned uncleanneſs, and which the Apoſtle denies to them that are pure; by whom are meant, not ſuch who are ſo in their own eyes, who yet may not be cleanſed from their filthineſs; nor do any become pure thro' ceremonial, moral, or evangelical performances, done by them; they are only pure, who are juſtified from all ſin by Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and are clean thro' the word or ſentence of abſolution ſpoken by him; and who are waſhed from their ſins in his blood, and have that ſprinkled upon their conſciences, by which they are purged and cleanſed from all ſin; and who have the clean water of ſanctifying grace ſprinkled upon them, and have clean hearts, and right ſpirits created in them; and whoſe hearts are purified by faith, and have true principles of grace and holineſs formed in them; whoſe graces are pure and genuine, their faith is unfeigned, their love is without diſſimulation, and their hope without hypocriſy; and who, in conſequence of all this, love pureneſs of heart, ſpeak the pure language of Canaan, hold the myſtery of the faith in a pure conſcience, and follow after purity of life and converſation: to theſe all things are pure; whatever they touch, or handle, or eat, nothing can defile them; for it is not what enters into man, that can pollute him; nor is any creature unclean of itſelf, but good, and to be received with thankſgiving; ſee Matt. xv. 11. Rom. xiv. 14. 1 Tim. iv. 3, 4, 5. But unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; all mankind are defiled with ſin; they are altogether become filthy; there is none good, no, not one; and all of them, or that belong to them, are unclean; the members of their body, and the powers and faculties of their ſoul, their mind and conſcience, underſtanding, will, and affections; there is no place clean: they are originally ſo, from their firſt conception and birth; and they are actually defiled by their own evil thoughts, words, and doings: ſome are openly impure, like the dog and the ſwine, who wallow in their impieties, ſuch are the prophane part of the world; others are more ſecretly ſo, as thoſe of a phariſaical complexion, nominal chriſtians, and formal profeſſors; and ſuch the Apoſtle has here in view: and who, notwithſtanding their profeſſion of the chriſtian religion, were unbelieving; they had not true faith in Chriſt, tho' they profeſſed it; they were not indeed unbelieving, as the Jews, who rejected Jeſus as the Meſſiah; yet they did not purely and cordially embrace the doctrines of the Goſpel, nor yield a ſpiritual and chearful ſubjection to the ordinances of it; but were for mixing the ceremonies of the law with the inſtitutions of Chriſt: and to theſe were nothing pure; right and lawful to be done, or not done, even in the caſe ſuppoſed, about eating things forbidden by the ceremonial law; to eat them would be to eat with offence, to their own conſciences, on their principles, and ſo be evil, Rom. xiv. 20. and to abſtain from them on account of laws not in force, would be ſuperſtition and will-worſhip, and ſo criminal, Col. ii. 21, 22, 23. There is nothing that defiled perſons can do, but what is unclean; as are their perſons, ſo are their offerings and works, Hagg. ii. 14. and being deſtitute of true faith, whatever they do is ſin, and not any thing they do can be acceptable and well-pleaſing to God, Rom. xiv. 23. Heb. xi. 6. There were ſome things among the Jews, which were prohibited to them that were defiled, and were free to them that were pure: thus, for inſtance [u], "the fleſh of the moſt "holy things, and the fleſh of thoſe which are "lightly holy, boiled with fleſh of delight, (or "common fleſh) are forbidden, לטמאים, to the defiled, but are free, לטהורים, to the pure." Which one of their commentators [w] thus explains; "the "fleſh of the moſt holy things is forbidden to "ſtrangers, tho' pure; the fleſh of things lightly "holy is free to ſtrangers that are pure, but forbidden to them that are defiled." Whether there may be any alluſion to this, may be conſidered: however, the reaſon the Apoſtle gives why nothing is pure to the impure, is, becauſe of the pollution of the ſuperior powers and faculties of their ſoul, but even their mind and conſcience is defiled; there is nothing in them, or that belongs to them, that is pure; their mind or underſtanding, which conceives and judges of things, and forms notions of them; and the conſcience, which draws concluſions from them, are both defiled with ſin; and what then muſt the thoughts, the words and actions of ſuch perſons be? it matters not what they do, or abſtain from, what they touch, taſte, or handle, or if they do not, they ſin in all they do.

Ver. 16. They profeſs that they know God, &c.] That there is a God; that there is but one, only, true, and living God, the God of Iſrael, as profeſſed by the Jews; and that this God is Father, Son, and Spirit, as believed by the Chriſtians; for the perſons the Apoſtle ſpeaks of were judaizing Chriſtians. Yet this knowledge was but notional; it lay in theory and profeſſion only; they had not a ſpiritual, experimental knowledge of God in Chriſt, which only has eternal life connected with it: but in works they deny him. The Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, in their own works; they were not profeſſed, but practical atheiſts; they owned there was a God, and boaſted of their knowledge of him; but their lives and converſations ſhowed that they had no true knowledge of him, and that the fear of him was not before their eyes; theſe gave the lye to their profeſſion; they practically denied that faith they profeſſed to hold, and the power of godlineſs, of which they had the form. Being abominable; in the ſight of God, however eſteemed by men; and notwithſtanding the vizor and maſk of ſanctity and religion they put on, which could not ſkreen them from the omniſcience of God, who will one day declare he knows them not, and will bid them depart from him, being workers of iniquity. And diſobedient; to God; to his law, and Goſpel; to his miniſters and churches; and even to parents and civil magiſtrates; for of this caſt were the falſe teachers, and their followers, as may be learned from many paſſages. And unto every good work reprobate; or unaccuſtomed, unuſed to them, as the Arabic verſion renders it; or rather without judgment, and underſtanding, concerning them: there was no good in them, nor was it in them to do good; to do good they had no knowledge, nor any inclination; they were unfit for it, and had not a capacity to perform it; they were not good themſelves, and therefore could not do good; the tree muſt firſt be made good, 'ere its fruit will be good; they were without Chriſt, and without his ſpirit, and grace, without which no man can do any thing that is ſpiritually good; they had no true faith, and therefore what they did was ſinful; they had neither right principles, from which, nor right ends to which they acted, and therefore were not qualified for the performance of good works; which require that men ſhould be good men, created in Chriſt Jeſus, be believers in him, and have principles of truth and love, and views to the glory of God.

[w] Bartenora, in ib.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle exhorts ~~Timothy~~ Titus to the diſcharge of his office with reſpect to all ſorts of perſons, of every age, ſex, and condition, he was concerned with, giving reaſons for it, taken from the nature of the Goſpel of Chriſt: he exhorts him in general to inſiſt in his public miniſtry on thoſe things, which were agreeable to ſound doctrine, ver. 1. and particularly what became aged men, and aged women, and young men, and young women, ver. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. in all which, both with reſpect to doctrine and practice, he deſires him to be a pattern to them, that ſo even his very adverſaries may be aſhamed, having nothing evil to ſay of him, ver. 7, 8. And next he charges him to exhort ſervants to obey their maſters, and ſeek to pleaſe them, and not contradict them, and to be faithful to them; that ſo the doctrine of God their ſaviour, profeſſed by them, might be adorned in all things, ver. 9, 10. And the reaſons why the Apoſtle would have duty urged on perſons of every age, ſex, and ſtate, are taken from the nature of the Goſpel being a doctrine of grace and ſalvation, which was preached to all ſorts of perſons, ver. 11. and from the efficacy of it, in teaching men to deny ſin, and live a holy life and converſation, ver. 12. and from an expectation of eternal glory and happineſs at the appearance of Chriſt, which the Goſpel encourages to, ver. 13. and from the end of Chriſt's giving himſelf for his people, and redeeming them from ſin, the ſum and ſubſtance of the Goſpel, which was, that they might be purified, and be zealous of good works, ver. 14. and theſe exhortations were to be delivered by Titus with authority, and in ſuch a manner, that he might not be deſpiſed, ver. 15.

Ver. 1. But ſpeak thou the things which become ſound doctrine.] Concerning ſound doctrine, and the form of it, ſee the note on 2 Tim. i. 13. The things which become it are a good life and converſation, the various duties incumbent on profeſſors of religion, according to their different ſtation, age, and ſex, which are obſerved in ſome following verſes; theſe become the Goſpel of Chriſt, and are ornamental to the doctrine of God our ſaviour; and theſe are to be ſpoken of by the miniſters of Chriſt, in their proper places, and at proper times; who ought not to be dumb, and keep ſilence at any time, but eſpecially when there are many unruly and vain talkers: ſound doctrine ought to be ſpoken out openly and publickly, fully and faithfully, with great plainneſs and evidence, that it may be underſtood and known by all; and with much certainty, without heſitation, as being, without controverſy, undoubted truth; and with all boldneſs, not fearing men, or ſeeking to pleaſe them; and it ſhould be conſtantly and continually ſpoken, in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon; and care ſhould be taken that it be ſpoken conſiſtently, and in an uniform manner, that there be no claſhing and contradiction; and the duties of religion, which become ſound doctrine, ſhould be ſet in their true light, and proper place, as fruits of the grace of God, and to glorify him; theſe ſhould be ſpoken out plainly, frequently inſiſted upon, and warmly and zealouſly urged, as being decent things, for the honour of God, the recommending of religion, the good of mankind, and the ſervice of one another: as particularly,

Ver. 2. That the aged men be ſober, &c.] Or vigilant, and watchful over themſelves, their conduct and converſation, leſt being evil, it ſhould be drawn into an example by younger perſons: this is to be underſtood not of men in office, of preſbyters or elders; for their characters are deſcribed in the preceding chapter; but of men in years, of ancient men, that are profeſſors of religion, and members of churches: who ſhould alſo be grave; in their behaviour, ſpeech, and dreſs; levity of converſation, frothy language, and airy dreſs, are very unbecoming aged perſons: and who ought to be temperate; in eating and drinking, eſpecially the latter, to which old age is moſt addicted; and care ſhould be taken that they be not over-charged with it, and that day overtake them unawares, ſince they are upon the brink and borders of eternity: the word is rendered diſcreet in ver. 5. and ſober in 1 Tim. iii. 2. and both are characters ſuitable to men in years. Sound in faith, in charity, in patience; tho' they may be unhealthful in their bodies, and become decrepit through age, they ſhould be ſound in their minds; in the doctrine of faith, leſt they ſhould lead others into error; and their faith in Chriſt ſhould appear to be right and genuine; and their love to God, to Chriſt, and to his people, ſhould be real and ſincere, and be taken off from the things of the world, of time and ſenſe; an affection for which is an evil that frequently cleaves to old age: and patience ſhould have its perfect work; not only to bear the infirmities of body, brought on by age; but whatſoever ſufferings they may be called unto for the ſake of Chriſt, and his Goſpel, in their laſt days; and to run out the race that is ſet before them.

Ver. 3. And the aged women likewiſe, &c.] Speak alſo to them the things which become their profeſſion, and what is right for them to be, and do: theſe aged women deſign not perſons in office, who were ancient widows, and had ſome care of the poor; or preſbytereſſes, as ſome call them, the wives of preſbyters or elders, as being diſtinct from deaconneſſes; but godly women in years, who are to be inſtructed and exhorted: that they be in behaviour as becometh holineſs; or holy women, ſanctified by the Spirit of God; and who are prieſteſſes unto God, as the word may ſignify, being made ſo by Chriſt unto the Father, as men are made kings and prieſts by him; ſuch ought to be in their clothing, and in their ſpeech, and in the whole of their conduct and converſation, as become the character which they bear, and the profeſſion they make: not falſe accuſers; of the brethren, and ſiſters, which is to act the part of the devil; and indeed, the ſame word is here uſed which is commonly given to him; not raiſing falſe reports of, bringing falſe charges againſt members of churches, and ſo making differences and diviſions among them. Not given to much wine; or ſerving it, or being enſlaved by it, which is very ſcandalous in any, eſpecially in the female ſex, and yet was what was too common in the Eaſtern countries. Teachers of good things; both by example and by inſtruction, but in their own houſes privately; for they were not ſuffered to teach publickly, or to ſpeak in the church; theſe ſhould be teachers, not of old wives fables, of ſuperſtitious cuſtoms, rites, and ceremonies, of the intrigues of love, and of things filthy and obſcene, which are too often handed down to poſterity by ſuch perſons; but of things that are ſolid and ſubſtantial, uſeful and improving, honeſt and honourable, chaſte and pure. Particularly,

Ver. 4. That they may teach the young women to be ſober, &c.] Or to be chaſte, modeſt, and temperate; or to be wiſe and prudent in their conduct to their huſbands, and in the management of family affairs, who have had a large experience of theſe things before them. To love their huſbands; to help and aſſiſt them all they can; to ſeek their honour and intereſt; to endeavour to pleaſe them in all things; to ſecure peace, harmony, and union; to carry it affectionately to them, and ſympathize with them in all afflictions and diſtreſſes; for this is not ſo much ſaid in oppoſition to placing their affections on other men, and to the defilement of the marriage-bed, as to moroſeneſs and ill-nature. To love their children; not with a fond, fooliſh, looſe, and ungoverned affection; but ſo as to ſeek their real good, and not only their temporal, but ſpiritual and eternal welfare; to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; and to uſe and keep proper diſcipline and government over them; for otherwiſe, amidſt all the fondneſs of natural affection, a parent may be ſaid to hate a child, Prov. xiii. 24.

Ver. 5. To be diſcreet, &c.] Or temperate in eating and drinking, ſo the word is rendered in ver. 2. or to be ſober both in body and mind; or to be wiſe and prudent in the whole of their conduct, both at home and abroad: chaſte; in body, in affection, words and actions, having their love pure and ſingle to their own huſbands, keeping their marriage-bed undefiled. Keepers at home; minding their own family affairs, not gadding abroad, and inſpecting into, and buſying themſelves about other peoples matters. This is ſaid in oppoſition to what women are prone unto. It is reckoned among the properties of women, by the Jews, that they are, יוצאניות, gadders abroad[x]: they have ſome rules about womens keeping at home; they ſay[y], “a woman may go to her father's houſe to viſit him, and to the houſe of “mourning, and to the houſe of feaſting, to re“turn a kindneſs to her friends, or to her near re“lations——but it is a reproach to a woman to “go out daily; now ſhe is without, now ſhe is in “the ſtreets; and a huſband ought to reſtrain his “wife from it, and not ſuffer her to go abroad “but about once a month, or twice a month, upon “neceſſity; for there is nothing more beautiful for “a woman, than to abide in the corner of her “houſe; for ſo it is written, Pſ. xlv. 13. the “king's daughter is all glorious within.” And this they ſay[z] is what is meant by the woman's being an help-meet for man, that whilſt he is abroad about his buſineſs, ſhe is, יושבת בבית, ſitting at home, and keeping his houſe; and this they obſerve is the glory and honour of the woman. The paſſage in Iſ. xliv. 13. concerning an image being made after the figure of a man, according to the beauty of a man, that it may remain in the houſe, is by the Targum thus paraphraſed: “according to the likeneſs of a man, “according to the praiſe of a woman, to abide in “the houſe.” Upon which Kimchi has this note, “it is the glory of a woman to continue at home, “and not go abroad.” The tortoiſe, which carries its houſe upon its back, and very rarely ſhows its head, or looks out of it, was, with the ancients, an emblem of a good houſewife. Theſe alſo ſhould be inſtructed to be good or kind to their ſervants, and beneficent to the poor, and to ſtrangers, towards whom, very often, women are apt to be ſtrait-handed, and not ſo generous and liberal as they ſhould be: obedient to their own huſbands; ſee the notes on Eph. v. 22, 24. that the word of God be not blaſphemed; by unbelieving huſbands, who, by the ill conduct of their wives, would be provoked to ſpeak ill of the Goſpel, as if that taught diſaffection and diſobedience to them.

Ver. 6. Young men likewiſe exhort to be ſober-minded.] Temperate, chaſte, modeſt, moderate, wiſe, and prudent in all things: this is ſaid to Titus, as being his province to inſtruct and exhort the young men; as it were proper and convenient for aged women to teach the young women how they ſhould behave and conduct themſelves.

Ver. 7. In all things ſhewing thyſelf a pattern of good works, &c.] It was not enough for Titus, and ſo neither for any other Goſpel-miniſter, to deliver out ſound doctrine, and to exhort perſons of different ages and ſexes to the things which become it, but he ſhould thro' the whole of his converſation be a pattern of every good work unto them; for they that are the ſhepherds of the flock, are not only to feed them with knowledge, and with underſtanding, but to be enſamples to them, as well as they who are under their care ought to walk, as they have them for an example; ſee 1 Tim. iv. 12. In doctrine, ſhewing incorruptneſs, gravity, ſincerity; the Apoſtle here either returns again to his advice about doctrine, that it ſhould be delivered out pure and incorrupt, free from error and hereſy, and every mixture and invention of man's; and with all gravity of ſpeech and countenance, without levity in expreſſion, and airineſs of geſture; and that it be the ſincere milk of the word that is given forth, and that with all integrity and uprightneſs of ſoul: or elſe this refers to the life and converſation of the teacher, as anſwering to his doctrine, and going along with it; and the ſenſe is, in, or with doctrine, along with the doctrine preached, let the converſation be pure and incorrupt, free from the pollutions of the world, and from any governing vice; and let it be attended with gravity in word, geſture, look, and dreſs; and with all ſincerity, faithfulneſs, and ſimplicity, in all our dealings, either with the ſaints, or with the men of the world.

Ver. 8. Sound ſpeech that cannot be condemned, &c.] In the public miniſtry, the wholeſome words of our Lord Jeſus ſhould be uſed, and the doctrines of the Goſpel be expreſſed, as near as can be, in the words which the Holy Ghoſt teacheth, and not in the enticing words of man's wiſdom; ſuch ſpeech or language ſhould be choſen, that is plain, eaſy, and acceptable, and conveys juſt ideas of things; and which being agreeable to the ſcriptures of truth, and the analogy of faith, cannot be juſtly found fault with: or this may refer to private converſation, in which no rotten ſpeech, or corrupt communication ſhould proceed out of the mouth; nothing but what is pure, ſound, graceful, and edifying; no filthineſs, nor fooliſh talking and jeſting, which are not convenient, and are rightly condemned. That he that is of the contrary part may be aſhamed; that is, that he who is on the other ſide of the queſtion, who oppoſes the truths of the Goſpel, and is an adverſary to them; whether he be an heathen philoſopher, or a Jewiſh Rabbi, or a judaizing teacher, or an heretical man, under the chriſtian name, may be put to ſhame and confuſion; partly on account of that incorruptneſs in doctrine and converſation, which he obſerves in the true and faithful miniſters of the word, and is wanting in himſelf; and ſo being convinced, may be converted and brought to repentance, and to the acknowledgment of the truth; and partly on the account of the falſe charges and accuſations brought by him againſt ſuch: having no evil thing to ſay of you; whether with reſpect to doctrine or practice. The Vulgate Latin verſion, and all the Oriental verſions, read us, inſtead of you. The whole body is reproached for the ſake of one or more.

[z] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 5. 4.

Ver. 9. Exhort ſervants to be obedient to their own maſters, &c.] And not others, whether they be believers or unbelievers, gentle or froward, all their lawful commands ought to be obeyed; ſee the note on Eph. vi. 5. and to pleaſe them well in all things; not only to obey and ſerve them, and do what they order, but to ſeek and endeavour to do it in ſuch a way, as may be grateful, acceptable, and well-pleaſing to them, whereby an intereſt in their affection, eſteem, and commendation, may be gained: and this ſhould be done always, and in all things, that are not contrary to a good conſcience, and to the chriſtian religion, and to the laws of God and nature. Or that they may be well pleaſed in all things; that is, be ſatisfied and contented with ſuch things as they have, and in their ſtate and condition as ſervants, and chearfully abide in the calling wherein they are called: not anſwering again; replying to their maſters orders, or complaints, either in a pert, or ſaucy, or grumbling manner; an evil very incident to ſervants, and which greatly provokes.

Ver. 10. Not purloining, &c.] Or ſtealing, embezzling their maſter's ſubſtance, taking away, and making uſe of what is their property, keeping back part of money or goods committed to their truſt: the word is uſed in the caſe of Ananias and Sapphira, Acts v. 2. but ſhewing all good fidelity; approving themſelves to be faithful ſervants in every thing they are intruſted with: that they may adorn the doctrine of God our ſaviour in all things; Chriſt is our alone ſaviour, and he is truly and properly God, and ſo fit and able to be a ſaviour; and the Goſpel is his doctrine, not only what he himſelf preached, when on earth, but it is a doctrine concerning him; concerning his deity, and the dignity of his perſon, and concerning his office as mediator, and the great ſalvation by him; and which are ſo many reaſons why it ſhould be adorned by a ſuitable life and converſation; for this is what becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt, throws a beauty upon it, and is ornamental to it; and in this way the doctrine of Chriſt may be, and ought to be, adorned by ſervants, as well as others: to adorn the Goſpel, is firſt to believe and receive it, then to profeſs it, and hold faſt that profeſſion, and walk worthy of it. Two of Stephens's copies read, in, or among all men.

Ver. 11. For the grace of God that bringeth ſalvation, &c.] By which is meant, not the free love and favour of God, which lies in his own heart; 1 for tho' that is productive of ſalvation, and is the ſource and ſpring of it, and what brings it forth, and is far from encouraging licentiouſneſs, but inſtructs in real piety, and conſtrains to obedience to the will of God; yet this does not appear, nor has it been, nor is it made manifeſt unto all men, but is peculiar to the Lord's own people: nor does 2 it deſign the grace of God wrought in the hearts of believers; for tho' ſalvation is ſtrictly connected with it, and it powerfully influences the lives and converſations of ſuch, who are partakers of it; yet it has not appeared to, nor in all men; all men have not faith, nor hope, nor love, nor any other graces of the Spirit: but by the grace of God is 3 intended the doctrine of grace, the Goſpel of the grace of God; called ſo, becauſe it is a declaration of the grace of God, and of ſalvation by it; and is the means, in the hand of the Spirit, of conveying grace to the heart, and implanting it in it; in which ſenſe the phraſe is uſed in Acts xx. 24. 2 Cor. vi. 1. Heb. xii. 15. and this is called the Goſpel of ſalvation, the word of ſalvation, and ſalvation itſelf, and ſo may be ſaid to bring it; it brings 1 1 and publiſhes the good news of it; it ſhews unto 2 2 men the way of ſalvation; it gives an account of 3 3 the ſaviour himſelf, that he is the great God, and ſo fit to be a ſaviour; that he was appointed by God 4 4 the Father to be his ſalvation; that he was ſent, and 5 5 came to work out ſalvation; and that he is become 6 6 the author of it; and that he is the only ſaviour, 7 7 and an able, willing, and compleat one: it gives an account of the ſalvation itſelf; that it is the ſal- 1 vation of the ſoul; that it is a great one, and in- 2 cludes both grace and glory; that it is everlaſting, 3 and all of free grace; and it points out the perſons who are intereſted in it, and ſhall enjoy it, even all thoſe that are choſen to it, and are redeemed, reconciled, and juſtified by the blood of Chriſt, and are brought to believe in him: and the Goſpel not only brings the news of all this to the ear, in the external miniſtration of it; but it brings it to the heart, and is the power of God unto ſalvation, when it comes, not in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt; or when it comes under the powerful influences and application of the Spirit of God. Some read this clauſe thus, that bringeth ſalvation to all men; to which agrees the Syriac verſion, which renders it, מחיה כל, that quickeneth, or ſaveth all; and ſo the Arabic verſion: but then this cannot be underſtood of every individual perſon; for the Goſpel has not brought ſalvation to every one in any ſenſe, not even in the external miniſtry of it; there have been multitudes who have never ſo much as heard the outward ſound of ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt, and fewer ſtill who have had an application of it to their ſouls by the Spirit of God; to many to whom it has come, it has been an hidden Goſpel, and the ſavour of death unto death: it follows indeed, hath appeared to all men; which ſuppoſes it to have been hid, as it was, in the thoughts, purpoſes, and counſels of God; and in Jeſus Chriſt, in whom all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge are hid; and in the covenant of grace, of which the Goſpel is a tranſcript; and in the types and ſhadows of the ceremonial law: it was in ſome meaſure hid from angels, who deſire to look into it, and from the Old Teſtament ſaints, to whom it was not known as it is now, by the Apoſtles and prophets; and it was entirely hid from the Gentiles, the times of whoſe ignorance God overlooked: and it ſuggeſts, that it now appeared or ſhone out more clearly, and more largely, The Goſpel had been like a candle lighted up in one part of the world, only in Judea, but now it ſhone out like the ſun in its meridian glory, and appeared to all men; not to every individual perſon; it has neither ſhined upon, nor in every one: it did not in the Apoſtle's time, when it appeared the moſt illuſtrious, and ſhone out the moſt extenſively, as well as the moſt clearly; nor has it in ages ſince, nor does it in ours; there are multitudes who know nothing of it, and are neither under its form nor power: but this is to be underſtood of all ſorts of men, of every nation, of every age and ſex, of every ſtate and condition, high and low, rich and poor, bond and free, maſters and ſervants; which ſenſe well agrees with the context, ver. 2, 3, 4, 6, 9, 10. and the words are a reaſon why the Apoſtle would have duty urged on all ſorts of perſons, becauſe the Goſpel was now preached to all; and it had reached the hearts of all ſorts of men; particularly the Gentiles may be intended, from whom the Goſpel was before hid, and who ſat in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death; but now the great light ſhined upon them, and the Goſpel was no more confined to one people only, but was preached to every creature under heaven, or to the whole creation; namely, to the Gentiles, purſuant to the commiſſion in Mark xvi. 15.

Ver. 12. Teaching us, &c.] Not all men, to whom the Goſpel appears in its outward miniſtry; for there are many who externally receive the Goſpel, and profeſs it, who are never influentially taught by it to deny ſin, or love holineſs of life; they profeſs in words to know it, but in works deny it; they have a form of godlineſs, but deny its power: but the perſons effectually taught by the Goſpel are the us, to whom it was come, not in word only, but in power; and ſo taught them, not only doctrinally, but with efficacy, both negative and poſitive holineſs, as follows: that denying ungodlineſs and worldly luſts; all impiety, or ſin more immediately againſt God; or which is a violation of the firſt table of the law, as idolatry, will-worſhip, ſuperſtition, perjury, and the like; and all ſinful luſts, as the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eye, and the pride of life; which fill the world, and are reigning luſts in it, and which are common to the men of the world; and they are under the power of: to deny theſe, is to abhor and deteſt them, and to abſtain from them, and have nothing to do with them: and this leſſon of ſelf-denial, or of the denial of ſinful ſelf, the Goſpel teaches, and urges upon the moſt powerful motives and arguments; and when attended by the Spirit of God, does it effectually: ſo that we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world; not only temperately, but wiſely and prudently, as children of the light, on whom, and into whom the Goſpel has ſhined; and righteouſly among men, giving to every man his due, and dealing with all according to the rules of equity and juſtice; as being made new men, created unto righteouſneſs, and true holineſs; and as being dead to ſin, thro' the death of Chriſt, and ſo living unto righteouſneſs, or in a righteous manner; and as being juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, revealed in the Goſpel: and godly; in a godly manner, according to the word of God, and agreeable to the will of God; and in all godly exerciſes, both public and private, and to the glory of God: and that as long as in this preſent world; which lies in wickedneſs, and in which there are ſo many ſtrong temptations to a contrary way of living. The Goſpel then is no licentious doctrine; it is according to godlineſs, and teaches and promotes it; it is an holy faith, yea, a moſt holy faith; wherefore it is a vile ſlander to charge it with leading to looſeneſs of life and converſation.

Ver. 13. Looking for that bleſſed hope, &c.] Not the grace of hope; tho' that being a good hope through grace, and a hope of bleſſedneſs, may be called a bleſſed hope; yet this the ſaints have already implanted in their hearts in regeneration, and can't be ſaid to look for it: rather Chriſt, the object and ground of hope, who is our hope, and Chriſt in us the hope of glory, who is bleſſed for evermore; and in the enjoyment of whom the happineſs of the ſaints hereafter will greatly conſiſt; and whom they look for, and expect from heaven, and who is expreſly mentioned in the next clauſe: but as this may be ſomething diſtinct from that, it may be beſt, by this bleſſed hope, to underſtand the thing hoped for, eternal glory and happineſs; called elſewhere the hope of righteouſneſs, and the hope laid up in heaven, Gal. v. 5. Col. i. 5. and which will lie in the beatific viſion of God and Chriſt; in a perfect knowledge of them, in communion with them, and conformity to them; and in the ſociety of angels and glorified ſaints; and in a freedom from all evil, outward and inward, and in the poſſeſſion of all good: and to be looking for this, is to be deſiring it with the heart and affections ſet upon it, longing to be in the enjoyment of it, and yet waiting patiently in the exerciſe of faith and hope; for looking includes all the three graces, faith, hope, and love; and particularly the former, which is always attended with the latter; for it is ſuch a looking for this bleſſedneſs, as that a man firmly believes he ſhall partake of it: and there is good reaſon for a regenerate man ſo to look for it; ſince it is his Father's gift of free grace, and is laid up for him; Chriſt is gone to prepare it by his preſence, mediation, and interceſſion; yea, he is gone, as the forerunner, to take poſſeſſion of it in his name: this man is begotten again to a lively hope of it; he is called by the grace of God unto it; he is a child of God, and ſo an heir of it; he has a right unto it, thro' the juſtifying righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and has a meetneſs for it thro' the ſanctifying grace of the Spirit; and who is in him as the earneſt and pledge of it: now ſuch a firm expectation of the heavenly glory does the Goſpel, the doctrine of the grace of God, teach, direct, and encourage to; for theſe words muſt be read in connexion with the preceding, as a further inſtruction of the Goſpel, as well as what follows: and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our ſaviour Jeſus Chriſt; not two divine perſons, only one, are here intended; for the word rendered appearing, is never uſed of God the Father, only of the ſecond perſon; and the prepoſitive article is not ſet before the word Saviour, as it would, if two diſtinct perſons were deſigned; and the copulative and is exegetical, and may be rendered thus, and the glorious appearing of the great God, even our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; who, in the next verſe, is ſaid to give himſelf for the redemption of his people: ſo that here is a very illuſtrious proof of the true and proper deity of Chriſt, who will appear at his ſecond coming, for of that appearance are the words to be underſtood, as the great God, in all the glories and perfections of his divine nature; as well as a ſaviour, which is mentioned to ſhow that he will appear to the ſalvation of his people, which he will then put them in the full poſſeſſion of; and that the brightneſs of his divine majeſty will not make them afraid: and this appearance will be a glorious one; for Chriſt will come in his own glory, in the glory of his deity, particularly his omniſcience and omnipotence will be very conſpicuous; and in his glory as mediator, which will be beheld by all the ſaints; and in his glory as a judge, inveſted with power and authority from his Father, which will be terrible to ſinners; and in the glory of his human nature, with which it is now crowned; and in his Father's glory, in the ſame he had with him before the world was, and which is the ſame with his, and in that which he'll receive from him as man and mediator, and as the judge of the whole earth; and in the glory of his holy angels, being attended with all his mighty ones: to which may be added, that ſaints will be raiſed from the dead, and with the living ones appear with Chriſt in glory, and make up the bride, the lamb's wife, having the glory of God upon her: ſo that this will be a grand appearance indeed. Now this the Goſpel directs, and inſtructs believers to look for, to love, to haſten to, moſt earneſtly deſire, and yet patiently wait for, moſt firmly believing that it will be: and this the ſaints have reaſon to look for, with longing deſire and affection, and with pleaſure, ſince it will not only be glorious in itſelf, but advantageous to them; they'll then be glorified with Chriſt, and be for ever with him.

come

Ver. 14. Who gave himſelf for us, &c.] Not another, or another's, but himſelf; not merely his own things, but his own ſelf; not the world, and the riches of it, not gold and ſilver, and ſuch like corruptible things, as the price of redemption; not the cattle on a thouſand hills for ſacrifice; not men nor angels, but himſelf; all that belong to him, all that is near and dear, his name, fame, credit, and reputation; his time, ſtrength, and ſervice; all the comforts of life, and life itſelf; his whole manhood, ſoul and body, and that as in union with his divine perſon; which he gave into the hands of men, and of juſtice, and to death itſelf, to be a ranſom-price of his people, and for a propitiation and ſacrifice for their ſins, to be paid and offered in their room and ſtead: not for all mankind, but for many; for us, for all the elect of God, for the church; and who are repreſented when he gave himſelf, or died for them, as ungodly, ſinners, and enemies: this was a free and voluntary gift, and is an unſpeakable one; who can ſay all that is contained in this word himſelf? it is an inſtance of the greateſt love, of love that paſſeth knowledge; God, becauſe he could ſwear by no greater, ſwore by himſelf; and Chriſt, becauſe he could give no greater gift, nor any greater inſtance of his love, gave himſelf, for the following ends and purpoſes: that he might redeem us from all iniquity: ſin brings into bondage and ſlavery, redemption is a deliverance from it; ſin binds guilt upon the ſinner, and lays him under obligation to puniſhment, and renders him liable to the curſe and condemnation of the law; Chriſt was made ſin, and a curſe for his people, that he might redeem them from both, and deliver them from the puniſhment due to ſin; which he has done by bearing it in his own body on the tree, whereby he has redeemed them from all iniquity, that ſo it ſhall not be their ruin, or they come into condemnation on account of it; even from original ſin, and from all actual tranſgreſſions; from all which his blood cleanſes, and his righteouſneſs juſtifies, and which God, for his ſake, freely and fully forgives. Chriſt was called to this work by his Father, to which he agreed; and the plan of redemption being drawn in the everlaſting council, and the whole adjuſted and fixed in the covenant of peace; promiſes and propheſies were given out of it, and in the fulneſs of time Chriſt was ſent, and came to effect it; and he has obtained eternal redemption for us, thro' the price of his own blood, which could have never been wrought out by any creature; and wherein all the divine perfections are glorified; and is a plenteous and compleat one; it includes in it, or connects with it, the bleſſings of juſtification, peace, pardon, adoption, and eternal life. It follows as another end of Chriſt's giving himſelf, or what is a branch of redemption, or conſequent upon it, and purify unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works; all mankind are filthy and unclean by nature, in all the powers and faculties of their ſouls; nor can they cleanſe themſelves from their impurity of fleſh and ſpirit, by any thing that they can do; Chriſt has a peculiar people among theſe, a church whom he loves, and for whom he has given himſelf, that he might ſanctify and cleanſe them from their ſins; which he has done by ſhedding his blood for them, and waſhing them in it, which cleanſes from all ſin: and he has purified them unto himſelf, for his own uſe and ſervice, for his pleaſure and delight, and to his glory; that they might be a proper habitation for him now; and that they might be made ready for him, to have the marriage between him and them conſummated; and that they might be preſented to himſelf a glorious church, without ſpot or wrinkle, and be with him, both in the new Jeruſalem ſtate, into which nothing that defiles, or is defiled, enters, and in heaven, to all eternity. Now theſe people, for whom Chriſt has given himſelf, and whom he has redeemed and purifies, are a peculiar people; for whom Chriſt has a peculiar love, in whom he takes a peculiar delight, and to whom he grants peculiar nearneſs to himſelf, and beſtows peculiar bleſſings on them, and makes peculiar proviſions for them, both for time and eternity; theſe are Chriſt's own, his poſſeſſion, his ſubſtance, what he has a ſpecial right to by his Father's gift, his own purchaſe, and the conqueſt of his grace; and they are a diſtinct and ſeparate people from all others, in election, redemption, effectual vocation, and in Chriſt's interceſſion, and will be in the reſurrection-morn, at the day of judgment, and to all eternity; and they are, as the word alſo ſignifies, an excellent and valuable people; they are Chriſt's portion and inheritance; they are his peculiar treaſure, his jewels, whom, as ſuch, he values and takes care of. The Syriac verſion renders it, a new people. And they who are redeemed and purified by Chriſt, through the power of his grace upon them, become a people zealous of good works; not in order to their juſtification and ſalvation, but in obedience to the will of God, and to teſtify their ſubjection and gratitude to him, and for his honour and glory, and for the credit of religion, and the good of men. Theſe not only perform them, but perform them from principles of truth and love, and with a zeal for the glory of God, and the honour of his Goſpel; and with an holy emulation of one another, ſtriving to go before, and excel each other in the performance of them.

Ver. 15. Theſe things ſpeak and exhort, &c.] Sound doctrine, the doctrine of grace, the doctrines of ſalvation and redemption by Chriſt, of peace, pardon, and cleanſing by his blood; theſe ſpeak out clearly, plainly, publickly, boldly, and faithfully: and the things which become ſound doctrine; the duties of religion ſuitable to every age and ſex, a denying of ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, a ſober, righteous, and godly life and converſation, exhort unto; and encourage the ſaints to be zealous of good works, and comfort them with the expectation of the bleſſed hope, and glorious appearance of Chriſt. And rebuke with all authority; ſuch as imbibe errors and hereſies, or indulge to vice and wickedneſs, with the authority both of Chriſt and his church, in the name of the one, and by the order and vote of the other, that the reproof may come with the greater weight; and in a grave and ſolemn manner, ſuitable to the dignity of the miniſterial office and character, and with that ſharpneſs and ſeverity the offence requires. Let no man deſpiſe thee; as negligent in the diſcharge of his office, or as doing it in a puſillanimous manner, or as behaving in his life and converſation unworthy of the character he bore, and ſo is a direction to himſelf; or elſe it may be conſidered as deſigned for the churches in Crete, and the profeſſors of religion, and to be an inſtruction to them, to value Titus, and treat him with reſpect, and not with contempt; which ſhews, that this Epiſtle was not written to Titus only, or for his own uſe, but for the ſervice of others. The Ethiopic verſion reads, let no man deceive thee.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle exhorts Titus to preſs various duties incumbent on Chriſtians, with arguments engaging to them; gives him ſome directions about dealing with hereticks, and ſome inſtructions about private matters, and particular perſons, and cloſes it with ſalutations. And firſt, he charges him to put his hearers in mind of their duty, to be ſubject to civil magiſtrates, and readily perform whatever is right and proper for them to do; and to abſtain from blaſpheming and brawling, and to exerciſe gentleneſs and meekneſs to all men, ver. 1, 2. The arguments inducing thereunto, are taken partly from their former ſtate and condition, whilſt unregenerate, when they were as ignorant, and as wicked as other men, they are exhorted to behave well to; and partly from the conſideration of the ſalvation they were now partakers of, ver. 3, 4. which leads on the Apoſtle to give an account of its cauſes and means: the moving cauſe of it is the love and mercy of God; the way and means in which it is brought about, are not works of righteouſneſs done by men, but the regenerating and renewing grace of the Spirit, which is plentifully beſtowed thro' Jeſus Chriſt the ſaviour, and juſtification by the free grace of God, by vertue of which men become heirs unto, and have an hope of eternal life, ver. 4, 5, 6, 7. which ſeveral bleſſings of grace ſhould be conſtantly inſiſted on in the miniſtry of the word, in order to engage believers carefully to perform good works; and becauſe ſuch doctrines are good in themſelves, and profitable to men; whereas queſtions, genealogies, contentions, and ſtrivings about the law, are fooliſh, vain, and unprofitable, and to be avoided, ver. 8, 9. wherefore an heretical man ſhould be rejected from all chriſtian converſation and communion, after he has been admoniſhed at leaſt twice, ſeeing he is off of the foundation, has ſinned, and is ſelf condemned, ver. 10, 11. Next the Apoſtle deſires Titus to meet him at Nicopolis, where his deſign was to paſs the winter, upon ſending two miniſtring brethren to Crete, who are mentioned by name, ver. 12. and that he would accommodate two others, who are alſo named, with every thing convenient for their journey, ver. 13. and charges him to exhort the brethren under his care to learn to be diligent and induſtrious in the performance of good works, which have their neceſſary uſes, and prevent unfruitfulneſs, ver. 13, 14. And the Epiſtle is concluded with ſalutations, and the Apoſtle's uſual benediction, ver. 15.

Ver. 1. Put them in mind to be ſubject to principalities and powers, &c.] Not angels, good or bad, which are ſometimes ſo called, but men in high places; the higher powers ordained of God, as the Apoſtle elſewhere calls them; and which the Apoſtle Peter diſtinguiſhes into the king as ſupreme, and into governours under him: the Roman emperor and ſenate, the conſuls, and proconſuls, deputies and governours of provinces and iſlands, are here meant; particularly ſuch who were appointed over the iſland of Crete. Now the reaſons why the Apoſtle exhorts Titus to put in remembrance thoſe that were under his care, to yield a chearful ſubjection to their ſuperiors, were, becauſe the Jews, from whom the Chriſtians were not diſtinguiſhed by the Romans, were reckoned a turbulent and ſeditious people; which character they obtained, partly thro' the principles of the Scribes and Phariſees, which they at leaſt privately entertained, as not to give tribute to Cæſar, or be under any heathen yoke; and partly thro' the inſurrections that had been made by Judas of Galilee, and Theudas, and others; and beſides, there were many Jews in the iſland of Crete, and the Cretians themſelves were prone to mutiny and rebellion: to which may be added, that the falſe teachers, and judaizing preachers, that had got among them, deſpiſed dominion, and were not afraid to ſpeak evil of dignities, according to the characters which both Peter and Jude give of them, and taught the ſaints to abuſe their chriſtian liberty, and uſe it for a cloak of maliciouſneſs, to the great ſcandal of the chriſtian religion. To obey magiſtrates; inferior ones; in all things that are according to the laws of God, and right reaſon, that do not contradict what God has commanded, or break in upon the rights and dictates of conſcience; in all things of a civil nature, and which are for the good of ſociety, and do not affect religion, and the worſhip of God: hence it follows, to be ready to every good work; which may be taken in a limited and reſtrained ſenſe, and deſign every good work enjoined by the civil magiſtrate; and all right and lawful obedience that belongs to him, as giving to Cæſar the things that are Cæſar's, tribute, cuſtom, fear, and honour to whom they are due; and which ſhould be done readily and chearfully: or it may be underſtood more comprehenſively of good works in general, which wicked men are reprobate to, and unfit for; and which they that are ſanctified are meet for, and ready to; tho' this may not only intend their capacity, fitneſs, and qualifications, for the performance of good works, but their alacrity, promptitude, and forwardneſs unto them.

Ver. 2. To ſpeak evil of no man, &c.] As not of one another, ſo not of the men of the world, to the prejudice of their names and characters, which are tender things, and ought to be gently touched; nor of magiſtrates, principalities, and powers, of perſons in dignity and authority, which the falſe teachers were not afraid to ſpeak evil of, and by their principles and practices, taught others to do the ſame: to be no brawlers; or fighters, either by blows or words; not litigious and quarrelſome, wrangling and ſtriving, about things to no profit, and to the detriment and diſturbance of civil government, churches, neighbourhood, and families; which is very unbecoming the followers of Jeſus, who ſtrove not, nor cried, nor was his voice heard in the ſtreets. But gentle, ſhewing all meekneſs to all men; yeilding and giving way, rather chuſing to ſuffer wrong than to brawl, contend and litigate a point; taking the advice of Chriſt in Matt. v. 39, 40, 41. carrying it in a meek and humble manner to men of all ranks and degrees, whether ſuperior or inferior, rich or poor, bond or free, Jews or Gentiles, members of the church, or men of the world.

Ver. 3. For we ourſelves alſo were ſometimes fooliſh, &c.] Nothing has a greater tendency to promote humility, and check pride in the ſaints, than to reflect upon their paſt ſtate and condition, what they themſelves once were; and this is a reaſon why magiſtrates, tho' evil men, ſhould be obeyed in things good and lawful, and why no man ſhould be ſpoken evil of, and why every man ſhould be treated in a gentle manner, and uſed with mildneſs and meekneſs; ſince the Apoſtle himſelf, and Titus, and other ſaints, whom he deſigned this as an inſtruction for, were formerly in their unregenerate ſtate, juſt ſuch perſons themſelves; and therefore ſhould not glory over them, and treat them in a contemptuous manner: and beſides, the ſame grace that had made a difference in them, could make one in theſe alſo, and which might be made in God's own time: and particularly, whereas they obſerved great ignorance in theſe men, they ſhould conſider that they alſo had been fooliſh, and without underſtanding of things, divine and ſpiritual, and neither knew their own ſtate and condition, nor the way of ſalvation by Chriſt; yea the Apoſtle himſelf, tho' he had a zeal for God, yet not according to knowledge; he did not know luſt, nor the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, until he was enlightned by the Spirit of God; he was ignorant of the righteouſneſs of God, and went about to eſtabliſh his own, which he imagined to be blameleſs; and thought he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jeſus: diſobedient; both to the law of God, and Goſpel of Chriſt; diſbelieving the truths of the Goſpel, and unſubjected to the ordinances of it, notwithſtanding the evidence with which they came, and the miracles by which they were confirmed. Deceived; by the old ſerpent ſatan, who deceives the whole world; and by an evil heart of unbelief, as well as by falſe teachers and leaders; and ſo, as the word ſignifies, were wandering about in darkneſs and ignorance, and were as ſheep going aſtray, until they were returned unto the ſhepherd and biſhop of ſouls. Serving divers luſts and pleaſures; the luſts of the fleſh are many and various, which promiſe pleaſure to them that obey them, tho' that is but imaginary, and very ſhort-lived, and which ſubjects perſons to bondage and ſlavery; for ſuch who indulge to theſe things, are overcome by them, led captive, and brought into bondage, and are the ſervants of ſin, vaſſals and ſlaves to their own corruptions; and ſuch theſe ſaints had been, here ſpoken of: living in malice and envy; they had not only malice and envy in their hearts againſt their fellow-creatures, but practiſed it in their lives; yea, their lives were a continued ſeries of malice and envy; particularly this was true of the Apoſtle, who haled men and women out of their houſes, and committed them to priſon; breathed out ſlaughter and threatenings againſt the ſaints; was exceeding mad againſt them, perſecuted them to ſtrange cities, and compelled them to blaſpheme, and gave his vote for puniſhing them with death. Hateful, and hating one another; abominable in the ſight of God, as conſidered in themſelves, and on account of their nature and practices; and to be abhorred by all good men; and who by their continual feuds, quarrels, and animoſities among themſelves, ſhewed an hatred, an abhorrence of one another.

Ver. 4. But after that, &c.] After all this ſeries and courſe of wickedneſs; notwithſtanding all this fooliſhneſs, diſobedience, deception, bondage to ſin, envy, malice, and malignity; or when all this was, as the word may be rendered, amidſt all this iniquity; when theſe perſons were in the full carier of ſin, and ſo had done no preparatory works, or had any previous qualifications and diſpoſitions for the grace of God: the kindneſs and love of God our ſaviour toward man appeared; unto them; and the Ethiopic verſion adds, unto us. The Apoſtle takes the advantage of the above character of himſelf, and others in their former ſtate, to ſet off and magnify the grace of God in their converſion; ſo contraries, as black and white, illuſtrate each other. By God our ſaviour is not meant the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, tho' he is commonly deſigned by our ſaviour, and is ſeveral times called God our ſaviour in this Epiſtle; ſee ch. i. 3. and ii. 10, 13. and who is truly God, and the only ſaviour of loſt ſinners; and whoſe kindneſs and love towards them has appeared in many inſtances; as in his ſuretiſhip-undertakings for them, in his aſſumption of their nature, and in his ſuffering and dying in their room and ſtead: and yet it appears from ver. 6. that God our ſaviour here, is diſtinguiſhed from Jeſus Chriſt our ſaviour there; and therefore here muſt be underſtood of God the Father; who contrived the ſcheme of ſalvation, appointed Chriſt to be his ſalvation, and made a covenant with him, in which it is ſecured, and ſent him in time to obtain it, and thro' his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, ſaves all his people: it is his kindneſs and love to men that is here ſpoken of; and which deſigns not his general and providential goodneſs and kindneſs, which extends to the whole human nature, and to all the individuals of it; but his ſpecial love and grace ſhown in his kindneſs in Chriſt Jeſus; that goodwill to men the angels ſung of at Chriſt's incarnation; or that free favour and love of God towards elect men, which is ſovereign and ſpecial, from everlaſting to everlaſting, unchangeable and unſpeakable, which is better than life; the excellency of which cannot be expreſſed, and which has ſhown itſelf in various inſtances: it is ſaid to have appeared; becauſe it was hid from all eternity in the heart of God, in the thoughts of his heart, in his purpoſes, counſel, and covenant, and has been made manifeſt in time; particularly, it has broke forth and ſhewed itſelf in the miſſion of Chriſt into this world, and in redemption and ſalvation by him; wherein God has manifeſted and commended his love, and ſhewn forth the exceeding riches of his grace; and alſo in effectual vocation, which being a time of life, is a time of love, and is owing to the great love of God, and is a fruit and evidence of his everlaſting and unchangeable love; and it is this inſtance and appearance of it, which is here meant, ſince it follows the account of the ſtate and condition of the ſaints by nature; and is what was made to them when in this ſtate, by which means they were brought out of it.

Ver. 5. Not by works of righteouſneſs which we have done, &c.] The great inſtance of the kindneſs and love of God our ſaviour is ſalvation; which the Apoſtle denies that it is brought about by any works, even the beſt works of men; for works of righteouſneſs are works done according to a righteous law, and in obedience to it; and in a righteous manner, from right principles of grace, in faith, and with a view to the glory of God; or otherwiſe they are not righteous actions, or works of righteouſneſs; wherefore not works before, but after converſion, are here meant; for works before converſion are not properly works of righteouſneſs: beſides, theſe are ſuch which we have done, who formerly were as before deſcribed, but now are regenerated and renewed by the Holy Ghoſt, and created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works. Now ſalvation, neither in whole, nor in part, is by theſe, either as cauſes, conditions, or means; ſee the note on 2 Tim. i. 9. מעשים צדקה, works of righteouſneſs, is a Jewiſh phraſe uſed for righteous, or good works[z]: but according to his mercy he ſaved us; the mercy of God is natural and eſſential to him, but the actings and exerciſe of it, towards this, or the other objects, are ſovereign and free, and according to his will; the effects of it are many, he is rich and abundant in it; and they are channelled in, and flow forth thro' the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and this is the moving cauſe of ſalvation: this moved God to make a covenant with his Son, the bleſſings of which are the ſure mercies of David, and in which God is merciful to the ſins and unrighteouſneſſes of his people; it is owing to the tender mercy of God, that Chriſt, the day-ſpring from on high, has viſited the earth; and the glory of it is very conſpicuous in the affair of redemption by him; the pardon of ſin is according to the multitude of God's tender mercies; and regeneration ſprings from the abundance of it; and even eternal life is the effect of it. Now according to this God has ſaved his people; ſalvation is not only a thing determined, and reſolved on in the mind of God, but is actually and compleatly accompliſhed by Jeſus Chriſt, and an application of it is made to the ſaints in effectual calling; and becauſe of the certain enjoyment of the whole of it, even eternal glory, the ſaints are ſaid to be ſaved already; as they are alſo in faith and hope, as well as in Chriſt, their head and repreſentative; ſee the note on Eph. ii. 8. It follows, as the means of ſalvation, by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt; by the former is meant, not the ordinance of water baptiſm; for that is never expreſſed by waſhing, nor is it the cauſe or means of regeneration; the cauſe being the Spirit of God, and the means the word of God: and beſides, perſons ought to be regenerated before they are baptized; and they may be baptized, and yet not regenerated, as Simon Magus; nor is it a ſaving ordinance, or a point of ſalvation; nor can it be oppoſed to works of righteouſneſs, as this waſhing is; for that itſelf is a work of righteouſneſs; ſee Matt. iii. 15. and if perſons were ſaved by that, they would be ſaved by a work of righteouſneſs, contrary to the text itſelf: but regenerating grace is meant, or a being born of water, and of the Spirit; that is, of the grace of the Spirit, comparable to water for its purity and cleanſing virtue: hence ſuch who are regenerated and ſanctified, are ſaid to be waſhed and cleanſed, having their hearts purified by faith, and their conſciences purged from ſin by the blood of Chriſt: by the latter, the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt is meant, either the fruit and effect of the former, even newneſs of life and converſation, under the influence of the Holy Spirit; or elſe the gradual increaſe and progreſs of the work of grace upon the ſoul, renewed day by day in the ſpirit of the mind, by the Holy Ghoſt; or rather it means the ſame thing with regeneration, and is added partly as explanative of the waſhing of regeneration, ſhewing that that is no other than the new creature, the new man, the new heart, and new ſpirit, formed in the ſoul, in effectual vocation; and partly to obſerve that the Holy Ghoſt is the author of it. Now it is in this way God ſaves his people, namely, by regenerating and renewing them; in this is the firſt appearance and diſcovery of the love of God to them; this is their open paſſage into a ſtate of grace, and without this there is no entrance into glory; this is the foundation of all grace and good works, and by which ſaints appear to be heirs of the heavenly inheritance.

Ver. 6. Which he ſhed on us abundantly, &c.] Or richly; either which love he ſhed abroad in the hearts of thoſe whom he regenerated and renewed by his Spirit; or which water of regeneration, that is grace, comparable to water, he plentifully ſhed, and cauſed to abound where ſin had done; or rather whom, or which holy Spirit, with his gifts and graces, ſuch as faith, hope, and love, and every other, he poured forth in great abundance on them; ſee Iſ. xliv. 3. 1 Tim. i. 14. through Jeſus Chriſt our ſaviour; the love and kindneſs of God the Father our ſaviour, comes thro' him; the mercy of God ſtreams thro' him; the ſalvation itſelf is by, and thro' him; the grace communicated in regeneration and renovation is out of his fulneſs; the Spirit himſelf is given forth from him; and every ſupply of grace, by which the work is carried on, comes out of his hands; and every thing wrought in us, that is well-pleaſing in the ſight of God, is through him; and even the gift of God, eternal life itſelf.

Ver. 7. That being juſtified by his grace, &c.] This is another way and means, as well as regeneration, by which God ſaves his people; for he ſaves no unjuſtified ones; no unrighteous perſons ſhall inherit the kingdom of heaven; ſuch as are without the wedding-garment, and robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, ſhall be caſt into outer darkneſs: whom God ſaves, he juſtifies by the righteouſneſs of his Son; and whomſover he juſtifies, them he ſaves. The juſtification here ſpoken of is a declarative one, which takes place in regeneration; and which, that is in order to, as here expreſſed, that being juſtified: regeneration does not juſtify any, but makes the juſtified to appear to be ſuch; juſtification is an act of God's gracious will conceived in his mind from eternity, by which he wills not to impute ſin to his people, but to Chriſt their ſurety; and that they ſhould be accounted righteous thro' the righteouſneſs of his Son; in which act of his will the whole eſſence of juſtification in his ſight lies: this was pronounced on Chriſt, as their head and repreſentative at his reſurrection, when he, as ſuch, was juſtified, acquitted, and diſcharged, and they in him; and this is declared in the conſcience of a ſinner, by the Spirit of God, at his regeneration, when he paſſes from death to life; and this declaration is here intended, and which is the ſame with juſtification by faith; and is here ſaid to be by the grace of God, as juſtification in every view is, and ſtands oppoſed to works of righteouſneſs done by men, by which no man can be juſtified in the ſight of God; in what ſenſe juſtification is by the free grace of God, ſee the note on Rom. iii. 24. We ſhould be made heirs according to the hope of eternal nal life; or according to hope we ſhould be made heirs of eternal life. Eternal life is an inheritance, and ſo is not acquired by labour and induſtry, nor purchaſed, but is a free gift; it is a bequeſt of God the Father to his children, of his own free goodwill and pleaſure; and it belongs only to children; they only are heirs, and they become ſuch by adopting grace; neither regeneration, nor juſtification, make them the children of God, and heirs of the grace of life, but make them appear to be ſo: God, by his gracious act of adoption, puts them among the children, and gives them the goodly heritage; and this adoption lies in eternal predeſtination in Chriſt, in whom the inheritance is obtained on that account, Eph. i. 5, 11. Regeneration ſhows them to be the adopted ones, and gives them the nature of children, and a meetneſs for the inheritance; and juſtification gives them a right unto it, upon the foot of juſtice, and opens a way for their enjoyment of it, conſiſtent with the juſtice and holineſs of God; ſee Gal. iv, 4, 5. wherefore ſuch as are waſhed with the waſhing of regeneration, and are renewed in the ſpirit of their minds, and juſtified by the grace of God; theſe are manifeſtly heirs of eternal life, of ſalvation, of a kingdom and glory, of all things, even of God himſelf, who is their portion, and exceeding great reward; and ſuch in regeneration are begotten to a lively hope of it, and by this they are ſaved, Rom. viii. 24. And thus the Apoſtle makes regeneration by the free mercy of God, and juſtification by his grace, and ſpecial adoption, and heirſhip, with a good hope thro' grace, the way and means in which God ſaves his people, who were like others by nature, and brings them to the enjoyment of eternal happineſs.

Ver. 8. This is a faithful ſaying, &c.] Meaning the whole of what is before expreſſed, concerning the ſtate and condition of God's elect by nature; the appearance of the love and kindneſs of God to them in effectual vocation; the ſalvation of them, according to the mercy of God, and not by works of righteouſneſs; regeneration, and renovation by the Spirit of God, in which ſuch an abundance of grace is communicated; and juſtification by the free grace of God, as God's way of ſalvation; and by which men are made to appear to be heirs of eternal life, and to have hope of it: now all, and each of this is a faithful ſaying, is true doctrine, and to be believed, profeſſed, and publiſhed: wherefore it follows, and theſe things I will that thou affirm conſtantly; that is, the above doctrines; the Arabic verſion renders it, I will that thou be firm in theſe things; and the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, I will that thou confirmeſt them: the ſenſe of the Apoſtle is, that he would have Titus be aſſured of thoſe truths himſelf; be at a point about them, and without any doubt or heſitation concerning them; and abide firm and conſtant in them, and ſpeak of them with certainty, boldneſs, and confidence to others; and endeavour to confirm and eſtabliſh them in them: for which purpoſe he would have them be frequently inculcated and inſiſted on; and that with this further view, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works; for ἱνα, that, does not deſign the ſubject-matter of the charge, or what the Apoſtle would have conſtantly affirmed, but the end, and final event and iſſue of it; and nothing can more ſtrongly engage to a ſtudious concern for the performance of good works, than the frequent inſiſting upon the above doctrines of grace: by good works are meant, not merely honeſt trades, and the lawful occupations and buſineſſes of life, which ſhould be carefully attended to, and diligently followed, in order to be uſeful and profitable to themſelves, their families, and others; but every good work, every branch of duty, moral, civil, and religious: to maintain theſe according to the ſignification of the word uſed, is to excel in them; to out-do others; to go before others, by way of example, and ſo to provoke to love and to good works; and to make them the employment and buſineſs of mens lives; for which there ſhould be a thoughtfulneſs, a carefulneſs, a ſtudious concern, eſpecially in thoſe who have believed in God; who are regenerated and renewed by the Spirit of God, and are juſtified by faith in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; who believe in him for peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation: theſe are under great obligations to perform good works; the love of Chriſt ſhould conſtrain them to them; and they are the only perſons that are capable of doing them well, for they are ſanctified, and made meet, and ready for every good work; they are created in Chriſt Jeſus to them; they have the ſpirit of Chriſt in them, and the ſtrength of Chriſt with them, without which they can't be performed well; and they have faith in Chriſt, without which it is impoſſible to pleaſe God. Theſe things are good and profitable unto men; which is to be underſtood not of good works, tho' theſe are good in themſelves, and profitable to men in their effects; being done among them, and before them, they ſet them an example of doing good likewiſe, when evil communications corrupt good manners; and many of them iſſue in their temporal good, profit, and advantage: but rather the doctrines of the Goſpel are here deſigned, which are before briefly treated of, and are ſaid to be a faithful ſaying; and which the Apoſtle would have affirmed with certainty and conſtancy, in order to engage believers to the performance of good works; and that for this reaſon, becauſe theſe doctrines are good, excellent, valuable, and precious, comparable to gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones: the author, matter, end, and uſe of them are good; they come from God; they are concerning Jeſus Chriſt, and his grace; they contain good tidings of good things; and are exceeding uſeful to influence faith, hope, love, and a chearful obedience to the will of God: they are profitable in the hands of the Spirit of God for conviction, converſion, comfort, and edification; for the quickening and enlightening of dead and dark ſinners; for the reviving, eſtabliſhing, and building up of the ſaints; they are the wholeſome words of Chriſt, and are according to godlineſs, and are nouriſhing, when other doctrines eat as a canker: and this ſenſe is confirmed, not only by what goes before, but by what follows after in the next verſe; where inſipid notions and controverſies are oppoſed unto them, as unprofitable and vain.

Ver. 9. But avoid fooliſh queſtions, &c.] Such as were ſtarted in the ſchools of the Jews; ſee 2 Tim. ii. 23. and genealogies; of their elders, Rabbins, and doctors, by whom their traditions are handed down from one to another, in fixing which they greatly laboured; ſee 1 Tim. i. 4. and contentions and ſtrivings about the law; the rites and ceremonies of it, and about the ſenſe of it, and its various precepts, as litigated in the ſchools of Hillell and Shammai, the one giving it one way, and the other another; and what one declared to be free according to the law, the other declared forbidden; which occaſioned great contentions and quarrels between the followers of the one, and of the other, as both the Miſna and Talmud ſhew: and agreeable to this ſenſe, the Syriac verſion renders it, the contentions and ſtrifes of the ſcribes; the Jewiſh doctors, who were ſome on the ſide of Hillell, and others on the ſide of Shammai; as well as went into parties and ſtrifes among themſelves, and oftentimes about mere trifles; things of no manner of importance: wherefore it follows, for they are unprofitable and vain; empty things, of no manner of uſe, to inform the judgment, improve the mind, or influence the life and converſation.

Ver. 10. A man that is an heretick, &c.] An heretick, according to the notation of the word, is either one, that makes choice of an opinion upon his own judgment, contrary to the generally received ſenſe of the churches of Chriſt, and prefers it to theirs, and obſtinately perſiſts in it; ſeparates from them, forms a party, and ſets himſelf at the head of them, whom he has drawn into the ſame way of thinking with himſelf: or he is one that removes and takes away a fundamental doctrine of chriſtianity, which affects particularly the doctrine of the Trinity, the deity, and perſonality of Father, Son, and Spirit, and eſpecially the doctrines relating to the perſon, office, and grace of Chriſt; one that brings in, or receives damnable doctrines; ſpeaks or profeſſes perverſe things, and draws away diſciples after him; or is among ſuch diſciples: for tho' ſchiſm and hereſy do differ, and every ſchiſmatick may not be an heretick, yet every heretick is a ſchiſmatick; he makes a rent in the doctrine of Chriſt, and makes parties and diviſions in his church; and ſuch are not always to be contended and diſputed with, but to be avoided and rejected: after the firſt and ſecond admonition reject; have nothing to do with him; have no ſociety with him; admit him not to private converſation; and eject him from church communion, after he has been publickly admoniſhed twice by the order of the church; for this is not to be underſtood of private admonition, by a particular perſon or perſons; as in the caſe of private offences, Matt. xviii. 15, 16. but of publick admonition, in the name of the church. An admonition with the Jews did not continue leſs than ſeven days[a]; ſome ſay[b] thirty; that is, there were ſo many days before it was out, or between one and another.

Ver. 11. Knowing that he that is ſuch is ſubverted, &c.] Or overturned, and demoliſhed; he is like an edifice, that is not only decaying, and falling, but is entirely everted, and pulled down; ſo that there is no hopes of a reſtoration or recovery; he is in a deſperate condition, having oppoſed the perſon, or office, or ſacrifice of Chriſt; having either trodden the Son of God under foot, or counted his blood common, or done deſpight unto the Spirit of grace; in either of which caſes there is no more ſacrifice for ſin: and ſinneth; not practically, but doctrinally, and wilfully after he has received the knowledge of the truth; by denying the truth he received, in which he continues, notwithſtanding the evidence of the word of God is againſt him; and notwithſtanding the arguments taken from it by the miniſters of the Goſpel, to convince him; and notwithſtanding the admonitions of the church to recover him out of the ſnare of the devil: being condemned of himſelf; not that an heretick is one that is convinced in his own conſcience, that he is in an error, and that that is a truth which he oppoſes; and yet he obſtinately perſiſts in the one, and continues to ſet himſelf againſt the other; for then, none but an hypocrite, that conceals his true ſentiment, can be an heretick; nor can any man be known to be one unleſs he accuſes himſelf; ſince no man can know the heart of another; and it would be impracticable in a church to deal with hereticks, or reject and excommunicate them: but either the meaning is, that he is ſuch an one, who by his own practice has condemned himſelf; for whereas he has ſeparated himſelf not only from the faith of the church, but from the church itſelf; by ſo doing, he practically condemns himſelf, or judges himſelf unworthy of the communion of the church, and ſo juſtifies the church in their rejection and excluſion of him: or rather, an heretick is one who having profeſſed chriſtianity, and received the ſcriptures as the only rule of faith and practice, and ſtill profeſſes to abide by the ſame, and that all doctrine is to be tried by them, and to be approved or condemned as that agrees or diſagrees with them, ſtands condemned by thoſe ſcriptures, which he himſelf allows, to be the rule of deciſion and determination; and ſo may be ſaid to be ſelf-condemned.

Ver. 12. When I ſhall ſend Artemas unto thee, or Tychicus, &c.] Theſe were both of them miniſters of the Goſpel; there is no mention of Artemas any where elſe; ſome ſay he was one of the ſeventy diſciples, and that he was afterwards biſhop of Lyſtra; but theſe are uncertain things; ſee the note on Luke x. 1. the name is a contraction of Artemidorus. Tychicus is often ſpoken of; and a very great character is given of him by the Apoſtle, in Eph. vi. 21. be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis; which was a city, not in Epirus, but in Thrace, ſituated by the river Neſſus, and had its name from a victory obtained there: hither the Apoſtle would have Titus come to him, after one or other of the above miniſters were come to Crete; for as the Apoſtle had the care of all the churches upon him, he would not remove a miniſter from one place to another, without making a proviſion in their room: his reaſons for having Titus come to him, might be either to know the ſtate of the churches in Crete; or becauſe he ſtood in need of his aſſiſtance; or to ſend him elſewhere: for I have determined there to winter; that is, to continue there all the winter; not without labour, but to preach the Goſpel, and adminiſter the ordinances to the ſaints there: and whereas he ſays there; this ſhews that this epiſtle was not written from thence, as the ſubſcription aſſerts; for then he would have ſaid here, and not there.

Ver. 13. Bring Zenas the lawyer, &c.] Whether he was brought up to the civil law, either among the Greeks or Romans, is not certain; it may be he was a Jewiſh lawyer, or ſcribe, an interpreter of Moſes's law among the Jews; for with them a lawyer and a ſcribe were one and the ſame, as appears from Matt. xxii. 35. compared with Mar. xii. 28. and the Syriac verſion here calls him a ſcribe, and the Ethiopic verſion a ſcribe of the city; which looks as if it was a civil office he bore; but however, be he what he will, he ſeems to have been now a preacher of the Goſpel, being joined with Apollos, who certainly was one: he is ſaid to have been one of the ſeventy diſciples of Chriſt, and afterwards biſhop of Dioſpolis; ſee the note on Luke x. 1. his name is the contraction of Zenodorus: him the Apoſtle would have Titus bring, and Apollos, on their journey diligently; who was a Jew born at Alexandria, an eloquent man, and mighty in the ſcriptures; who had preached at Corinth, but was now at Crete; and whom the Apoſtle, with Zenas would have provided with every thing neceſſary for their journey: that nothing be wanting unto them; which might be proper for them in their travels, to make them comfortable, and their journey pleaſant and eaſy.

[b] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 33. fol. 28. 3.

Ver. 14. And let ours alſo learn to maintain good works, &c.] By which are not only meant honeſt trades, as ſome chuſe to render the words: it is true, that a trade is a work; and an honeſt lawful employment of life is a good work; and which ought to be maintained, attended to, and followed, and to be learnt, in order to be followed. The Jews ſay, that he that does not learn his ſon a trade, it is all one as if he taught him to rob or ſteal; hence their doctors were brought up to trades; ſee the note on Mark vi. 3. as was the Apoſtle Paul, tho' he had an education under Gamaliel; and ſuch an one is to be learned and maintained for neceſſary uſes, for the good of a man's ſelf, and for the ſupply of his family; for the aſſiſtance of others that are in need; for the ſupport of the Goſpel, and the intereſt of Chriſt; and for the relief of poor ſaints; that ſuch may not be unfruitful and uſeleſs, in commonwealths, neighbourhoods, churches, and families. The Jews ſay[c], "there are four things "which a man ſhould conſtantly attend to with all "his might, and they are theſe; the law, good "works, prayer, ודרך ארץ and the way of the earth, "or buſineſs; if a tradeſman, to his trade; if a "merchant, to his merchandize; if a man of war, "to war." But tho' this may be part of the ſenſe of theſe words, it is not the whole of it; nor are acts of beneficence to the poor of Chriſt, to the houſhold of faith, to ſtrangers and miniſters, to whom good is eſpecially to be done, only intended; tho' they may be taken into the account, in agreement with the context; but all good works in general, which are done in conformity to the revealed will of God, in faith, from a principle of love, and with a view to the glory of God, are meant: to maintain them, is to endeavour to outdo others in them, not only the men of the world, but one another; and to ſet examples of them to others, and to provoke one another, by an holy emulation to them; and to be conſtant in the performance of them: and which believers may learn partly from the ſcriptures, which contain what is the good and perfect will of God; theſe ſhew what are good works, and direct unto them, and furniſh the man of God for them; and alſo the grace-part of the ſcripture, the doctrines of the grace of God, teach to deny ſin, and to live ſober, righteous, and godly lives; and from the examples of the Apoſtles and followers of Chriſt; and above all from Chriſt himſelf, the great pattern and exemplar of good works: and this leſſon of good works is to be learnt by ours; meaning not only thoſe of the ſame function, who were in the ſame office, miniſters of the Goſpel, as were the Apoſtle and Titus; but all that believed in God, who were of the ſame chriſtian community, and ſociety, profeſſors of the ſame religion, and partakers of the ſame grace; and were not only nominally, but really of the ſame number, even of the number of God's elect, the redeemed from among men, the family of Chriſt, ſharers in the common faith, and heirs of the grace of life; who lie under the greateſt obligations to learn to do good works: for neceſſary uſes; not to make their peace with God, or to atone for their ſins, or to procure the pardon of them, or to cleanſe them from them, or for their juſtification before God, or to obtain ſalvation and eternal life; but to glorify God, teſtify their ſubjection to him, and gratitude for mercies received; to ſhew forth their faith to men; to adorn the doctrine of Chriſt, and a profeſſion of it; to recommend religion to others; to ſtop the mouths of gainſayers, and put to ſilence the ignorance of fooliſh men: and that they be not unfruitful; in them, and in the knowledge of Chriſt; good works are the fruits of the Spirit, and of his grace; they are fruits of righteouſneſs; and ſuch as are without them are like trees without fruit, uſeleſs and unprofitable.

Ver. 15. All that are with me ſalute thee, &c.] All the Apoſtles, fellow-labourers, and the miniſters of the Goſpel that were with him; and all the members of the church where he was, ſent their chriſtian ſalutation to Titus; he being a perſon greatly eſteemed, and whoſe praiſe was in all the churches: greet them that love us in the faith; not merely as men, as their countrymen, as related to them in the fleſh; or on account of any external things, but as believers; becauſe of the doctrine of faith, profeſſed and preached; and becauſe of the grace of faith obtained and poſſeſſed; or who love us faithfully, ſincerely, and uprightly, from their hearts, and not in word and tongue only: grace be with you all, amen; which is the common concluding ſalutation in all Paul's epiſtles. This ſhews that this epiſtle was not deſigned for Titus only, but for the ſaints at Crete. It was written to Titus the firſt biſhop of the church of the Cretians. But this ſubſcription, as many others, is not to be depended upon; it is not very likely that Titus was biſhop of this church at all; ſince his ſtay there was but ſhort, nor indeed elſewhere, ſeeing he was an evangeliſt; tho' this is aſſerted both by Euſebius[d], and Sophronius[e], who adds, that he died and was buried here: and what follows, that it was written from Nicapolis of Macedonia, does not ſeem to be juſt, as may be concluded from ver. 12. Many learned men think it was written from Coloſſe, or ſome neighbouring place; tho' when he wrote his epiſtle to the Coloſſians it looks as if he had never been there before: the Syriac verſion adds, ſent by the hands of Zenas and Apollos; which is not unlikely, ſince he deſires they might be accommodated by Titus, with what was neceſſary for the remaining part of their journey, ver. 13.

AN

AN EXPOSITION, &c.

The Epiſtle of PAUL to PHILEMON.

THIS epiſtle was written by the Apoſtle Paul, when a priſoner at Rome, as appears from its inſcription and ſubſcription; and ſeems to have been written at the ſame time, in the year 60, and ſent by the ſame hand as the epiſtle to the Coloſſians; ſeeing the ſame perſons were with the Apoſtle at the writing of both, and ſend their chriſtian ſalutations in the one, as in the other; compare ver. 23, 24. with Col. iv. 10, 12, 14. and Archippus, the miniſter in Coloſſe, is made mention of in both, Philem. ver. 2. Col. iv. 17. and it is very probable that Philemon, to whom it was written, was a Coloſſian, ſince Oneſimus, his ſervant, on whoſe account, and by whom it was ſent, is ſaid to be one of the Coloſſians, Col. iv. 9. Philemon is ſaid to be one of the ſeventy Diſciples, and afterwards biſhop of Gaza; ſee the note on Luke x. 1. The occaſion of the epiſtle was this; Philemon's ſervant, Oneſimus, having either embezzled his maſter's goods, or robbed him, ran away from him, and fled to Rome, where the Apoſtle was a priſoner in chains, in his own hired houſe, under the cuſtody of a ſoldier, and where he received all that came, and preached the Goſpel to them, Acts xxviii. 30. and among thoſe that went to hear him, this fugitive ſervant was one, and was converted under his miniſtry; and who not only received the grace of God, but had ſuch gifts beſtowed on him as qualified him to be a preacher of the word. Now the Deſign of this epiſtle is to reconcile Philemon to his ſervant, and to intreat him to receive him again, not only as a ſervant, but as a brother in Chriſt; and the moſt proper and prudent methods and arguments are uſed to engage him to it. The epiſtle, tho' it is a familiar one, and ſhort, is very inſtructive; it ſhews great humility in the Apoſtle, and that he did not think it below him to be concerned in doing ſuch an office as to reconcile a maſter to his ſervant, and which is worthy of imitation; as alſo it teaches the right that maſters have over their ſervants, which is not loſt by their becoming chriſtians, and even miniſters of the Goſpel; and that recompence ſhould be made unto them for injuries done by them; it likewiſe diſplays the riches of the grace of God, in the converſion of ſuch a vile creature; and the wonderful providence of God in over-ruling that which was ſinful in itſelf, running away from his maſter, to the greateſt good, even the converſion of him; and is an inſtance of ſurpriſing grace: and from hence may be learned, that there is ſalvation in Chriſt for the chief of ſinners; and that the converſion of them is not to be deſpaired of. The authority of this epiſtle was not queſtioned by the antient writers, and ſtands always in their catalogues of the canon of the ſcripture; and Marcion the heretick, who either rejected, or changed, or mutilated the reſt of the epiſtles, could not lay his hands on this, becauſe of the brevity of it, as Tertullian[a], and Jerom[b] obſerve.

THIS Epiſtle has an inſcription, ſalutation, and preface, the ſame with others, which are in ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. the principal view of it is to perſuade Philemon to receive his ſervant Oneſimus; the arguments uſed are taken from the general character he had for love to the ſaints, and people of God, and therefore it was hoped he would act up to it in this inſtance, ver. 5, 6, 7. from the conſideration of the perſon who made the ſuit to him, who could have uſed authority, but choſe rather to intreat him in love; and alſo of his age, and the condition in which he was, a priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 8, 9. from the ſpiritual relation Oneſimus was in to the Apoſtle, who had begotten him in his bonds, ver. 10. from the preſent uſefulneſs of him, both to Philemon and the Apoſtle, who before was uſeleſs, ver. 11. from the ſtrong affection the Apoſtle had for him, being as his own bowels, ver. 12. from his unwillingneſs to do any thing without his conſent, tho' he could have detained him upon the foot of equity and juſtice, to have ſerved him in his ſtead, ver. 13, 14. from the over-ruling providence of God, which had ſo ordered it, that he ſhould depart from him for a time, that he might be received for ever, ver. 15. from the character under which he could now be received, not as a ſervant, but as a beloved brother, ver. 16. from the partnerſhip and aſſociation in which the Apoſtle and Philemon were, ver. 17. from the aſſurance he gave him of repaying him whatever his ſervant owed him, and making good whatever he had injured him in, ver. 18, 19. and from that pleaſure, delight, and refreſhment he ſhould have, ſhould he receive him, ver. 20. And, upon the whole, the Apoſtle expreſſes his confidence that he would grant his requeſt, obey his commands, and even do more than he had mentioned to him, ver. 21. And then gives him ſome hope of his being delivered from priſon, thro' the prayers of Philemon, and others, and of ſeeing him ſhortly; and therefore deſires he would prepare a lodging for him, ver. 22. and cloſes with the ſalutations of ſeveral friends to him, mentioned by name, with their characters, ver. 23, 24. and with his own common ſalutation, ver. 25.

[b] Proœm. in Philem.

Ver. 1. Paul a priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] Not made a priſoner by Chriſt, tho' he was apprehended, laid hold on, and detained by Chriſt as a priſoner of hope, at his converſion; but this is not intended here: but he was a priſoner at Rome for the ſake of Chriſt, on account of profeſſing him, and preaching in his name; his bonds were for the ſake of the Goſpel of Chriſt; and therefore they are in this epiſtle called, the bonds of the Goſpel. He was not a priſoner for any capital crime, and therefore had no reaſon to be aſhamed of his chain, nor was he; but rather gloried in it, as his taking this title and character to himſelf, and prefixing it to this epiſtle ſhews; and which he chuſes to make uſe of rather than that of a ſervant of God, or an Apoſtle of Chriſt, as he elſewhere does, that he might not by conſtraint, or authority, but by love, move the pity and compaſſion of Philemon to grant his requeſt, and receive his ſervant; which, ſhould he deny, would be to add affliction to his bonds: and that this is his view in the choice of this character, is manifeſt from ver. 8, 9. and Timothy our brother, not according to the fleſh, or as being of the ſame country, for he was the countryman of neither of them; nor only on account of his being a regenerate man, born of God, a child of God, and of the ſame family; but chiefly becauſe he was of the ſame function, was a miniſter of the Goſpel: him the Apoſtle joins with himſelf in the epiſtle, and ſo in the requeſt, becauſe he might be well known to Philemon, and be much reſpected by him; and to ſhew that they were united in this affair, and both deſired this favour of him; hoping that by their joint application it would be obtained: unto Philemon our dearly beloved and fellow labourer; the name of Philemon is Greek; there was a Greek poet of this name, and a Greek hiſtorian that Pliny made uſe of in compiling his hiſtory: there is indeed mention made in the Jewiſh writings[a], of a Rabbi whoſe name was פלימו Philemo; but this our Philemon ſeems to have been an inhabitant of Coloſſe, and rather to have been a Gentile than a Jew; he was a rich and hoſpitable man, and greatly reſpected, and therefore here called, our dearly beloved; that is, dearly beloved by the Apoſtle and Timothy, not only as being a believer, but as being alſo generous and uſeful in his ſtation, and likewiſe as he was a miniſter of the Goſpel; for ſo the next phraſe, and fellow labourer, ſeems to import; for tho' ſuch are ſometimes ſaid to be labourers and fellow helpers with the Apoſtle, who aſſiſted in carrying on the intereſt of Chriſt, with their purſes, and prayers, and private converſation; yet as it is uſed in this ſame epiſtle, of ſuch who were in the work of the miniſtry, ver. 24. it is very probable it is ſo to be underſtood here: and now tho' theſe expreſſions of affection and reſpect were without diſſimulation; nor were they mere compliments; yet the intention of them was to work upon the mind of Philemon, to reconcile him to his ſervant; ſuggeſting, that as he had an intereſt in the affections of the Apoſtle and others, this would be a means of eſtabliſhing it, and would be acting agreeable to his character, as a miniſter of the Goſpel.

Ver. 2. And to our beloved Apphia, &c.] The Alexandrian copy reads, to ſiſter Apphia; and the Vulgate Latin verſion, to the beloved ſiſter Apphia; for this is a woman's name; and it is thought that ſhe was the wife of Philemon, ſince ſhe is placed next to him, and before Archippus, a miniſter of the word; and very prudently is ſhe wrote to, and juſtly commended, in order to engage her to uſe her intereſt with her huſband to receive his ſervant again, who otherwiſe might have ſtood againſt it, and been a very great hindrance to a reconciliation: this clauſe is wanting in the Ethiopic verſion: and Archippus our fellow ſoldier; that this Archippus was a preacher of the Goſpel at Coloſſe, is manifeſt from Col. iv. 17. wherefore the Apoſtle ſtiles him a fellow ſoldier; for tho' this character belongs to private chriſtians, who are enliſted as voluntiers under Chriſt, the captain of ſalvation, and fight under his banners, againſt ſin, ſatan, and the world, being accoutred with the whole armour of God, and are more than conquerors through Chriſt that has loved them; yet it very eminently belongs to the miniſters of the Goſpel, who are more eſpecially called upon, to endure hardneſs, as good ſoldiers of Chriſt; to war a good warfare, to fight the good fight of faith; and beſides the above enemies common to all believers, to engage with falſe teachers, and earneſtly contend for the faith of the Goſpel, that ſo it may continue with the ſaints. Now this man was in the ſame company, and in the ſame ſervice, engaged in the ſame common cauſe, againſt the ſame enemies, and under the ſame captain, and was expecting the ſame crown of immortality and glory, and therefore he calls him his fellow ſoldier; and he wiſely inſcribes his epiſtle to him, that he might make uſe of the intereſt he had in Philemon, and his wife, to bring this matter to bear, the Apoſtle writes about: and to the church in thy houſe; not in the houſe of Archippus, but in the houſe of Philemon; and deſigns not the church at Coloſſe, as tho' it met at his houſe; but his own family, which for the great piety and religion which were among them, and for the good order and decorum in which they were kept, were like a church of themſelves: and here again the Apoſtle acts the wiſe part, in order to gain his point, by taking notice of them, who might ſome of them have been injured or affronted by Oneſimus, when with them; and ſo entertained ſome reſentment againſt him, and might put a bar in the way of his reception into the family again.

Ver. 3. Grace to you and peace from God, &c.] Which is the ſame form of ſalutation uſed in the other epiſtles; ſee the note on Rom. i. 7. for tho' this epiſtle is but a very ſmall one, yet it is introduced in the ſame form as the larger epiſtles are; and has an inſcription in the former verſe, a ſalutation in this, and a preface in the three following.

Ver. 4. I thank my God, &c.] Meaning on account of Philemon, for the grace beſtowed upon him, heareafter mentioned; ſee the note on Rom. i. 8. making mention of thee always in my prayers; as he did of other ſaints, Rom. i. 9. Eph. i. 16. Phil. i. 3, 4. Col. i. 3. 1 Theſſ. i. 2. the Apoſtle was a man much in prayer, frequent at the throne of grace; and he prayed not for himſelf only, but for all the ſaints, for all the churches and miniſters of the Goſpel; whom he not only bore upon his mind and heart, but made mention of them, it may be by name; however, he remembred them, and put up petitions, with thankſgivings for them; and ſo he did for Philemon; and which he takes notice of with the ſame view as before: the word, always, is ſo placed in the original text, as to be put either to his thanks to God, or his prayers, and may be true of both; the Syriac and Arabic verſions join it to the former; and the Vulgate Latin, and the Ethiopic verſions place it to the latter.

Ver. 5. Hearing of thy love and faith, &c.] Thoſe two ſpring from the free favour and love of God, and are the pure gifts of his grace; and therefore thanks are to be given for them to God; nor are they to be aſcribed to the power and will of man; they are the fruits of the ſpirit of God; and are the principal ingredients in ſanctification, which is entirely his work; and they are in all regenerate perſons; and are the evidences of regeneration; by which it is known that men are paſſed from death to life; and they always go together, and are inſeparable from each other: there cannot be true faith where love is wanting, for faith works by love; and there cannot be real love, where there is not faith; they only love the ſaints aright, who love them in the faith, and becauſe of it; and theſe graces are viſible, and to be known by their fruits, whereby they come to be heard of, and talked of, as theſe in Philemon were. Faith in the heart is confeſſed by the mouth; and love, both to Chriſt and to his people, ſhews itſelf, as well as faith, in works of righteouſneſs. Sometimes faith is put before love, it being a leading grace, and the great receiver of all the bleſſings of grace; and here love is placed before faith, becauſe of its being more excellent on account of its continuance and duration; or there may be no deſign at all in it; but rather, as ſometimes one, and ſometimes another is mentioned firſt, it ſhows that they are upon an equal foot, and both have their proper place and uſefulneſs; the objects of them follow: which thou haſt toward the Lord Jeſus, and toward all ſaints; which are either to be conſidered as equally objects of the ſame grace, or as diſtinct ones; that is, either that Chriſt is the object both of faith and love, and the ſaints are the object, both of faith and love; or elſe theſe graces are to be diſtinguiſhed by their reſpective objects; as that faith is toward Chriſt, and love toward all the ſaints: that Chriſt is both the object of faith and love, is certain; nor is there any difficulty to conſider him as ſuch; faith is equally to be exerciſed on him, as on God the Father; and he is indeed the immediate object of faith, and by whom men believe in God; and he is to be loved, and is loved by his people above all things, and at all times, and in ſincerity: and that the ſaints are the objects of the love of all truly gracious ſouls, is a plain caſe; but the greater difficulty is, how they ſhould be the objects of their faith; and yet there are inſtances of this, Exod. xiv. 31. 2 Chron. xx. 20. and indeed, true love believes all things, and hopes all things, 1 Cor. xiii. 7. But it ſeems better to divide theſe objects according to the different graces, and to conſider faith as being towards our Lord Jeſus; which is a looking towards Chriſt, a moving towards him, a laying hold upon him, and embracing him, a ſtaying and leaning on him, a living upon him, and walking in him; and which in Philemon might be a ſtrong one, as well as unfeigned, and operative: and love may be conſidered as being toward all ſaints; for tho' all men are, in a ſenſe, to be loved, and kindneſs to be ſhown to them, and that even to enemies, yet more eſpecially the ſaints; who are ſet apart by God the Father, whoſe ſins are expiated by the blood of Chriſt, and who are internally ſanctified by the Spirit, and are enabled to live ſoberly and righteouſly: and all of theſe are the objects of love, whether rich or poor, greater or leſſer believers, of meaner or larger abilities; for they are all equally loved by God, redeemed by Chriſt, and regenerated by his Spirit; are juſtified by his righteouſneſs, are all the children and heirs of God, and are called in one hope of their calling; and love to them ſhould be unfeigned, fervent, active, and laborious, and as Chriſt has loved us; and ſuch was Philemon's love, as well as it was univerſal: and this diſtribution of theſe graces to their reſpective objects, may be confirmed from a parallel place in Col. i. 4. which Epiſtle was written and ſent at the ſame time with this.

Ver. 6. That the communication of thy faith, &c.] The grace of faith itſelf can't be communicated from one to another; a believing parent can't communicate it to his children, nor a maſter to his ſervants, nor a miniſter to his hearers; but an account of it, of its actings and exerciſes, of the joy of it, and of the peace a ſoul is filled with thro' believing, may be given to the mutual comfort and edification of ſaints; and it may be ſhewn forth to others by the fruits of it, works of righteouſneſs: but here it ſeems to deſign acts of beneficence, communicating to the neceſſities of others, as flowing from faith; and theſe words are to be connected with ver. 4. as a part of the Apoſtle's prayers, as what is contained in the preceding verſe is the matter of his thankſgiving. And his prayer is, that ſuch a communication of good things, which ſprings from faith, may be effectual; to anſwer ſome very good purpoſes, the good of others, and the ſervice of the intereſt of Chriſt, and the glory of God; or, as the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, only by the change of one letter, that it may be evident; to which the Syriac verſion ſeems to incline, rendering it, that it may be fruitful in works; or ſhew itſelf in fruits of righteouſneſs, in works of mercy and kindneſs; and the Apoſtle's ſenſe is, that it might be more and more ſo: by the acknowledging of every good thing that is in you in Chriſt Jeſus; the meaning is, that every good thing that is in the ſaints, or among them, ſhould be acknowledged to come to them in and through Chriſt Jeſus, in whom all fulneſs of grace dwells, and from whom all is imparted; and that every good thing that is communicated, or done in faith, which is effectual to any good purpoſe, ſhould be owned as done by the grace and ſtrength of Chriſt, and be done to his ſaints, as if done to himſelf, and be directed to his glory: the phraſe, in you, reſpects not Philemon only, but Apphia, Archippus, and the church in Philemon's houſe; the Arabic verſion reads, in us.

Ver. 7. For we have great joy and conſolation in thy love, &c.] In the expreſſions and acts of it to the poor ſaints; for which reaſon the Apoſtle gives thanks for it before; and it is a pleaſure and comfort to an ingenuous mind, though it is not in his power to do good to the poor ſaints himſelf, to ſee that others have both abilities, and a heart to relieve them: becauſe the bowels of the ſaints are refreſhed by thee, brother; meaning, not only that their bellies were filled with food, for the phraſe is uſed in ver. 20. where that cannot be intended; but their hearts were filled with gladneſs, the load upon their ſpirits, the preſſures upon their minds were removed, and they had an inward pleaſure in their ſouls, and reſt, refreſhment, and comfort, thro the liberal communications of Philemon to them; who did what he did chearfully, that ſo it did their ſouls good, as well as their bodies; and in doing which, he acted the part of a brother in Chriſt.

Ver. 8. Wherefore tho' I might be much bold in Chriſt, &c.] Or uſe much freedom of ſpeech in the name of Chriſt, as an ambaſſador of his, and great authority as his Apoſtle, which was given him for edification: to enjoin thee that which is convenient; which became him as a believer in Chriſt, and a miniſter of the Goſpel; which was his duty, and was obligatory upon him, agreeable to the doctrines of Chriſt; who taught men to love their enemies, to be reconciled to their brethren, that had offended them, eſpecially when they repented; and therefore it was fit and proper he ſhould receive his ſervant again, ſince God had called him by his grace, and had given him repentance for his ſins: upon this foot the Apoſtle could have commanded him, as he did in other caſes, 2 Theſſ. iii. 6, 12. but he choſe not to addreſs him in an authoritative way, but by way of intreaty, as follows.

Ver. 9. Yet for love's ſake I rather beſeech thee, &c.] Either for the ſake of the great love which the Apoſtle bore to Philemon, being, as he calls him, his dearly beloved, he took this method; or becauſe of Philemon's great love to all the ſaints before mentioned, he was encouraged to proceed in this manner, hoping on that account to have ſucceſs; or it may be, it was for the ſake of that love with which God had loved him, and which he puts him in mind of, to engage him to grant his requeſt; that ſeeing God the Father had loved him, and choſen him in Chriſt; and Chriſt had loved him, and redeemed him by his blood; and the Holy Spirit had loved him, and ſanctified him by his grace, that therefore he would receive his ſervant again for the ſake of this love; who alſo was the object of it; ſee Rom. xv. 30. The Alexandrian copy reads, for, or through neceſſity, as if neceſſity obliged him to this requeſt. Being ſuch an one as Paul the aged; or the elder; meaning either in office, which he might mention with this view, that his requeſt might have the greater weight and influence; or elſe in years, and which he might obſerve, partly to move compaſſion in Philemon, and that he might not grieve him in his old age, as he would, ſhould he deny his requeſt; and partly to ſuggeſt to him, that the advice he was about to give him, to receive his ſervant, did not come from a raw young man, but from one well ſtricken in years, with whom were wiſdom and underſtanding; and therefore not to be treated with neglect or contempt: how old the Apoſtle was at this time, is not certain; he could not be leſs than ſixty years of age, or he would not have called himſelf an old man; for no man was ſo called by the Jews, but he that was at the age of ſixty [b]. Some editions of the Vulgate Latin verſion, as that of the London Polyglot bible, read, ſeeing thou art ſuch an one as Paul the aged; as if Philemon was an old man, as the Apoſtle was, and therefore he would not lay his commands upon him, as an ancient man might upon a young man, but rather intreat him as equal to him in years: but then it follows, which does not appear to be true of Philemon, or that he was in the like caſe, and now alſo a priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt; which is obſerved with the ſame view as in ver. 1. ſee the note there.

Ver. 10. I beſeech thee for my ſon Oneſimus, &c.] Now he comes to the requeſt itſelf, and mentions by name the perſon on whoſe account he makes it, and whom he calls his ſon; not merely becauſe of his affection to him, but becauſe he really was his ſpiritual father; he had been the happy inſtrument of his converſion, and he was his ſon according to the common faith, or in a ſpiritual ſenſe: hence it follows, whom I have begotten in my bonds; which is to be underſtood of a begetting again, or of regeneration; not as if the Apoſtle was the efficient cauſe of it, as the nature of it ſhows, it being expreſſed by mens being born from above; by their being quickened, when dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; by being made new creatures, and transformed in the renewing of their minds; by Chriſt being formed in them, and by a partaking of the divine nature; and who is ſufficient for theſe things? beſides, it is expreſly denied to be of man, but is always aſcribed to God, Father, Son, and Spirit; but as being the inſtrument and means of it, thro' the preaching of the Goſpel, the word of truth, by which God of his own will, and by the power of his grace, regenerated this perſon: and this is ſaid to be done in his bonds; by which it appears, that the word of God was not bound, but had a free courſe, and was glorified, and the bonds of the Apoſtle were the means of the ſpread of it; and that it was attended with great power, to the converſion of ſouls: and this circumſtance is mentioned to engage Philemon to regard the intreaty of the Apoſtle; he had been the inſtrument of begetting many ſouls to Chriſt; but this man was begotten by him in his bonds, when he was a priſoner, and ſo was peculiarly dear to him.

Ver. 11. Which in time paſt was to thee unprofitable, &c.] Yea, injurious and hurtful; one that was an eye-ſervant, that loitered away his time, and ſet an ill example to fellow-ſervants; and not only ſo, but embezzled his maſter's goods, and robbed him, and run away from him. So every man, in his ſtate of unregeneracy, is an unprofitable man, Rom. iii. 12. unprofitable to God, to men, and to themſelves; their ſins will not profit them, tho' they may promiſe them liberty and pleaſure; nor will their riches, ſhould they loſe their own ſouls; nor their own righteouſneſs, in the buſineſs of juſtification and ſalvation; nor even an outward profeſſion of religion: yea, they are not only ſaid to be unprofitable, but are repreſented as good for nothing; hence they are compared to diſhonourable and unſerviceable veſſels; to briars and thorns, and the earth which brings them; to the ſalt that has loſt its ſavour, and is fit neither for the land, nor for the dunghil; to rotten figs, to chaff, and droſs of metals: yea, they are hurtful and injurious, to themſelves, on whom they bring ruin and deſtruction; to others, to wicked men, whom they more and more corrupt, and harden in ſin; and to good men, whom they grieve; and alſo to the intereſt and glory of God, whoſe laws they tranſgreſs, and againſt whom they ſin, affront his juſtice, and provoke the eyes of his glory. But now profitable to thee and to me; that is, he was now likely to be ſo, to be profitable to Philemon, as a ſervant, and to the Apoſtle as a miniſtring brother. Some think there is in this an alluſion to his name Oneſimus, which ſignifies profitable; before he did not anſwer to his name, but now he was a true Oneſimus, really a profitable perſon; grace of an unprofitable man, makes a profitable one. Such an one is profitable to himſelf; his godlineſs is gain unto him, it having both the promiſe of this life, and of that which is to come; and he is profitable to others, if he has gifts qualifying him for the public work of the miniſtry, as Oneſimus ſeems to have had; then he is made and becomes very uſeful to many for conviction, converſion, comfort, and edification; and if only a private believer, he is often profitable to others, by relating the work of God upon his ſoul; he is ſerviceable to the intereſt of Chriſt, for the ſupport of the miniſtry, and ſupply of the poor; he is uſeful by his good examples, and prayers, in the neighbourhood, town, city, or nation, in which he dwells. This argument from profit, the Apoſtle knew would be an engaging one.

[b] Pirke Abot, c. 5. §. 21.

Ver. 12. Whom I have ſent again, &c.] From Rome to Coloſſe, or to Philemon, where-ever he was, along with this Epiſtle: thou therefore receive him that is mine own bowels; meaning his ſon, who, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, came out of his bowels, to whom he ſtood in the relation of a ſpiritual father; ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, as my ſon, ſo receive him; ſee Gen. xv. 4. 2 Sam. xvi. 11. and for whom he had a moſt ſtrong affection, and tender regard; his bowels earned for him, and he ſuggeſts by this expreſſion, that ſhould he reject him, it would give him the utmoſt pain and uneaſineſs; and he ſhould be obliged to cry out, as the prophet Jeremy did, my bowels, my bowels, I am pained at the very heart, Jer. iv. 19. wherefore he entreats him to receive him again into his houſe, and family, into his ſervice, and into his heart and affections, where the Apoſtle had received him.

Ver. 13. Whom I would have retained with me, &c.] At Rome, where the Apoſtle was a priſoner: that in thy ſtead he might have miniſtred unto me in the bonds of the Goſpel; the Apoſtle was in bonds, not for any crime, for any immorality he had been guilty of, but for the ſake of the Goſpel, for profeſſing and preaching that; for this he was an ambaſſador in bonds, as he elſewhere ſays, Eph. vi. 20. Now he would have kept Oneſimus with him, either to have waited upon him, in his bonds, and to have provided for him the neceſſaries of life; or to have aſſiſted him in the miniſtration of the word, in the room of Philemon, who had he been there, would have been employed in ſuch ſervice; ſo that if the Apoſtle had retained him, he would have been acting not for himſelf, but in the room of his maſter, and doing what he ſhould have done, had he been on the ſpot. This the Apoſtle obſerves to prevent an objection, that might have been made; that ſince Oneſimus was become ſo profitable to him, why did he ſend him back? why did he not keep him for his own ſervice? this he obviates and removes, by ſignifying he ſhould have done it, but for the following reaſon.

Ver. 14. But without thy mind would I do nothing, &c.] Which ſhows great modeſty and humility in the Apoſtle, that tho' as ſuch he had an authority, which he could have uſed, as well as had underſtanding and judgment how to have uſed it without conſulting Philemon, or having his ſenſe of this affair, yet choſe to conſult him: and it alſo ſhows the ſtrict regard the Apoſtle had to equity and juſtice, that he would do nothing with another man's ſervant without his conſent; he would not ſeem to alienate, or engroſs another man's right and property, whatever power he might have, as an Apoſtle, to have retained Oneſimus as a miniſter to him. That thy benefit ſhould not be as it were of neceſſity, but willingly; that is, that his goodneſs in forgiving his ſervant, and renouncing all claim and property in him, and admitting him to continue in the ſervice of the Apoſtle, might not look like a forced thing; but that it might appear to be a voluntary action, when he ſhould of himſelf return him, after he had been thus ſent to him, and received by him.

Ver. 15. For perhaps he therefore departed for a ſeaſon, &c.] The Apoſtle in this clauſe ſeems to ſoften this buſineſs of Oneſimus in running away from his maſter; he calls it not a running away, but a departure, an abſence from him, and that but for a little while; and ſuggeſts, that the hand of God might be in it; that there was an over-ruling providence that attended it, ſuch as was in Joſeph's going down into Egypt; and that this ſeparation of Oneſimus from his maſter, for a ſhort time, was in order that they ſhould come together again, and never part more, as follows: that thou ſhouldſt receive him for ever; or during life, referring to the law in Exod. xxi. 6. or to all eternity, ſince they were in the ſame ſpiritual relation, partakers of the ſame grace, and had a right to the ſame heavenly inheritance, and ſhould be together with Chriſt for evermore.

Ver. 16. Not now as a ſervant, &c.] That is, not only as a ſervant, for a ſervant he was, and was to be received as ſuch; his call by grace had not diſſolved the civil relation that was between him and his maſter, tho' it had added to it ſomething that was above it, and greater than it: but above a ſervant; in a higher condition, as the Arabic verſion renders it, than a ſervant; not barely conſidered in that relation, but as being in one much preferable to it: a brother beloved, ſpecially to me; a brother in Chriſt, and to be beloved on that account, as he was eſpecially by the Apoſtle, who had been the inſtrument of his converſion; ſee Col. iv. 9. But how much more unto thee, both in the fleſh and in the Lord; both in a natural and civil ſenſe, as being of the ſame nation and country, and as being part of his family, his ſervant, and now become an uſeful and profitable one; and, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, being in the Lord, belonging to the Lord Jeſus, to that family which is named of him, being a fellow-citizen with the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God, and therefore muſt be doubly dear to him.

Ver. 17. If thou count me therefore a partner, &c.] A companion and friend, who reckon each other's affairs and intereſt their own: the word anſwers to חבר, a word often uſed in Talmudic writings, for an aſſociate of the doctors or wiſe men: here it may mean alſo a partner both in grace, and in the miniſtry; one that ſhared in the ſame gifts and graces of the Spirit of God, and one that was to be a partaker of the inheritance with the ſaints in light: now if Philemon reckoned the Apoſtle ſuch an one, as he doubtleſs did, as being engaged in the ſame common cauſe, and a partaker of the ſame common faith, and intereſted in the ſame common ſalvation; then he intreats him on account of Oneſimus, in the following manner, receive him as myſelf; intimating, that he was as dear to him as himſelf; that he loved him as his own ſoul; and that he ſhould take whatever reſpect and affection were ſhown to him, as done to himſelf; and that he would have him receive him into his houſe, his heart and affections, as he would receive him the Apoſtle himſelf, ſhould he come to him.

Ver. 18. If he hath wronged thee, &c.] By ſquandring away his time, ſpoiling his work, or corrupting his fellow-ſervants: or oweth thee ought; by embezzling his maſter's goods, robbing him of his money, and running away from his ſervice: put that on mine account; ſignifying that he would be anſwerable for all, and make good all debts and damages.

Ver. 19. I Paul have written it, with mine own hand, &c.] Meaning either this Epiſtle, which being ſhort, he uſed no amanuenſis, but wrote it all himſelf, and which might be taken as an engagement to do what he promiſed; or elſe a bill, a promiſſory note, written with his own hand, which he ſent along with Oneſimus, by which he laid himſelf under obligation to give Philemon full ſatisfaction in every thing, in which he had been injured by his ſervant; adding, I will repay it: this was not an ironical expreſſion, nor a piece of vanity in the Apoſtle; he ſpoke ſeriouſly, and heartily, and meant what he ſaid; and though his circumſtances were often ſo mean, that he was forced to work with his own hands to miniſter to his neceſſities; yet ſuch was his intereſt in the churches, and ſuch their obligation to him, on account of his perſonal and uſeful miniſtrations to them, that he could eaſily raiſe a ſum of money among them, upon any emergent occaſion; ſo that Philemon had a good ſurety, and paymaſter of the Apoſtle: and this ſhows his great humility to be a bondſman for a ſervant, and to make good damages and debts, brought on in a ſcandalous manner; as alſo that ſuretiſhip in ſome caſes is lawful, tho' it ought to be cautiouſly, and for very good reaſons, entred into: and this engagement of the Apoſtle for Oneſimus, bears ſome reſemblance with, and may ſerve to illuſtrate the ſuretiſhip of Chriſt, for his people, they, and Oneſimus, being much in a like condition; as he was an unprofitable and run-away ſervant, ſo they are all gone out of the way, and together become unprofitable; and Chriſt engaged with his Father to bring them back again, and ſet them before him; and by his ſufferings and death has brought them nigh, which were afar off: as he had wronged his maſter and was indebted to him, ſo they have injured the law of God, affronted his juſtice, and incurred his diſpleaſure; and having owed to him more than ten thouſand talents, and having nothing to pay, Chriſt engaged to ſatisfy law and juſtice, to make reconciliation for them, and pay all their debts; all which he has accordingly done; their ſins have been placed to his account, imputed to him, and charged upon him; and he has bore them, and the puniſhment due to them, and ſo has ſatisfied for them, and reſtored that which he took not away. Albeit I do not ſay to thee, how thou oweſt unto me, even thine own ſelf beſides; having reſpect to his converſion, which he was the happy inſtrument of; the Apoſtle was his ſpiritual father, and he was his ſon, according to the common faith; he had been the inſtrument of ſaving his ſoul from death; he had been the means of that in the hand of God, which all his riches, and the riches of his friends and relations, could never have procured: the ſalvation of his ſoul, his better part, was inſtrumentally owing to him, and ſo his whole ſelf; and therefore, what favour might he not aſk of him? and what was it he could, or ſhould, deny him? this the Apoſtle introduces in a very artificial manner, and does not inſiſt upon it, but ſuggeſts, that ſhould he forgive the injuries and debts, he had took upon him to make ſatisfaction for, it would not be an equivalent to the debt he owed to him. From hence may be obſerved, how greatly obliged regenerated perſons are to thoſe, who have been the means and inſtruments of their converſion.

Ver. 20. Yea, brother, let me have joy of thee in the Lord, &c.] Tho' the Apoſtle was his ſpiritual father, having been the inſtrument of his converſion, yet he calls him his brother, as being a partaker of the ſame grace, and a miniſter of the ſame Goſpel; and intimates to him, that ſhould he grant his requeſt, and receive his ſervant again, it would give him great joy and pleaſure, and that not of a carnal, but of a ſpiritual kind, even joy in the Lord; he ſhould rejoice in the preſence of the Lord, and before him, concerning him; he ſhould rejoice in his faith in the Lord, and love for him, and obedience to him; all which would be diſcovered in ſuch a conduct: the Syriac verſion renders it, as an aſſurance to himſelf, I ſhall be refreſhed by thee in our Lord; not doubting, but that he would gratify him, in the thing he aſked of him, which would be a refreſhment to him; the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, may I enjoy thee in the Lord; meaning not his company and preſence, either in this world, or in the world to come; but that he might enjoy or receive the favour from him he had petitioned him for, for the Lord's ſake; the Arabic verſion renders it, as a reaſon why he ſhould do it, I have been profitable to thee in the Lord; confirming what he had ſaid before, that he owed himſelf to him; he having been uſeful to him in bringing him to the knowledge of Chriſt, and faith in him; and the Ethiopic verſion refers it to a promiſe, I will repay in our Lord; in ſpiritual things in our Lord, if not in things temporal: refreſh my bowels in the Lord; or in Chriſt, as the Alexandrian copy, the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read; and by his bowels, he either means Oneſimus, as in ver. 12. who, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, came forth out of his bowels; or elſe himſelf, his ſoul, his ſpirit, his inward parts; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, refreſh my ſoul; and the ſenſe is, that he deſired in the Lord, and for his ſake, that he would receive Oneſimus again, which would give him an inward pleaſure, and refreſh his ſpirit; and indeed he intimates, that nothing could be more chearing and reviving to him.

Ver. 21. Having confidence in thy obedience, &c.] In his obedience of faith to Chriſt, and his Goſpel; he having been made willing in the day of his power to ſerve him, as well as to be ſaved by him; and being conſtrained by his love, and the Spirit of Chriſt having wrought in him both to will, and to do of his good pleaſure: I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt alſo do more than I ſay; the knowledge the Apoſtle had of Philemon's chearful obedience to Chriſt in all the parts of duty, encouraged him to write to him, on this head; believing that he would even do more than he had deſired of him.

Ver. 22. But withal prepare me alſo a lodging, &c.] Not that the Apoſtle expected or deſired any grand apartment to be fitted up for him; a room with ſuch furniture as the Shunamite provided for the man of God, was ſufficient for him, and what he would have been entirely contented with; but his view in this was, to let Philemon know, that he hoped to be releaſed from his bonds, and that he might expect to ſee him; and this he hinted to him, in order to ſtir him up to receive his ſervant ſooner, and the more readily; who otherwiſe might have been indifferent to it, and negligent of it, thinking he ſhould never ſee the Apoſtle's face any more. For I truſt, that thro' your prayers, I ſhall be given you; to miniſter in the Goſpel again among them: the Apoſtle was a man of prayer himſelf, and he had a very great regard to the prayers of others, and often deſired an intereſt in them; that he might perform his miniſterial work as it ſhould be; that he might have ſucceſs in it; and that he might be delivered from the unbelieving Jews, and from wicked and unreaſonable men; and he had ſome ſecret hope and truſt in his own mind, that thro' the prayers of the ſaints, he ſhould be delivered from his bonds, and go up and down preaching the Goſpel as heretofore: he doubtleſs was accquainted with the caſe of Peter, for whom prayer was made inceſſantly by the church, when in priſon, and he had deliverance; however, he knew that the prayers of the ſaints availed much with God; but whether this hope and expectation of his were anſwered, is a matter of doubt and queſtion: ſome think he was releaſed, and went into ſeveral parts, and preached the Goſpel, and then was taken up again, and committed to priſon, and ſuffered under Nero, ſome years after; and others think not.

Ver. 23. There ſalute thee Epaphras, &c.] Who was a Coloſſian, and miniſter of the church at Coloſſe, and ſo might be well known to Philemon, who ſeems to to have been of the ſame place and church; ſee Col. i. 7. and iv. 12, 13. his name is omitted in the Ethiopic verſion: my fellow priſoner in Chriſt Jeſus; this good man, and miniſter of Chriſt, might have been ſent by the Coloſſians, as Epaphroditus was by the Philippians, to the Apoſtle at Rome, to pay him a viſit, and comfort and aſſiſt him under his afflictions; and ſtaying and preaching the Goſpel there, was committed to priſon, or was laid in bonds, as the Apoſtle was, and upon the ſame account; namely, for the ſake of Chriſt, and his Goſpel. For by this time Nero began to perſecute the chriſtians, which he did in the better and more moderate part of his reign; for among ſeveral things for which he is commended by the hiſtorian [b], this is one; "Afflicti ſuppliciis chriſtiani, genus hominum ſuperſtitionis novæ ac maleficæ; the chriſtians were puniſhed, a ſort of men of a new and bad religion:" and Epaphras being at Rome, when this perſecution broke out, was taken up and put in priſon, as were alſo Ariſtarchus, Col. iv. 10. and Timothy, Heb. xiii. 23.

Ver. 24. Marcus, Ariſtarchus, Demas, Lucas, &c.] Marcus was Barnabas's ſiſter's ſon, the ſon of that Mary, in whoſe houſe the church met, and prayed for Peter when in priſon; whoſe name was John Mark, whom Saul and Barnabas took along with them to Antioch, and from thence, in their travels, to other parts; but he leaving them at Pamphylia, was the occaſion of a contention between Saul and Barnabas afterwards, when returned to Antioch; the latter inſiſting on his going with them again, and the former refuſing it on account of his departure from them; which contention roſe ſo high as to part upon it, Acts xii. 12, 25. and xiii. 5, 13. and xv. 37, 38, 39. tho' after this the Apoſtle was reconciled to him; he approving himſelf to be a faithful and uſeful miniſter of the Goſpel; and therefore he deſires Timothy to bring him along with him, 2 Tim. iv. 11. and if this Epiſtle was wrote after that, he was now come to him; however, he was now with him, whether before or after: Ariſtarchus was a Macedonian of Theſſalonica; or very likely the Apoſtle had been the inſtrument of converting him there, and who followed him from thence, and attended him wherever he went; he was with him in the uproar raiſed by Demetrius at Epheſus, and accompanied him into Aſia; went with him in his voyage to Rome, and was now a fellow-priſoner there, Acts xix. 29. and xx. 4. and xxvii. 2. Col. iv. 10. Demas is the ſame with him, who is mentioned in 2 Tim. iv. 10. and if this Epiſtle is later than that, it ſhould ſeem that he was reſtored from his fall, and was returned to the Apoſtle. Lucas is the ſame with Luke the Evangeliſt, the beloved phyſician, the brother whoſe praiſe was in all the churches, and a conſtant companion of the Apoſtle, in his travels; and who wrote the book called, The Acts of the Apoſtles: theſe the Apoſtle ſtiles, my fellow-labourers, being all miniſters of the Goſpel; and this ſhows the Apoſtle's great humility, ſo to call them, when they were far from being on an equal foot with him in office, gifts, or uſefulneſs: and the chriſtian ſalutations of theſe perſons are ſent to Philemon, with this view, to engage him the more to attend to the Apoſtle's requeſt, in which they all joined.

Ver. 25. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with your ſpirit. Amen.] Not with his ſpirit only, but with the ſpirit of Apphia and Archippus, to whom alſo the Epiſtle was ſent; and therefore the word is in in the plural number; and the Syriac verſion adds pertinently enough, my brethren: the ſalutation is the ſame as in all the Epiſtles; the form of it agrees with Gal. vi. 18. the ſubſcription of the Epiſtle is, written from Rome, to Philemon, by Oneſimus, a ſervant; that is, it was written by the Apoſtle Paul, when at Rome, and ſent to Philemon by the hands of Oneſimus, who was his ſervant, and upon whoſe account the letter was written.

AN
EXPOSITION, &c.

The Epiſtle of PAUL the Apoſtle to the HEBREWS.

THAT this Epiſtle was written very early appears from hence, that it was imitated by Clement of Rome, in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, who took whole ſentences out of it; and therefore it could not be a new work, as Euſebius[a] obſerves: it has been denied to be authentic by ſome hereticks, as the Marcionites and Arrians, but has been generally received as ſuch by the orthodox: ſome indeed doubted of it, becauſe it was not received by the Roman church, as an Epiſtle of the Apoſtle Paul[b]; tho' others, who have thought it was not his, as Origen, yet looked upon it as genuine[c]. It has been aſcribed to different perſons, as to Barnabas, to Apollos, to Luke the Evangeliſt, and to Clement of Rome, but without any juſt reaſon. Clement of Alexandria, a very ancient writer, aſſerts it to be the Apoſtle Paul's[d]; and his name ſtands in the title of it, in all R. Stephens's exemplars, and in all Beza's copies, excepting one, and ſo it does in the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions; and that it is his, is highly probable from the agreement there is between this, and other Epiſtles of his; compare ch. i. 2, 3. with Col. i. 15, 16. and ch. v. 12, 13, 14. with 1 Cor. iii. 1, 2. and ch. xii. 1. with 1 Cor. ix. 24. and ch. xiii. 7, 17. with 1 Theſſ. v. 11, 12. and ch. xiii. 9. with Eph. iv. 14. and ch. xiii. 18. with 2 Cor. i. 12. and ch. xiii. 20. with Rom. xv. 13. and xvi. 20. 1 Theſſ. v. 23. and many other places; and alſo from the order and method of it, firſt treating of doctrines, and then proceeding to practical exhortations, which is the common form of Paul's Epiſtles: to which may be added various circumſtances; as that it was written from Italy, where Paul was a priſoner; and the mention the author of it makes of his bonds, and of Timothy, as well known unto him, who was Paul's companion; beſides, the token of his Epiſtles appears in this, namely, his uſual ſalutation to the churches; ſee ch. xiii. 23, 24, 25. But above all, the teſtimony of the Apoſtle Peter is greatly in favour of its being his, 2 Pet. iii. 15, 16. from whence it clearly appears, that the Apoſtle Paul did write an Epiſtle to the Hebrews; for to them Peter wrote; ſee 1 Pet. i. 1. 2 Pet. iii. 1. and what Epiſtle could it be but this? and what Peter refers to is to be found in it; ſee ch. x. 25, 36, 37. and which is written with great wiſdom; in none of Paul's Epiſtles is there a greater diſcovery of his knowledge of divine myſteries, than in this; and in it alſo are things hard to be underſtood, ch. v. 11. The common objections to its being his are, its not bearing his name, the diverſity of its ſtile, and the author of it ſeeming to be not an Apoſtle, but a diſciple of the Apoſtle's: as to his not ſetting his name to it, the reaſons might be, becauſe he was the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, and not ſo much of the Jews; and becauſe of the prejudice of the Jews againſt him, both believers and unbelievers; wherefore had his name been to it, it might have prevented the uſefulneſs of it to the one, and have ſtirred up the rage of the other: as to the difference of ſtile, different ſubjects require a different ſtile; and yet in many things there is a likeneſs, as before obſerved; and as to the author's not being an Apoſtle, which is concluded from ch. ii. 3. the word us there is to be underſtood of the believing Hebrews, the diſciples of the Apoſtle, and not incluſive of the author, by a figurative way of ſpeaking often uſed by Paul; and beſides, the Apoſtle received a confirmation of the Goſpel from Ananias, who might have been an hearer of Chriſt, tho' he was at firſt taught it by Chriſt himſelf; add to this, that whoever was the writer of it, it was written before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and when ſeveral of the Apoſtles were living, and therefore he could never deſign by thoſe words to put himſelf in a ſucceeding generation. The perſons to whom this Epiſtle was written were Hebrews, or Jews; ſo called, as ſome think, from the name of Abraham, the father of them; or, as others, from his paſſing over the river Euphrates, when he came out of Chaldea into Paleſtine. So Abram the Hebrew, in Gen. xiv. 13. is by the Septuagint rendered, περάτης, one that paſſes over, taking it to come from the word עבר, which ſignifies to paſs over; with this compare Joſh. xxiv. 3. and this is the opinion of ſome of the Jewiſh Rabbins[e]; tho' it ſeems rather that they were called ſo from Heber, who lived at the time of the confuſion of languages; ſee Gen. x. 21. Numb. xxiv. 24. And this is the ſenſe of many Jewiſh writers, ancient and modern, of Joſephus[f], of Jonathan ben Uzziel[g], of *R. And theſe were the Hebrews that dwelt in the land of Judea, and particularly at Jeruſalem; nor were they the unbelieving inhabitants of thoſe parts, but believers in Chriſt, who were embodied in a Goſpel church-ſtate. It was a tradition of the antients[l], that this Epiſtle was written originally in Hebrew, and was tranſlated into Greek, either by Luke the Evangeliſt, or by Clement of Rome. But for this there is no foundation; no Hebrew copy can be produced; Munſter's edition of it in Hebrew, is a tranſlation from the Greek, in which it was, no doubt, originally written, that being the common language, and well known to the Jews; and which appears from the citations in it out of the Old Teſtament, which are made, not from the Hebrew text, but from the Greek verſion; and beſides, had it been wrote in Hebrew, the writer would not have interpreted the Hebrew words, Melchizedek and Salem, as he does, in ch. vii. 2. The time of its writing was before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which in this book is ſignified by the coming of the Lord, and the day approaching; and after Timothy was releaſed from priſon, and ſome time within the two years of his own impriſonment at Rome, when he hoped for a releaſe, as his Epiſtles to the Philippians, and to Philemon ſhow. Dr. Lightfoot places it in the year 62, and in the eighth of Nero. And the occaſion and deſign of it is, to ſet forth the ſuperior excellency of Chriſt to angels and men, to Moſes, to Joſhua, to Aaron, and his ſons, and the preferableneſs of his prieſthood and ſacrifice, to the Levitical prieſthood, and its ſacrifices; to teach the Hebrews the true knowledge of the myſteries of their law; to point out to them the deſign, uſe, and abrogation of its ceremonies; and to prepare them for what afflictions and perſecutions they would be called to endure for Chriſt; and to exhort them to perſeverance, and to ſtrengthen them againſt apoſtacy, as well as to inſtruct them in the various duties of religion.

CHAP. I.

THE intention of this Epiſtle being to demonſtrate the ſuperior excellency of the Goſpel revelation to the legal one, the Apoſtle begins with the divine author of it, in which they both agree, and obſerves that in other things they differ. The revelation under the law was made in times paſt, the Goſpel revelation in theſe laſt days; the former was made to the Jewiſh fathers, that were of old, the latter to the then preſent Apoſtles; the one was was made at ſundry times, and divers manners, the other was made at once, and in one way; the one was made by the prophets of the Lord, the other by his own ſon, ver. 1, 2. and therefore the latter muſt be the more excellent; in proof of which the author enlarges on the character of the Son of God, with reſpect to his perſon, office, and glory; ſhewing that he is heir of all things, the maker of the worlds, of the ſame nature and glory with his Father; is omnipotent, and upholds all things by the word of his power; is the high-prieſt of his people, who has made ſatisfaction for their ſins, and purged them from them, and is now at the right hand of God, ver. 2, 3. He goes on to prove that he is more excellent than the angels, by a variety of arguments, and theſe ſupported by teſtimonies from the ſcriptures; as that he has a more excellent name than any of them, being called the Son of God, ver. 4, 5. which is proved from Pſ. ii. 7. 2 Sam. vii. 12—16. that he is the object of the worſhip of angels, ver. 6. which is required of them, Pſ. xcvii. 7. that he is their maker and creator, ver. 7. which appears from Pſ. civ. 4. that he has an everlaſting kingdom, is a righteous king, and is richly anointed above his fellows, ver. 8, 9. which is the ſenſe of ſome paſſages in Pſ. xlv. 6, 7. and that he is the founder and former of the heavens, and of the earth, and will endure when they ſhall not, ver. 10, 11, 12. which is confirmed by teſtimonies out of Pſ. cii. 25, 26, 27. that he ſits at the right hand of God, where none of the angels were ever admitted, ver. 13. as is clear from Pſ. cx. 1. and beſides, the angels, as they are miniſters made by him, they are ſent out from him to wait on his people, the heirs of ſalvation, and miniſter to them, and therefore he muſt be greater than they, ver. 14.

Ver. 1. God who at ſundry times, and in divers manners, &c.] The Apoſtle begins the Epiſtle with an account of the revelation God has made of his mind and will in former times; the author of this revelation is God, not eſſentially, but perſonally conſidered, even God the Father, as diſtinguiſhed from his Son in the next verſe; for the revelation under the Old Teſtament is divine, as well as that under the New; in this they both agree, in whatſoever elſe they differ: and this revelation was made at ſeveral times, at different ſeaſons, and to different perſons; and conſiſted of a variety of things relating to doctrine and worſhip, and concerning the Meſſiah, his perſon and office; of whom, at different times, there were gradual diſcoveries made, both before and after the giving of the law, from the beginning of the world, or the giving forth of the firſt promiſe, and in the times of the patriarchs, of Moſes, David, Iſaiah, and other prophets: and this was delivered in various manners; ſometimes by angels; ſometimes in a dream; at other times by a viſion; and ſometimes by Urim and Thummim: and this he ſpake in time paſt unto the fathers by the prophets; by Moſes, and other ſucceeding prophets, as David, Iſaiah, Jeremy, Micah, Zechariah, Malachi, and others; who were ſent to the Jewiſh fathers, the anceſtors of the people of the Jews, to whom they propheſied and declared the will of God, as they were moved and inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt: and the Apoſtle ſuggeſts, by this way of ſpeaking, that it was a long time ſince God ſpake to this people; for prophecy had ceaſed ever ſince the times of Malachi, for the ſpace of three hundred years; and this time paſt includes the whole Old Teſtament diſpenſation, from the beginning to the end of it, or of prophecy in it.

Ver. 2. Hath in theſe laſt days ſpoken unto us by his ſon, &c.] This is the Goſpel revelation, or the revelation in the Goſpel diſpenſation; which tho' it comes from the ſame author the other does, yet in many things differs from it, and is preferable to it; and indeed the general deſign of this Epiſtle is to ſhew the ſuperior excellency of the one to the other; the former was delivered out in time paſt, but this in theſe laſt days: the Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, and ſeveral other copies, read, in the laſt of theſe days; perfectly agreeable to the phraſe, באחרית הימים, uſed in Gen. xlix. 1. Num. xxiv. 14. Iſ. ii. 2. to which the Apoſtle refers, and in which places, the days of the Meſſiah are intended; and it is a rule with the Jews [m], that where-ever the phraſe, the laſt days, is mentioned, the days of the Meſſiah are deſigned: and they are to be underſtood not of the laſt days of the natural world, but of the Jewiſh world and ſtate; indeed, the times of the Meſſiah, or Goſpel-diſpenſation, may be called the laſt days of the natural world, according to the tradition of the houſe of Elias; which teaches, that the duration of the world will be ſix thouſand years, and divides it into three parts, the laſt of which is aſſigned to the Meſſiah, thus; two thouſand years void, (or without the law) two thouſand years the law, and two thouſand years the days of the Meſſiah [n]: but it is beſt to underſtand this of the laſt days of the Moſaic œconomy, or Jewiſh diſpenſation; for the Meſſiah was to come before the Jewiſh civil and church-ſtates were diſſolved; before the ſceptre departed from Judah, and before the ſecond temple was deſtroyed; and he was to come at the end, or toward the cloſe of both theſe ſtates; and which is called the end, or ends of the world, Hab. ii. 3. Heb. ix. 26. 1 Cor. x. 11. and quickly after Jeſus, the true Meſſiah was come, an end was put to both theſe: from whence it may be obſerved, that the Meſſiah muſt be come; that the Moſaic œconomy, and Jewiſh worſhip, will never be reſtored again; that the Goſpel revelation being made in the laſt days, ought to be regarded the more, it being the laſt revelation God will ever make. Moreover, this differs from the former in this reſpect, that was made to the fathers, this to us; meaning either the Apoſtles in particular, or the Jews in general, to whom the Apoſtle is writing: this ſhows that the Goſpel revelation was firſt made to the Jews; and it being made to them perſonally, they were under great obligation to regard it; and that God had not caſt off his people; and that tho' he had greatly indulged their fathers, he had ſhowed greater favour to them, having provided ſome better thing for them: and there is a difference between theſe two revelations in the manner in which they were made; the former was at ſundry times, and in divers manners, the latter was made at once, and in one way; that was delivered out in parts, and by piece-meal, this the whole together; the whole mind and will of God, all his counſel, all that Chriſt heard of the Father; it is the faith that was once, and at once, delivered to the ſaints; and it has been given out in one way, by the preaching of the word: to which may be added, that formerly God ſpoke by many perſons, by the prophets, but now by one only, by his ſon; who is ſo not by creation, nor by adoption, nor by office, but by nature; being his own ſon, his proper ſon, begotten of him, of the ſame nature with him, and equal to him; and ſo infinitely preferable to the prophets: he is a ſon, and not a ſervant, in whom the Father is, and he in the Father, and in whom the Spirit is without meaſure; and God is ſaid to ſpeak by him, or in him, becauſe he was now incarnate; and what he ſays from God ſhould be attended to, both on account of the dignity of his perſon, as the Son of God, and becauſe of the authority he came with as mediator: whom he hath appointed heir of all things; which muſt be underſtood of him not as God, and creator; for as ſuch he has a right to all things; all that the Father has are his; the kingdom of nature and providence belongs to him, he being the former and maker of all things; but as mediator, who has all things committed to him, to ſubſerve the ends of his office; and has a kingdom appointed him, and which he will deliver up again: the word all may refer either to perſons or things; to perſons, not angels, good or bad, tho' both are ſubject to him, yet neither are called his inheritance; but elect men, who are his portion, and the lot of his inheritance; and to things relating to theſe perſons, and for their uſe and ſervice, in time, and to all eternity; as all temporal things, and all ſpiritual ones, the bleſſings and promiſes of the covenant of grace, the gifts and graces of the Spirit, and eternal glory and happineſs, the ſaints inheritance, who are joint-heirs with Chriſt. By whom alſo he made the worlds; this is ſaid in agreement with the notions of the Jews, and their way of ſpeaking, who make mention of three worlds, which they call, the upper world, (the habitation of God) the middle world, (the air) and the lower world [o], (the earth); and ſometimes they call them the world of angels, (where they dwell) the world of orbs, (where the ſun, moon, and ſtars are) and the world below [p], (on which we live); and it is frequent in their writings, and prayer-books [q], to call God, רבון כל העולמים, Lord of all worlds; ſee the note on ch. xi. 3. Theſe God made by his Son, not as an inſtrument, but as an efficient cauſe with him; for by him were all things made, whether viſible or inviſible; and the prepoſition by does not always denote inſtrumentality, but ſometimes efficiency; and is uſed of God the Father himſelf, and in this Epiſtle, ch. ii. 10.

Ver. 3. Who being the brightneſs of his glory, &c.] Or of glory; of God the Father, the God of glory, and who is glory itſelf; ſo called on account of his glorious nature and perfections; and becauſe of the glorious manifeſtations of them in his works of creation and providence, and in the various diſpenſations of his grace, and eſpecially in his Son; and becauſe he is the author of all glory, in the creatures, in the whole world, in Chriſt, as man and mediator, and in his own people. Now Chriſt is the brightneſs of this, as he is God; he has the ſame glorious nature and perfections, and the ſame glorious names, as Jehovah, the Lord of glory, &c. and the ſame glory, homage, and worſhip given him: the alluſion is to the ſun, and its beam or ray; ſo ſome render it, the ray of his glory; and may lead us to obſerve, that the Father and the Son are of the ſame nature, as the ſun and its ray; and that the one is not before the other, and yet diſtinct from each other, and cannot be divided or ſeparated one from another: ſo the phraſe, זין יקריה, the brightneſs of his glory, is uſed of the divine being, in the Chaldee paraphraſes [r]; ſee Wiſdom vii. 26. And the expreſs image of his perſon; this intends much the ſame as the other phraſe; namely, equality and ſameneſs of nature, and diſtinction of perſons; for if the Father is God, Chriſt muſt be ſo too; and if he is a perſon, his Son muſt be ſo likewiſe, or he can't be the expreſs image and character of him; ſee the note on Col. i. 15. And upholding all things by the word of his power; the Syriac verſion renders it, by the power of his word, to the ſame ſenſe, only inverting the words. The Targumiſt on 2 Chron. ii. 6. uſes a phraſe very much like this, of God, whom the heaven of heavens cannot contain; becauſe, adds he, סביל כלא בדרע גבורתיה, he bears, or ſuſtains all things by the arm of his power: and the words are to be underſtood not of the Father, upholding all things by his eſſential and powerful word, his Son; but of the Son himſelf, who upholds all creatures he has made; bears up the pillars of the univerſe; preſerves every creature in its being, and ſupports it, and ſupplies it with the neceſſaries of life; rules and governs all, and providentially orders and diſpoſes of all things in the world, and that by his all-powerful will; which makes it manifeſt, that he is truly and properly God, and a very fit perſon to be a prieſt, as follows: when he had by himſelf purged our ſins; the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions ſeem to refer this to God the Father, as if he, by Chriſt, made the expiation of ſin, and then cauſed him to ſit down at his right hand; but it belongs to the Son himſelf, who of himſelf, and by himſelf alone, and by the ſacrifice of himſelf, made atonement for the ſins of his people; which is meant by the purgation of them: he took their ſins upon himſelf, and bore them, and removed them far away, and utterly aboliſhed them, which the prieſts under the law could not do: and when he had ſo done, he ſat down on the right hand of the majeſty on high; by majeſty is meant God the Father, to whom majeſty belongs; who is clothed with it, and which is before him: and his right hand deſigns his power, greatneſs, and glory, and is expreſſive of the high honour Chriſt, as man, is poſſeſſed of; for his ſitting here denotes the glorious exaltation of him in human nature, after his ſufferings, and death, and reſurrection from the dead; and ſhows that he had done his work, and was accepted, and was now enjoying reſt and eaſe, honour and glory, in which he will continue; and the place of his ſeſſion, as well as of the habitation of God, at whoſe right hand he ſits, is on high, in the higheſt heavens.

Ver. 4. Being made ſo much better than the angels, &c.] Chriſt is ſo much better than the angels, as the creator, than the creature; as an independent being, than a dependent one; as he that bleſſes, than he that is bleſſed; as he that is worſhipped, than he that worſhips; as a king, than his ſubjects; as a maſter, than his ſervants; and as he that ſends, than he that is ſent: and Chriſt may be ſaid to be made ſo, when he was manifeſted and declared to be ſo; and he was actually preferr'd to them, and exalted above them in human nature, after he had expiated the ſins of his people, and when he was ſet down at the right hand of God, as in the latter part of the preceding verſe, with which theſe words ſtand connected; for in his ſtate of humiliation, and thro' his ſufferings and death, he was made lower than they; but when he was riſen from the dead, and aſcended to heaven, he was placed at the right hand of God, where none of them ever was, or ever will be: beſides, the phraſe, being made, ſignifies no more than that he was; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, and he was ſo much better than the angels; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion, he is ſo much better: and this is obſerved, to prove him to be more excellent than any creature, ſince he is preferr'd to the moſt excellent of creatures; and to ſhow, that the Goſpel diſpenſation is ſuperior to the legal diſpenſation, which was introduced by the miniſtration of angels; and to take off the Jews from the worſhip of angels, to which they were prone: and this doctrine of his could not be well denied by them, ſince it was the faith of the Jewiſh church, that the Meſſiah ſhould be preferr'd to the angels; for in their ancient writings they ſay of him, he ſhall be exalted above Abraham, he ſhall be lifted up above Moſes, and be higher than the miniſtring angels [s]: and that he is above them, appears from what follows, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they; which is that of the Son of God, a name peculiar to him; and which belongs to him in ſuch a ſenſe, as it does not to angels, as is evident from the following verſe: and tho' this name is not founded on his office, as mediator, but ariſes from his nature and relation to God; yet he was declared to be the Son of God, and it was made manifeſt, that this name of right belonged to him, upon the diſcharge of his office, at his reſurrection and aſcenſion to heaven; and therefore he is ſaid to obtain it by inheritance; or he appeared to inherit it of right, and that it was his poſſeſſion for evermore.

Ver. 5. For unto which of the angels ſaid he at any time, &c.] That is, he never ſaid to any of the angels, what he has ſaid to Chriſt; namely, what follows, thou art my ſon, this day have I begotten thee: for tho' angels are called the ſons of God, Job i. 6. and ii. 1. and xxxviii. 7. yet are never ſaid to be begotten by him; or, with his clauſe annexed to it, this day have I begotten thee; nor are they ever ſo called in a proper ſenſe, or in ſuch ſenſe as Chriſt is: this is ſaid to Chriſt, and of him, in Pſ. ii. 7. and that agreeable to the ſenſe of the Jewiſh church at this time, or the Apoſtle would never have produced it to the Hebrews in ſuch a manner; and not only the whole pſalm in general, but this verſe in particular, is owned by Jewiſh writers [t], both ancient and modern, to belong to the Meſſiah. Chriſt is the ſon of God, not by creation, nor by adoption, nor by office, but by nature; he is the true, proper, natural, and eternal Son of God; and as ſuch is owned and declared by Jehovah the Father, in theſe words; the foundation of which relation lies in the begetting of him; which refers not to his nature, either divine or human: not to his divine nature, which is common with the Father and Spirit; wherefore if his was begotten, theirs muſt be alſo, being the ſame undivided nature, common to all three; much leſs to his human nature, in which he is never ſaid to be begotten, but always to be made, and with reſpect to which he is without father: nor to his office, as mediator, in which he is not a ſon, but a ſervant; beſides, he was a ſon, previous to his being a prophet, prieſt, and king; and his office is not the foundation of his ſonſhip, but his ſonſhip is the foundation of his office, or by which that is ſupported, and which fits him for the performance of it: but it has reſpect to his divine perſon; for as in human generation, perſon begets perſon, and like begets like, ſo it is in divine generation; tho' tho' care muſt be taken to remove all imperfection from it, as diviſibility and multiplication of eſſence, priority and poſteriority, dependance, and the like; nor can the modus, or manner of it, be conceived, or explained by us: the date of it, to-day, deſigns eternity, as in Iſ. xliii. 13. which is one continued day, an everlaſting now; and this may be applied to any time and caſe, in which Chriſt is declared to be the Son of God; as at his incarnation, his baptiſm, his transfiguration on the mount, and his reſurrection from the dead, as it is in Acts xiii. 33. ſee Rom. i. 4. and at his aſcenſion to heaven, when he was made Lord and Chriſt, and his divine ſonſhip more manifeſtly appeared; which ſeems to be the time, and caſe, more eſpecially referred to here. And again, I will be to him a father, and he ſhall be to me a ſon; which words are taken from 2 Sam. vii. 14. and the ſenſe is, not that he ſhould be his ſon by adoption; or that he would be inſtead of a father to him; or that he ſhould be as dear to him as a ſon is to a father; but that he was really and properly ſo; and he would make it manifeſt, and own him as ſuch, as he did at Jordan's river, upon the mount, and at his reſurrection and aſcenſion; tho' the words are ſpoken of Solomon, as a type of Chriſt, they properly belong to the antitype, who is greater than Solomon.

Ver. 6. And again, when he bringeth the firſt-begotten into the world, &c.] By the firſt-begotten is meant Chriſt. This is a name given him in the Old Teſtament, and is what the Hebrews were acquainted with, and therefore the Apoſtle uſes it; it is in Pſ. lxxxix. 27. from whence it ſeems to be taken here, and which the ancient Jews [u] acknowledge is to be underſtood of the Meſſiah; who, as the Son of God, is the only-begotten of the Father, and was begotten from eternity, as before declared, and before any creature had a being, and therefore called the firſt-born of every creature, Col. i. 15. and is ſometimes ſtiled the firſt-begotten from the dead; he roſe the firſt in time, and is the firſt in cauſality and dignity: and he may be called the firſt-born, with reſpect to the ſaints, who are of the ſame nature with him, and are partakers of the divine nature, and are adopted into the family of God, tho' they are not in the ſame claſs of ſonſhip with him; and the bringing of him into the world may refer to his ſecond coming, for this ſeems agreeable from the natural order of the words, which may be rendered, when he ſhall bring again, &c. that is, a ſecond time, and from Pſ. xcvii. from whence the following words are cited; and from the glory he ſhall then have from the angels, who will come with him, and miniſter to him; and not to his reſurrection from the dead, when he was exalted above angels, principalities, and powers; tho' as we read the words, they ſeem to regard his firſt coming into this habitable world, at his incarnation and birth, when he was attended with angels, and worſhipped by them, according to the order of God the Father, as follows: he ſaith, and let all the angels of God worſhip him; theſe words are cited from Pſ. xcvii. 7. where the angels are called Elohim, Gods. So Aben Ezra on the place obſerves, that there are ſome (meaning their doctors) who ſay, that all the Gods are the angels; and Kimchi ſays, that the words are not imperative, but are in the paſt tenſe, inſtead of the future, all the angels have worſhipped him; that is, they ſhall worſhip him; as they have done, ſo they will do. According to our verſion, they are called upon to worſhip God's firſt-born, his only-begotten ſon, with a religious worſhip and adoration, even all of them, not one excepted; which ſhows, that Chriſt, as the firſt-begotten, is the Lord God, for he only is to be ſerved and worſhipped; and that if angels are to worſhip him, men ought; and that angels are not to be worſhipped, and that Chriſt is preferable to them; and the the whole ſets forth the excellency and dignity of his perſon. Philo the Jew [w] often calls the Logos, or Word of God, his firſt-begotten.

Ver. 7. And of the angels he ſaith, &c.] Or to the angels, as in the following verſe, to the ſon, which ſtands oppoſed to this; and the words ſaid to them, or of them, are found in Pſ. civ. 4. who maketh his angels ſpirits, and his miniſters a flame of fire: this cannot be underſtood of the wind and lightning, and of God's making theſe his meſſengers and miniſters to do his will; for ſuch a ſenſe is not ſuitable to the ſcope of the pſalm, from whence they are taken, nor to the order of the words in which they ſtand; for it is not ſaid, he makes ſpirits, or winds his angels, and flaming fire his miniſters, but the reverſe; and is contrary to the deſign of the Apoſtle in citing them, which is to ſhew the ſuperiority of Chriſt to angels, of whom it is ſaid, that they are made ſpirits: they are ſpirits, created ones, and ſo differ from God the creator; they are incorporeal ones, and ſo differ from men; they are immaterial, and ſo die not; they are ſpiritual ſubſtances ſubſiſting in themſelves: and they are made ſuch by God the Father, and by the Son the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, within the ſix days of the creation, and all at once; for it is not to be ſuppoſed, that the Lord is daily making them; and this proves the Son to be God, as well as more excellent than the angels; unleſs this is to be underſtood of the daily diſpoſal of them in providence, in cauſing winds, thunder, lightning, and the like. Some chuſe to ſupply the word with as, and read, who maketh his angels as winds; for inviſibility, velocity, power, and penetration: and his miniſters as a flame of fire; and theſe are the ſame with the angels, for they are miniſters to God; they attend his preſence; are ready to perform any ſervice for him; they ſing his praiſe, and are his chariots in which he rides: and they are miniſters to Chriſt; they attended at his incarnation; were ſolicitous for his preſervation, miniſtred to him in diſtreſs, aſſiſted at his reſurrection, and accompanied him in his aſcenſion, and will be with him at his ſecond coming: and they are as a flame of fire, ſo called from their great power, force, and ſwiftneſs; and from their burning love, and flaming zeal, hence named Seraphim; and becauſe they are ſometimes the executioners of God's wrath, and will deſcend in flaming fire, when Chriſt ſhall be revealed from heaven: angels ſometimes appear in fiery forms; the chariots and horſes of fire, by which Elijah was carried up to heaven, were no other than angels, in ſuch forms: ſo the Jews [x] ſay of the angels, "all the angels, their " horſes are horſes of fire, and their chariots fire, " and their bows fire, and their ſpears fire, and all " their inſtruments of war fire." And they have a notion, that an angel is half water, and half fire [y].

Ver. 8. But unto the ſon, he ſaith, &c.] What he does not to angels, and which ſets him infinitely above them; which ſhows him to be a prince and king, and not a ſervant, or miniſter; and which even aſcribes deity to him: thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; this, with what follows in this verſe, and the next, is taken out of Pſ. xlv. 6, 7. which pſalm is not ſpoken of Solomon, to whom many things in it will not agree; he was not fairer than other men; nor was he a warrior; nor was his throne for ever and ever; and much leſs a divine perſon, and the object of worſhip; but the Meſſiah, and ſo the ancient Jews underſtand it: the Targum applies it to him, and mentions him by name in ver. 2. and ſome of their modern writers[z] affirm, it is ſaid of the Meſſiah; tho' Aben Ezra ſeems doubtful about it, ſaying, it is ſpoken concerning David, or Meſſiah his ſon, whoſe name is ſo, Ezek. xxxvii. 25. Deity is here aſcribed to the Son of God; he is expreſly called God; for the words will not bear to be rendered, thy throne is the throne of God, or thy throne is God; or be ſupplied thus, God ſhall eſtabliſh thy throne: nor are the words an apoſtrophe to the Father, but are ſpoken to the king, the ſubject of the pſalm, who is diſtinguiſhed from God the Father, being bleſſed and anointed by him; and this is put out of all doubt by the Apoſtle, who ſays they are addreſſed to the Son, who is not a created God, nor God by office, but by nature; for tho' the word Elohim is ſometimes uſed of thoſe who are not Gods by nature; yet being here uſed abſolutely, and the attributes of eternity, and moſt perfect righteouſneſs, being aſcribed to the perſon ſo called, prove him to be the true God; and this is the reaſon why his throne is everlaſting, and his ſceptre righteous, and why he ſhould be worſhipped, ſerved, and obeyed. Dominion and duration of it are given to him; his throne denotes his kingly power, and government; which is general, over angels, good and bad; over men, righteous and wicked, even the greateſt among them, the kings and princes of the earth; and ſpecial, over his church and people; and which is adminiſtred by his Spirit and grace in the hearts of his ſaints; and by his word and ordinances in his churches; and by his powerful protection of them from their enemies; and will be in a glorious manner in the latter day, and in heaven to all eternity; for his throne is for ever, and on it he'll ſit for ever: his kingdom is an everlaſting kingdom; he'll have no ſucceſſor in it, nor can his government be ſubverted; and tho' he will deliver up the kingdom to the Father, it will not ceaſe. A ſceptre of righteouſneſs is the ſceptre of thy kingdom; the ſceptre is an enſign of royalty; and a ſceptre of righteouſneſs, or rightneſs, is expreſſive of the juſtice of government; the Syriac verſion renders it, a ſceptre ſtretched out; which is a ſceptre of mercy, as the inſtance of Ahaſuerus ſtretching out his ſceptre to Eſther ſhews; and ſuch is the Goſpel of Chriſt, which holds forth and declares the mercy, grace, and love of God to men thro' Chriſt; and which may be called a ſceptre of righteouſneſs, ſince it reveals and directs to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and encourages to works of righteouſneſs; but here it deſigns the righteous adminiſtration of Chriſt's kingly office; for juſt and true are, have been, and ever will be his ways, as king of ſaints.

Ver. 9. Thou haſt loved righteouſneſs, and hated iniquity, &c.] Chriſt loves righteous perſons and righteous works, faithfulneſs and integrity, and a juſt adminiſtration of government, every thing that is holy, juſt, and good; which has appeared in the whole courſe of his life on earth, in working out a righteouſneſs for his people, and in encouraging righteouſneſs in them, which he leads them in the way of; and his love of juſtice will ſtill more appear at the laſt day, when he will judge the world in righteouſneſs, and give the crown of righteouſneſs to proper perſons: and he hates iniquity; or unrighteouſneſs, as the Alexandrian copy, and another read; as being contrary to his nature, both as God and man, and to the righteous law of God; which has appeared by his inveighing againſt it, and dehorting from it; by his ſeverity exerciſed towards delinquents; by his ſuffering for it, and aboliſhing of it; and by chaſtizing his own people on account of it; and his abhorrence of it will ſtill more appear at the day of judgment, when all workers of iniquity, profeſſors and prophane, will be bid to depart from him: therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladneſs above thy fellows; the anointer is the God of Chriſt; that is, God the Father, who is the God of Chriſt, as man; and is ſo called, becauſe he prepared and formed the human nature of Chriſt, and ſupported it under all its ſufferings, and has glorified it; and as ſuch Chriſt prayed unto him, believed in him, loved him, and obeyed him: the anointed is the Son of God, the Son ſpoken to, and is called God in the preceding verſe; tho' he is not anointed as God, but as mediator, to be prophet, and prieſt, and king: what he is anointed with is not material oil, but ſpiritual, the Holy Ghoſt, as it is explained in Acts x. 38. called the oil of gladneſs, in alluſion to the uſe of oil at feaſts and weddings, for the delight and refreſhment of the gueſts; and becauſe of the ſpiritual effects of joy and gladneſs, both on Chriſt, as man, and on his people. Now Chriſt was anointed as mediator from all eternity; that is, he was inveſted with his office as ſuch; and at his conception and birth he was filled with the Holy Ghoſt; who alſo deſcended on him at his baptiſm, after which he went about doing good, and healing diſeaſes; but here it ſeems to refer to the time of his aſcenſion, when he was declared to be Lord and Chriſt, the anointed one; and received gifts for men, the fulneſs of the Spirit without meaſure, and with which he was anointed above his fellows: by whom are meant, not the angels, nor the kings and princes of the earth; but the ſaints, who are ſo called, becauſe they are of the ſame nature, and are of the ſame family, and are partakers of the ſame Spirit, and grace; and having received the unction from him, are alſo kings, prieſts, and prophets, and will be companions with him to all eternity. Now the reaſon of his being anointed, or exalted, and made Lord and Chriſt, is, becauſe he loves righteouſneſs; ſee Phil. ii. 7, 8. or rather, becauſe he is anointed with the Holy Spirit without meaſure, therefore he loves righteouſneſs; for the words may be rendered, thou loveſt righteouſneſs —— becauſe God, thy God, hath anointed thee.

Ver. 10. And thou, Lord, in the beginning haſt laid the foundation of the earth, &c.] The perſon here addreſſed, as the Lord or Jehovah, and as the maker of the heavens and the earth, is the ſame with the Son ſpoken to, and of, before; for the words are a continuation of the ſpeech to him, tho' they are taken from another pſalm, from Pſ. cii. 25, 26, 27. The phraſe, thou Lord, is taken from ver. 12. and is the ſame with, O my God, ver. 24. and whereas it is there ſaid, of old, and here, in the beginning, the ſenſe is the ſame; and agreeable to the Septuagint, and the Apoſtle, Jarchi interprets it by, מתחילה, at, or from the beginning; and ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, מן שרויא from the beginning, ginning, that the creatures were created, &c. that is, in the beginning of the creation, which is the Apoſtle's meaning; and ſhews the eternity of Chriſt, the Lord, the creator of the earth, who muſt exiſt before the foundation of the world; and confutes the notion of the eternity of the world: and the founding of it, ſhows that the earth is the lower part of the creation; and denotes the ſtability of it; and points out the wiſdom of the creator in laying ſuch a foundation; and proves the deity of Chriſt, by whom that, and all things in it, were made: the heavens are the works of thine hands; there are more heavens than one; there are the airy heaven, and the ſtarry heaven, and the heaven of heavens, the third heaven; and they were created in the beginning, as the earth was, Gen. i. 1. and are the immediate work of Chriſt; they were made by himſelf, not by the means of angels, who were not in being till theſe were made; nor by any intermediate help which he could not have, and which he did not need: the phraſe is expreſſive of the power of Chriſt in making the upper parts of the creation, and of his wiſdom in garniſhing them, in which there is a wonderful diſplay of his glory; and the whole ſerves to ſet forth the dignity and excellency of his perſon.

Ver. 11. They ſhall periſh, &c.] That is, the heavens and the earth; not as to the ſubſtance of them, but as to the quality of them; the preſent form and faſhion of them ſhall paſs away; the curſe will be removed from them, and they will be renewed and purified, but the ſubſtance of them will continue; otherwiſe there would be no place, either for the righteous or the wicked. But thou remaineſt; without any change or alteration, neither in his natures; divine or human, as God or man, nor in his office as mediator; as a prieſt, he has an unchangeable prieſthood, and ever lives to make interceſſion; as a king, his kingdom is an everlaſting one, and of it there will be no end; and as a prophet, he'll be the everlaſting light of his people. They all ſhall wax old as doth a garment; garments in time wax old, and loſe their beauty and uſefulneſs, unleſs when a miracle is wrought, as in the caſe of the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs. Now the heavens, and the light thereof, are as a garment and a curtain, Pſ. civ. 2. and theſe, together with the earth, will in time come to their end of uſefulneſs, in the preſent form of them; ſee Iſ. li. 6.

Ver. 12. And as a veſture ſhalt thou fold them up, &c.] In order to lay them aſide, and make no uſe of them in the manner they now are; juſt as clothes, when they are grown old, or out of faſhion, are folded up, and laid aſide from uſe at preſent, or are put into another form. In the Hebrew text it is, as a veſture ſhalt thou change them; but the ſenſe is the ſame, for a garment is changed by folding it, or turning it; agreeable to which Jarchi interprets the Hebrew phraſe thus, "as a man turns his garment to put it off;" the Vulgate Latin verſion reads as the Hebrew does, and one of the manuſcripts of New College, Oxford. And they ſhall be changed; as to their form and uſe, not as to their being; for a change, and an annihilation, are two things: but thou art the ſame, and thy years ſhall not fail; which is expreſſive of the immutability of Chriſt, in his nature and perfections, in his perſon and offices, in the virtue of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice; and of his duration or continuance, in oppoſition to the fading and tranſitory nature of the heavens and earth, and of all outward enjoyments: and this may ſerve to take off the heart from the one, and ſet it upon the other; and to ſtrengthen our faith in Chriſt, and encourage us to expect a continuance of bleſſings from him; all ſupplies of grace now, and eternal glory hereafter.

Ver. 13. But to which of the angels ſaid he at any time, &c.] That is, he never ſaid to any of them in his council, or covenant; he never deſigned to give them any ſuch honour, as hereafter expreſſed; he never promiſed it to them, or beſtowed it on them; he never called up any of them to ſo high a place, or to ſuch a dignity: ſit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footſtool; yet this he ſaid to his Son, Pſ. cx. 1. for to him, the Meſſiah, are they ſpoken, and have had their fulfilment in him; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 44. and therefore he muſt be greater than the angels.

Ver. 14. Are they not all miniſtring ſpirits, &c.] Servants to God, to Chriſt, and to his people, and therefore muſt be inferior to the Son of God. The phraſe is Rabbinical; frequent mention is made in Jewiſh writings [a] of, מלאכי השרת, the angels of miniſtry, or the miniſtring angels; this is their common appellation with the Jews; and the Apoſtle writing to ſuch, uſes a like phraſe, well known to them, and appeals to them, if the angels were not ſuch ſpirits. Sent forth to miniſter for them who ſhall be the heirs of ſalvation? the perſons they miniſter to, and for, are thoſe, who ſhall be the heirs of ſalvation; that is, of eternal glory, which will be poſſeſſed by the ſaints, as an inheritance: hence it belongs to children, being bequeathed to them by their father, and comes to them thro' the death of Chriſt, of which the Spirit is the earneſt; and this ſhows, that it is not of works, and that it is of an eternal duration, and takes in all kind of happineſs: and of this the ſaints are heirs now; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, who are heirs of ſalvation; nor ſhould it be rendered, who ſhall be heirs, but rather, who ſhall inherit ſalvation; for this character reſpects not their heirſhip, but their actual inheriting of ſalvation: and the miniſtry of angels to, and for them, lies in things temporal and ſpiritual, or what concern both their bodies and their ſouls; in things temporal, in which they have often been aſſiſting, as in providing food for their bodies, in curing their diſeaſes, in directing and preſerving them in journies, in ſaving and delivering them from outward calamities, in reſtraining things hurtful from hurting them, and in deſtroying their enemies; in things ſpiritual, as in making known the mind and will of God to them, in comforting them, and ſuggeſting good things to them, and in helping and aſſiſting them againſt ſatan's temptations; and they are preſent with their departing ſouls at death, and carry them to heaven, and will gather the elect together at the laſt day. And they are ſent forth to miniſter to them in ſuch a way; they are ſent forth by Chriſt, the Lord and creator of them, who therefore muſt be ſuperior to them; they don't take this office upon themſelves, tho' being put into it, they faithfully and diligently execute it, according to the will of Chriſt: and this ſhows the care of Chriſt over his people, and his kindneſs to them, and the great honour he puts upon them, to appoint ſuch to miniſter to them; and ſince they are of ſo much uſe and ſervice, they ought to be reſpected and eſteemed, tho' not worſhipped.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle, from the ſuperior excellency of Chriſt, by whom the Goſpel revelation is come, diſcourſed of in the preceding, urges the believers he writes to, to a more diligent attention to the Goſpel, and the doctrines of it; to which he adds another motive inducing thereunto, leſt thoſe things ſhould be let ſlip, and be loſt, ver. 1. and then, by another argument from the leſs to the greater, that if the law, which was given by angels, could not be broke with impunity, then how ſhould ſuch eſcape divine puniſhment that neglected and deſpiſed the Goſpel, which is a doctrine of ſalvation, was delivered by the Lord himſelf, and confirmed by various teſtimonies and miracles, ver. 2, 3, 4. And beſides, the Goſpel diſpenſation is not put into the hands of angels, but into the hands of Chriſt, to whom all things are ſubject, which is proved out of Pſ. viii. 4, 5, 6. and which proof ſhows, that tho' Chriſt, on account of his ſufferings and death, was for a while made lower than the angels, yet being now crowned with glory and honour, he is above them, and they are ſubject to him, ſince all things are, ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. And this anticipates an objection that might be taken from hence againſt what the Apoſtle had aſſerted in the foregoing chapter, concerning the ſuperiority of Chriſt to angels; and this leads him on to obſerve the reaſon of the ſufferings and death of Chriſt, and alſo of his incarnation; that the moving cauſe of Chriſt's ſufferings and death, was the grace and good-will of God; that he did not ſuffer for himſelf, but for others, for every one of thoſe deſcribed in the context; that inaſmuch as he was the ſurety of thoſe perſons, it was agreeable to the juſtice of God, and it could not be otherwiſe, but he muſt be made perfect through ſuffering; and this was the way to bring many ſons to glory, ver. 9, 10. and as for his incarnation, or his becoming man, that was neceſſary, that the ſanctifier and the ſanctified might be of the ſame nature, that he might be able to call them brethren and children, ver. 11, 12, 13. as he does, for which are cited, Pſ. xxii. 22. and xviii. 2. Iſ. viii. 18. and becauſe the children he engaged to bring to glory were partakers of fleſh and blood; and alſo that he might be capable of dying, and by dying deſtroy the devil, and deliver his timorous people, who, thro' fear of death, lived in a continual ſtate of bondage, ver. 14, 15. for which reaſon he did not take upon him the nature of angels, but of the ſeed of Abraham, ver. 16. And beſides, it was neceſſary he ſhould be in all things like unto his brethren, that he might be merciful to them, and faithful to God, and be in a ſtate and condition capable of ſympathizing with them, and ſuccouring them under their temptations, which he was able to do by ſuffering thro' temptation himſelf, ver. 17, 18.

Ver. 1. Therefore we ought to give the more earneſt heed, &c.] This is an inference from the Apoſtle's diſcourſe in the preceding chapter; ſince he, by whom God has ſpoke in theſe laſt days, is his Son, who is infinitely above the angels, they being his creatures, and worſhippers of him, and miniſters to him, and his; therefore the greater regard ſhould be had to the Goſpel ſpoken by him: even to the things which we have heard; which are no other than the truths of the Goſpel, which had been preached unto them, and which were heard by the Apoſtles, who had preached them to them; and they had heard them from them, or from Chriſt himſelf, and were what their foreſathers had deſired to hear, and which the carnal ear has not heard; for there is an internal and an external hearing of the Goſpel. Now it becomes the hearers of it, to give heed, or attend unto it, to beware of that which is pernicious and hurtful, and to regard that which is good and profitable; and this giving heed takes in a cloſe conſideration of Goſpel truths, a diligent enquiry into them, a valuable eſteem of them, a ſtrict adherence to them, and a watchfulneſs to retain what is heard, and to conform unto it: and this was to be done more earneſtly than their forefathers had, or than they themſelves had; or this may be put for the ſuperlative degree, and ſignify, that they ſhould give the moſt earneſt heed; for they had the moſt abundant reaſon to give heed, ſince what they heard was not from Moſes, and the prophets, to whom they did well to take heed, but from Chriſt the Son of God, who was greater than they: leſt at any time we ſhould let them ſlip; and this either reſpects perſons; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, leſt we ſhould run out; and the Syriac verſion, leſt we ſhould fall; and the Arabic verſion, leſt we ſhould fall from honeſty; which may intend partial ſlips and falls, to which the people of God are ſubject; and which are oftentimes owing to inadvertency to the word; for the Goſpel, duly attended to, is a preſervative from falling: or it may reſpect things, even the doctrines of the Goſpel, leſt we ſhould let them ſlip out of us, through us, or beſides us: the metaphor ſeems to be taken either from leaking veſſels, which let out what is put into them; or to ſtrainers, which let the liquor through, and it falls on the ground, and cannot be gathered up, and ſo becomes uſeleſs; and which is expreſſive of unprofitable hearing of the word, thro' inattention, negligence and forgetfulneſs, and the irrecoverableneſs of it, when it is gone: the Goſpel may be loſt to ſome that hear it, as to any real benefit and advantage by it; and ſome who hear the Goſpel may be loſt and periſh; but the grace of the Goſpel can never be loſt.

Ver. 2. For if the word ſpoken by angels was ſtedfaſt, &c.] This is a deſcription of the law, from whence the Apoſtle argues to a ſtricter regard to the Goſpel, as from the leſſer to the greater: this is called the word, and a terrible one it was; it was a voice of words, which they that heard, intreated they might hear no more; it was the word ſpoken with an articulate voice, and was heard by the Iſraelites, and it was ſpoken by angels. Jehovah the Father's voice was never heard; when he came to give the law, ten thouſand angels came along with him; and the miniſtry of theſe he uſed in the delivery of the law; by them he ſpoke it; they formed in the air the voices heard; it was ordained by them, and given by the diſpoſition of them; ſee Acts vii. 53. Gal. iii. 19. To which agree thoſe words of Herod, ſpoken to the Jews, recorded by Joſephus[b]; that we learn of God, δι' ἀγγέλων, by angels, the beſt of doctrines, and the moſt holy things in the law. And this was ſtedfaſt; firm, and ſure, being the word of God, which cannot paſs away, until it be fulfilled; it was confirmed by terrible ſigns attending it, and by the peoples aſſent unto it; the penalty of it is ſure and certain, in caſe of diſobedience; and as to the form and miniſtration of it, it remained until Chriſt, the end of it, came; and as to the matter of it, ſo far as of a moral nature, it ſtill remains: the judicial and ceremonial parts of it are abrogated; and the whole of it is aboliſhed, as in the hands of Moſes, and as a covenant of works, and as to the curſe and condemnation of it, and with reſpect to juſtification by it; but it ſtill continues as a curſing law to all that are under it; and as a means of conviction to ſinners in the hands of the Spirit; and as a rule of walk and converſation to ſaints, as in the hands of Chriſt: and every tranſgreſſion and diſobedience received a juſt recompence of reward; every precept of the law had a penalty annexed to it; and every breach of it was puniſhed as that penalty required; and that according to the ſtrict juſtice of God, and the juſt demerit of ſin; and none eſcaped, but ſuffered the puniſhment due to the violation of the precept either in themſelves, or in their ſurety; ſo ſtedfaſt and immoveable was this law.

[b] Antiq. l. 15. c. 5. §. 3.

Ver. 3. How ſhall we eſcape, &c.] The righteous judgment of God, and eternal puniſhment: if we neglect ſo great ſalvation? as the Goſpel is, which is called ſalvation, in oppoſition to the law, which is the miniſtration of condemnation; and becauſe it is a declaration of ſalvation by Chriſt; and is the means of bringing it near, and of the application of it in converſion, and ſo is the power of God unto it: and it is a great ſalvation; the Goſpel which reveals it is great, for the author of it is Chriſt; it has been confirmed by miracles, and attended with great ſucceſs; and has in it great things, great myſteries, and exceeding great and precious promiſes: and the ſalvation which it declares is great; it is the produce of great wiſdom; it is wrought by a great perſon, by a ſaviour, and a great one, and who is the great God, and our ſaviour; it has been procured at great charge and expence, even at the expence of the blood and life of the Son of God; and has been obtained thro' great difficulties; and is the ſalvation of the ſoul, the more noble part of man; and it is a compleat and everlaſting one: to neglect this, is to be careleſs of it; to contemn it, and to deſpiſe the miniſters of it; and to make any thing elſe but Chriſt the way of ſalvation: and the danger ſuch are in is very great; it is not poſſible that they ſhould eſcape divine vengeance, ſince their ſin is ſo great, and attended with ſuch aggravating circumſtances; for it is a contempt of the grace and wiſdom of God in providing ſuch a ſaviour, and a trampling under foot the Son of God, and a counting his blood as a common thing; and beſides, there's no more ſacrifice for ſin, they can have nothing to atone for it; and that God, whom they offend hereby, is both omniſcient and omnipotent, and there will be no eſcaping out of his hands: to which muſt be added, that this Goſpel of ſalvation is that which at the firſt began to be ſpoken by the Lord; by the Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf; the Goſpel was preached by him, and he was extraordinarily qualified for it; and he ſpake it as never man did: it was preached by John indeed, and by all the prophets before him, and to the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, and to Abraham before them, and even to Adam in Eden's garden, which was the firſt time it was ſpoken; but then it was ſpoken to him by the Lord; by the word of the Lord, the eſſential Word, the Son of God, as the ancient Chaldee paraphraſes, which expreſs the ſenſe of the old Jewiſh church, ſhew[e]: beſides, it began moſt fully and clearly to be preached by him in the days of his fleſh, ſo as it never was preached before, nor ſince; grace and truth, the doctrines of grace and truth came by him, in all their fulneſs and glory: and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; the Goſpel is in itſelf firm and ſtable; nor did the words of Chriſt need any confirmation, who is truth itſelf, the Amen, and faithful witneſs; but in condeſcenſion to human weakneſs, and by reaſon that Chriſt, as man, was not every where, and that by the mouth of more witneſſes it ſhould be eſtabliſhed, he ſent forth his Apoſtles to preach it; who heard it from him, and they publiſhed it to the Jews firſt, as theſe were to whom the Apoſtle writes, and then to the Gentiles. And tho' the Apoſtle had it firſt by revelation from Chriſt himſelf, Gal. i. 11, 12. it was confirmed to him by Ananias.

Ver. 4. God alſo bearing them witneſs, &c.] The Apoſtles of Chriſt; God teſtifying to their miſſion and commiſſion, and the truth of the doctrine they preached: both with ſigns and wonders, and with divers miracles; ſuch as taking up ſerpents without hurt, healing the ſick, cauſing the lame to walk, and raiſing the dead, and caſting out devils, and the like; all which were for the confirmation of the Goſpel preached by them: a ſign, wonder, or miracle, for theſe ſignify the ſame thing, is a marvellous work done before men, by the power of God, to confirm a divine truth; God is the ſole author of miracles; and they were done in the firſt ages of chriſtianity, when they were neceſſary, to give evidence of the truth of it, and to eſtabliſh men in it; and theſe were various, as before obſerved: and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; ſuch as beſides gifts of healing and working miracles, gifts of foretelling things to come, diſcerning of ſpirits, ſpeaking with divers kinds of tongues, and the interpretation of tongues, 1 Cor. xii. 8, 9, 10, according to his own will; either according to the will of God, who bore teſtimony by theſe miracles and gifts; or according to the will of the Holy Spirit, who diſtributed them to men ſeverally as he pleaſed, 1 Cor. xii. 11.

Ver. 5. For unto the angels, &c.] Tho' angels were concerned in the giving of the law, and were frequently employed under the former diſpenſation, in meſſages to men, and in making revelations of God's mind and will to them, yet to them hath he not put in ſubjection the world to come, whereof we ſpeak: by which is meant, not the future ſtate of eternal glory and happineſs in heaven, as oppoſed to this world, and the preſent ſtate of things; tho' there may be much truth in this ſenſe, as that the preſent world is in ſubjection to angels, and the world to come is not; the preſent world is much in ſubjection, tho' it is not put into ſubjection, to evil angels, who uſurp a power over it, hence ſatan is called the God and prince of this world; and it is in ſome ſenſe in ſubjection to good angels, as they are uſed by God in the execution of his providential care and government, in influencing and aſſiſting at the councils of princes, in inflicting God's judgments on kingdoms and nations, and in the ſpecial care of his own people: but the world to come, as oppoſed to this, is not at all ſubject to them; they are employed in carrying the ſouls of departed ſaints thither, and ſhall be with them there, and join with them in their ſervice; but they'll not be as kings, nor even as children, but as ſervants; much leſs is heaven at their diſpoſe to give to whomſoever they pleaſe; it is only in this ſenſe in ſubjection to Chriſt, the prince of life, who has power to give eternal life to as many as the Father has given to him: but it is not of this world the Apoſtle is ſpeaking; he is ſpeaking of ſomething now, which bears this name, and in proof of it, cites a paſſage out of Pſ. viii. where mention is made of ſheep, and other things, which cannot refer to the world of glory: rather it deſigns the new heavens and new earth at the reſurrection, and day of judgment, for theſe will not be put in ſubjection to angels; tho' of theſe the Apoſtle is not ſpeaking in the context: it ſeems therefore to intend the Goſpel, and the Goſpel-diſpenſation and church-ſtate, in oppoſition to the Jewiſh ſtate, and legal diſpenſation, which was called a world, and had in it a worldly ſanctuary, and worldly ordinances, which is now at an end; and at the end of which Chriſt came, and then another world took place, here called the world to come, as the times of the Meſſiah are frequently called by the Jews, עולם הבא, the world to come, the Goſpel-diſpenſation, the Apoſtle was treating of in the preceding verſes, in diſtinction from the law, the word ſpoken by angels; for the Goſpel was not ſpoken by them, but by the Lord: the Goſpel ſtate is very properly the world to come, with reſpect to the Old Teſtament ſaints, who were looking for it, and in which old things are paſt away, and all things are become new; angels deſire to look into the myſteries of it, and learn from the church the manifold wiſdom of God; but not they, but men are the diſpenſers of the doctrines of it; and Chriſt he is the head, king, governour, and father of this new world: ſo inſtead of everlaſting Father, the Septuagint render the clauſe in Iſ. ix. 6. πατηρ τȣ μελλοντος αιωνος, the Father of the age, or world to come; and hence mention is made in the Jewiſh writings, of עלמא דאתי דמשיחא, the world to come of the Meſſiah [d].

[e] Targum Onkelos & Jon. in Gen. iii. 8. & Hieroſ. in v. 9.

Ver. 6. But one in a certain place teſtified, &c.] That is, David, for he is the penman of the pſalm, out of which the following words are taken; and tho' his name is not mentioned by the Apoſtle, nor the particular place, or the pſalm pointed at, as in Acts xiii. 33, 35. yet this was not thro' ignorance of either, nor out of diſreſpect to the penman; but becauſe the Apoſtle is writing to Jews, who were converſant with the ſcriptures, and knew full well who ſaid the words, and where they were: and it is uſual with the Jews to cite paſſages in this manner; and the form by which the paſſage is introduced, by the word teſtified, is quite agreeable to their way of citing ſcripture, of which there is another inſtance in ch. vii. 17. and I think that this form is only uſed in this Epiſtle to the Hebrews, with which they were acquainted: it is common with them to ſay, התורה העידה, the law teſtified [e], as it is ſaid in ſuch or ſuch a place; and here the Apoſtle produces a paſſage, as a witneſs and teſtimony of the truth of what he had ſaid, that the Goſpel diſpenſation is not put in ſubjection to angels, but to the Meſſiah: the paſſage ſtands in Pſ. viii. 4. which pſalm belongs to the times of the Meſſiah, as appears from the inapplication of it to others; and from the application of a paſſage in it to the children in his time, Matt. xxi. 16. by Chriſt himſelf, and of the paſſage here by the Apoſtle; nor in any other time was the name of the Lord excellent in all the earth, with which the pſalm begins and concludes; Saying, what is man that thou art mindful of him? or the ſon of man that thou viſiteſt him? this is not to be underſtood of mankind in general: not of man in a ſtate of innocence; there were no babes nor ſucklings in paradiſe, nor enemies to reſtrain; Enoſh, the word for man, ſignifies a frail mortal man, which Adam then was not; nor could he be called the ſon of man; nor can it ſo well ſuit with him, to be ſaid to be made a little lower than the angels, and then crowned with glory and honour: nor of man as fallen, for all things are not ſubjected unto him; but of Chriſt, with whom every thing agrees, as the name by which he is called, Enoſh, a frail man; for he was a man encompaſſed with infirmities; of no note and eſteem among men; a man of ſorrows, and accquainted with griefs; was ſubject to death, and did die; and is often called the ſon of man: what is ſaid of him, ſuits with him, as that God was mindful of him; which may be expreſſive of his love and delight in, and choice of his human nature, to be taken into union with his divine perſon; and of his counſel and covenant in preparing it for him; and of his uniting it to his perſon; and of his providential care of it, and great affection for it; of his unction of it, and of his great regard to it in its ſufferings, by ſupporting it, and in raiſing it from the dead: and alſo that he viſited him; not in a way of wrath, but of favour, with his preſence, with the gifts and graces of his Spirit, with divine ſupports, and ſpiritual peace and joy; all which in itſelf it was not deſerving of, nor could it claim; and therefore theſe things are ſpoken of as favours, and in a way of admiration.

Ver. 7. Thou madeſt him a little lower than the angels, &c.] In the Hebrew text it is, than Elohim, which ſome render, than God; but it is rightly rendered by the Apoſtle, than angels; and ſo the Targum, Jarchi, Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech interpret it. Chriſt was made a little lower than the angels, thro' the aſſumption of the human nature, which is inferior to angels, eſpecially the corporal part of it, and in this Kimchi makes the leſſening to be; and more eſpecially as that was aſſumed by Chriſt, with the infirmities of it; and by reaſon of the ſtraights and indigencies he was brought into in it; beſides, he was in it made under the law, which was given by angels, and to ſome parts of which they are not ſubject; and ſometimes he ſtood in need of the miniſtry and ſupport of angels, and had it; particularly he was made lower than they, when he was deprived of the gracious preſence of God, and in the time of his ſufferings and death; and which ſeem chiefly to be reſpected, as appears from ver. 9. and the word little may not ſo much intend the degree of his humiliation, as the duration of it; for it may be rendered, a little while; in which ſenſe it is uſed in Acts v. 34. as the Hebrew word מעט is in Pſ. xxxvii. 10. and ſo may reſpect the time of his ſuffering death; and at moſt the time from his incarnation to his reſurrection; for he could not continue long in this low eſtate, which is matter of joy to us; he could not be held by the cords of death, but muſt riſe, and be exalted above angels, as he is: and he was made ſo low by God, Jehovah the Father, whoſe name is excellent in all the earth, Pſ. viii. 1. he pre-ordained him to this low eſtate; he prepared a body for him, and had a very great hand in his ſufferings and death; tho' neither of theſe were contrary to his will: thou crowneſt him with glory and honour; with that glory he had with the Father before the world was, and which followed upon his ſufferings and death; for through them he entered into it, and upon his reſurrection had it; and he is aſcended on high, where he has the honour to ſit at the right hand of God, which none of the angels have; and therefore is now above them, tho' once for a while below them, and they are now ſubject to him: and didſt ſet him over the works of thy hands; over angels, principalities, and powers; over the kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of it, and all things in it, and made him higher than the heavens, and gave him a name above every name.

[d] Targum in 1 Kings iv. 33.

[e] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 37. 1. Maimon. Hilchot Yeſode Hattorah, 3. 7. §. 6. & Melachim, c. 11. §. 1. Vid. Aben Ezra in Lev. xvi. 8.

Ver. 8. Thou haſt put all things in ſubjection under his feet, &c.] Good angels, men and devils, all things in heaven, earth, and ſea; ſee 1 Pet. iii. 22. for in that he put all in ſubjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him; there is no one perſon or thing that is not ſubject to Chriſt; the ſubjection is the moſt univerſal, either voluntary or involuntary; whether they will or no, they are, and muſt be ſubject; God has left nothing but what he has put under his power: but we ſee not yet all things put under him; this ſeems to be an objection, and even a contradiction to what is before ſaid; which may be removed by obſerving, that tho' this general ſubjection is not ſeen by us, it does not follow that it is not; and tho' it is not as yet viſible, yet it will be: and beſides, the Apoſtle's ſenſe may be, that no ſuch general ſubjection to any mere man has ever been ſeen and known; as not to Solomon, nor Ahaſuerus, nor Cyrus, nor Alexander the great, nor Julius, nor Auguſtus Cæſar, nor any other; and this he may obſerve, to ſhew the inapplication of this paſſage to any but to Jeſus Chriſt; and this ſenſe is confirmed by what follows.

Ver. 9. But we ſee Jeſus, &c.] Not with bodily eyes, but with the eyes of the mind, and underſtanding; that he is Jeſus, as the Syriac verſion reads; and that he is deſigned in the above words; and that he has all things made ſubject unto him; and that he was humbled, and now exalted, as follows: who was made a little lower than the angels; in his ſtate of humiliation; ſee the note on ver. 7. for the ſuffering of death: this clauſe may be conſidered either as connected with the preceding; and then the ſenſe is, that Jeſus became lower than the angels, by, or thro' ſuffering death; in that reſpect he was lower than they, who die not; this proved him to be in a condition below them, and ſhowed how pertinent the above words were to him, and how they were fulfilled in him: or with the following; and then the meaning is, that becauſe Jeſus ſuffered death in the room and ſtead of his people; humbled himſelf, and became obedient to death, even the death of the croſs, when he was very low indeed, therefore he is crowned with glory and honour; ſee Phil. ii. 8, 9. and the note on ver. 7. that he by the grace of God ſhould taſte death for every man; that is, Chriſt was made a little lower than the angels by becoming man, and aſſuming a body frail and mortal, that he might die for his church and people: to taſte death, is a Jewiſh phraſe, often to be met with in Rabbinical writings; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 28. and ſignifies the truth and reality of his death, and the experience he had of the bitterneſs of it, it being attended with the wrath of God, and curſe of the law; tho' he continued under it but for a little while, it was but a taſte; and it includes all kinds of death, he taſted of the death of afflictions, being a man of ſorrows all his days, and a corporal death, and what was equivalent to an eternal one: and ſo ſome think the words will bear to be rendered, that he by the grace of God might taſte of every death; which rendering of the words, if it could be eſtabliſhed, as it is agreeable to the context, and to the analogy of faith, would remove all pretence of an argument from this place, in favour of the univerſal ſcheme: what moved God to make him lower than the angels, and deliver him up to death, was not any anger towards him, any diſregard to him, or becauſe he deſerved it, but his grace, free favour, and love to men; this moved him to provide him as a ranſom; to pre-ordain him to be the lamb ſlain; to ſend him in the fulneſs of time, and give him up to juſtice and death: the Syriac verſion reads, for God himſelf through his own grace taſted death for all; Chriſt died, not merely as an example, or barely for the good of men, but as a ſurety, in their room and ſtead, and that not for every individual of mankind; for there are ſome he knows not; for ſome he does not pray; and there are ſome who will not be ſaved: the word man is not in the original text, it is only, υπερ παντος, which may be taken either collectively, and be rendered for the whole; that is, the whole body, the church for whom Chriſt gave himſelf, and is the ſaviour of; or diſtributively, and be tranſlated, for every one; for every one of the ſons, God brings to glory, ver. 10. for every one of the brethren, whom Chriſt ſanctifies, and he is not aſhamed to own, and to whom he declares the name of God, ver. 11, 12. for every one of the members of the church, in the midſt of which he ſung praiſe, ver. 12. for every one of the children, God has given him, and for whoſe ſake he took part of fleſh and blood, ver. 13, 14. and for every one of the ſeed of Abraham, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, whoſe nature he aſſumed, ver. 16.

Ver. 10. For it became him for whom are all things, &c.] This is not a periphraſis of Chriſt, who died, but of God the Father, who delivered him to death; and who is the final cauſe of all things, in nature, and in grace, all things being made for his pleaſure and for his glory; and he is the efficient cauſe of all things, as follows: and by whom are all things; all the works of creation, providence, and grace: in bringing many ſons to glory; not to worldly glory, but to the heavenly glory, which they are undeſerving of; and which was long ago prepared for them; is at preſent hid; is weighty, ſolid, durable, yea eternal: the perſons whom God, of his rich grace, brings to this, are ſons; who are predeſtinated to the adoption of children; are regenerated by the Spirit of God; believe in Chriſt; and have the ſpirit of adoption given them, and ſo being children, are heirs of glory: and theſe are many; for tho' they are but few, when compared with others, yet they are many, conſidered by themſelves; they are many that God has ordained to eternal life, and given to Chriſt, and for whom he has given himſelf a ranſom, and whom he juſtifies; and accordingly there are many manſions of glory, provided for them in their Father's houſe, whoſe act it is to bring them thither: he has choſen them to this glory, and prepared it for them; he ſent his Son to redeem them; he reveals his Son in them, the hope of glory; he calls them to his eternal glory, and makes them meet for it, and gives them an abundant entrance into it: and him it became——to make the captain of their ſalvation perfect thro' ſufferings; Chriſt is the captain of ſalvation, and is ſo called, becauſe he is the author of it; and he is the prince and commander of theſe ſons, who are committed to his charge, and are under his care; and is their guide and leader; and who is gone before them to prepare their manſions of glory for them: and he is made perfect thro' ſufferings; he ſuffered all that the law and juſtice of God could require; and hereby he became perfectly acquainted with the ſufferings of his people, and a perfect ſaviour of them; and in this way went to glory himſelf: and it became God the Father, the firſt cauſe, and laſt end of all things, ſince he had a deſign to bring all his adopted ſons to glory, that his own Son ſhould perfectly ſuffer for them; this was agreeable to, and becoming the perfections of his nature, his wiſdom, his veracity, his juſtice, grace, and mercy.

Ver. 11. For both he that ſanctifieth, &c.] Not himſelf, though this is ſaid of him, John xvii. 19. nor his Father, though this alſo is true of him, Iſ. viii. 13. but his people, the ſons brought to glory, whoſe ſalvation he is the captain of; they are ſanctified in him, he being made ſanctification to them; and they have their ſanctification from him, all their grace and holineſs; and they are ſanctified by him, both by his blood, which expiates their ſins, and removes the guilt of them, and by his Spirit, working internal principles of grace and holineſs in them, who are by nature, and in their unregenerate ſtate, guilty and unclean: and they who are ſanctified; the ſons brought to glory; they are not naturally holy, nor ſo of themſelves, they are made holy; all that are ſons are made holy; whom God adopts into his family, he regenerates: ſanctification is abſolutely neceſſary to their being brought to glory; and between the ſanctifier and the ſanctified there is a likeneſs, as there ought to be: they are all of one; they are both of one God and Father, Chriſt's God is their God, and his Father is their Father; they are of one body, Chriſt is the head, and they are members; they are of one covenant, Chriſt is the ſurety, mediator, and meſſenger of it, and they ſhare in all its bleſſings and promiſes; they are of one man Adam, Chriſt is a ſon of Adam, tho' not by ordinary generation, they deſcend from him in the common way; they are all of one nature, of one blood; Chriſt has took part of the ſame fleſh and blood with them: for which cauſe he is not aſhamed to call them brethren; Chriſt, and theſe ſons that are ſanctified, ſtand in the relation of brethren to each other; Chriſt is the firſt-born among many brethren; he is a brother born for the day of adverſity, and one that ſticks cloſer than a brother: and this relation is founded both upon the incarnation of Chriſt, who thereby became his peoples Goel, or near kinſman, yea brother, Cant. viii. 1. and upon their adoption into his Father's family, which is made manifeſt by their regeneration, and by their doing his Father's will under the influence of his grace and Spirit, Matt. xii. 49, 50. and this relation Chriſt owns; he called his diſciples brethren, when God had raiſed him from the dead, and given him glory; and ſo he will call all his ſaints, even the meaneſt of them, in the great day, Matt. xxviii. 10. and xxv. 40. and he is not aſhamed to do it; he does not diſdain it, tho' he is God over all, and the Son of God, and is alſo in his human nature made higher than the heavens; which ſhows the wonderful condeſcenſion of Chriſt, and the honour that is put upon the ſaints; and may teach them not to deſpiſe the meaneſt among them: ſuch a relation the Jews own will be between the Meſſiah and the Iſraelites. The Targumiſt on Cant. viii. 1. paraphraſes the words thus; "when the king Meſſiah ſhall be revealed to the congregation of Iſrael, the children of Iſrael ſhall ſay unto him, come, be thou with us, לאח, for a brother, or be thou our brother." Nor can they ſay this will reflect any diſcredit upon Chriſt, when they make ſuch a relation to be between God and them. The Iſraelites, they ſay [f], are called, אחים להקבה, the brethren of the holy bleſſed God; in proof of which they often produce Pſ. cxxii. 8. as being the words of God to them; and again, interpreting thoſe words in Lev. xxv. 48. one of his brethren may redeem him, this, ſay [g] they, is the holy bleſſed God.

Ver. 12. Saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren, &c.] Theſe words, with the following clauſe, are cited from Pſ. xxii. 22. as a proof of what the Apoſtle had before aſſerted; and that this pſalm is to be underſtood, not of the Jewiſh nation, or people of Iſrael, nor of Eſther, nor of David, but of the Meſſiah, appears from the title of it, Aijeleth, Shahar, which ſignifies the morning hind; from the particular account of Chriſt's ſufferings in it; from his ſeveral offices herein pointed to; from the converſion of the Gentiles it propheſies of; and from ſeveral paſſages cited from hence, and applied to Chriſt; ſee Matt. xxvii. 35, 39, 43, 46. And theſe are the words of Chriſt addreſſed to his Father; whoſe name he promiſes to declare to his brethren; meaning not the Jews, in general, his brethren according to the fleſh; but his diſciples and followers, particularly the twelve apoſtles, and the five hundred brethren to whom he appeared after his reſurrection; and indeed all the ſaints and people of God may be included: and by his name he would declare to them, is not meant any particular name of his, as Elohim, El-ſhaddai, Jehovah, or the like; but rather he himſelf, and the perfections of his nature, which he, the only-begotten Son, lying in his boſom, has declared; tho' the Goſpel ſeems chiefly to be deſigned; ſee John xvii. 6, 26. and this Chriſt declared with great exactneſs and accuracy, with clearneſs and perſpicuity, and with all integrity and fidelity: he ſpoke it out plainly, and concealed no part of it; as he received it from his Father, he faithfully made it known to his people; this is expreſſive of Chriſt's prophetic office, of his preaching of the Goſpel, both in his own perſon, and by his miniſters: in the midſt of the church will I ſing praiſe unto thee; or a hymn; this is to be underſtood not of the church above, but of the church below; and not of the ſynagogue of the Jews, but of the diſciples of Chriſt, and of his ſinging an hymn to God, with and among them, as he did at the inſtitution of the ſupper, Matt. xxvi. 30. for tho' the number of the Apoſtles was but ſmall, yet they made a congregation or church, and which was a pure and glorious one. With the Jews [h], ten men made a congregation.

Ver. 13. And again, I will put my truſt in him, &c.] Theſe words are taken not from Iſ. viii. 17. where, in the Septuagint verſion, is a like phraſe; for they are not the words of the Meſſiah there, but of the prophet; and beſides, the Apoſtle disjoins them from the following words, which ſtand there, by ſaying, and again; but they are cited from Pſ. xviii. 2. in which pſalm are many things which have reſpect to the Meſſiah, and his times; the perſon ſpoken of is ſaid to be made the head of the heathen, to whom, unknown people yield a voluntary ſubmiſſion, and the name of God is praiſed among the Gentiles, ver. 43, 49. The Targum upon it makes mention of the Meſſiah in ver. 32. and he is manifeſtly ſpoken of under the name of David, in ver. 50. and which verſe is applied to the Meſſiah, by the Jews, both ancient and modern [i]: and theſe words are very applicable to him, for as man he had every grace of the Spirit in him; and this of faith, and alſo of hope, very early appeared in him; he truſted in God for the daily ſupplies of life, and that he would help him in, and through the work of man's ſalvation; ſee Pſ. xxii. 9, 10. Iſ. l. 7, 8, 9. he committed his ſpirit into his hands at death, with confidence, and believed he would raiſe his body from the dead; and he truſted him with his own glory, and the ſalvation of his people: and this is a citation pertinent to the purpoſe, ſhewing that Chriſt and his people are one, and that they are brethren; for he muſt be man, ſince, as God, he could not be ſaid to truſt; and he muſt be a man of ſorrows and diſtreſs, to ſtand in need of truſting in God. And again, behold I and the children which God hath given me; this is a citation from Iſ. viii. 18. in which prophecy is a denunciation of God's judgments upon Iſrael, by the Aſſyrians, when God's own people among them are comforted with a promiſe of the Meſſiah, who is deſcribed as the Lord of hoſts; who is to be ſanctified, and be as a ſanctuary to the ſaints, and as a ſtone of ſtumbling to others; and the prophet is ordered to bind and ſeal up the doctrine among the diſciples, at which he ſeems aſtoniſhed and concerned, but reſolves to wait; upon which Chriſt, to encourage him, ſpeaks theſe words; for they are not addreſſed to God, as the Syriac verſion renders them, behold I and the children, whom thou haſt given me, O God; in which may be obſerved, that the ſaints are children, with reſpect to God, who has adopted them, and with reſpect to Chriſt, who is their everlaſting father; that they were given to Chriſt as his ſpiritual ſeed, and offſpring, as his portion, and to be his care and charge; and that this is worthy of attention, and calls for admiration, that Chriſt and his people are one, and that he is not aſhamed to own them before God and men.

Ver. 14. Foraſmuch then as the children are partakers of fleſh and blood, &c.] By the children are meant, not the children of this world, or the men of it; nor the children of the fleſh, or Abraham's natural ſeed; nor viſible profeſſors of religion; nor the Apoſtles of Chriſt only; but all the children of God, the children given to Chriſt; all the ſons that are brought to glory: theſe are partakers of fleſh and blood; of human nature, which is common to them all, and which is ſubject to infirmity and mortality; and the ſenſe is, that they are frail mortal men: and this being their ſtate and caſe, he alſo himſelf took part of the ſame; Chriſt became man alſo, or aſſumed an human nature like theirs; this ſhows that he exiſted before his incarnation, who of himſelf, and by his own voluntary act, aſſumed an individual of human nature into union with his divine perſon, which is expreſſive of wondrous grace and condeſcenſion: Chriſt's participation of human nature, and the childrens, in ſome things agree, in others they differ; they agree in this, that it is real fleſh and blood they both partake of; that Chriſt's body is not ſpiritual and heavenly, but natural as theirs is; and that it is a compleat, perfect human nature, and ſubject to mortality and infirmity like theirs: but then Chriſt took his nature of a virgin, and is without ſin; nor has it any diſtinct perſonality, but from the moment of its being ſubſiſted in his divine perſon: and now the true reaſon of Chriſt's aſſuming ſuch a nature, was on account of the children, which diſcovers great love to them, and ſhows that it was with a peculiar view to them that he became man; hence they only ſhare the ſpecial advantages of his incarnation, ſufferings, and death: and his end in doing this was, that thro' death he might deſtroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; the devil is ſaid to have the power of death, not becauſe he can kill and deſtroy men at pleaſure, but becauſe he was the firſt introducer of ſin, which brought death into the world, and ſo he was a murderer from the beginning; and he ſtill tempts men to ſin, and then accuſes them of it, and terrifies and affrights them with death; and by divine permiſſion has inflicted it, and will be the executioner of the ſecond death. The Apoſtle here ſpeaks in the language of the Jews, who often call Samael, or ſatan, מלאך המות, the angel of death, in their Targums[k], Talmud[l], and other writings[m]; and ſay, he was the cauſe of death to all the world; and aſcribe much the ſame things to him, for which the Apoſtle here ſo ſtiles him: and they moreover ſay[n], that he will ceaſe in the time to come; that is, in the days of the Meſſiah; and who, being come, has deſtroyed him, not as to his being, but as to his power; he has bruiſed his head, deſtroyed his works, diſarmed his principalities and powers, and took the captives out of his hands, and ſaved thoſe he would have devoured: and this he has done by death; by his own death, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions read; whereby he has aboliſhed death itſelf, and ſin the cauſe of it, and ſo ſatan, whoſe empire is ſupported by it.

Ver. 15. And deliver them, who through fear of death, &c.] This is another end of Chriſt's aſſuming human nature, and dying in it, and thereby deſtroying ſatan, that he might ſave ſome out of his hands: who were all their life-time ſubject to bondage; meaning chiefly God's elect among the Jews; for tho' all men are in a ſtate of bondage to the luſts of the fleſh, and are ſatan's captives; yet this deſcribes more particularly the ſtate of the Jews, under the law of Moſes, which gendred unto bondage; which they being guilty of the breach of, and ſeeing the danger they were expoſed to on that account, were ſubject, bound, and held faſt in and under a ſpirit of bondage: and that thro' fear of death; thro' fear of a corporal death; thro' fear of chaſtizements and afflictions, the fore-runners of death, and what ſometimes bring it on; and thro' fear of death itſelf, as a diſunion of ſoul and body, and as a penal evil; and thro' fear of what follows it, an awful judgment: and this the Jews eſpecially were in fear of, from their frequent violations of the precepts, both of the moral, and of the ceremonial law, which threatened with death; and this they lived, in a continual fear of, becauſe they were daily tranſgreſſing, which brought on them a ſpirit of bondage unto fear: and, as Philo the Jew[o] obſerves, nothing more brings the mind into bondage than the fear of death: and many of theſe, even all the choſen ones among them, Chriſt delivered, or ſaved from ſin, from ſatan, from the law, and its curſes, from death corporal, as a penal evil, and from death eternal; even from all enemies and dangers, and brought them into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

Ver. 16. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels, &c.] Good angels; for they are all along ſpoken of in this book; and it would have been impertinent to have ſaid this of evil angels: and this is to be underſtood not of a denying help and aſſiſtance to the angels; for tho' they have not redemption from Chriſt, which they needed not, yet have they help from him; they are choſen in him, and are gathered together under him; and he is the head of them, and they are upheld and ſuſtained by him in their being, and well-being: but of a non-aſſumption of their nature; there was no need of it with reſpect to good angels, and there was no ſalvation deſigned for evil ones; and to have aſſumed the nature of angels, would have been of no ſervice to fallen man; an angelic nature is not capable of death, which was neceſſary to atone for ſin, ſave men, and deſtroy ſatan: this negative propoſition is very ſtrongly put, he never took, as the Vulgate Latin verſion more rightly renders it; at no time, in no place; nor is it ſaid in any place of ſcripture that he did; this is a certain truth, and not to be diſputed. The Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, he took not of, or from angels; he took not any individual from among them: but he took on him the ſeed of Abraham; not all his poſterity, but ſome individual, as the word ſeed is ſometimes uſed, Gen. iv. 25. and xv. 3. Chriſt aſſumed human nature as derived from Abraham; for the Meſſiah was to ſpring from Abraham, and is promiſed, as that ſeed of his, in whom all nations ſhould be bleſſed; and he was particularly promiſed to the Jews, the ſeed of Abraham, to whom the Apoſtle was writing; and it was with a view to Abraham's ſpiritual ſeed, the children of the promiſe, that Chriſt partook of fleſh and blood: the word here uſed ſignifies to catch hold of any one ready to periſh, or to lay hold on a perſon running away, and with great vehemence and affection to hold any thing faſt, that it be not loſt, and to help perſons, and do good unto them; all which may be obſerved in this act of Chriſt's, in aſſuming an individual of human nature, in Abraham's line, into union with his divine perſon; whereby he has ſaved thoſe that were gone out of the way, and were ready to periſh, and done them the greateſt good, and ſhown the ſtrongeſt affection to them: and from hence may be learned the deity and eternity of Chriſt, who was before Abraham, as God, tho' a ſon of his as man; and his real humanity, and that it was not a perſon, but a ſeed, a nature he aſſumed; and alſo the union and diſtinction of natures in him: and Chriſt's taking human, and not angelic nature, ſhews the ſovereignty of God, and his diſtinguiſhing grace and mercy to men.

Ver. 17. Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, &c.] The adopted ſons of God, who were brethren before Chriſt's incarnation, being from all eternity predeſtinated to the adoption of children: Chriſt's incarnation was in time, and after that many of the brethren exiſted; and it was only for their ſakes, that he aſſumed human nature; and therefore it was proper he ſhould be like them in that nature, in all things: in all the eſſentials of it; it was not neceſſary that he ſhould have it by natural generation; nor that it ſhould have a ſubſiſtence in itſelf as theirs: and in all the properties and affections of it, that are not ſinful; for it did not behove him to be like them in ſin, nor in ſickneſs, and in diſeaſes of the body: and in all temptations; tho' in ſome things his differ from theirs; none of his aroſe from within; and thoſe from without could make no impreſſion on him; and in ſufferings, that there might be a conformity between the head and members; tho' there is in ſome things a difference; his ſufferings were by way of puniſhment, and were attended with wrath, and were meritorious, which can't be ſaid of theirs; but that he ſhould have an human nature, as to its eſſence and perfection, like to theirs, was neceſſary: it was proper he ſhould be truly and really man, as well as truly God, that he might be a merciful and faithful high-prieſt; he could not be an high-prieſt, offer ſacrifice for ſin, and make interceſſion, unleſs he was man; nor could he be a merciful and compaſſionate one, ſympathize with his people in their ſorrows, temptations, and ſufferings, unleſs he was like them in theſe; nor would he be a faithful, that is, a true and lawful one otherwiſe, becauſe every high-prieſt is taken from among men: in things pertaining to God; in things in which God has to do with his people, as to preſide in his name over them, to declare his will unto them, and bleſs them; and in things in which the people have to do with God, to offer to God a ſacrifice for their ſins, to preſent this ſacrifice to him, to appear in his preſence for them, to carry in their petitions, and plead their cauſe as their advocate: to make reconciliation for the ſins of the people; of God's covenant-people, the people he has choſen for himſelf, and given to his Son; and whom Chriſt ſaves from their ſins, by making ſatisfaction for them, to the law and juſtice of God, which is here meant by reconciliation: and in order to this, which could not be done without blood, without ſufferings and death, it was proper he ſhould be man, and like unto his brethren: the alluſion ſeems to be to the two goats on the day of atonement, one of which was to be ſlain, and the other let go; which were to be, as the Jews ſay [p], שוין, alike, in colour, in ſtature, and in price; and ſo were the birds to be alike in the ſame things, that were uſed at the cleanſing of the leper [q]: and the Jews tell us [r], that the high-prieſt was to be greater than his brethren, in beauty, in ſtrength, in wiſdom, and in riches; all which is true of Chriſt.

Ver. 18. For in that he himſelf hath ſuffered, being tempted, &c.] By ſatan, at his entrance on his public miniſtry, and a little before his death; which was done, not by ſtirring up ſin in him, for he had none, nor by putting any into him, which could not be done, nor could ſatan get any advantage over him; he ſolicited him to one thing and another, but in vain; tho' theſe temptations were very troubleſome, and diſagreeable, and abhorrent to the pure and holy nature of Chriſt, and ſo muſt be reckoned among his ſufferings, or things by which he ſuffered: and as afflictions are ſometimes called temptations, in this ſenſe alſo Chriſt ſuffered, being tempted, with outward poverty and meanneſs, with ſlight and neglect from his own relations, and with a general contempt and reproach among men: he was often tempted by the Jews with enſnaring queſtions; he was deſerted by his followers, by his own diſciples, yea by his God and Father; all which were great trials to him, and muſt be accounted as ſufferings: and he alſo endured great pains of body, and anguiſh of mind, and at laſt death itſelf. And ſo he is able to ſuccour them that are tempted; as all the ſaints, more or leſs, are, both with ſatan's temptations, and with afflictions in the world, which God ſuffers to befal them, on various accounts; partly on his own account, to ſhow his grace, power, and faithfulneſs in ſupporting under them, and in delivering out of them; and partly on his Son's account, that they might be like unto him, and he may have an opportunity of ſuccouring them, and ſympathizing with them; and alſo on their own account, to humble them, to try their faith, to excite them to prayer and watchfulneſs, and to keep them dependent on the power and grace of God: and theſe Chriſt ſuccours, by having and ſhewing a fellow-feeling with them; by praying for them; by ſupporting them under temptations; by rebuking the tempter, and delivering out of them: and all this he is able to do; he muſt be able to ſuccour them as he is God; and his conquering ſatan is a convincing evidence to the ſaints of his ability; but here it intends his qualification, and fitneſs, and readineſs to help in ſuch circumſtances, from the experience he himſelf has had of theſe things.

CHAP. III.

THE Apoſtle having diſcourſed, in the preceding chapters, concerning the dignity of Chriſt's perſon, and his wondrous grace in the aſſumption of human nature, and ſuffering in the room and ſtead of his people, exhorts the Hebrews in this to a ſerious conſideration of him, attention to him, and faith in him, and conſtancy in it; the arguments he uſes to engage them to theſe things, are taken from the grace and benefit they themſelves were partakers of thro' him, from the office in which he was, and his faithfulneſs to his Father in the diſcharge of it, ver. 1, 2. which is illuſtrated in the caſe of Moſes, who was faithful in the houſe of God, and whom Chriſt excelled, and therefore was worthy of more honour; partly, becauſe he is the builder of the houſe; and partly, becauſe he is a Son in it, when Moſes was only a ſervant; which houſe is Chriſt's own, and conſiſts of true and ſteadfaſt believers in him, ver. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. wherefore the exhortation to regard him is renewed, inforced, and expreſſed in the words of the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. which are taken out of Pſ. xcv. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. and applied to the preſent caſe: hence the Apoſtle cautions againſt unbelief, as being a great evil in its ſelf, and bad in its conſequence, cauſing perſons to depart from the living God, ver. 12. in order to prevent which he adviſes to a daily exhortation of each other to their duty, that ſo they might not be hardened in ſin thro' the deceitfulneſs of it, ver. 13. and the rather it became them to be concerned to hold faſt their faith in Chriſt, to the end, ſince this is the grand evidence of being a partaker of him, ver. 14. And then the exhortation in the above paſſage of ſcripture is recited, ver. 15. to ſhew, that tho' not all the perſons ſpoken of, yet ſome did provoke the Lord by their unbelief, and unbecoming carriage, ver. 16. wherefore, by the example of puniſhment being inflicted on ſuch, of which inſtances are given in the fore-fathers of theſe people, ſuch as their carcaſſes falling in the wilderneſs, and their not entring into the land of Canaan, which they could not, becauſe God ſwore they ſhould not, being grieved and provoked by them, and becauſe of their unbelief, they are diſſuaded from the ſame evils, leſt they ſhould be puniſhed in like manner, ver. 17, 18, 19.

Ver. 1. Wherefore holy brethren, &c.] The Apoſtle calls the Hebrews brethren, not becauſe they were of the ſame natural ſtock and lineage, but becauſe they were in the ſame ſpiritual relation; they all had the ſame father, belonged to the ſame family, were the adopted ſons of God, the brethren of Chriſt, of one another, and of the Apoſtle; and they were holy, not by birth, nor by their external ſeparation from other nations, but thro' ſanctification of the Spirit; and they were ſo by profeſſion, and in the opinion of the Apoſtle: partakers of the heavenly calling; by which is meant, not any buſineſs, or employment of life; nor a call to any office in church or ſtate; nor a mere external call by the miniſtry of the word; but an internal, ſpecial call of grace, to the enjoyment of the bleſſings of grace here, and to glory hereafter; and which is not according to works, but according to the grace of God, and is by powerful, efficacious, and irreſiſtible grace: and this is ſaid to be heavenly, becauſe the grace by which the ſaints are called is from heaven, and it is to heaven they are called; and the means of their calling, the Goſpel, is from heaven; and this epithet is uſed to ſhew the excellency of their vocation, and to diſtinguiſh it from all others: and this the Hebrews are ſaid to be partakers of; which ſhows, that God had not utterly caſt off that people, and yet that they were not the only perſons that enjoyed the grace of effectual vocation, they were but partners with others; and that the ſaints are alike ſharers in this bleſſing, they are called in one hope of their calling; and it denotes the truth and reality of it: the duty they are exhorted to, is, to conſider the Apoſtle and high-prieſt of our profeſſion, Chriſt Jeſus; the Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions, read, only Jeſus; who is called the Apoſtle, becauſe he was ſent of God to preach the Goſpel, work miracles, and do the will of God, particularly to obtain redemption and ſalvation for his people; which miſſion does not ſuppoſe any inequality of perſons, or change of place, or any compulſion or diſreſpect to Chriſt, but love to men; and is to be underſtood of him as in office as mediator, and ſhows his authority, and that he was no impoſtor. The high-prieſt among the Jews was, on the day of atonement, conſidered as, שליח, an Apoſtle, or meſſenger[*]; for ſo the elders of the Sanhedrim, addreſs him on that day, ſaying, "Lord, "high-preſt, we are the meſſengers of the Sanhedrim, "and thou art, שלוחנו, our Apoſtle, or meſſenger, "and the meſſenger of the Sanhedrim." And it follows here, and the high-prieſt of our profeſſion; which may be underſtood either objectively, whom they profeſſed, both by words or deeds; for a profeſſion of him ſhould be public, viſible, and ſincere; or efficiently, he being the author, ſum, and ſubſtance of the religion, faith, and Goſpel which was profeſſed by them: and he is to be conſidered in the greatneſs and dignity of his perſon, as the Son of God; and in his wondrous grace and love in aſſuming human nature, and dying for his people; and in the relations he ſtands in to them as a father, huſband, brother, friend; and in his ſeveral offices, as mediator, and particularly as ſent of God, to be the ſaviour of ſinners; and as the high-prieſt, who has offered himſelf a ſacrifice, and ever lives to make interceſſion; and all this to encourage the ſaints to hold faſt their profeſſion of him.

Ver. 2. Who was faithful to him that appointed him, &c.] Or made him; Chriſt, as man, was made, but not as God; nor is the Apoſtle ſpeaking [*] Miſn. Yoma, c. 1. §. 5.

ing of the divine nature of Chriſt, but of his offices: wherefore this phraſe deſigns the conſtitution and ſettlement of him in office; which may take in the eternal appointment of him as mediator; the open promiſe of him in time; his miſſion, unction, and atteſtation from God; and his manifeſtation and declaration as ſuch, at his aſcenſion and ſeſſion at God's right hand, when he was made Lord and Chriſt. Now as mediator, he had a truſt repoſed in him; as the perſons of all God's elect, and a fulneſs of all grace for them; the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, and eternal life and happineſs; and alſo the glory of God in their ſalvation: which truſt he has faithfully diſcharged as an Apoſtle, and high-prieſt; in a declaration of the whole will of God; in acknowledging it was his Father's doctrine he brought, and in ſeeking not his own, but his Father's glory; in redeeming and ſaving the perſons committed to him; in diſtributing his grace to them; and in bringing them ſafe to glory; and in taking care of things pertaining to God: as alſo Moſes was faithful in all his houſe; the paſſage referred to, is in Numb. xii. 7. and which ſeems not ſo much to intend the fidelity of Moſes, in managing the affairs of God's houſe, as the largeneſs of the truſt repoſed in him, the dignity and honour conferred on him, and the power and authority he was inveſted with, in having the whole houſe of Iſrael committed to his care and charge, in which he exceeded all other prophets; and ſo the faithfulneſs of Chriſt is not ſo much to be underſtood of the diſcharge of his truſt, as of the truſt itſelf; and the ſenſe is, that he was truſted much by God the Father, who conſtituted him mediator, even as Moſes was; and this ſenſe beſt agrees with ver. 5, 6. And De Dieu has obſerved, that the Hebrew word, נאמן, in Miſnic writings [t], ſignifies, as it does, one that is truſted, or is fit to be truſted, as Chriſt and Moſes were; tho' the former is much more worthy than the latter, as follows.

Ver. 3. For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moſes, &c.] Moſes was counted worthy of glory and honour, and had it given him, both by God and by men; by God, as appears from the work he called him to, to deliver his people Iſrael, to reveal his mind and will to them, and to rule and govern them; and from the favours he ſhewed him, as the miracles he did by him, the near converſe he admitted him to, and the view he gave him of his glory, which he made to paſs before him, and his regard to him at his death and burial, as well as the teſtimony he gave of him; and he was counted worthy of honour by men, and who gave it him, as Pharaoh and his people, and the Iſraelites. The Jews give very great commendations of him; they call him a father in the law, a father in wiſdom, and a father in prophecy [u]; and ſay, that he is the father, maſter, head, and prince of all the prophets [w]; yea, the great prophet expected in the laſt days, they ſay will be but next to Moſes, their maſter [x]: they obſerve, that there were more miracles wrought by, and for him, than were wrought by, and for all the prophets that have been ſince the world began [y]; ſo that he not only exceeded them in the excellency and ſublimity of prophecy, but in the multitude of miracles: but Chriſt is worthy of more glory than Moſes, and has it given him by God, angels, and men: he is a greater ſaviour than Moſes; Moſes was but a temporal ſaviour, but he is the author of ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation: he is a greater prophet than Moſes, being the only-begotten Son of God, who lay in the boſom of the Father, and has declared him, his mind and will, his Goſpel, grace, and truth, as Moſes never did: he is a greater king than he, being made higher than the kings of the earth: he did more miracles than Moſes, and had a greater teſtimony from God, than he had, as that he was his beloved Son, and to be heard; he was alſo raiſed from the dead, and is ſet down at the right hand of God, and is appointed judge of all; he is miniſtred to, and worſhipped by angels, is believed on by men, who aſcribe the whole glory of their ſalvation to him. Inaſmuch as he who hath builded the houſe, hath more honour than the houſe; this houſe, or temple, as the Arabic verſion renders it, is the church, of which Chriſt is the builder; tho' not to the excluſion of the Father, and the Spirit, who are co-efficient builders with him, nor of miniſters of the Goſpel as inſtruments, nor of believers in a private capacity, who build up one another; but he has the chief concern in the building, which lies in the converſion of ſouls, and in the edification of them, and is carried on by his Spirit in the miniſtry of the word and ordinances, and from hence he has a glory; ſee Zech. vi. 12, 13. a greater glory than Moſes, ſeeing he was but a part of this houſe, at moſt but a pillar in it; but Chriſt is the builder, foundation, and corner-ſtone.

Ver. 4. For every houſe is built by ſome man, &c.] Or by ſome one; for a houſe does not build itſelf: this is true of houſes properly taken, or improperly, as nations, tribes, families, and kindred, of the whole church in general, of particular congregations, and of individual believers; the greateſt ſaints, even Apoſtles and prophets, ſuch an one as Moſes, are built by and upon Chriſt; their perſons are built on him; they receive all their gifts for edification from him, and all their ſucceſs is owing to him; tho' they are to be eſteemed of in their proper places: the Apoſtle's deſign is to bring down the high eſteem the Jews had of Moſes, that they might rightly value Chriſt. But he that built all things is God; Chriſt has built all things, and therefore he is God, and muſt be infinitely above Moſes; for this is not to be underſtood of God the Father, and of the creation of the world, and of all things in it by him; but of Chriſt, and of his building the church, and of his ordering and managing of that, and all affairs relating to it; ſuch as the conſtitution of it, ſettling the worſhip of God, and the ordinances in it, the redemption and ſalvation of the members of it, and its rule and government; all which prove him to be God, and above Moſes.

Ver. 5. And Moſes verily was faithful in all his houſe as a ſervant, &c.] Moſes was not only a ſervant to the Iſraelites, but he was alſo the Lord's ſervant, a ſervant of his chuſing, ſending, and approving; he was a ſervant in holy things, and ſerved the Lord heartily, ſincerely, and ingenuouſly, with all becoming fear and reverence, reſpect and honour, and with all ready and chearful obedience; the houſe in which he was a ſervant, was not his own, but belonged to God, even the Son of God, as appears from the following verſe; he was not a ſervant in the world, and with reſpect to civil things, and the affairs of providence, but in the church of God, and in divine things; and he was faithful here, and that in all things; he did all things exactly according to the pattern ſhewed him in the mount; and the Apoſtle ſtrongly affirms all this, as he well might, ſince there was full proof of it, and God himſelf had bore a teſtimony to it: and the end of his being a ſervant here was, for a teſtimony of thoſe things which were to be ſpoken after; theſe words may regard his faithful teſtification of God's will to the people of Iſrael, after he was fixed as a ſervant in God's houſe; or what he ſaid afterwards concerning the Meſſiah, of whom he ſpake and wrote, and of whom he bore an honourable teſtimony, Deut. xviii. 15. or they may have reſpect to the things ſpoken after Moſes's time, by the prophets, Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, which agreed with the teſtimony of Moſes; or to the things afterwards ſpoken of in this epiſtle; to which may be added, that Moſes in his office was typical of things to be ſpoken and done by the Meſſiah, when he came; as his deliverance of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt; his leading them through the Red Sea and wilderneſs, to Canaan's land; his giving them the law from mount Sinai; the erection of the tabernacle, with all its furniture, and the inſtitution of ſacrifices, and the like.

[y] Menaſſeh ben Iſrael, Conciliat. in Deut. qu. 11.

Ver. 6. But Chriſt as a ſon over his own houſe, &c.] As Moſes was not, tho' the Jews ſay that he was מאריה דבית [a] and בעל הבית [b] lord and maſter of the houſe; yea and בן בית the ſon of the houſe [c]; but this he was not: Chriſt is the ſon and heir, the Lord and maſter; he is a ſon, not by creation, or by adoption, or by office, but by nature: hence it appears that he is God, and is equal with God; and this his ſonſhip is the foundation of his office, and hereby he becomes the heir of all things: and when he is ſaid to be as a ſon, it does not intend mere reſemblance; but is expreſſive of his right to heirſhip and government, and of the eſteem and reverence he had in his houſe, and of his fidelity as a ſon there; and tho' he was a ſervant, as man and mediator, and had a great piece of ſervice to perform, and which he has performed with diligence and faithfulneſs, yet he was alſo a ſon, Lord and heir, as Moſes was not; and he is over the houſe of God, as king, prieſt, and prophet in it, and as the firſt-born, ſon and heir, and as the maſter and governor of it; and which is called his own, becauſe given him by the father, purchaſed by himſelf, and which he has built, and in which he dwells: whoſe houſe are we; believers in Chriſt, whether Jews or Gentiles; who as lively ſtones are built up a ſpiritual houſe, in whom Chriſt dwells by faith, and over whom he preſides and reigns: if we hold faſt the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end. Theſe words are not to be underſtood as a condition of the former aſſertion; nor is a final falling away from grace to be inferred from hence, for the ſuppoſition proves not ſuch an inference, but the contrary; namely, that they that have true faith, hope, and confidence, ſhall keep them to the end; and therefore are the houſe of Chriſt: beſides, the doctrine of apoſtacy, is quite repugnant to the Apoſtle's argument; according to which, Chriſt might have no houſe, and can have none till men have perſevered: but the Apoſtle's deſign is to give a word of exhortation to himſelf and others, to hold faſt the confidence; and ſo the words are rather deſcriptive of the perſons, who are the houſe of Chriſt; ſuch who have a good hope through grace, wrought in them, and can rejoice in hope of the glory of God; and can uſe freedom of ſpeech and boldneſs at the throne of grace; and have an holy confidence of intereſt in the love of God, and ſalvation by Chriſt, and go on in the exerciſe of theſe graces to the end of their days.

Ver. 7. Wherefore as the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, &c.] In Pſ. xcv. 7. to day if ye will hear his voice; either the precepts of Chriſt, to hear which is to obey them; and this is an acknowledgment of Chriſt as king of ſaints, and is a teſtimony of love to him, and is well-pleaſing in his ſight; and in which the ſaints find pleaſure themſelves, and profit alſo: or the Goſpel of Chriſt, which is a voice of love, grace, and mercy; of peace and reconciliation; of pardon and righteouſneſs; of liberty, redemption, and ſalvation by Chriſt; and to hear it, is not only to hear it externally, but internally, ſo as to underſtand it, and diſtinguiſh it from the voice of a ſtranger, and to approve of it, and believe it, and put in practice what is heard: and to day, may intend ſome feſtival-day in David's time, when, and on account of which, this Pſalm was penned; as the feaſt of tabernacles, which was a type of Chriſt tabernacling in human nature; or it may regard the time of man's life, while it is day, or the preſent inſtant of life; or rather, the whole Goſpel diſpenſation. The Pſalm from whence theſe and ſome following words are taken, belongs to the Meſſiah; for the perſon, the ſubject of it, is called the rock of our ſalvation; and every thing in it is applicable to him; as the aſcription of deity, and divine worſhip; the creation and preſervation of the univerſe; yea, he is repreſented as a ſhepherd, and the ſaints as his ſheep; which plainly points at the office of Chriſt: and theſe very words are often made uſe of by the Jews, and applied to the Meſſiah, ſhewing that if the Jews would repent but one day, or keep the ſabbath but one day, the ſon of David, the Meſſiah would come; ſince it is ſaid, to day if ye will hear his voice [d]; which the Chaldee paraphraſe renders מימריה his word, his eſſential word, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 8. Harden not your hearts, &c.] There is a natural hardneſs of the heart; the heart of man is like a ſtone, deſtitute of ſpiritual life, motion, and activity; it is ſenſeleſs, ſtupid, impenitent, ſtubborn, and inflexible; on which no impreſſions can be made, but by powerful grace: and there is an acquired, habitual, and voluntary hardneſs of heart, to which men arrive by various ſteps; as entertaining pleaſing thoughts of ſin; an actual commiſſion of it, with frequency, till it becomes cuſtomary, and ſo habitual; an extenuation or juſtification of it, and ſo they become hardened againſt all reproofs and ſermons, and to all afflictions and judgments; are inſenſible and paſt feeling, and openly declare for ſin, and glory in it: and there is a hardneſs which God's people are liable to, and ſhould guard againſt; and which is brought on by a neglect of private and public worſhip, and by keeping bad company, and through the ill examples of others, and by giving way to leſſer ſins; for all ſin is of an hardening nature: as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderneſs; the Jews provoked God in the wilderneſs by their unbelief, murmurings, ingratitude, and idolatry; and they tempted him there by diſtruſting his power and goodneſs; hence, one of the places in which they murmured againſt him was called Maſſah and Meribah, Exod. xvii. 7. and it is an aggravation of their ſin, that it was in the wilderneſs, after they had been juſt brought out of bondage into liberty, and had lately had ſuch an inſtance of the power and goodneſs of God, in bringing them through the Red Sea; and where they could have no human ſupplies, and therefore ſhould have been entirely dependent on God, and truſt in him.

Ver. 9. When your fathers tempted me, &c.] This the Apoſtle cites and repeats, to expoſe the glorying of the Jews in their anceſtors; to diſſuade them from following their ſinful practices; to deter them from the ſame by obſerving both their ſin and puniſhment; and to heighten their regards to the voice and Goſpel of Chriſt: proved me; this is either an explication of the former phraſe; or it may deſign the experience this people had of the power and goodneſs of God, notwithſtanding their tempting and provoking the Lord by a diſtruſt of them; which is an aggravation of their ſin and ingratitude, and ſhews the forbearance of God, and that wicked men may partake of outward favours: and ſaw my works forty years; that is, God's works of providence, in furniſhing them with the neceſſaries of life, in guiding, protecting, and ſupporting them for the ſpace of forty years, in the wilderneſs; and his miracles, and the puniſhment of their enemies; yet they ſaw and perceived not, but all this time ſinned againſt the Lord, ſee Deut. xxix. 2—8. the ſpace of time, forty years, is in the Pſalm placed to the beginning of the next verſe, and is joined with God's grief and indignation at the people, as it is alſo by the Apoſtle, in ver. 17. but the people's ſin, and God's grief at it being of equal duration, it matters not to which it is placed, and therefore to both; perhaps, one reaſon of its being repeated, and ſo much notice taken of it is, becauſe there was juſt this number of years from Chriſt's ſufferings, to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; which the Apoſtle might have in view.

Ver. 10. Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, &c.] דור מדבר the generation of the wilderneſs, as the Jews often call them; and which they ſay was more beloved than any generation [e]; and yet they won't allow them a part in the world to come; ſee the note on the following verſe. When God is ſaid to be grieved with them, it is to be conſidered as an Anthropopathy, as ſpeaking after the manner of men, as in Gen. vi. 5, 6. The word ſignifies, that he was wearied by them, and weary of them; that he loathed them, and was diſpleaſed with them; it ſhews the notice God took of their ſin; the heinouſneſs of it, his diſplicency at it, and determination to puniſh it: the cauſe of his grief and indignation were their unbelief, ingratitude, and idolatry: and ſaid, they do always err in their heart; all ſins are errors, or aberrations from the law of God; all men err in this ſenſe: theſe people erred in their hearts, for there is error in the underſtanding, and will, and affections, as well as in life and actions; and they may be ſaid to err in their hearts, becauſe their ſins not only ſprung from the heart, but they were done heartily, or with their hearts, and that continually; which ſhews the ſottiſhneſs of this people; their ſtubbornneſs and rebellion; their want of integrity, and their conſtancy in ſinning: heart ſins as well as others, are taken notice of by God: and they have not known my ways; they did not take notice of God's ways of providence towards them; nor did they approve of, and delight in his ways of worſhip and duty, or in his commands.

Ver. 11. So I ſware in my wrath, &c.] Swearing is aſcribed to God, to ſhew the certainty of the thing ſpoken of; as of mercies, when he ſwears in love, and by his holineſs; ſo here, of puniſhment, when he ſwears in wrath, in indignation, in ſore diſpleaſure, and the threatned evil is irrevocable and inevitable: they ſhall not enter into my reſt; into the land of Canaan, called God's reſt, becauſe he promiſed it, and gave it to the Iſraelites as their reſt; and where he himſelf had a place of reſt; and where he gave the Meſſiah, the author of peace and reſt; and which was a type of heaven, that reſt from toil and labour, which remains for the people of God; and into which it is ſaid, this generation did not enter; for the Jews ſay [f], "the generation of the wilderneſs have no part in the world "to come:" but this ſeems too harſh, for doubtleſs there were many who died in the wilderneſs, that went ſafe to heaven, notwithſtanding all their ſins and provocations.

Ver. 12. Take heed, brethren, &c.] This exhortation is founded upon the State and caſe of their anceſtors before given, as a warning and caution to the then preſent Hebrews; and whom the Apoſtle ſtiles brethren, to ſhew that he had no hard thoughts of them, and that his jealouſy was a godly one, and not an evil ſuſpicion; and may teach us that all exhortations, admonitions, and reproofs ſhould be given in love: leſt there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief; or ſuch an evil heart, in which unbelief prevails, and is predominant: there is in every man whether a profane ſinner, or an hypocritical profeſſor, an evil heart, and an unbelieving one; and there is unbelief in regenerate perſons, which when cheriſhed and encouraged by them is a great evil, and ſhould be avoided; and this ſin is aggravated by the many inſtances of God's grace, and by the many declarations of it, and by the exceeding great and precious promiſes God has made, and by the great diſcoveries of his love to their ſouls in times paſt: and this ſin, when it gets a-head, has a very great influence on the heart, to make it evil; and unbelief was the firſt ſin of man, at leaſt it very early appeared; it is the mother-ſin, and puts perſons upon every ſin; it defiles the conſcience, hardens the heart, renders the word unprofitable, unfits for duty, and makes men unſtable, and therefore to be ſhunned; and eſpecially becauſe of the dreadful effect following: in departing from the living God; that is, from Chriſt, who is the ſon over his own houſe, and whoſe voice is to be heard; for of no other is the Apoſtle ſpeaking in the context; and who is not only the ſon of the living God, but he is himſelf the living God; he has life in himſelf, and is the fountain and author of life, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal. This is mentioned to exalt the perſon of Chriſt, the Apoſtle and high-prieſt of our profeſſion; and to diſcover the greatneſs and heinouſneſs of the ſin of ſuch as depart from him and his Goſpel, and to deter men from it: there is a final and total departure from Chriſt, from his Goſpel and ordinances, from his people, and from a former profeſſion of faith, which is never to be found in true believers; for they are as mount Zion, which can never be removed; but there is a partial departure, and for a while, which they are liable to, and is attended with bad effects to them, and ſhould be guarded againſt: ſaints ſhould take heed of themſelves, and of their hearts, and of [illegible] unbelief of them, that they do not in the leaſt depart from Chriſt, by letting go their hold of him, or by a non-exerciſe of faith upon him; and this ſhould be the care and concern of every individual member of the church, and at all times; unbelief is very diſhonourable to God and Chriſt; contradicts the word and promiſes of God; is uncomfortable to the ſaints; it is a ſin that very eaſily beſets, ſets, and is very provoking to God, and is highly reſented by him.

Ver. 13. But exhort one another daily, &c.] In order to prevent unbelief and apoſtacy. The phraſe is ſometimes rendered, comfort one another, or, your ſelves together, as in 1 Theſſ. v. 11. which the ſaints may do, by diſcourſing together about divine things; by praying together; by inſtructing one another in the doctrines of the Goſpel; by putting one another in mind of the covenant of grace, and its promiſes; and by obſerving the near approach of everlaſting happineſs with Chriſt. And tho' the buſineſs of exhortation greatly belongs to miniſters of the word, yet it ought not to be neglected by private believers; who ought, when it becomes neceſſary, to exhort one another to prayer; to an attendance on the word and ordinances; to a regard to their converſations; to a cloſe adherence to their profeſſion; and to a believing view and conſideration of Chriſt, the Apoſtle and high-prieſt of it; and to a due concern for his truth and intereſt: and this ſhould be done in love, with good and conſolatory words, and in things, in which the ſaints are concerned, and do themſelves regard; and it is an affair which requires prudence and faithfulneſs; and ſuppoſes that God's own people may be dull, heavy, and ſluggiſh; and this is to be done daily, every day, as often as there is an occaſion, and an opportunity for it: and while it is called to day; while the Goſpel diſpenſation continues; or while the time of life laſts. This ſhews that the phraſe to day, in Pſ. xcv. did not reſpect David's time only. The Syriac verſion renders it, until that day which is called to day; until the everlaſting day appears, when there will be no need of ſuch exhortations, nor any danger of what follows: leſt any of you be hardened through the deceitfulneſs of ſin; actual ſin, which is a tranſgreſſion of the law; every ſin is of an hardening nature, and by being often committed, an habit is contracted, and a callouſneſs brought upon the heart and conſcience; or the corruption of nature, indwelling ſin may be meant; an evil and a corrupt heart which deceives through promiſes of pleaſure, or profit to a man's ſelf, or of ſecrecy and impunity; it ſuggeſts the power a man has to repent at pleaſure, and the mercy of God, by which means the man is drawn in to it, and by frequent repeating it, grows hardened in it.

Ver. 14. For we are made partakers of Chriſt, &c.] Being loved by him, given to him, and choſen in him before the foundation of the world; and ſo participate of all ſpiritual bleſſings in him; for this reſpects ſomething paſt, and may be rendered, we have been made. The phraſe is expreſſive of union to Chriſt, which is not by faith on man's part, and by the ſpirit on Chriſt's part, but by his everlaſting love, taking his people into an oneneſs with himſelf; thereby becoming their head, ſurety, and repreſentative, which is the ground and foundation of all the bleſſings of grace being imparted to them: hence ariſes communion; as this is a conjugal union, there is communion of names, of perſons, of goods, of honour and dignity, and of everlaſting glory; as it is a federal or repreſentative union, hence a non-imputation of ſin, juſtification, and freedom from condemnation; and as it is an union of head and members; hence a communication of life, and the ſecurity of it, and of all grace and ſtrength; hence holineſs, fruitfulneſs, and perſeverance, and everlaſting happineſs both of ſoul and body: if we hold faſt the beginning of our confidence ſtedfaſt unto the end; by confidence is meant faith, which is an hypoſtaſis, or ſubſiſtence which is the word here uſed; and is ſo called, becauſe it gives a kind of ſubſiſtence, ſubſtance, or being to things it is concerned with, Heb. xi. 1. and becauſe it is a great ſupport to believers, under their various exerciſes; and is that by which they have an open, ſpiritual, and comfortable ſubſiſtence, and abiding in Chriſt: the beginning of it which is to be held faſt, is either Chriſt himſelf, who is the αρχη, the beginning, the author, and finiſher of faith; and ſo this ſhews from whom, and in what way, this grace is diſtributed; and is expreſſive of communion with Chriſt, and is an evidence of the participation of him: or elſe the Goſpel, which is the means of implanting faith, and directs to that which is the ground and foundation of it; and this is to be held faſt, and never to be departed from: or elſe the grace of faith itſelf, which is a grace but begun, not yet finiſhed, but ſhall continue, and is to be held faſt, and conſtantly exerciſed; and perſeverance in believing on Chriſt is an evidence of union to him.

Ver. 15. While it is ſaid to day, &c.] Exhort one another, and hold faſt Chriſt and his Goſpel, and faith and confidence therein; what follows is a repetition of the citation in ver. 7, 8. in order to make a further improvement of it; which ſhews, that the words belong to the preſent times of the Goſpel, and contain in them matter of moment, and great concern; and that ſcripture inſtructions and exhortations are of perpetual uſe.

Ver. 16. For ſome when they had heard, &c.] The Arabic verſion adds, his voice; the law on mount Sinai; the voice of words, with the voices and thunderings that attended it; the book of the covenant read; the whole ſyſtem of laws and ordinances delivered to Moſes, and by him to them; and alſo the Goſpel, for that was preached to the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, and heard by them; as appears from ch. iv. 2. and which ſeems chiefly intended: and yet ſome of the hearers of it did provoke; not only Moſes, to ſpeak unadviſedly with his lips; but they provoked Jehovah himſelf, and the angel of his preſence, and his Holy Spirit, by their idolatry, ingratitude, and unbelief: and the aggravation of their ſin is, that they did it when they had heard the Goſpel, and while they were hearing it; which ſhews that the Goſpel may be heard to no advantage; as when it is heard in a careleſs and indifferent manner; when it makes no impreſſion, takes no place, and has no root; when the world and the things of it are the great concern of the mind, while hearing it; when it is not attended with the power and Spirit of God; when it is not received in love, nor mixed with faith, nor put in practice: and hence the Goſpel heard, comes to be an aggravation of mens condemnation: howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moſes; that is, they did not all provoke, but ſome did; which is another aggravation of their ſin; they were juſt come out of Egyptian bondage; brought out of it by the Lord, with the mighty and outſtretched arm of his power; and yet they provoked him: and this was done by Moſes; by the hand of Moſes, as the Syriac verſion renders it; by his means, by him as an inſtrument; and yet they provoked him: but however all did not, yet theſe were but few; it ſeems only Caleb and Joſhua, out of ſix hundred thouſand; God will have a few to ſerve him in the worſt of times.

Ver. 17. But with whom was he grieved forty years? &c.] As is ſaid in Pſ. xcv. 10. ſee the note on ver. 10. was it not with them that had ſinned; not merely by committing perſonal iniquities, and particular provocations, which all men are guilty of, but by committing publick ſins; they ſinned as a body of men; they joined together in the commiſſion of ſin: every ſin is grieving to God, becauſe it is contrary to his nature, is an act of enmity to him, is a tranſgreſſion of his righteous law, and a contempt of his authority; but eſpecially publick ſins, or the ſins of a multitude, and when they are perſiſted in, which was the caſe of the Iſraelites; they ſinned againſt him during the forty years they were in the wilderneſs; and ſo long was he grieved with them: the Alexandrian copy reads, with them that believed not; which points out the particular ſin theſe men were guilty of, and which was ſo grieving to God, and ſuits well with the Apoſtle's deſign: whoſe carcaſſes fell in the wilderneſs? and ſo never entered into the land of Canaan. They died in the wilderneſs; and they did not die common and natural deaths, at leaſt not all of them; their deaths were by way of puniſhment; in a way of wrath; in a judicial way: the Syriac verſion renders it, their bones fell in the wilderneſs; they lay ſcattered and unburied, and expoſed to view, as an example of divine vengeance, ſee Numb. xiv. 29.

Ver. 18. And to whom ſware he that they ſhould not enter into his reſt, &c.] As in Pſ. xcv. 11. ſee the note on ver. 11. but to them that believed not? the Lord; notwithſtanding the ſigns and wonders he ſhewed among them, they would not be perſuaded by Moſes and Aaron, by Joſhua and Caleb, to be ſtill and quiet, to ceaſe murmuring, and ſubmit to the will of God, and believe in him; they were diſobedient, ſtubborn, and rebellious, and would go up, when they were bid not to go up; for which reaſon God ſwore in his wrath that they ſhould not enter into the good land. Unbelief is a ſource of ſin, and cauſe of judgment, being greatly provoking to God.

Ver. 19. So we ſee that they could not enter in, &c.] To God's reſt, the land of Canaan, for they died by the plague before the Lord, and their carcaſſes fell in the wilderneſs, before they came to it, Numb. xiv. 37, 45. and the reaſon was, becauſe of unbelief; their diſtruſt of God, his power, and his providence: this inſtance is produced by the Apoſtle, to ſhew the evil nature of unbelief, and the ſad effects of it; to deter perſons from it, and that they might take heed of encouraging it; and which inſtance he further improves in the following chapter.

CHAP. IV.

FROM the puniſhment inflicted on the unbelieving Hebrews, who died in the wilderneſs, and entered not into the land of reſt made mention of in the preceding chapter, the Apoſtle proceeds to caution the preſent Hebrews of his time, and who profeſſed faith in Chriſt, leſt ſeeing there was a reſt, and a promiſe of entering into it, they ſhould ſeem to come ſhort of it, ver. 1. and the rather, ſince they that fell in the wilderneſs had the Goſpel preached to them as well as they; and the reaſon why it did not profit was, becauſe it was not received by faith, ver. 2. as alſo ſeeing it is by faith that believers now enter into reſt, ver. 3. which reſt is not the reſt of the ſeventh day, on which God reſted; nor the reſt of the land of Canaan which Joſhua led the Iſraelites into; for if he had entered them into the reſt the Apoſtle means, David, ſo many hundred years after him, would not have made mention of another reſt, ver. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. wherefore it follows that there is another reſt for the people of God, which he that enters into ceaſes from his own works, as God did from his, ver. 9, 10. and this is the reſt that every one that profeſſes faith in Chriſt, ſhould be ſolicitous and diligent to enter into, leſt he ſhould fall ſhort of it through unbelief; as the unbelieving Iſraelites did of their reſt, ver. 11. and the arguments engaging to ſuch a concern are taken from the properties and perfections of Chriſt, the eſſential word of God; particularly from his omnipotence and his omniſcience, ver. 12, 13. And ſeeing he is by nature the ſon of God, and by office a great high-prieſt that is entered into heaven for his people, the encouragement is great to hold faſt the profeſſion of faith in him they have made, ver. 14. and the rather, ſince he is a ſympathiſing high-prieſt, as he muſt needs be, ſince he has been tempted, afflicted, and has ſuffered every way as his people, and is in all reſpects like them, excepting that he has no ſin, ver. 15. and this conſideration ſhould engage believers to come to the throne of grace with all boldneſs, and in expectation of having grace and mercy beſtowed on them for the ſupply of their daily wants, ver. 16.

Ver. 1. Let us therefore fear, &c.] Not with a fear of wrath and damnation; nor with a fear of diffidence and diſtruſt of the power, grace, and goodneſs of God; but with a cautious fear, a godly jealouſy, a careful circumſpection, and watchfulneſs: leſt a promiſe being left us of entering into his reſt; not the land of Canaan, the type of heaven, but rather heaven itſelf, the ultimate glory: there is a reſt of the body in the grave, from work, ſervice, and labour, and from diſtempers and diſeaſes, where it reſts under the guardianſhip of the Spirit, until the reſurrection morn; and there is a reſt of the ſoul before the reſurrection, in the arms of Chriſt, with whom it immediately is, upon its departure from the body; and there is a reſt both of ſoul and body after the reſurrection, from ſin, from afflictions, from ſatan's temptations, from unbelief, doubts, and fears, and from all enemies: and this may be called, the reſt of God, becauſe he is the author and giver of it; and it will lie much in communion with him; and beſides, heaven is the place of God's reſt, Iſ. lxvi. 1, 2. and the poſſeſſion and enjoyment of the heavenly glory is often ſignified by an entering into it: and there is a promiſe of this, which is left in Chriſt's hands, and ſhall never fail; tho' ſome who have hoped for it may come ſhort of it, or at leaſt ſeem to do ſo: but rather a reſt under the Goſpel diſpenſation is here intended, ſince it is a reſt believers enter into now, ver. 3. and ſince the Goſpel church is repreſented as a ſtate of peace and reſt, Iſ. xi. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. and which lies in a more clear and comfortable application of the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt to the ſaints; in a freedom from a ſpirit of bondage to fear, and from the yoke of carnal ordinances, and in the enjoyment of Goſpel privileges and ordinances; and this is God's reſt, which he has provided for New Teſtament ſaints, and into which they enter by faith, and a profeſſion of it; and the Goſpel is the promiſe or declaration which was left among theſe Hebrews, and in the world, to encourage them ſo to do: leſt any of you ſhould ſeem to come ſhort of it; either of the promiſe, or the reſt promiſed; which if underſtood of the heavenly glory, the ſenſe is, that tho' true believers ſhall not come ſhort of that, yet they may ſeem to others to do ſo; and therefore ſhould be careful of their lives and converſations, that they might not ſeem to come ſhort; and this they ſhould do, for the glory of God, the honour of Chriſt and his Goſpel, and the good of others: but if the reſt, and the promiſe of it intend the Goſpel and its diſpenſation, the meaning is; that ſaints ſhould be concerned ſo to behave, that they might not ſeem to fail of the doctrine of the grace of God, and to be diſappointed of that reſt and peace promiſed in it. One of Stephens's copies read, leſt any of us; which ſeems moſt agreeable both to what goes before, and follows.

Ver. 2. For unto us was the Goſpel preached, &c.] The Goſpel is the good news and glad tidings of ſalvation by Chriſt; and this may be ſaid to be preached, when men preach not themſelves, nor read lectures of morality, nor mix law and Goſpel together, nor make juſtification and ſalvation to be by works, nor ſet perſons to make their peace with God, or get an intereſt in Chriſt; but when they preach Chriſt, and ſalvation alone by him; and ſo it was preached to the Hebrews, and that more fully, and with more clearneſs, power, and ſucceſs than formerly; and which is a privilege and bleſſing; and is ſometimes bleſſed for the conviction of ſinners, for regeneration, for the implanting of faith, and the comfort of believers. The words may be rendered, we were evangelized; as ſuch may be ſaid to be, who have a ſpirit of liberty, in oppoſition to a ſpirit of bondage; who live by faith on Chriſt alone; who derive their peace and comfort, not from their works, but from him; whoſe repentance and obedience are influenced by the love of God; and who deſire to perform all duties aright, and depend on none: now tho' this was true of the Apoſtle and others, yet is not the ſenſe here, becauſe of what follows, as well as unto them, or even as they; for tho' the Goſpel was preached to the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, in the miniſtry of Moſes, and by types and ſacrifices; yet they were not evangelized by it, or caſt into a Goſpel mould, or brought into a Goſpel ſpirit: however it was preached unto them; which ſhews the antiquity of it; the ſameneſs of the method of ſalvation in all ages; the neceſſity of ſalvation by Chriſt, and the unity of Chriſt's church under different diſpenſations: but the word preached did not profit them; that is, the Goſpel, which is here called the word of hearing, as it may be rendred; becauſe it is and may be heard; and there is a neceſſity of hearing, in order to faith in Chriſt: the word ſignifies a rumour, or report: the Goſpel is a report of Chriſt, his perſon and offices; of his great love to ſinners, and of what he has done for them; but tho' it is a word of hearing, a report made, and the word preached, yet to ſome it is unprofitable; it has no good effect upon them; yea it is the ſavour of death unto death to them, and the aggravation of condemnation; and the reaſon of the inefficacy and unprofitableneſs of the word to the Iſraelites was, its not being mixed with faith in them that heard it; the Goſpel is as food, and faith is the hand that receives it, and takes it, and taſtes of it, and eats it, and concocts and digeſts it; and when this is the caſe, it is profitable and nouriſhing; but when it is otherwiſe, it is not. The Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, and five of Beza's antient copies, and as many of Stephens's, with others, read, they were not mixed; referring it not to the word, but to perſons; and ſo read the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions; and the ſenſe is, that the generality of the Iſraelites did not join themſelves in faith, in believing in God, to Caleb and Joſhua; who hearkened to the Lord, and received and obeyed his word; and ſo the word became uſeleſs to them: there ought to be an union or conjunction of the ſaints, and the bond of this union is love; and the thing in which they unite is faith, believing in Chriſt, and the doctrine of faith, which is but one; and tho' the word may be profitable to others who are not in the communion of the ſaints; yet forſaking the aſſembly of the ſaints, and not conſtantly attending with them, or not mixing with them continually in publick worſhip, is one reaſon of the unprofitable hearing of the word when it is preached to them.

Ver. 3. For we which have believed do enter into reſt, &c.] Not eternal reſt; all believers ſhall enjoy this, and they only; but this is not now, or at preſent enjoyed, unleſs things future may be ſaid to be preſent, becauſe of faith in them, and the certainty of them; but ſpiritual reſt in Chriſt under the Goſpel diſpenſation, which is a reſt from the burthen of the law of Moſes, and from all toil and labour for life, and ſalvation by works, and lies in an enjoyment of much inward peace of ſoul, notwithſtanding the world's troubles and ſatan's temptations; and ſuch who believe the word or Goſpel preached, and Chriſt in it, not with a general and hiſtorical faith, or only in profeſſion, but with the heart, and in truth, theſe enjoy this reſt; they are kept in perfect peace, and have much ſpiritual eaſe and comfort: this character diſtinguiſhes them from the unbelieving Iſraelites of old, and from preſent hypocrites and formal profeſſors: as he ſaid, as I have ſworn in my wrath, if they ſhall enter into my reſt; the words are in Pſ. xcv. 11. and are before cited in ch. iii. 11. ſee the note there: they entred not in becauſe of unbelief; none but believers enter into ſpiritual reſt. The Apoſtle applies this proof to his deſign, by removing all other reſts, and particularly by ſhewing that it does not mean God's reſt from the works of creation: although the works were finiſhed from the foundation of the world; that is, tho' the works of creation, all that God deſigned to make, were finiſhed and perfected within the firſt ſix days of the world, and then God reſted or ceaſed to work in a creative way; yet this is not the reſt deſigned in the paſſage of ſcripture cited, nor is it that reſt which believers enter into.

Ver. 4. For he ſpake in a certain place, &c.] Gen. ii. 2. that is, Moſes, the penman of that book ſpoke, or God by him: of the ſeventh day on this wiſe; of the ſeventh day of the world, or from the creation of the heavens and the earth: and God did reſt the ſeventh day from all his works; of creation, but not of providence; for in them he works hitherto; nor does this reſt ſuppoſe labour with fatigue and wearineſs, and eaſe and refreſhment from it; only ceſſation from working in a creative way, and the utmoſt delight, complacency and ſatisfaction in what he had done. The Alexandrian copy leaves out the phraſe, the ſeventh day.

Ver. 5. And in this place again, &c.] In Pſ. xcv. 11. he ſpeaks again of another reſt diſtinct from that on the ſeventh day; which, and not the latter, is what believers under the Goſpel diſpenſation enter into: if they ſhall enter into my reſt; that is, unbelievers ſhall not enter into it; as the unbelieving Iſraelites did not enter into the typical reſt, ſo neither ſhall any unbeliever enter into the Goſpel reſt, the antitype of the former.

Ver. 6. Seeing therefore it remaineth, &c.] It follows by juſt conſequence, that ſome muſt enter therein; for God's ſwearing concerning ſome, that they ſhould not enter into his reſt, ſuppoſes that others ſhould: and they to whom it was firſt preached; to whom the Goſpel was firſt preached, namely, the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs: entered not in becauſe of unbelief; ſee ch. iii. 19.

Ver. 7. Again he limiteth a certain day, &c.] Since the ſeventh day of the creation was a day of reſt which God entered into, and not man; and ſince the land of Canaan was a typical reſt, which the unbelieving Iſraelites did not enter into, becauſe of unbelief; and yet there muſt be perſons, and there muſt be a time for them to enter into the true reſt which God has left a promiſe of; therefore he has limited, fixed, and appointed a certain day, the Goſpel diſpenſation, for believers to enter into it: ſaying in David; or by David, who was the penman of the ninety-fifth Pſalm, as may be learned from hence; and this is agreeable to, and confirms a rule which the Jews give, that thoſe Pſalms which are without a title were written by David[g]; the Spirit of God ſpake in him and by him, and plainly pointed out another day of reſt from the abovementioned: to day after ſo long a time; as two thouſand five hundred years from the firſt ſeventh day to David's time, and five hundred years from the times of Moſes and Joſhua, to his: as it is ſaid; the Alexandrian copy reads, as it is before ſaid, or, above ſaid, as the Vulgate Latin, and Syriac verſions; that is, in Pſ. xcv. 7, 8. before cited, ch. iii. 7, 8. to day if ye will hear his voice harden not your hearts; ſee the note on ch. iii. 7, 8.

Ver. 8. For if Jeſus had given them reſt, &c.] That is, Joſhua; for Hoſheah, Joſhua, and Jeſus, are one and the ſame name; or Jeſus himſelf, as two of Stephens's copies read; and ſo Joſhua is called Jeſus by the Septuagint interpreters on Exod. xvii. 10. and xxiv. 13. and other places where he is mentioned; and alſo by Joſephus[h], and Philo[i] the Jew. The Syriac verſion, leſt any ſhould miſtake this for Jeſus Chriſt, adds, the ſon of Nun; who is certainly the perſon deſigned, as the Apoſtle's reaſoning ſhews; who was an eminent type of Jeſus Chriſt: there is an agreement in their names, both ſignify a ſaviour, Joſhua was a temporal ſaviour, Chriſt a ſpiritual one; and in their office they were both ſervants; and in their qualifications for their office, ſuch as wiſdom, courage, faithfulneſs, and integrity. Joſhua was a type of Chriſt in many actions of his life; in the miracles he wrought, or were wrought for him; in the battles he fought, and the victories he obtained; in ſaving Rahab and her family; in receiving the Gibeonites, who came ſubmiſſively to him; and in leading the children of Iſrael into Canaan's land, which he divided to them by lot: but tho' he brought them into a land of reſt, into the typical reſt, where they had reſt for a while from their temporal enemies, yet he did not give them the true ſpiritual reſt: had he, then would he not afterward ſpoken of another day; that is, God, in David's time, and by him, would not have ſo long after appointed another day of reſt; meaning, not any particular day of the week, but the whole Goſpel-diſpenſation, in the times of the Meſſiah; wherefore the Apoſtle concludes as follows.

Ver. 9. There remaineth therefore a reſt for the people of God.] Not all mankind; nor the people of the Jews only; rather the people of God, both Jews and Gentiles, under the New Teſtament; the people whom God has loved with a ſpecial love, has choſe in Chriſt, and given to him, with whom he has made a covenant in him, and whom Chriſt ſaves from their ſins, and calls by his grace; and the reſt which remains for them is not a new ſabbath-day, but a ſabbatiſm: and this does not ſo much deſign eternal reſt in heaven; tho' the Jews often call that a ſabbath; the 92^d^ pſalm they ſay is a pſalm for the time to come, שכלו שבת, which is all ſabbath, and the reſt of eternal life[k]: but rather this intends the ſpiritual reſt believers have in Chriſt under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, which they now enter into, and of which the Apoſtle had been treating; and as for the word remaineth, this does not denote the futurity of it, but the Apoſtle's inference or conſequence from what he had ſaid; and the ſenſe is, it remains therefore, and is a certain fact, a clear conſequence from what has been obſerved, that there is another reſt diſtinct from God's reſt on the ſeventh day, and from the reſt in the land of Canaan; which were both typical ones of the preſent reſt the ſaints now enjoy: ſo the Jews call the world to come, the times of the Meſſiah, שבת הגדול, the great ſabbath[l].

Ver. 10. For he that is entered into his reſt, &c.] This is to be underſtood not of believers, nor of their entrance into the Goſpel reſt, or into eternal reſt, but of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; for a ſingle perſon is only ſpoken of, and not many, as in ver. 3. and the reſt entred into is his own, which cannot be ſaid of any other; and beſides, a compariſon is run between his entrance into reſt, and ceaſing from his works, and God's reſting the ſeventh day, and ceaſing from his, which can only agree with him; and beſides, Chriſt is immediately ſpoken of, and at large deſcribed in ver. 12, 13, 14. Now he entered into his reſt, not when he was laid in the grave, but when he roſe from the dead, and aſcended into heaven, and ſat down at the right hand of God, as having done his work; and this is the ground and foundation of the ſaints reſt under the Goſpel-diſpenſation; for theſe words are a reaſon of the former, as appears by the cauſal particle for: and now being at reſt, he alſo hath ceaſed from his own works, as God did from his; Chriſt had works to do, as preaching the Goſpel, performing miracles, and obtaining the redemption and ſalvation of his people: theſe were given him to do, and he undertook them, and he has finiſhed them; and ſo ceaſes from them, as never to repeat them more, they being done effectually, ſtand in no need of it; and ſo as to take delight and complacency in them; the pleaſure of the Lord proſpering in his hand, the effects of his labour anſwering his deſigns; juſt as God ceaſed from the works of creation, when he had finiſhed them.

Ver. 11. Let us labour therefore to enter into that reſt, &c.] Not eternal reſt; this is not to be entered into now; nor is an entrance into it to be obtained by labour; ſalvation is not by works; eternal life is a free gift; good works don't go before to prepare heaven for the ſaints, but follow after: nor is the ſaints entrance into it a precariou thing; God has promiſed it, and provided it fo his people; Chriſt is in the poſſeſſion of it, and i preparing it for them; and the Spirit of God i working them up for the ſelf-ſame thing, and Chriſt will give them an abundant entrance into it: but the Goſpel reſt is here meant, that reſt which believers now enter into, and is at this preſent time for them, ver. 3, 10. and tho' true believers are entered into it, yet their reſt, peace, and joy in Chriſt is not full; they enter by degrees into it, and by believing enjoy more of it: and this is to be laboured for, by prayer, hearing the word, and attendance on ordinances; and this requires ſtrength, diligence, and induſtry; and ſuppoſes difficulties and diſcouragements, thro' the corruptions of the heart, and the temptations of ſatan; and this is deſigned to quicken and awaken a godly jealouſy in God's people, over themſelves: leſt any man fall after the ſame example of unbelief; into the ſin of unbelief, and into puniſhment thro' it, as the Iſraelites did; who ſinning, their carcaſſes fell in the wilderneſs, and they entered not into God's reſt, as he ſwore they ſhould not: true believers may fall into ſin, and from a degree of the exerciſe of grace, and of the ſtedfaſtneſs of the Goſpel; but they cannot finally and totally fall away, becauſe they are kept by the power of God; yet they may ſo fall, as to come ſhort, or at leaſt ſeem to come ſhort of enjoying the reſt and peace of the Goſpel ſtate: external profeſſors may fall from the Goſpel, and the religion they have profeſſed, and come ſhort of the glory they expected; and fall into juſt and deſerved puniſhment, in like manner as the unbelieving Iſraelites did.

Ver. 12. For the Word of God is quick and powerful, &c.] This is to be underſtood of Chriſt, the eſſential Word of God; for the Word of God was a known name of the Meſſiah among the Jews; ſee the note on John i. 1. and therefore the Apoſtle makes uſe of it when writing to them: and the words are introduced as a reaſon why care ſhould be taken, that men fall not off from the Goſpel, becauſe Chriſt, the author, ſum, and ſubſtance of it, is the living God, omnipotent and omniſcient; for not a thing, but a perſon is ſpoken of, who is a judge, and a critical diſcerner of the ſecrets of mens hearts: and certain it is, that this word is ſpoken of as a perſon, and is ſaid to be a prieſt in the following verſes; to which may be added, that the ſeveral things ſaid of the word exactly agree with Chriſt: he is the Word of God; as the word is the birth of the mind, he is the only-begotten of the Father; he is the Word that ſpoke for the elect in the council and covenant of grace, and that ſpoke all things out of nothing in creation; he is the Word that has been promiſed, and ſpoken of by the prophets from the beginning of the world; and is the interpreter of his Father's mind, and our advocate with the Father: he is quick, or, as it may be better rendered, living; he has life in himſelf as God, he is the living God; he is the living redeemer and mediator, and he lives for ever as man; he is the author and giver of life, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal: and he is powerful, as he appears to be in the creation and ſuſtentation of all things; in his miracles and miniſtrations; in the work of man's redemption; in the preſervation of his people, and in his advocacy and interceſſion: and ſharper than any two-edged ſword; or more cutting than one, by the words of his mouth, by the power of his ſpirit, and the efficacy of his grace; for his mouth itſelf is as a ſharp ſword, and out of it comes forth one, Iſ. xlix. 2. Rev. xix. 13, 15. by which he pierces the hearts of men, cuts them to the quick, and lays them open. Jehovah is called a two-edged ſword with the Jews[m]; and Philo the Jew ſpeaks of the flaming ſword of the Logos[n]. Piercing even to the dividing aſunder ſoul and ſpirit, and of the joints and marrow; the like property Philo the Jew aſcribes to the Logos, or Word; he calls him τομευς, a cutter, and ſays, he cuts and divides all things, even all ſenſible things, yea atoms, and things indiviſible[o]: the Apoſtle ſeems to have reſpect to the ſeveral names with which the ſoul of man is called by the Jews, נפש רוח ונשמה, ſoul, ſpirit, and breath[p]; the latter of theſe, they ſay, dwells between the other two. Some by the ſoul underſtand the natural and unregenerate part in man, and by the ſpirit the renewed and regenerate part, which tho' ſometimes are not ſo eaſily diſtinguiſhed by men, yet they are by Chriſt; others think the ſoul deſigns the inferior faculties, the affections; and the ſpirit the ſuperior ones, the mind and underſtanding: but the Apoſtle's meaning ſeems to be this, that whereas the ſoul and ſpirit are inviſible, and the joints and marrow are covered and hid; ſo ſharp and quick-ſighted, and ſo penetrating is the divine Word, that it reaches the moſt ſecret and hidden things of men: and this ſenſe is confirmed by what follows, and is a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart; Chriſt knows what is in man; he is the ſearcher of the hearts, and the trier of the reins of the children of men; and this will be more apparent at the laſt day, when he will make manifeſt the counſels of the heart, and will critically enquire, and accurately judge of them.

Ver. 13. Neither is there any creature that is not manifeſt in his ſight, &c.] Chriſt is the Lord God omniſcient; there is no creature in general, rational, or irrational, animate or inanimate, but what are known to him, and ſeen by him; for all creatures are made, and upheld by him, and he is omnipreſent; and in particular, there is no man but is manifeſt to him; ſo בריה, creature, is often uſed by the Rabbins for man: all men, openly prophane men, who are enemies to Chriſt, and his people, are under his eye and notice; he knows their perſons, he ſees their actions, even thoſe that are moſt ſecretly deviſed and performed againſt him, and his ſaints; and he takes ſuch notice of them, as to bring them into judgment for them; he knows formal profeſſors of religion, and upon what foot they have taken up their profeſſion, and how they keep their luſts with their profeſſion; he can diſtinguiſh between profeſſion and grace; and he knows and obſerves the ſprings and progreſs of their apoſtacy: and as for true believers, he knows their perſons, and knows them to be his; he ſees their ſins and their weakneſſes; he takes notice of their graces, and obſerves their wants; and there is nothing in them, or belongs to them, but what is before him, even the ſecret deſires of their ſouls. So Philo the Jew ſays[q], the divine Word reaches to, and comprehends all things, nothing eſcapes him: and this phraſe is very commonly uſed of the divine being by the Jews, הכל גלוי לפניו, all things are manifeſt before him[r]; and this being uſed of Chriſt, is no inconſiderable proof of his proper deity: but all things things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do. The words are an alluſion to wreſtlers, who exerciſed naked, and took each other by their necks and collars; and when one was thrown upon his back, as the word rendered opened, is by ſome tranſlated, he was publickly expoſed and known: or to the putting of a creature in ſuch a poſture when ſacrificed; or rather to the cutting of it up, and laying open its entrails; and eſpecially to the manner of doing it among the Jews, with which theſe perſons, the Apoſtle writes to, were acquainted: and it was this; when the lamb for the daily ſacrifice was ſlain, the prieſt hung it up by the foot, and ſkinned it; and when he came to the breaſt, he cut off the head; and having finiſhed the ſkinning of it, he divided the heart, and took out the blood; then he cut off the ſhoulders; and when he came to the right leg, he cut it off, and then cut it down thro' the chine-bone, and כולו גלוי לפניו, all of it was manifeſt before him [s]. The very phraſe before uſed. The word here uſed ſeems to anſwer to ערף, which, with the Arabians, ſignifies, to know, or make known; and מעריף, with the Rabbins, is uſed for a companion, a familiar one that is well known; the theme in the Hebrew, is עורף, the neck. The laſt clauſe, with whom we have to do, manifeſtly points at the perſon here ſpoken of, Jeſus Chriſt: ſaints have a concern with him now, as their way to the father, as their ſaviour and redeemer; they have to do with his blood for pardon and cleanſing, and with his righteouſneſs for juſtification, and with his fulneſs for every ſupply of grace; and with him as their king to rule over them, protect and defend them, and as their prophet to teach them, and their high-prieſt to intercede for them. Moreover, the words may be rendered, to whom we muſt give an account; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders them, to whom they give an account; as all men muſt at the great day: and all this that is ſaid of the word of God ſhould engage to care, watchfulneſs, and circumſpection in the courſe of a profeſſion of religion.

Ver. 14. Seeing then that we have a great high-prieſt, &c.] That Chriſt is a prieſt, and an high-prieſt, has been obſerved already, in ch. ii. 17. but here he is called a great one, becauſe of the dignity of his perſon, as follows, and the virtue of his ſacrifice; and becauſe of the place where he now officiates as a prieſt, heaven; and with reſpect to the continuation of his prieſtood; and likewiſe becauſe he makes others prieſts unto God; and this great high-prieſt is no other than the Word of God before ſpoken of: ſo the divine Logos, or Word, is often called a prieſt, and an high-prieſt, by Philo the Jew [t]. This great high-prieſt believers have, and have an intereſt in him; he is called to this office, and inveſted with it; he has been ſent to do his work as a prieſt; and he has done the greateſt part of it, and is now doing the reſt; and ſaints receive Chriſt as ſuch, and the bleſſings of grace from him, thro' his ſacrifice and interceſſion: that is paſſed into the heavens; he came down from thence, and offered himſelf a ſacrifice for the ſins of his people; and having done this, he aſcended thither again, to appear to make interceſſion for them; whereby he fully anſwers to his character as the great high-prieſt: and what makes him more fully to appear ſo, is what follows, Jeſus, the Son of God; the former of theſe names ſignifies a ſaviour, and reſpects his office; the latter is expreſſive of his dignity, and reſpects his perſon; who is the Son of God in ſuch ſenſe as angels and men are not; not by creation, nor adoption, but by nature; not as man and mediator, but as God, being of the ſame nature with his Father, and equal to him; and 'tis this which makes him a great high-prieſt, and gives virtue and efficacy to all he does as ſuch: wherefore, let us hold faſt our profeſſion; of faith, of the grace and doctrine of faith, and of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him, and of the hope of eternal life and happineſs; which being made both by words and deeds, publickly and ſincerely, ſhould be held faſt; which ſuppoſes ſomething valuable in it, and that there is danger of dropping it; and that it requires ſtrength, courage, and greatneſs of mind, and an uſe of all proper means: and it ſhould be held without wavering; for it is good and profitable, it recommends the Goſpel; and it has been made publickly before witneſſes; and not to hold it faſt is diſpleaſing to God, and reſented by him: and the prieſthood of Chriſt is an argument to enforce this duty, for he is the high-prieſt of our profeſſion; he has eſpouſed our cauſe, and abode by it; he has bore witneſs to the truth of the Goſpel himſelf; he prays for the ſupport of our faith; he pities and ſuccours; and he is paſſed into the heavens, where he appears for us, owns us, and will own us.

Ver. 15. For we have not an high-prieſt, &c.] That is cruel and unmerciful; the ſaints have an high-prieſt, but not ſuch an one: which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; ſuch as bodily diſeaſes, and wants, perſecutions from men, and the temptations of ſatan; under all which Chriſt ſympathizes with his people; and which ſympathy of his ariſes from his knowledge and experience of theſe things, and the ſhare he has had of them, and from that union there is between him and his people: and it is not a bare ſympathy, but is attended with his aſſiſtance, ſupport, and deliverance; and the conſideration of it is of great comfort to the ſaints: but was in all points tempted like as we are; of the temptations of Chriſt, and of the ſaints, ſee the note on ch. ii. 18. yet without ſin; there was no ſin in his nature; tho' he was encompaſſed about with infirmities, yet not with ſinful infirmities, only ſinleſs ones; nor was there any ſin in his temptations; tho' he was ſolicited to ſin by ſatan, yet he could find none in him to work upon; nor could he draw him into the commiſſion of any ſin.

Ver. 16. Let us therefore come boldly to the throne of grace, &c.] Either to Chriſt, who is before ſpoken of as an high-prieſt, and who was typified by the mercy-ſeat, to which there ſeems to be an alluſion; and coming to him as a prieſt upon his throne, is very proper: to him ſaints come for pardon and cleanſing, and for a juſtifying righteouſneſs, for the acceptance of their perſons, and the preſentation of their ſervices, and for every ſupply of grace; and to him they may come boldly, ſince he ſtands in the relations of a father, huſband, and brother; and from him they may expect to receive mercy, ſince it is kept for him, and with him, and is only diſpenſed thro' him; and in him they may hope to find grace, ſince all fulneſs of it dwells in him; and help in every time of need, ſince their help is laid on him. Or elſe to God the Father, ſince Chriſt, the high-prieſt, is the way of acceſs to God, and it is by him the ſaints come unto the Father; who is repreſented as on a throne, to ſhew his majeſty, and to command reverence; and as on a throne of grace, to encourage diſtreſſed ſouls to come unto him; and to expreſs his ſovereignty in the diſtribution of his grace: and this coming to him is a ſacerdotal act, for every believer is a prieſt; and is not local, but ſpiritual, and with the heart, and by faith; and chiefly regards the duty of prayer, and a drawing nigh to God in that ordinance with ſpiritual ſacrifices to offer unto him: and this may be done boldly, or with freedom of ſpeech; ſpeaking out plainly all that is in the heart, uſing an holy courage and intrepidity of mind, free from ſervile fear, and a baſhful ſpirit; all which requires an heart ſprinkled from an evil conſcience, faith in the perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, a view of God, as a God of peace, grace, and mercy, and a holy confidence of being heard by him; and ſuch a ſpirit and behaviour at the throne of grace, are very conſiſtent with reverence of the divine majeſty, with ſubmiſſion to his will, and with that humility which becomes ſaints. The Jews often ſpeak of, כסא הדין, a throne of judgment, and, כסא רחמים, a throne of mercy[u]; and repreſent God as ſitting upon one or other of theſe, when he is diſpenſing juſtice or mercy[w]; and the latter they ſometimes call, as here, כסא חסד ורחמים, a throne of grace and mercy[x]: and ſo they make the firſt man Adam to pray to God after this manner[y]; "let my prayer come before the throne of thy glory, and let my cry come before, כסא רחמיך, the throne of thy mercy." The end of coming hither is, that we may obtain mercy; the ſure mercies of David, the bleſſings of the everlaſting covenant; particularly pardoning mercy, and the freſh application of it, and every other bleſſing of grace that is needful: and there's reaſon to expect it, ſince there is mercy with God; and it is with Chriſt, as the head of the covenant; and it is ready for thoſe that aſk it; and it has been obtained by many, and is everlaſting. And find grace to help in time of need; the Syriac verſion renders it, in time of affliction; which is a time of need, as every time of diſtreſs is, whether from the immediate hand of God, or thro' the perſecutions of men, or the temptations of ſatan: and help at ſuch times may be expected; ſince not only God is able to help, but he has promiſed it; and he has laid help on Chriſt; and gives it ſeaſonably, and at the beſt time; and it ſprings from grace, yea it is grace that does help; by which may be meant, the diſcoveries of God's love, and the ſupplies of grace from Chriſt: which may be hoped for, ſeeing God is the God of all grace; and he is ſeated on a throne of grace; and all fulneſs of grace dwells in Chriſt: to find grace often, ſignifies to find favour with God, to be accepted by him, as well as to receive grace from him.

CHAP. V.

THE Apoſtle having made mention of Chriſt as an high-prieſt, in the preceding chapter, proceeds in this to give an account of an high-prieſt, and applies the character of him to Chriſt; and ſhews that he is of another order of prieſthood than that of Aaron, even of the order of Melchiſedek; of whom he could ſay many things, but the Hebrews were dull of hearing them; which leads him to blame them for their rudeneſs, and nonproficience. The deſcription of the high prieſt is taken from his relation to men, ſeparation from them, and ordination for them; from his oblation of their gifts and ſacrifices; from his ſympathy with them, and from his call of God, ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. all which are accommodated to Chriſt; as his vocation of God, ver. 5, 6. confirmed by two teſtimonies out of Pſ. ii. 7. and cx. 4. his being a man, and having infirmities, tho' ſinleſs ones, and his ſympathy with men, and compaſſion on them, ver. 7. his obedience and ſufferings, and the oblation of himſelf, whereby he became the author of ſalvation to his people, which is the main thing in his prieſthood, ver. 8, 9. and which was not of the order of Aaron, tho' in ſome things there was an agreement with it, but of the order of Melchiſedek, ver. 10. of whom the Apoſtle could ſay many ſurprizing things; but theſe Hebrews were dull of apprehenſion, and uncapable of receiving them, ver. 11. And then he proceeds to blame them for their dulneſs, which he aggravates by the time they had been in the ſchool of Chriſt, when it might have been expected they would have been teachers of others; by their being yet ſcholars, and of the loweſt claſs, who had need to be taught the firſt rudiments of the chriſtian religion; yea, by their being as babes that ſtood in need of milk, and could not bear meat, ver. 12. And then follows a deſcription both of babes, and of adult perſons; ſuch as are unſkilful in the word of righteouſneſs are babes, and uſe milk; but thoſe who exerciſe their ſpiritual ſenſes, to diſcern between good and bad doctrine, are adult, and can digeſt ſtrong meat, ver. 13, 14.

Ver. 1. For every high-prieſt taken from among men, &c.] Every one that was an high-prieſt under the law was a man, and not an angel; and it was proper he ſhould be ſo, that he might be a prieſt for men, have compaſſion on them, and offer for them; and he was among the number of common men, and was taken out from them, and choſen and ſeparated from the reſt of men, as Aaron and his ſons were from the children of Iſrael, Exod. xxviii. 1. And ſuch an one is ordained for men; in their room and ſtead, and for their good; and above them, as the word ſometimes ſignifies; he was exalted unto, and inveſted with a ſuperior office, to which he was ordained acccording to the law of a carnal commandment, by anointing with oil, and without an oath. In things pertaining to God; in things in which God had to do with men; and ſo he preſided over them in the name of God, and declared the will of God unto them, and bleſſed them; and in things in which men had to do with God; and ſo he appeared in their name, and repreſented their perſons, and preſented their ſacrifices to God, as follows: that he may offer both gifts and ſacrifices for ſins; free-will-offerings, peace-offerings, burnt-offerings, ſin and treſpaſs-offerings, all kind of ſacrifice.

Ver. 2. Who can have compaſſion on the ignorant, &c.] Who have committed ſins of ignorance, and bring their ſacrifices for them; theſe he does not inſult and upbraid, nor break out into anger and indignation againſt; but pities them, and ſympathizes with them; has a juſt meaſure of compaſſion ſuitable to their condition, and bears with them with great moderation and temper: and on them that are out of the way; of God's commandments; who are like ſheep going aſtray, and turn to their own way; who tranſgreſs the law of God, and err from it; perhaps ſuch who ſin knowingly and wilfully, and thro' infirmity, are meant: for that he himſelf alſo is compaſſed with infirmity; not of body only, but of mind, ſinful infirmity; he had much of it, it beſet him all around; he was clothed with it, as the Syriac verſion renders it; as Joſhua the high-prieſt was with filthy garments, Zech. iii. 3.

Ver. 3. And by reaſon hereof, &c.] Becauſe of his ſinful infirmity: he ought, as for the people, ſo alſo for himſelf to offer for ſins; as he offered ſacrifice for the ſins of the people, ſo he was obliged to offer for his own ſins; in this Chriſt differed from the high-prieſt, for he had no ſin of his own to offer for, ch. vii. 27. but they had, and therefore offered for them, Lev. xvi. 11. and made a confeſſion of them: the form of which, as uſed on the day of atonement, was this; "he put both his hands upon the bullock, "and confeſſed, and thus he ſaid: I beſeech thee, "O Lord, I have done wickedly, I have tranſ"greſſed, I have ſinned before thee, I and my "houſe; I beſeech thee, O Lord, pardon the ini"quities, tranſgreſſions, and ſins, which I have "done wickedly, tranſgreſſed, and ſinned before "thee, I and my houſe." And this he did a ſecond time on that day [z].

Ver. 4. And no man taketh this honour to himſelf, &c.] That is, the honour of the prieſthood: the office of the high-prieſt was a very honourable one; it was a peculiar honour to Aaron, and his ſons, to be ſeparated unto it; their inſtalment into it was very grand and ſolemn; at that time they were anointed with oil, and clothed with glorious garments, and ſacrifices were offered for them; they had an honourable maintenance aſſigned them, and a large retinue of prieſts and levites to attend them; great reſpect and reverence were ſhown them: but their principal honour lay in the work they performed; in repreſenting the whole body of the people; in offering gifts and ſacrifices for them; in bleſſing them; and in the reſolution of difficult caſes brought unto them; in all which they were types of Chriſt, the high-prieſt. Now no man might take this honourable office upon himſelf, or intrude himſelf into it, or obtain it by any unjuſt method, or in any other way than by a call from God; nor did any man dare to do it, until of late, when ſome got into it of themſelves, and were put in by the Roman governours, and even purchaſed it of them [a]: ſo Joſhuah ben Gamla became an high-prieſt [b]; and ſome have thought the Apoſtle has ſome reſpect to theſe wicked practices, and tacitly reproves them, as what ought not to be: for no one ought to be in this office, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron; whoſe call was immediately from the Lord, and was unqueſtionable: Moſes was ordered to ſeparate him, and his ſons, from the children of Iſrael, and inſtal them into this office; they were deſtroyed by fire, or ſwallowed up by the earth that diſputed his call; and this was confirmed by a miracle, by his dry rod budding, blooming, and bringing forth almonds: and the Apoſtle inſtances in him, becauſe his call was ſo remarkable and authentic; and becauſe he was the firſt high-prieſt of the Jews, and from whence the reſt deſcended, who were lawful ones.

Ver. 5. So alſo Chriſt glorified not himſelf to be made an high-prieſt, &c.] It was a glorifying of Chriſt, to make him an high-prieſt; not as God, for as ſuch no addition can be made to his glory; yea, it was a condeſcenſion in him to become a prieſt: but as man; it was an honour to the human nature to be united to the Son of God; and to be ſeparated from others to this office; and to be called unto it, qualified for it, and inveſted with it; and to be of the order he was, and to do the work; and the very aſſiſtance he had in it, for the accompliſhment of it, was a glorifying of him, for which he prayed; and the work being done, he had glory given him by his Father; and an aſcription of glory is made to him by angels and ſaints: but Chriſt did not take this high and honourable office to himſelf, nor the glory of it; indeed, he did not receive it from man, nor was he made a prieſt according to the ceremonial law; yet he did not intrude himſelf into this office: but he that ſaid unto him, thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee; he appointed him to this office; he ſent him to execute it; he anointed him with the oil of gladneſs above his fellows; he conſecrated and eſtabliſhed him in it with an oath; and preſcribed to him what he ſhould do, ſuffer, and offer; and declared to him what he might expect as the reward thereof. Theſe words are taken out of Pſ. ii. 7. ſee the note on ch. i. 5. and they are not to be conſidered as conſtitutive of Chriſt's prieſthood, as if that was intended by the begetting of him as a Son; but as deſcriptive of the perſon, who called him to it, who ſtood in the relation of a Father to Chriſt, and Chriſt in the relation of a Son to him; therefore the one was very proper to call, and the other a very fit perſon to be called to this office, being every way capable of executing it, to the glory of God, and to the good of men.

Ver. 6. As he ſaith alſo in another place, &c.] Or pſalm, namely, in Pſ. cx. 4. that is the ſame perſon, even God the Father, who ſpake the words before cited, alſo expreſſed the following: thou art a prieſt for ever, after the order of Melchiſedeck; that the pſalm, from whence theſe words are taken, belongs to the Meſſiah, ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 44. and this very paſſage is applied unto him by the Jewiſh writers [c]; and had not this been the general ſenſe of the Jewiſh church at this time, the Apoſtle writing to Hebrews would not have produced it; and it very clearly expreſſes the prieſthood of Chriſt, the eternity of it, and the order according to which it was; and it being not according to the order of Aaron, but of another, ſhows the change of the prieſthood, and ſo of the law; of Melchiſedeck, ſee the note on ch. vii. 1.

Ver. 7. Who in the days of his fleſh, &c.] Or of his humanity, as the Arabic verſion renders it; or when he was clothed with fleſh, as the Syriac verſion; in the time of his humiliation, when he was attended with the ſinleſs infirmities of the fleſh, or human nature; it may take in the whole courſe of his life on earth, eſpecially the latter part of it: it is not to be concluded from hence, that he has not fleſh now, or is not in the fleſh; for it is certain tha the had fleſh after his reſurrection; only now he is free from all the infirmities of the fleſh, the pains, and ſorrows, and griefs of it, which he endured when here on earth: when he had offered up prayers and ſupplications; as he often did in many parts of his life, particularly in the garden, and upon the croſs, when he offered up himſelf: and as the days of Chriſt's fleſh were filled up with prayers and ſupplications, ſo ſhould ours be alſo: the word for ſupplications, ſignifies branches of olive trees, covered with wool [d]; which ſuch as ſued for peace, carried in their hands, and ſo came to ſignify ſupplications for peace: the manner in which theſe were offered up by Chriſt, was with ſtrong crying and tears; with a moſt vehement outcry, with a loud voice; as when on the croſs; and tho' there is no mention of his tears at that time, or when in the garden, no doubt but he ſhed them: all that Chriſt did, and ſaid, are not written; ſome things were received by tradition, and by inſpiration; Chriſt wept at other times, and why not at theſe? and there are ſome circumſtances in his prayers which intimate as much, Matt. xxvi. 38. and xxvii. 46. Luke. xxii. 44. which ſhows the weight of ſin, of ſorrow, and of puniſhment, that lay upon him, and the weakneſs of the human nature, conſidered in it ſelf: and it may be obſerved to our comfort, that as Chriſt's crying and tears were confined to the days of his fleſh, or to the time of his life here on earth, ſo ſhall ours be alſo. Mention is made of, הפלות חזקות, ſtrong prayers [e] in Jewiſh writings. The perſon to whom Chriſt offered his prayers, is deſcribed in the following words, unto him that was able to ſave him from death; from a corporal death, as he could, but that it was otherwiſe determined; or rather to raiſe him from the dead, to deliver him from the ſtate of the dead, from the power of death, and the grave, as he did; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, to quicken him from death; to reſtore him from death to life: and was heard in that he feared; or by fear; by God, who was the object of his fear, and who is called the fear of Iſaac, Gen. xxxi. 42. he was always heard by him, and ſo he was in the garden, and on the croſs; and was carried thro' his ſufferings, and was delivered from the fear of death, and was ſaved from the dominion and power of it, being raiſed from the dead by his Father: or he was heard becauſe of his fear, or reverence; either becauſe of the dignity and reverence of his perſon, in which he was had by God; or becauſe of his reverence of his Father.

Ver. 8. Though he were a Son, &c.] The Son of God, as the Vulgate Latin verſion reads; not by creation, nor by adoption, nor by office, but by nature, being the only-begotten of the Father, having the ſame nature and perfections with him: yet learned he obedience; not to his parents, or civil magiſtrates, tho' that is true; nor merely to the precepts of the law, which he did; but unto death; thro' ſufferings he became obedient to death, even the death of the croſs: and this he learnt; not that he was ignorant of the nature of it; nor was he deſtitute of an obedient diſpoſition to it; but the meaning is, he had an experience of it, and effected it; and which was voluntary and done in our room and ſtead; and is the rule and meaſure of our righteouſneſs before God: and this he learned, by the things which he ſuffered; from men, from devils, and from the juſtice of God, Chriſt's ſonſhip did not exempt him from obedience and ſufferings; this ſhows the dignity of Chriſt's perſon, that he is the Son of God, not as mediator, for as ſuch he is a ſervant; and it would be no wonder that he ſhould learn obedience as a ſervant; and this ſhows alſo the great humility and condeſcenſion of Chriſt in obeying and ſuffering for us, tho' ſo great a perſon; and likewiſe the vile nature of ſin, and the ſtrictneſs of divine juſtice: and we may learn from hence, not to expect to be exempted from ſufferings on account of ſonſhip; nor to conclude we are not ſons, becauſe we ſuffer; and that afflictions are inſtructive, and by them experience is learned.

Ver. 9. And being made perfect, &c.] In his obedience thro' ſufferings; having compleated his obedience, gone thro' his ſufferings, and finiſhed his ſacrifice, and being perfectly glorified in heaven: he became the author of eternal ſalvation unto all them that obey him; the ſalvation Chriſt is the author of is eternal; it was reſolved upon from eternity, and contrived in it; it was ſecured in the everlaſting covenant, in which not only a ſaviour was provided, but bleſſings both of grace and glory: and it is to eternity; and ſtands diſtinguiſhed from a temporal ſalvation, and is oppoſed to eternal damnation; it is the ſalvation of the ſoul, which is immortal; and it takes in both grace and glory, which are of a durable nature; and the continuance of it is owing to the abiding and laſting virtue of Chriſt's perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs: and Chriſt is the cauſe or author of this ſalvation, by his obedience and ſufferings; by obeying the precept, and bearing the penalty of the law; by the price of his blood, and by the power of his arm; by his death and by his life; by his ſacrifice on the croſs, and by his interceſſion in heaven; by beſtowing grace here, and glory hereafter: this ſhows that ſalvation is done, and that Chriſt is the ſole author of it, and that all the glory of it ſhould be given to him; and thoſe to whom he is the author of ſalvation, are ſuch as hearken to the voice of his Goſpel, and obey him in his ordinances. Chriſt is not the author of ſalvation to all men; all men do not obey him; all thoſe whom Chriſt ſaves, he brings them to an obedience to himſelf; for his obedience for them does not exempt them from obedience to him, tho' their obedience is no cauſe of their ſalvation; Chriſt himſelf is the alone author of that.

Ver. 10. Called of God an high-prieſt, after the order of Melchiſedec.] על דברתי, according to what is ſaid of him, Pſ. cx. 4. there is a reſemblance between Melchiſedec and Chriſt; many things that are ſaid of the one, agree with the other: there is a likeneſs in Melchiſedec to Chriſt; in his perſon, and what is ſaid of him; that he was without father and mother; and in his office as a prieſt, and in the manner of his inſtalment into it; and in the antiquity, dignity, and perpetuity of it: and this is repeated for the further confirmation of Chriſt's prieſthood, and is a concluſion of the truth of it from ſufficient evidence: this does not ſo much deſign the conſtitution of Chriſt as prieſt, nor the call of him to that office, as the denomination or furnaming of him a prieſt of Melchiſedec's order, becauſe of the agreement between them; and contains a reaſon of Chriſt's being the author of eternal ſalvation, becauſe he is a prieſt for ever; and prevents any objections againſt Chriſt's prieſthood, and opens a way to diſcourſe more largely concerning it.

Ver. 11. Of whom we have many things to ſay, &c.] Either of Melchiſedec, or of Chriſt, or of his prieſthood, or of all of theſe; ſince the Apoſtle does largely treat of them in the following chapters: he ſays many things concerning Melchiſedec in the ſeventh chapter, and many things of Chriſt, and his prieſthood, in thoſe that follow; Chriſt is a large and inexhauſtible ſubject in the Goſpel-miniſtry, and what a Goſpel miniſter delights to dwell on; and it is a fund and ſtock from whence he is furniſhed with things of the greateſt uſefulneſs, and of the utmoſt importance: and hard to be uttered; as were many things reſpecting Melchiſedec, mentioned in ch. vii. 3. and alſo concerning Chriſt, and his prieſthood; prieſthood: abſtruſe and difficult things are to be looked into, conſidered, ſearched after, and inſiſted on: the whole ſcripture is profitable, and the whole counſel of God is to be declared, and things hard to be explained ſhould be attempted; this is the way to an increaſe of light and knowledge; tho' it becomes miniſters to conſult their own abilities, and the capacity of their hearers, that they don't go beyond them: ſeeing ye are dull of hearing; this dulneſs of hearing is thought by ſome to ariſe from their afflictions; or from their attachment to the law of Moſes; or rather from their ſluggiſhneſs, indocility, and want of induſtry; and oftentimes this ariſes from pride and prejudice, and irreverence of the word of God; and frequently from the deceitfulneſs of riches, and the cares of this life.

Ver. 12. For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, &c.] Theſe Hebrews had had great advantages; they were not only deſcended from Abraham, and had the law of Moſes, and the writings of the Old Teſtament, but ſome of them had enjoyed the miniſtry of Chriſt, and however of his Apoſtles; and it was now about thirty years from the day of Pentecoſt, in which the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt were beſtowed in ſuch an extraordinary manner, and a large number were converted, and a church-ſtate ſettled among them; and therefore conſidering the length of time, the opportunities and advantages they had enjoyed, it might have been expected, and indeed it is what ſhould have been, that they would have been teachers of others, ſome in a private, and ſome in a public way: from whence it may be obſerved, that to have time for learning, and yet make no proficiency, is an aggravation of dulneſs; moreover, that men ought to be hearers, and make ſome good proficiency in hearing, before they are fit to be teachers of others; alſo, that perſons are not only to hear for their own edification, but for the inſtruction of others, tho' all hearers are not deſigned for public teachers; for to be teachers of others, requires a conſiderable ſhare of knowledge: to which may be added, that the churches of Chriſt are the proper ſeminaries of Goſpel miniſters. But this was ſo far from being the caſe of theſe Hebrews, that the Apoſtle ſays of them, ye have need that one teach you again, which be the firſt principles of the oracles of God; by the oracles of God are meant the ſcriptures, not the law of Moſes only, but all the writings of the Old Teſtament, which were given by the inſpiration of God, and are authoritative and infallible; and by the firſt principles of them are intended, either the firſt promiſes in them, concerning the Meſſiah; or the inſtitutions, rites, and ceremonies of the law, which are ſometimes called ϛοιχεια, elements, Gal. iv. 3, 9. where the ſame word is uſed as here; and which were the alphabet and rudiments of the Goſpel to the Jews: or elſe the Apoſtle deſigns the plain doctrines of the Goſpel, which were at firſt preached unto them, in which they needed to be again inſtructed, as they were at firſt; ſo that inſtead of going forward, they had rather gone back: and are become ſuch as have need of milk; of the types, ſhadows, and figures of the law, which were ſuited to the infant ſtate of the church, who by ſenſible objects were directed to the view of Goſpel grace; or of the plain and eaſier parts of the Goſpel, comparable to milk for their purity, ſweetneſs, nouriſhing nature, and being eaſy of digeſtion: and not of ſtrong meat; ſuch as the deep things of God, the myſteries of the Goſpel; thoſe which are more hard to be underſtood, received, and digeſted; ſuch as the doctrines of the Trinity, of God's everlaſting love, of eternal election and reprobation, of the perſon of Chriſt, the abrogation of the law, &c.

Ver. 13. For every one that uſeth milk, &c.] And ſits down contented with the firſt principles of the Goſpel, ſuch as are eaſily taken in and digeſted; or makes uſe of the ceremonial law, as a ſchoolmaſter to teach him the Goſpel: is unſkilful in the word of righteouſneſs; the Goſpel, which is a doctrine of righteouſneſs; not of works of righteouſneſs done by men, and of juſtification by them, or of a man's own righteouſneſs; but of the pure, perfect, and everlaſting righteouſneſs of Chriſt: and it's called ſo, becauſe it is the means of ſtripping a man of his own righteouſneſs; and of revealing the righteouſneſs of Chriſt unto him; and of working faith in him to lay hold upon it; and of diſcovering the agreement there is between the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and the juſtice of God; and of teaching men to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly: and ſuch are unſkilful in it, who either have no knowledge of the doctrine of juſtification; of the matter of it, Chriſt's righteouſneſs; of the form of it, by imputation; and of the date of it, before faith: or have a very confuſed notion of it, joining their own works with Chriſt's righteouſneſs, for juſtification, as many judaizing profeſſors did; or who, if they have a notional knowledge of it, have no practical concern in it; don't believe with the heart unto righteouſneſs; have not the experience, ſweetneſs, and power of this doctrine upon them; and do not live lives agreeable to it: for he is a babe. This word is uſed ſometimes by way of commendation, and is expreſſive of ſome good characters of the ſaints; ſuch as harmleſſneſs and inoffenſiveneſs, humility and meekneſs, a deſire after the ſincere milk of the word, freedom from rancor and malice, hypocriſy and guile; but here it is uſed by way of reproach, and denotes levity and inconſtancy, ignorance and non-proficiency, want of digeſtion of ſtrong meat, and incapacity to take care of themſelves, as ſtanding in need of tutors and governours.

Ver. 14. But ſtrong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, &c.] Or perfect; ſee 1 Cor. ii. 6. This does not intend a perfection of juſtification, for tho' ſome have a greater degree of faith than others, and a clearer diſcovery of their juſtification, yet babes in Chriſt are as perfectly juſtified, as more grown and experienced believers; nor a perfection of ſanctification, for there is no perfection of holineſs but in Chriſt; and tho' the work of ſanctification may be in greater perfection in one ſaint, than in another, yet all are imperfect in this life; and as to a perfection of parts, babes have this as well as adult perſons: but it deſigns a perfection of knowledge; for tho' none are entirely perfect, yet ſome have arrived to a greater degree of the knowledge of Goſpel-myſteries, than others, and to theſe the ſtrong meat of the Goſpel belongs; they are capable of underſtanding the more myſterious parts of the Goſpel; of ſearching into the deep things of God; and of receiving, and digeſting the more ſublime truths of the chriſtian religion: even thoſe, who by reaſon of uſe, have their ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern both good and evil; that is, their ſpiritual ſenſes, the internal ſenſes of the underſtanding and judgment, ſignified by external ones; as by ſeeing the Son; hearing the voice of Chriſt; ſavouring or ſmelling a ſweet odour in the things of God, and Chriſt; taſting that the Lord is gracious; feeling and handling the word of life, as theſe are held forth in the everlaſting Goſpel: and theſe being exerciſed on their proper object, by uſe, an habit is contracted; and ſuch are qualified for diſcerning, as between moral good and evil, and the worſe and better ſtate of the church, and between law and Goſpel, ſo between the doctrines of Chriſt, and the doctrines of men; who find they differ: the doctrines of Chriſt ſuch experienced perſons find to be good, wholeſome, nouriſhing, and ſalutary; and the doctrines of men to be evil, to eat, as does a canker, and to be pernicious, poiſonous, and damnable; and the diſcernment they make, and the judgment they form, are not according to the dictates of carnal reaſon, but according to the ſcriptures of truth, and their own experience.

CHAP. VI.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle exhorts the believing Hebrews, not to reſt in the rudiments of the chriſtian religion they had learned; and much leſs to lay them again in the foundation after the Jewiſh manner, of which he inſtances in ſix particulars; but to ſeek after a perfect knowledge of evangelic truths, which, under a divine permiſſion, was his determination to do, ver. 1, 2, 3. which was the beſt method to prevent apoſtacy, he diſſuades from; by giving the characters of apoſtates, ſhewing how far they may go in the knowledge of divine things, and yet fall away; by aſſerting the impoſſibility of their repentance and recovery, with the reaſon of it, taken from the blackneſs of their crimes, ver. 4, 5, 6. and the difference between them, and true believers, he illuſtrates by two ſorts of earth, the one takes in the rain that comes down from heaven, and brings forth herbs for the uſe of its dreſſer, and is bleſſed of God; ſuch are true believers in Chriſt, ver. 7. the other bears thorns and briars, and is rejected and curſed, and in the iſſue burned; and to ſuch earth the above apoſtates may be compared, ver. 8. but leſt the believing Hebrews, ſuch as were truly gracious among them, ſhould conclude that this was their caſe, and that it was deſperate; and leſt they ſhould think the Apoſtle had an ill opinion of them, he declares, he was otherwiſe perſuaded of them, and hoped, and believed, they were intereſted in the things of ſalvation, ver. 9. the reaſons of which perſuaſion are taken from the work of grace, which was wrought in them; from their laborious love they ſhowed to the name of God, and to his people, and which they continued to ſhow; and from the righteouſneſs of God in not forgetting all this, ver. 10. And then he proceeds to exhort them to diligence in the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty, that ſo they might arrive to a full aſſurance of hope, ver. 11. and not to indulge ſlothfulneſs, but to be followers of the ſaints that were gone before them; whoſe character is, that thro' faith, and patience, they had inherited the promiſes, things the Apoſtle would have thoſe believers imitate them in, ver. 12. and particularly inſtances in Abraham, the father of this people, and of all believers; who having a promiſe from God, to which an oath was annexed, patiently waited for it, and obtained it, ver. 13, 14, 15. and having made mention of an oath, the Apoſtle takes notice of the nature and uſe of one among men, ver 16. and of the deſign of God in making uſe of one himſelf, which was to confirm his promiſe, and ſhew its immutability to the heirs of it; and that by obſerving theſe two immutable things, which could never fail, they might have ſolid and abiding comfort; even all ſuch, who under a ſenſe of danger, flee to Chriſt for refuge, who is the ground of hope propoſed to them in the Goſpel, to lay hold upon, ver. 17, 18. and becauſe of the firmneſs of the grace of hope, as it is converſant with Chriſt, and is caſt on him, the good ground of it, it is compared to an anchor; and is ſaid to be ſure and ſtedfaſt, and to enter within the vail, where Chriſt is gone as a fore-runner; and which is an encouragement to that grace to enter in after him; who is farther deſcribed by his name Jeſus, by his office as an high-prieſt, and by the order of which he is, that of Melchiſedec, ver. 19, 20. which is mentioned, to lead on to what the Apoſtle had to ſay concerning him, in the next chapter.

Ver. 1. Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Chriſt, &c.] The Goſpel is the doctrine of Chriſt, and is ſo called, becauſe Chriſt, as God, is the author of it; as mediator, he received it from his Father; as man, he was the preacher of it; and he is alſo the ſum and ſubſtance of it: the principles of this doctrine, are either the eaſier parts of the Goſpel, called milk in the latter part of the preceding chapter; which are not to be left with diſlike and contempt, nor ſo as to be forgotten, nor ſo as not to be recurred to at proper times; but ſo as not to abide in and ſtick here, without going further: or rather the ceremonies of the law, which were the elements of the Jews religion, and the beginning, as the word may be here rendered, of the doctrine of Chriſt; which were ſhadowy and typical of Chriſt, and taught the Jews the truths of the Goſpel concerning Chriſt; in theſe the believing Jews were very deſirous of ſticking, and of abiding by them, and of continuing them in the Goſpel church; whereas they were to be left, ſince they had had their uſe, and had anſwered what they were deſigned for, and were now aboliſhed by Chriſt. Let us go on to perfection; in a comparative ſenſe, to a more perfect knowledge of things, which the clear revelation and miniſtry of the Goſpel lead unto; and which the rites and ceremonies, types and figures of the law, never could: not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works; the Syriac verſion reads this by way of interrogation, do ye lay again, &c. and makes the third verſe to be an anſwer to it: the phraſe, not laying again the foundation, is to be read in connexion, not only with this article of repentance, but with each of the other five articles, the foundation of which is no more to be laid again, than this: and not laying it again, either means not teaching it, and ſo refers to the Apoſtle, and other miniſters of the word, who ſhould not inſiſt upon the following things, at leaſt not ſtick there, but go on to deliver things more ſublime and grand; or not hearing it, and ſo refers to the Hebrews, who ſhould ſeek after a more perfect knowledge of evangelic truths, than the following articles exhibited to them: and the ſeveral parts of this foundation, which are not to be laid again miniſterially, by preachers, or attended to by hearers, deſign either the firſt things, with which the Goſpel-diſpenſation was uſhered in; or rather, and which I take to be the true ſenſe, the general principles and practices of the Jews under the former diſpenſation; for theſe are not the ſix principles of the chriſtian religion, as they are commonly called, but ſo many articles of the Jewiſh creed; ſome of which were peculiar to the Jews, and others common to them, with us chriſtians: thus, repentance from dead works, does not intend evangelical repentance, the doctrine of which is to be miniſterially laid, and the grace itſelf to be exerciſed over and over again; but a repentance which aroſe from, and was ſignified by the ſacrifices of ſlain beaſts; for by them the Jews were taught the doctrine of repentance, as well as remiſſion of ſin; and in, and over them did they confeſs their iniquities; yea, every beaſt that was ſlain for ſacrifice, carried in it a conviction of ſin, an acknowledgment of guilt; and it was tacitly owning, that they, for whom the creature was ſlain, deſerved to be treated as that was, and die as that did. So the Jews [f] ſay, "when a man ſacrifices a beaſt, he thinks "in his own heart, I am rather a beaſt than this; "for I am he that hath ſinned, and for the ſin which "I have committed I bring this; and it is more "fitting that the man ſhould be ſacrificed ra-"ther than the beaſt; and ſo it appears that, "על ידי קרבנו הוא יחרט, by the means of his offer-"ing he repents." But now under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, believing Jews, as theſe were to whom the Apoſtle writes, were not to learn the doctrine of repentance from ſlain beaſts, or to ſignify it in this way; ſince repentance and remiſſion of ſins were preached moſt clearly to them in the name of Chriſt: nor were they to lay again another part of this foundation, or a ſecond article of the Jewiſh creed, and of faith towards God; which article is expreſſed in language agreeable to the Jewiſh diſpenſation; whereas evangelical faith is uſually called the faith of Chriſt, or faith in Chriſt, or towards our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; but this reſpects faith in God, as the God of Iſrael: hence ſays our Lord to his diſciples, who were all Jews, ye believe in God; ye have been taught, and uſed to believe in God, as the God of Iſrael; believe alſo in me, as his Son, and the Meſſiah, and the mediator between God and man, John xiv. 1. ſo that now they were not only to have faith towards God, as the God of Iſrael, and to teach and receive that doctrine; but to have faith in Chriſt as the ſaviour of loſt ſinners, without the intermediate uſe of ſacrifices.

Ver. 2. Of the doctrine of baptiſms, &c.] Some read this diviſively, baptiſm and doctrine, as the Ethiopic verſion; as if, the one reſpected the ordinance of baptiſm, and the other the miniſtry of the word; but it is beſt to read them conjunctively: and by which moſt underſtand the Goſpel ordinance of water-baptiſm, ſo called by a change of number, the plural for the ſingular, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, who render it baptiſm; or becauſe of the different perſons baptized, and times of baptizing, as ſome; or becauſe of the trine immerſion, as others; or becauſe of the threefold baptiſm of ſpirit, blood, and water, which have ſome agreement with each other; or becauſe of the baptiſm of John, and Chriſt, tho' they are one and the ſame; or becauſe of the inward and outward baptiſm, the one fitting and qualifying for the other; and ſo the doctrine of it is thought to reſpect the neceſſity, uſe, and end of it: but ſince there is but one baptiſm, and the above reaſons, for the plural expreſſion are not ſolid, and ſufficiently ſatisfying, it is beſt to interpret this of the divers baptiſms among the Jews, ſpoken of in Heb. ix. 10. which had a doctrine in them, to that people; teaching them the cleanſing virtue of the blood of Chriſt, and leading them to it, to waſh in for ſin, and for uncleanneſs; but now, ſince this blood was ſhed, they were no more to teach nor learn the doctrine of cleanſing by the blood of Chriſt this way; nor any more to be led unto it thro' theſe divers baptiſms, ablutions, and purifications. And of laying on of hands; the foundation of this was to be no more laid, nor the doctrine of it to be any longer taught, and learned in the way it had been; for not the rite, but the doctrine of laying on of hands is here intended; and it has no reference to the rite of laying on of hands by the Apoſtles, either on private perſons, or officers of churches; for what was the doctrine of ſuch a rite, is not eaſy to ſay; but to the rite of laying on of hands of the prieſts, and of the people, upon the head of ſacrifices; which had a doctrine in it, even the doctrine of the imputation of ſin to Chriſt, the great ſacrifice. It was uſual with the Jews [g], to call the impoſition of hands upon the ſacrifice, ſimply, סמיכה, laying on of hands; and they underſtood by it the transferring of ſin from the perſons that laid on hands, to the ſacrifice, on which they were laid; and that hereby, as they expreſs it, ſins were ſeparated from them, and, as it were, put upon the ſacrifice [h]; but now believers were no longer to be taught and learn the great doctrine of the imputation of ſin, by this rite and ceremony; ſince Chriſt has been made ſin for them, and has had ſins imputed to him, and has bore them in his own body on the tree: and of reſurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment; articles of faith, which diſtinguiſhed the Jews from the Gentiles, who were greatly ſtrangers to a future ſtate, the reſurrection of the dead, and judgment to come: theſe are doctrines of pure revelation, and were taught under the Old Teſtament, and were believed by the generality of the Jews, and are articles which they hold in common with us chriſtians; yet the believing Hebrews were not to reſt in the knowledge of theſe things, and in the ſmaller degrees of light they had in them, under the former diſpenſation; but were to go on to perfection, and bear forward towards a greater ſhare of knowledge of theſe, and other more ſublime doctrines of grace; ſince life and immortality are more clearly brought to light by Chriſt thro' the Goſpel.

Ver. 3. And this will we do if God permit.] That is, leave the rites and ceremonies of the law, which were the rudiments, or firſt principles of the Goſpel, and go on to a more perfect knowledge of Goſpel truths; and not lay again as the foundation of the miniſtry, or inſiſt upon them as if they were the main things, even the above articles of the Jewiſh creed, eſpecially in the way and manner in which they had been taught and learnt: the ſenſe is, that the Apoſtle and his brethren in the miniſtry were determined to inſiſt upon the more ſolid and ſubſtantial parts of the Goſpel, and which tended to bring on their hearers to perfection; and that it became the believing Hebrews to ſeek after a greater degree of knowledge under the miniſtry of the word. It is, or at leaſt ſhould be, the determination of a Goſpel miniſter, to preach Chriſt, and the great truths of the Goſpel; and whereſoever God has called him to it, tho' there may be many adverſaries; and tho' he may be reproached, calumniated, and deſerted; reſolution in preaching the Goſpel, and adhering to it, is very commendable in a miniſter; and it is very laudable in hearers to attend to it, ſtand by it, and ſearch further into it; and which both ſhould determine upon with a regard to the will of God, if God permit; God's permiſſion is much to be obſerved in the miniſtry of the word, in giving gifts to men, in placing them out here and there, where they ſhall exerciſe them, in directing them to ſubjects, and in making their miniſtry uſeful and ſucceſsful: and it may be obſerved in general, that nothing can be done, or come to paſs, good or bad, but what God permits or wills to be done; no good things, no actions, civil, natural, moral, or ſpiritual; no evil things, the evil of puniſhment, afflictions, the perſecutions of wicked men, the temptations of ſatan, hereſies, and even immoralities.

Ver. 4. For it is impoſſible for thoſe who were once enlightened, &c.] The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render it, baptized; and the word is thought to be ſo uſed in ch. x. 32. And indeed baptiſm was called very early illumination by the ancients, as by Juſtin Martyr[i], and Clemens Alexandrinus[k], becauſe only enlightened perſons were the proper ſubjects of it; and the word once here uſed ſeems to confirm this ſenſe, ſince baptiſm, when rightly adminiſtred, was not repeated; but then this ſenſe depends upon an uſe of a word, which it is not certain did as yet obtain; nor does the Apoſtle take notice of baptiſm in a parallel place, ch. x. 26, 27. This gave riſe to, and ſeems to favour the error of Novatus, that thoſe who fall into ſin after baptiſm are to be cut off from the communion of the church, and never more to be reſtored unto it; contrary to the promiſes of God to returning backſliders, and contrary to facts, as well as to the directions of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, to receive and reſtore ſuch perſons; and ſuch a notion tends to ſet aſide the interceſſion of Chriſt for fallen believers, and to plunge them into deſpair: it is better therefore to retain the word enlightened, in its proper ſenſe, and to underſtand it of perſons enlightened with Goſpel knowledge; there are ſome who are ſavingly enlightened by the Spirit of God, to ſee the impurity of their hearts and actions, and their impotency to perform that which is good, the imperfection of their own righteouſneſs to juſtify them, their loſt ſtate and condition by nature, and to ſee Chriſt and ſalvation by him, and their intereſt in it; and theſe being once enlightened, never become darkneſs, or ever ſo fall as to periſh; for if God had a mind to deſtroy them, he would never have ſhown them theſe things, and therefore can't be the perſons deſigned here; unleſs we render the words, as the Syriac verſion does, it is impoſſible—— דתוב נחטון, that they ſhould ſin again; ſo as to die ſpiritually, loſe the grace of God, and ſtand in need of a new work upon them, which would be impoſſible to be done: but rather ſuch are meant, who are ſo enlightened as to ſee the evil effects of ſin, but not the evil that is in ſin; to ſee the good things which come by Chriſt, but not the goodneſs that is in Chriſt; ſo as to reform externally, but not to be ſanctified internally; to have knowledge of the Goſpel doctrinally, but not experimentally; yea, to have ſuch light into it, as to be able to preach it to others, and yet be deſtitute of the grace of God: and have taſted of the heavenly gift; either faith, or a juſtifying righteouſneſs, or the pardon of ſin, or eternal life; which are all ſpiritual and heavenly gifts of grace, and which true believers have real taſtes of; and hypocrites pleaſe themſelves with, having ſome ſpeculative notions about them, and ſome deſires after them, ariſing from a natural principle of ſelf-love. Some think the Holy Ghoſt is intended; but rather Chriſt himſelf, the unſpeakable gift of God's love, given from heaven, as the bread of life. Now there are ſome who have a ſaving ſpiritual taſte of this gift; for tho' God's people, whilſt unregenerate, have no ſuch taſte; their taſte is vitiated by ſin, and it is not changed; ſin is the food they live upon, in which they take an imaginary pleaſure, and diſreliſh every thing elſe; but when regenerated, their taſte is changed, ſin is rendered loathſome to them; and they have a real guſt of ſpiritual things, and eſpecially of Chriſt, and find a real delight and pleaſure in feeding by faith upon him; whereby they live upon him, and are nouriſhed up unto eternal life, and therefore can't be the perſons here ſpoken of: but there are others who taſte, but diſlike what they taſte; have no true love to Chriſt, and faith in him; or have only a carnal taſte of him, know him only after the fleſh, or externally, not inwardly and experimentally; or they have only a ſuperficial taſte, ſuch as is oppoſed to eating the fleſh, and drinking the blood of Chriſt, by faith, which is proper to true believers; the guſt they have is but temporary, and ariſes from ſelfiſh principles. And were made partakers of the Holy Ghoſt; not his perſon, nor his ſpecial grace; there are ſome who ſo partake of him, as to be united to him, in whom he becomes the principle of ſpiritual life, and motion: ſuch have the fruits of the Spirit, and communion with him; they enjoy his perſonal preſence and inhabitation in them; they have received him as a ſpirit of illumination and conviction, of regeneration and ſanctification, as the ſpirit of faith, and as a comforter; and as a ſpirit of adoption, and the earneſt and ſeal of future glory; but then ſuch can never ſo fall away as to periſh: a believer indeed may be without the ſenſible preſence of the Spirit; the graces of the Spirit may be very low, as to their exerciſe; and they may not enjoy his comforts, gracious influences, and divine aſſiſtance; but the Spirit of God never is, in the above ſenſe, in a caſt-away; where he takes up his dwelling, he never quits it; if ſuch could periſh, not only his own glory, but the glory of the Father, and of the Son, would be loſt likewiſe: but by the Holy Ghoſt is ſometimes meant, the gifts of the Spirit, ordinary or extraordinary, 1 Cor. xii. 4—11. and ſo here; and men may be ſaid to be partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, to whom he gives wiſdom and prudence in things natural and civil; the knowledge of things divine and evangelical, in an external way; the power of working miracles, of propheſying, of ſpeaking with tongues, and of the interpretation of tongues; for the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghoſt ſeem chiefly deſigned, which ſome, in the firſt times of the Goſpel, were partakers of, who had no ſhare in ſpecial grace, Matt. vii. 22, 23. 1 Cor. xiii. 2, 3.

Ver. 5. And have taſted the good word of God, &c.] Not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the eſſential Word of God, who ſeems to be intended before by the heavenly gift; but rather, either the ſcriptures of truth in general, which are the word of God, endited by him, and contain his mind and will; which he makes uſe of for conviction, converſion, inſtruction, and comfort; and which are preſerved by him: and theſe are a good word; they come from him who is good; they are a revelation of good things; they make known things true, pleaſant, and profitable: or elſe the Goſpel in particular, of which God is the author; and in which is a wonderful diſplay of his wiſdom and grace; and which he owns and bleſſes for his own glory, and the good of others: and this is a good word, the ſame with דבר טוב, good matter, or word, in Pſ. xlv. 1. פתגם טובי, my good word, or the word of my goodneſs, in the Targum gum on Iſ. lv. 11. for it is the word of righteouſneſs, reconciliation, peace, pardon, life, and ſalvation. And there is a ſpecial and ſpiritual taſte of this good word, which is delightful, reliſhing, and nouriſhing; and ſuch who have it can never totally and finally fall away; becauſe they who taſte it, ſo as to eat and digeſt it, and be nouriſhed by it, to them it becomes the engrafted word, which is able to ſave them: but there is ſuch a taſte of this word as is diſreliſhing, as in prophane ſinners, and open oppoſers and perſecutors of the word, or as in hypocrites and formal profeſſors; which is only an aſſent to the ſcriptures, as the revelation of God, or a ſuperficial knowledge of the doctrines of the Goſpel without the experience of them, and a temporal faith in them, and a natural affection for them, and pleaſedneſs with them for a time; as the Jews, and Herod with John's miniſtry, and the ſtony-ground hearers. And the powers of the world to come; meaning either the ſtate of the church, and the glorious things relating to it, after the firſt reſurrection, which they might have ſome notional apprehenſions of; or the ultimate ſtate of glory and happineſs, the powers of which are the immortality, incorruption, and glory of the body, the perfect holineſs and knowledge of the ſoul, entire freedom from all evils of every kind, full communion with Father, Son, and Spirit, and a compleat enjoyment of all happineſs for ever; which hypocrites may have a notional knowledge of, a natural deſire after, and delight in the contemplation and hope of, as Balaam had; or rather the δυνάμεις, miracles and mighty works in the former part of the Goſpel-diſpenſation, or times of the Meſſiah, the Jews world to come, ſee the note on ch. ii. 5. are intended; which many, as Judas and others were able to perform, who were not ſincere chriſtians, or true believers.

Ver. 6. If they ſhall fall away, &c.] This is not ſuppoſed of true believers, as appears from ver. 9. nor is it to be ſuppoſed of them that they may fall totally and finally; they may indeed fall, not only into afflictions, and temptations, but into ſin; and from a lively and comfortable exerciſe of grace, and from a degree of ſtedfaſtneſs in the Goſpel; but not irrecoverably: for they are held and ſecured by a threefold cord, which can never be broken; by God the Father, who has loved them with an everlaſting love, has choſen them in Chriſt, ſecured them in the covenant of grace, keeps them by his power, has given them grace, and will give them glory; and by the Son, who has undertook for them, redeemed and purchaſed them, prays and makes preparations in heaven for them, they are built on him, united to him, and are his jewels, whom he will preſerve; and by the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe grace is incorruptible, whoſe perſonal indwelling is for ever, who himſelf is the earneſt and ſeal of the heavenly inheritance, and who having begun, will finiſh the good work of grace: but falling away, ſo as to periſh, may be ſuppoſed, and is true of many profeſſors of religion; who may fall from the profeſſion of the Goſpel they have made, and from the truth of it, and into an open denial of it; yea, into an hatred and perſecution of what they once received the external knowledge of; and ſo ſhall fall ſhort of heaven, and into condemnation: for, to renew them again unto repentance, is a thing impoſſible: by repentance is meant, not baptiſm of repentance; nor admiſſion to a ſolemn form of publick repentance in the church; nor a legal repentance, but an evangelical one: and ſo to be renewed unto it is not to be baptized again, or to be reſtored anew to the church by repentance, and abſolution; but muſt be underſtood either of renovation of the ſoul, in order to repentance; or of the reforming of the outward converſation, as an evidence of it; or of a renewing of the exerciſe of the grace of repentance: and to be renewed again to repentance does not ſuppoſe that perſons may have true repentance and loſe it; for tho' truly penitent perſons may loſe the exerciſe of this grace for a time, yet the grace itſelf can never be loſt: moreover, theſe apoſtates before deſcribed, had only a ſhew of repentance, a counterfeit one; ſuch as Cain, Pharaoh, and Judas had; and conſequently, the renewing of them again to repentance, is to that which they only ſeemed to have, and to make pretenſions unto; now to renew them to a true repentance, which they once made a profeſſion of, the Apoſtle ſays, is a thing impoſſible: the meaning of which is not only that it is difficult; or that it is rare and unuſual; or that it is unſuitable and improper; but it is abſolutely impoſſible: it is impoſſible to theſe men to renew themſelves to repentance; renovation is the work of the Holy Ghoſt, and not of man; and repentance is God's gift, and not in man's power; and it is impoſſible for miniſters to renew them, to reſtore and bring them back, by true repentance; yea, it is impoſſible to God himſelf, not through any impotence in him, but from the nature of the ſin theſe men are guilty of; for by the high, tho' outward attainments they arrive unto, according to the deſcription of them, their ſin is the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, for which no ſacrifice can be offered up, and of which there is no remiſſion, and ſo no repentance; for theſe two go together, and for which prayer is not to be made; ſee Matt. xii. 32. Heb. x. 26, 27. 1 John v. 16. and chiefly becauſe to renew ſuch perſons to repentance, is repugnant to the determined will of God, who cannot go againſt his own purpoſes and reſolutions; and ſo the Jews[l] ſpeak of repentance being with-held by God from Pharaoh, and from the people of Iſrael; of which they underſtand, Exod. ix. 16. Iſ. vi. 10. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16. and ſay, that when the holy bleſſed God with-holds repentance from a ſinner אינו יכול לשוב he cannot repent; but muſt die in his wickedneſs which he firſt committed of his own will; and they further obſerve[m] that, he that prophanes the name of God, has it not in his power to depend on repentance, nor can his iniquity be expiated on the day of atonement, or be removed by chaſtiſement: ſeeing they crucify to themſelves the Son of God afreſh; who is truly and properly God, begotten of the Father, and of the ſame nature with him, in whom he greatly delights; this is Chriſt's higheſt name and title; and it was for aſſerting himſelf to be the Son of God, that he was crucified; and his being ſo, puts an infinite virtue in his ſufferings and death; and it heightens the ſin of the Jews, and of theſe apoſtates, in crucifying him. He was once crucified, and it is both impoſſible and unneceſſary that he ſhould be, properly ſpeaking, crucified afreſh, or again; it is impoſſible, becauſe he is riſen from the dead, and will never die more; it is unneceſſary, becauſe he has finiſhed and compleated what he ſuffered the death of the croſs for; but men may be ſaid to crucify him again, when by denying him to be the Son of God, they juſtify the crucifixion of him on that account; and when they leſſen and vilify the virtue of his blood and ſacrifice; and when both by errors and immoralities they cauſe him to be blaſphemed, and evil ſpoken of; and when they perſecute him in his members: and this may be ſaid to be done to themſelves afreſh; not that Chriſt was crucified for them before, but that they now crucify him again, as much as in them lies; or with themſelves, in their own breaſts and minds, and to their own deſtruction. Now this being the caſe, it makes their renewal to repentance impoſſible; becauſe, as before obſerved, the ſin they commit is unpardonable; it is a denial of Chriſt, who gives repentance; and ſuch who ſin it muſt arrive to ſuch hardneſs of heart as to admit of no repentance; and it is juſt with God to give up ſuch to a final impenitence, as thoſe who knowingly and out of malice and envy crucified Chriſt, had neither pardon nor repentance; and beſides, this ſin of denying Chriſt to be the Son of God, and ſaviour of men, after ſo much light and knowledge, precludes the way of ſalvation, unleſs Chriſt was to be crucified again, which is impoſſible; for ſo the Syriac verſion connects this clauſe with the word impoſſible, as well as a foregoing one, rendering it, it is impoſſible to crucify the ſon of God again, and to put him to ſhame; and ſo the Arabic verſion. Chriſt was put to open ſhame at the time of his apprehenſion, proſecution, and crucifixion; and ſo he is by ſuch apoſtates, who, was he on earth, would treat him in the ſame manner the Jews did; and who do traduce him as an impoſtor and a deceiver, and give the lye to his doctrines, and expoſe him by their lives, and perſecute him in his ſaints.

Ver. 7. For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, &c.] Here the Apoſtle illuſtrates what he had before been ſpeaking of, by a ſimile taken from the earth, to which men in general anſwer, who are of the earth; earthy, and unregenerate men and carnal profeſſors are of earthly minds; they are like the earth when it was rude and without form, and curſed by God; and are as inſenſible as the earth: but the earth is particularly diſtinguiſhed into that which is fruitful, and which is unfruitful; and the former is ſpoken of in this verſe, to which true believers in Chriſt agree; who are the good ground, into which the ſeed of God's word is received, and brings forth fruit; theſe are God's tillage or huſbandry: and the rain that comes upon them may ſignify either the grace of Chriſt, which, like rain, is an inſtance of his ſovereignty, and what he alone can give, and not the vanities of the Gentiles; and which he gives to perſons undeſerving of it; and which refreſhes, revives, and makes fruitful: or elſe Chriſt himſelf, Pſ. lxxii. 6. Hoſ. vi. 3. whoſe firſt coming was like rain much deſired, and long expected; and ſo is his ſpiritual coming very deſirable, delightful, refreſhing, and fructifying: or rather his Goſpel, Deut. xxxii. 2. Iſ. lv. 9. which comes from above, and is the means of ſoftening hard hearts; of reviving diſtreſſed and diſconſolate minds, and of making barren ſouls fruitful; which is done by coming oft upon them, at firſt converſion, and afterwards, alluding to the former and latter rain; and may refer to the receiving of more grace, even grace for grace, out of Chriſt's fulneſs, through the miniſtration of the word, which is drank in by faith, under the influence of the Spirit of God: and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dreſſed, God the Father, who is the huſbandman, and miniſters of the Goſpel, who are labourers under him; and where the Goſpel comes in power, it brings forth the fruits of the ſpirit, the fruits of righteouſneſs, the fruits meet for repentance; and which are to the glory of God the Father, and are anſwerable to the means he makes uſe of, the miniſtry of the word and ordinances; and no man can bring forth fruit without Chriſt, his ſpirit, and grace: and ſuch earth, or thoſe ſignified by it, receiveth bleſſing from God; both antecedent to all this, and which is the cauſe of fruitfulneſs; and as conſequent upon it, for ſuch receive more grace, even all the bleſſings of grace, and at laſt the bleſſing of glory; and all this being in a way of receiving, ſhews it to be of gift, and of pure grace.

Ver. 8. But that which beareth thorns and briars, &c.] To which wicked men anſwer; who are unfruitful and unprofitable, and are hurtful, pricking and grieving, by their wicked lives and converſations, by their bitter and reproachful words, and by their violent and cruel perſecutions; and particularly carnal profeſſors, and eſpecially apoſtates, ſuch as before deſcribed; for to ſuch earth, profeſſors of religion may be compared, who are worldly, ſlothful, defrauding and over-reaching, carnal and wanton; as alſo heretical men, and ſuch as turn from the faith, deny it, and perſecute the ſaints: and the things or actions produced by them are aptly expreſſed by thorns and briars; ſuch as errors, hereſies, and evil wotks of all kinds; and which ſhew that the ſeed of the word was never ſown in their hearts, and that that which they bear, or throw out, is natural to them: and ſuch earth is rejected; as ſuch men are, both by the church, and by God himſelf; or reprobate, as they are concerning the faith, and to every good work; and are given up by God to a reprobate mind: and is nigh unto curſing; and ſuch men are curſed already by the law, being under its ſentence of curſe and condemnation; and are nigh to the execution of it; referring either to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which was near at hand; or to the final judgment, when they ſhall hear, go ye curſed: whoſe end is to be burned; with everlaſting and unquenchable fire, in the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone.

Ver. 9. But beloved, we are perſuaded better things of you, &c.] The Apoſtle addreſſes the believing Hebrews, as beloved; being beloved by the Lord, not as the deſcendants of Abraham, but as the elect of God, and ſo as loved with an everlaſting love; and which might be known to themſelves, by its being ſhed abroad in their hearts, and by their being called by grace, and by their love to him, and to his people: and from hence they might conclude, they ſhould not fall away, as the apoſtates before ſpoken of; ſince in conſequence of being beloved by God, they were choſen in Chriſt unto ſalvation; Chriſt was given to die for them; they had the ſpirit ſent down into their hearts; they were juſtified, pardoned, and adopted; nor could they be ſeparated from the love of God: and the Apoſtle alſo ſo calls them, becauſe they were beloved by him, not merely as being his countrymen, but as ſaints; and this he ſays to teſtify his affection to them; to ſhew that what he ſaid was not from hatred of them, or prejudice to them; and that his exhortations, cautions, and reproofs, might be better taken; and particularly that they might credit what he here ſays, that he was perſuaded better things of them, than what he had ſaid of others in ver. 4, 5, 6. even ſuch as are expreſſed in ver. 10. he was perſuaded they had the true grace of God; whereas the abovementioned perſons had only gifts, when in the height of their profeſſion; and the leaſt degree of grace is better than the greateſt gifts men can be poſſeſſed of: grace makes a man a good man, not gifts; a man may have great gifts and not be a good man; grace is uſeful to a man's ſelf, gifts are chiefly uſeful to others; grace makes men fruitful, when gifts leave them barren in the knowledge of Chriſt; grace is laſting, when gifts fail, and ceaſe and vaniſh away; grace will abide the fire of perſecution, when gifts will not; grace is ſaving, gifts are not: and things that accompany ſalvation; which enter into ſalvation; are ingredients in it, and parts of it, and with which ſalvation is connected; ſuch as faith, love, &c. or which mutually touch or follow one another in the chain of ſalvation; as to be predeſtinated, juſtified, called, adopted, ſanctified, and at laſt glorified: though we thus ſpeak; concerning others, as in the preceding verſes: the hard things ſpoken by him of ſome, were conſiſtent with ſuch perſuaſions in general; for there might be ſome among them to whom the aforeſaid characters belonged; and ſaying ſuch things might be a means to make others watchful and careful.

Ver. 10. For God is not unrighteous, &c.] He is juſt and true, righteous in all his ways and works; there is no unrighteouſneſs nor unfaithfulneſs in him; and this the Apoſtle makes a reaſon of his ſtrong perſuaſion of better things concerning the believing Hebrews; becauſe he was well ſatisfied of the good work upon them, and he was aſſured that God was not unrighteous and unfaithful: to forget your work; which is not to be underſtood of any good work done by them, for theſe are generally expreſſed in the plural number; and beſides, theſe, if at all, are deſigned in the next clauſe; moreover, external good works, or ſuch as appear to men to be ſo, are performed by hypocrites; nor can they be ſaid to be better things, at leaſt, not ſuch as men are ſaved by: men may fall from theſe; and ſuppoſing them intended, the merit of works cannot be eſtabliſhed, as is attempted from hence by the Papiſts; for the Apoſtle could only conſider them as fruits, not as cauſes of ſalvation; they are imperfect, and cannot juſtify, and therefore cannot ſave; they don't go before to procure ſalvation, but follow after, and, at moſt but accompany; and tho' God does remember and not forget them, this is owing to his grace, and not to their merit; God's righteouſneſs in remembring them, regards not a debt of juſtice, but a point of faithfulneſs: but this is to be underſtood of the work of God upon them, called in ſcripture a good work, and the work of faith; and is elſewhere joined, as here, with the labour of love; ſee 1 Theſſ. i. 3. and this might be called their work, not becauſe wrought by them, but becauſe it was wrought in them; and the grace that came along with it, was exerciſed by them: now from hence the Apoſtle might be perſuaded of better things of them, even ſuch as accompany ſalvation; ſince this work is a fruit of everlaſting and unchangeable love, and is itſelf immortal, and the beginning of eternal life; and particularly faith is the effect of electing grace; ſhall never fail; is the means of the ſaints preſervation; and is connected with everlaſting ſalvation: it follows, and labour of love which ye have ſhewed towards his name; the word labour is omitted in the Alexandrian copy, Vulgate, Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions: this may be underſtood either of love to God, the name of God being put for himſelf; who is to be loved for his own ſake, on account of the perfections of his nature, as well as for the works of his hands; and which is to be ſhewed for the ſake of glorifying him: and this love is laborious; it ſets a man to work for God; nor are any works to be regarded but what ſpring from love to God, and to his name; and from hence the Apoſtle might entertain a good hope of theſe perſons, ſince their love to God was an effect of God's love to them, is a part of the work of grace, and cannot be loſt; all things work together for good to ſuch as love God; and theſe have a crown of life promiſed unto them: or elſe it may be underſtood of love to the ſaints, as follows, in that ye have miniſtred to the ſaints, and do miniſter; in ſeeking both their temporal and ſpiritual good; and tho' all men in general are to be loved, yet eſpecially the ſaints, who are ſet apart by God, whoſe ſins are expiated by Chriſt, and who are ſanctified by the Spirit; and love to them being laborious, and appearing in many inſtances, and this ſhewn for the Lord's ſake, for his name ſake, might lead the Apoſtle more ſtrongly to conclude better things of them, even things of a ſaving nature; ſince charity or love to the ſaints is better than gifts, and is the evidence of grace, of paſſing from death to life, and of being the diſciples of Chriſt; ſee 1 Cor. xiii. 1, 2, 3.

Ver. 11. And we deſire that every one of you do ſhew the ſame diligence, &c.] In the conſtant exerciſe of the graces of faith and love, and in miniſtring to the neceſſities of the ſaints: there is a ſpiritual labour, diligence, and induſtry to be uſed by the ſaints; and former diligence is a motive to future; and is a means of attaining to full aſſurance, as appears by what follows; and this is to be ſhewn for the glory of God, for the evidence of the above graces, and for an example and encouragement to other ſaints: and the perſons addreſſed being every one, this ſhews the Apoſtle's impartiality in his exhortations, and ſerved to remove all groundleſs ſuſpicions in particular perſons; and the manner of his addreſſing them ſhews his hearty concern for their welfare, his mildneſs and gentleneſs towards them, and his deſign to encourage them to go forward; and that his exhortation might have the greater weight, he uſes the plural we; and this exhortation put in this form, moreover ſhews that what he had ſaid before, had no tendency in ſome things to encourage deſpair, or in others careleſſneſs and indolence: and what he had in view in the whole was, that they might arrive to the full aſſurance of hope unto the end; not only that they might keep up an hope, but attain to the full aſſurance of it; as to intereſt in the love and grace of God; in the covenant of grace, its bleſſings and promiſes; in God, as a covenant God and Father; in Chriſt, as a ſaviour and redeemer; and as to the truth of the work of grace upon their ſouls, and their right and meetneſs for the poſſeſſion of eternal glory and happineſs: the phraſe unto the end, may either reſpect the continuance of the grace of aſſurance; or refer to the ſhewing forth of their diligence and induſtry in miniſtring to the ſaints, as they had done, to the end of their lives.

Ver. 12. That ye be not ſlothful, &c.] With reſpect to hearing the word, and attendance on every ordinance; with reſpect to the uſe of means for the increaſe of knowledge, faith, and hope; and with reſpect to miniſtring to the ſaints; but on the contrary, ſhould take every opportunity of improvement and doing good: but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promiſes; or things promiſed; not the land of Canaan, nor the coming of the Meſſiah; but either grace and ſalvation by Chriſt; or eternal life, which is expreſſed by a promiſe, to ſhew that it is not by any works, or merits of men; that it is wholly of grace, and ſhall certainly be enjoyed: and it is expreſſed in the plural number promiſes, becauſe it is the grand promiſe, which is incluſive of all others; and becauſe it has been given out at various times, and in different manners: and the poſſeſſion of it being ſignified by inheriting, it ſhews that this is their father's gift and legacy, which they have as children; and which comes to them thro' the death of Chriſt, and of which the Spirit is the ſeal; and comes not by works of righteouſneſs done by them: and the means through which ſaints that are gone before are come to the enjoyment of this happineſs, are faith and patience; not that faith is the cauſe of, or what gives right to the inheritance, but it deſigns a courſe and walk of believing, at the end of which, ſaints come to glory; and faith is connected with ſalvation, and ſalvation with that; and through faith believers are preſerved unto it: and patience is joined with faith, as a fruit and evidence of it; and ſuppoſes troubles which are patiently endured before men come to the poſſeſſion of the inheritance: now the Apoſtle exhorts theſe Hebrews to be followers and imitators of ſuch, in diligence, faith, and patience, when they need not doubt of inheriting the ſame promiſed bleſſedneſs they do.

Ver. 13. For when God made promiſe to Abraham, &c.] The Apoſtle propoſes Abraham as a pattern, becauſe he was the father of theſe Hebrews, and of all believers; and becauſe they were intereſted in the promiſe made to him, and had a right to the ſame bleſſing with him; and becauſe he was remarkable for his faith and patience: the promiſe made to him is not that in Gen. xii. 1, 2, 3. nor that in Gen. xv. 1, 4, 5, 13, 14. but that in Gen. xxii. 16, 17. for that only had an oath annexed to it: and this was made by Jeſus Chriſt, there called the Angel of the Lord, and here God; and who is truly and properly ſo; and than whom there is none greater; and who elſewhere, as here, is ſaid to ſwear by himſelf, Iſ. xlv. 23. as follows: becauſe he could ſwear by no greater, he ſware by himſelf; ſwearing is aſcribed to a divine perſon after the manner of men, and in condeſcenſion to them; and who is never introduced ſwearing, but in matters of moment and of great importance; the note of Philo the Jew[n] on the paſſage in Gen. xxii. from whence the following words are cited, is worthy of obſervation, being very near the Apoſtle's words; "well does he (God) confirm the promiſe with an "oath, and with an oath that becomes God; for "you ſee that God does not ſwear by another, for "nothing is better than himſelf, but by himſelf, "who is the beſt of all; but ſome have ſuggeſted "as if it was inconvenient to ſwear, for an oath is "taken for the ſake of faith; but God alone is "faithful," &c.

Ver. 14. Saying, ſurely bleſſing I will bleſs thee, &c.] Which is expreſſive of the certainty of the bleſſings; the reality and ſubſtantiality of them; the abundance of them, and the continuance of the ſame: and of this nature are all ſpiritual bleſſings; as to be choſen of God; to have God to be a covenant God and Father; to be juſtified, pardoned, adopted, and ſanctified, and ſo have a right and title to eternal happineſs: and multiplying I will multiply thee; meaning both in his natural and ſpiritual ſeed, which has had its accompliſhment.

Ver. 15. And ſo after he had patiently endured, &c.] He waited long for a ſon, from whom the Meſſiah was to ſpring, after he had had the promiſe of one; and he endured many afflictions with patience, in his journeys from place to place, throughout his life to the end: he obtained the promiſe; he was greatly bleſſed in temporal things; he lived to ſee the ſon of the promiſe, and his ſons; he ſaw the day of Chriſt by faith, and now inherits the heavenly glory, which is the thing chiefly deſigned.

Ver. 16. For men verily ſwear by the greater, &c.] Theſe words contain a reaſon why God ſwore by himſelf, and why his promiſes, having an oath annexed to them, ought to be believed. Men when they ſwear, they ſwear by the greater; not by themſelves, as God does, becauſe there is one greater than they; not by any of the creatures on earth, nor by the angels in heaven, but by God; becauſe he is the God of truth, the ſearcher of hearts, and who can take vengeance on perjurers: and an oath may lawfully be taken, when it is truth that is ſworn to, and is juſt and good; and in caſes of weight and moment; and in what is poſſible and right to perform; and when it is done with deliberation, in the fear of God, with a view to his glory, and the good of men: for an oath is of a moral nature, what God has commanded, and he himſelf has taken; it has been uſed by Chriſt, and by the ſaints of the Old and New Teſtament; and is propheſied of the New Teſtament ſaints, as what they ſhould practiſe; and is a part of religious worſhip: and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all ſtrife; it is uſed to confirm things that are doubtful, and in diſpute; and to put an end to ſtrife and contention; ſo Philo[o] the Jew ſays, "by an oath "things doubtful are determined, and things un-"certain are confirmed, and what were not be-"lieved receive credit." The manner in which an oath was taken among the Jews, to which, the Apoſtle writing to ſuch, muſt be thought to have reſpect, was this; "he that ſwore took the book of "the law in his hand, and he ſtood and ſwore by "the name (of God) or by his ſurnames; and the "judges did not ſuffer any one to ſwear but in the "holy Tongue; and thus he ſaid, behold I ſwear "by the God of Iſrael, by him whoſe name is "merciful and gracious, that I do not owe this "man any thing[p]." The Hebrew word שבעה uſed for an oath is of the root שבע which ſignifies to fill, ſatiate, ſatisfy; for an oath being taken about matters in controverſy, not clear but doubtful, give content unto and ſatisfy the minds of men; and the ſame word alſo ſignifies ſeven, a number of fulneſs and perfection; an oath being for the perfecting and finiſhing an affair in debate; agreeably, when covenants were made by oaths, ſeven witneſſes were uſed, Gen. xxi. 28, 29, 30. and Herodotus ſays[q], as Cocceius[r] obſerves, that the Arabians, when they ſwore at making covenants, anointed the ſtones with blood.

Ver. 17. Wherein God willing, &c.] Or wherefore, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render it; that is, whereas an oath is uſed among men to confirm any thing that might be doubted; therefore God, in condeſcenſion to the weakneſs of men, made uſe of one; being very deſirous and determined, more abundantly to ſhew unto the heirs of promiſe the immutability of his counſel; by which is meant, not the Goſpel nor the ordinances of it, tho' theſe are ſometimes called the counſel of God; but the decree of God, concerning the ſalvation of his people by Jeſus Chriſt, which is immutable; as appears from the unchangeableneſs of his nature, the ſovereignty of his will, the unſearcheableneſs of his wiſdom, the omnipotence of his arm, and the unconditionality of the thing decreed, and from that and the purpoſe of it being in Chriſt: and the immutability of this, God was willing to ſhew more abundantly than in other purpoſes, tho' all God's purpoſes are unchangeable; or then had been ſhewn to the Old Teſtament ſaints; and more than was neceſſary, had it not been for man's weakneſs: even to the heirs of promiſe; not any earthly temporal promiſe, but the promiſe of grace and glory, the promiſe of eternal life; the heirs of which are not only Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, or God's elect among the Jews, but all that are Chriſt's; who are juſtified by his righteouſneſs, believe in him, and are the children of God; for as many as are ſuch, are heirs of eternal glory, and of the promiſe of it: and that the unchangeableneſs of God's purpoſe in ſaving them by Chriſt might be manifeſt to them, and be out of all doubt, he confirmed it by an oath; his counſel and purpoſe; he not only determined in his mind that he would ſave them, and promiſed it in his covenant; but he alſo, to confirm it the more to the perſons concerned in it, if poſſible, annexed his oath to it; or he interpoſed or acted the part of a mediator by an oath; which ſome refer to Chriſt's mediation between God and Abraham, when he ſwore unto him, as before obſerved; but rather it expreſſes the interpoſition of the oath between God's purpoſe and promiſe, and man's weakneſs: God did as it were bind himſelf by his oath, or lay himſelf under obligation, or become a ſurety, for the fulfilment of his purpoſe and promiſe; which ſhews the ſuperabounding grace of God, the weakneſs of man, and what reaſon the heirs of promiſe have to believe.

Ver. 18. That by two immutable things, &c.] God's counſel and oath, which never change and alter, and from which he never varies: in which it was impoſſible for God to lye; fail or deceive, nor indeed in any thing elſe, beſides his counſels, promiſes, and oath, ſee Tit. i. 2. we might have a ſtrong conſolation; the ſaints often ſtand in need of conſolation, by reaſon of ſin, ſatan, and the world; and it is the will of God that they ſhould be comforted; and he would have them have ſtrong conſolation; that which is ſolid and abiding, and an abundance of it; and this much depends on the immutability of God's counſel and oath: who have fled for refuge; either in alluſion to mariners, as ſome think; who make all the haſte they can to their port and haven, and are glad when they arrive there, and there caſt anchor; of which mention is made in the next verſe: or to runners in a race, who make up to the mark, in order to lay hold on the prize; hence Chriſt is afterwards ſpoken of as a forerunner: or rather to ſuch as fled to the cities of refuge, which were a type of Chriſt; the names of theſe cities were, Kedeſh, Shechem, Hebron, Bezer, Ramoth, and Golan; Joſh. xx. 7, 8. and the ſituation of them according to the Jews[s], was like two rows in a vineyard. Hebron in Judah was over-againſt Bezer in the wilderneſs; Shechem in mount Ephraim, was over-againſt Ramoth in Gilead; Kedeſh in mount Naphtali, was over-againſt Golan in Baſhan: the names of theſe ſeveral cities agree with Chriſt; Kedeſh ſignifies holy, as Chriſt is, both as God and man, and is made ſanctification to his people; Shechem is the ſhoulder, and Chriſt has not only bore the ſins of his people in his own body, on the tree, but he bears and carries their perſons, and has the government of them on his ſhoulders, where they are ſafe and ſecure; Hebron may be interpreted fellowſhip, and the ſaints have not only fellowſhip with Chriſt, but with the Father through him; Bezer may be rendred a fortified place; Chriſt is a ſtrong hold, a tower, a place of defence, whither the righteous run, and are ſafe; Ramoth ſignifies exaltations, and may fitly be applied to Chriſt, who is exalted at God's right-hand, and who will exalt thoſe that truſt in him in due time; Golan may be tranſlated manifeſted; Chriſt the Son of God has been manifeſt in the fleſh, to deſtroy the works of the devil; and he will be revealed from heaven in a glorious manner at the laſt day: theſe cities were known to be ſuch; and they were open to all Iſraelites and proſelytes, that killed any perſon at unawares; and they were open at all times; and the way to them was made plain and large; every year care was taken to make the way good, to remove every hillock, or any thing that hindered; if there was a river in the way, to make a bridge over it; and where more ways met, to ſet up pillars with a hand to them, and theſe words written on it מִקְלָט מִקְלָט refuge, refuge; nor was the road to be leſs in breadth than 32 cubits[t]; and there was always room in theſe cities; and whoever fled there was ſafe; but thoſe that were found without, died: thus Chriſt is known to be a refuge for diſtreſſed ſinners; and he is open to all that come unto him, and at all times; the way of life and ſalvation by him is plainly pointed out in the Goſpel, and by the miniſters of it; who are appointed to direct unto him, and to remove all impediments and diſcouragements from ſuch who are ſeeking to him; and tho' ſo many have been received and ſaved by him, ſtill there is room for more; and whoever betake themſelves to him are ſafe, but thoſe that are without him die and periſh: ſo Philo the Jew[u] makes the divine word or Logos to be the chief and moſt profitable refuge to fly unto, of all the ſix which he takes notice of; and the Jews have a notion that in the time to come, in the days of the Meſſiah, three other cities of refuge will be added[w]. There is in ſome things a difference between Chriſt and theſe cities of refuge; there were ſix of theſe, but there is no other than Chriſt; the cities of refuge were only for ſuch who ſhed blood ignorantly, but Chriſt is a refuge for all ſorts of ſinners; they were in a kind of exile who fled to them, but in Chriſt is compleat liberty; it was poſſible that ſuch might die in them, but thoſe that are in Chriſt never die the ſecond death; and at beſt, thoſe who fled thither were only ſaved from a temporal death, whereas thoſe who betake themſelves to Chriſt are ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation. Now fleeing to Chriſt, implies danger in the perſons that flee, as ſuch are in danger, in themſelves, of the curſe and condemnation of the law, of the wrath of God, and eternal death; it ſuppoſes a ſenſe of this danger, which when right comes from the ſpirit of God; it ſhews guilt of conſcience, and a conſciouſneſs of the inſufficiency of other refuges, and a knowledge of Chriſt, as a ſuitable one; and is expreſſive of haſte and hearty deſire to be there: to lay hold on the hope ſet before us; by which is meant, not the grace of hope, but either heaven hoped for, or rather Chriſt the object of hope; who is not only ſet down at God's right hand, but is ſet forth in the Goſpel and in the ordinances, both by the Spirit of God, and by the miniſters of the word; that men may look and go to him, and truſt and believe in him, to the ſaving of their ſouls; where he is in ſight, near at hand, acceſſible to; the way to him is ſtreight forward; and here he abides: and he is ſet before us to be laid hold upon, which intends an act of faith; which grace lays hold on the perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and is done in a view of fullneſs and ſafety in him, and under a ſenſe of danger otherwiſe; it ſuppoſes grace, and that in exerciſe and ſomewhat ſtrong; and ſome degree of reſolution and courage of faith, and the ſtedfaſtneſs and continuance of it; the ſoul determining, if it periſhes it will periſh here; and it ſhews that Chriſt and his grace are to be touched and laid hold upon by faith.

[w] T. Hieroſ. Maccot, fol. 32. 1. Maimon. ut ſupra, §. 4.

Ver. 19. Which hope we have as an an anchor of the ſoul, &c.] This world is as a ſea; the church in it, and ſo every believer is as a ſhip; the port that is bound unto is heaven; Chriſt is the pilot, and hope is the anchor: an anchor is caſt on a bottom, out of ſight; and when the ſhip is in a calm, or in danger of a rock, or near the ſhore; but is of no ſervice without a cable; and when caſt aright, keeps the ſhip ſteady: ſo hope is caſt on Chriſt; whence he is often called hope itſelf, becauſe he is the ground and foundation of it, and who is at preſent unſeen to bodily eyes; and the anchor of hope without the cable of faith is of little ſervice; but being caſt aright on Chriſt, keeps the ſoul ſteady and immoveable: in ſome things there is a difference between hope and an anchor; an anchor is not of ſo much uſe in tempeſts as in a calm, but hope is; the cable may be cut or broke, and ſo the anchor be uſeleſs, but ſo it can't be with faith and hope; when the ſhip is at anchor, it does not move forward, but it is not ſo with the ſoul, when hope is in exerciſe; the anchor of hope is not caſt on any thing below, but above; and here it is called the anchor of the ſoul, to diſtinguiſh it from any other, and to ſhew the peculiar benefit of it to the ſoul. Pythagoras makes uſe of the ſame metaphor[x]; "riches, he ſays, are "a weak anchor, glory is yet weaker; the body "likewiſe; principalities, honours, all theſe are "weak and without ſtrength; what then are ſtrong "anchors? prudence, magnanimity, fortitude; "theſe no tempeſt ſhakes." But theſe philoſophical moral virtues are not to be compared with the chriſtian's grace of hope, which is both ſure and ſtedfaſt; it is in itſelf a grace firm and ſtable; it is permanent and can never be loſt: and it is ſtill more ſure and ſtedfaſt, by virtue of what it is fixed upon, the perſon, blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and by the immutability, faithfulneſs, and power of God it is concerned with; and through the aboundings and diſcoveries of divine love, grace, and mercy; and from the inſtances of grace to the vileſt of ſinners: and which entereth into that within the vail; the holy of holies, heaven itſelf; in alluſion to the vail which divided between the holy and the holy of holies: the things within the vail, or in heaven, which hope entering into fixes upon, are the perſon of Chriſt, who is entered there, and appears in the preſence of God for his people; his blood which he has carried along with him, and by which he is entered there; his juſtifying righteouſneſs by which the law is fulfilled, the two tables of ſtone in the ark of the teſtimony; the ſweet incenſe of his mediation, which is continually offered up by him; the mercy-ſeat, or throne of grace, on which Jehovah ſits as the God of grace; and all the glories of heaven; all which hope is concerned with, and receives ſtrength and vigour from: and their being within the vail, is expreſſive of their hiddenneſs and inviſibility at preſent, and of their ſafety and ſecurity, as well as of their ſacredneſs; and this ſhews a difference between the hope of believers and others, whoſe hope fixes upon things ſhort of theſe; and likewiſe the great privilege of a believer, who being made a prieſt unto God, has liberty and boldneſs to enter into the holieſt of all. The Jews[y] ſpeak of a vail in the world to come, which ſome are worthy to enter into.

Ver. 20. Whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jeſus, &c.] Chriſt was a runner; he had a race to run, which lay in going about to heal diſeaſes, in preaching the goſpel, in obeying the law, and in ſuffering death for his people; which race was run by him, with great ſwiftneſs, ſtrength and courage, with patience, chearfulneſs, and joy, and is now ended; as appears from the accompliſhment of ſalvation, from his entrance into heaven, and ſeſſion at the right hand of God; from the glorification of his human nature, and its everlaſting freedom from the dominion of death: and this race is run out, as a forerunner; Chriſt is the moſt excellent runner; there is none like him; there is none that can come up to him; he has out-ran and exceeded all others; he has performed in the beſt manner; he has run out his race firſt, and has entered into heaven firſt by his own blood; and he has cleared the way thither, and opened the gates of heaven for his people; and is a guide and pattern for them to follow: and he is the forerunner for them, as well as entered for them; for he was born, and he lived, and died for them, for their good and ſervice; and he is entered into heaven for them, as man and mediator, and as their high-prieſt; where he repreſents their perſons, appears and intercedes for them, takes care of their affairs, and preſents their ſervices; prepares manſions of glory for them, and takes poſſeſſion of heaven in their name, and opens the way for them to follow him thither; all which gives great encouragement to hope to enter now, where Jeſus is: who is made an high prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec; ſee ch. v. 6, 10. This is repeated here to lead on to what the Apoſtle had to ſay concerning Melchiſedec in the following chapter.

[y] Zohar in Gen. fol. 73. 3.

CHAP. VII.

THE Apoſtle having made mention of Melchiſedec in the latter part of the preceding chapter, proceeds in this to give ſome account of him, and of the excellency of his prieſthood, and to ſhew, that Chriſt is a prieſt of his order, and is ſuperior to Aaron and his ſons. He firſt declares what Melchiſedec was, that he was both king and prieſt; he names the place he was king of, and tells whoſe prieſt he was, even the prieſt of the moſt high God; and goes on to obſerve what he did, that he met Abraham returning from the ſlaughter of the kings, that he bleſſed him, and took tithes of him, ver. 1, 2. and then interprets his name, and royal title, the one ſignifying king of righteouſneſs, the other king of peace; that for any thing that can be learned from the ſcriptures, it is not known who was his father or his mother; what his lineage and deſcent; when he was born, or when he died; and that he is like to the Son of God, and continues a prieſt, ver 2, 3. upon which the Apoſtle calls upon the Hebrews to conſider the greatneſs of his perſon; and as it appears from that ſingle inſtance of his receiving tithes from the patriarch Abraham, ver. 4. by which it is evident, that he is greater than the Levites; and which is demonſtrated in the following particulars: the Levites received tithes of their brethren that came out of Abraham's loins, as they did, but Melchiſedec, whoſe deſcent was not from them, received tithes from Abraham himſelf, and beſides bleſſed him; and it is a clear caſe, that the leſſer is bleſſed of the greater, ver. 5, 6, 7. the Levites were mortal men that received tithes, but a teſtimony is bore to Melchiſedec, that he lives, ver. 8. yea, Levi himſelf paid tithes to Melchiſedec, ſince he was in the loins of his father Abraham when Melchiſedec met him, and took tithes of him; and therefore muſt be greater than Levi, ver. 9, 10. And next the Apoſtle proves the imperfection of the Levitical prieſthood from this conſideration, that there is another prieſt riſen up, not of the order of Aaron, but of the order of Melchiſedec, of which there would have been no need, if the Levitical prieſthood had been perfect; nor would it have been changed, as it is, and which has alſo made a change of the law, by which it is eſtabliſhed, neceſſary, ver. 11, 12. that the prieſt that is riſen up is not of the order of Aaron, is clear, becauſe he is of another tribe, even of the tribe of Judah, to which the prieſthood did not belong, ver. 13, 14. and that he is of the order of Melchiſedec, and ſo not according to the ceremonial law, but after the power of an endleſs life, is manifeſt from the teſtimony of the ſacred ſcripture, ver. 15, 16, 17. which lies in Pſ. cx. 4. and that the ceremonial law, on which the Levitical prieſthood ſtood, is changed and abrogated, is ſtrongly aſſerted, and the reaſons of it given, becauſe it was weak and unprofitable, and made nothing perfect; and this was diſannulled by Chriſt, the better hope brought in, who has made ſomething perfect, and thro' whom we have acceſs to God, ver. 18, 19. Moreover, the ſuperior excellency of Chriſt's prieſthood to the Levitical one, is ſhewn in ſeveral particulars; the prieſts of Aaron's order were made without an oath; Chriſt was made with one, as is evident from the above cited teſtimony, ver. 20, 21, 22. they were many, he but one; they were mortal, and did not continue, he continues ever, having an unchangeable prieſthood, ver. 23, 24. wherefore, as they were not ſuffered to continue by reaſon of death, their prieſthood was ineffectual; they could not take away ſin, and ſave ſinners; but Chriſt is able to ſave to the uttermoſt all that draw nigh to God by him, as a prieſt, and that becauſe he ever lives to compleat his office by interceſſion, ver. 25. wherefore ſuch an high-prieſt as he is, muſt become men, and be ſuitable to them, eſpecially ſince he is pure and holy, and in ſuch an exalted ſtate, ver. 26. and this is another difference between him and the prieſts under the law; they were men that had infirmity, and were guilty of ſins themſelves, and ſo had need to offer for their own ſins, and then for the ſins of others; but Chriſt, the Son of God, who was conſecrated a prieſt for evermore, by the word of the oath, had no ſin of his own to offer ſacrifice for, only the ſins of his people, which he did once, when he offered himſelf, ver. 27, 28.

Ver. 1. For this Melchiſedec king of Salem, &c.] Various have been the opinions of writers concerning Melchiſedec; ſome have thought him to be more than a man; ſome, that he was an angel; others, that he was the Holy Ghoſt; and others, that he was a divine perſon ſuperior to Chriſt, which needs no refutation; others have ſuppoſed that he was the Son of God himſelf: but he is expreſly ſaid to be like unto him, and Chriſt is ſaid to be of his order; which manifeſtly diſtinguiſh the one from the other; beſides, there is nothing ſaid of Melchiſedec which proves him to be more than a man: accordingly others take him to have been a mere man; but theſe are divided; ſome ſay, that he was Shem, the ſon of Noah, which is the conſtant opinion of the Jewiſh writers [z]; but it is not true of him, that he was without father, and without mother, an account of his deſcent being given in ſcripture; nor is it probable that he ſhould be a king of a ſingle city in Ham's country, and Abraham be a ſtranger there: others ſay, that he was a Canaanitiſh king, of the poſterity of Ham; others affirm him to be a perfect ſinleſs man, and that all that is ſaid of him in Geneſis, and in this context, is literally true of him; but that he ſhould be immediately created by God, as Adam, and be without ſin as he, are things entirely without any foundation: others take him to be a mere man, but an extraordinary one, eminently raiſed up by God to be a type of the Meſſiah; and think it moſt proper not to enquire curiouſly who he was, ſince the ſcripture is ſilent concerning his genealogy and deſcent; and that as it ſhould ſeem on purpoſe, that he might be a more full and fit type of Chriſt; and this ſenſe appears beſt and ſafeſt. Aben Ezra ſays, his name ſignifies what he was, the king of a righteous place: Salem, of which he was king, was not Shalem, a city of Shechem, in the land of Canaan, Gen. xxxiii. 18. afterwards called Salim, near to which John was baptizing, John iii. 23. where is ſhown the palace of Melchiſedec in its ruins, which can't be, ſince that city was laid to the ground and ſowed with ſalt by Abimelech, Judg. ix. 45. but Jeruſalem is the place; which is the conſtant opinion of the Jews [a], and is called Salem in Pſ. lxxvi. 2. The interpretation of this word is given in the next verſe; ſome of the Jewiſh writers referred to ſay, that it was uſual for the kings of Jeruſalem to be called Melchiſedec and Adoni-zedek, as in Joſh. x. 3. juſt as the kings of Egypt were called Pharoah. This king was alſo prieſt of the moſt high God, as he is ſaid to be, Gen. xiv. 18. for he was both king and prieſt, in which he was an eminent type of Chriſt; and his being a king is no objection to his being a prieſt, ſince it was uſual for kings to be prieſts; and tho' the Hebrew word Cohen, ſometimes ſignifies a prince, it can't be ſo underſtood here, not only becauſe the word is rendered prieſt by the Septuagint, and by the Apoſtle, but becauſe he is called the prieſt of God; and Chriſt is ſaid to be of his order: and he is ſtiled the prieſt of God, becauſe he was called and inveſted by him with this office, and was employed in his ſervice; who is ſaid to be the moſt high God, from his dwelling on high, and from his ſuperior power to all others, and to diſtinguiſh him from idol Gods; this is a character of great honour given to Melchiſedec: who met Abraham returning from the ſlaughter of the kings; the four kings, whoſe names are mentioned in Gen. xiv. 1. whom Abraham ſlew, and over whom he got an entire victory, with only three hundred and eighteen men of his own houſe, after they had conquered the kings of Sodom, Gomorrha, Admah, Zeboim, and Bela: which ſhows that war is lawful; that enemies may be ſlain in war; that kings may fall as well as other men; and that thoſe who have conquered others, may be conquered themſelves: and as he was returning with his ſpoils, Melchiſedec met him; not alone, which is not to be ſuppoſed of ſo great a perſon; nor empty, for he brought with him bread and wine, not for ſacrifice, as the papiſts would have it; but as Jarchi, a Jewiſh interpreter on the place obſerves, they uſed to do ſo to ſuch as were fatigued in war; for this is to be conſidered as a neighbourly action, done in point of intereſt and gratitude, and was a truly chriſtian one, and very laudable and commendable; and doubtleſs had ſomething in it typical of Chriſt, who gives to hungry and weary ſaints the bread of life, and refreſhes them with the wine of divine love and grace: and bleſſed him; Abraham, and the moſt high God alſo: the form of bleſſing both is recorded in Gen. xiv. 19, 20. This was not a mere civil ſalutation, nor only a congratulation upon his ſucceſs, nor only a return of thanks for victory, tho' theſe things are included; nor did he do this as a private perſon, but as the prieſt of the moſt high God, and bleſſed him in his name authoritatively, as the high-prieſt among the Jews afterwards did, Num. vi. 23—27. and in this he was a type of Chriſt, who bleſſes his people with all ſpiritual bleſſings, with redemption, juſtification, pardon, peace, and all grace, and with eternal glory.

Ver. 2. To whom alſo Abraham gave a tenth part of all, &c.] Or tithes, as in Gen. xiv. 20. Philo the Jew [b] renders the Hebrew phraſe, מעשר מכל, juſt as the Apoſtle does, δεκατην απο παντων, a tenth part of all, or out of all; not of all that he brought back, as Lot's goods, or the king of Sodom's, or any others; only of the ſpoils of the enemy, as in ver. 4. which is no proof of any obligation on men to pay tithes now to any order of men; for this was a voluntary act, and not what any law obliged to; it was done but once, and not conſtantly, or every year; it was out of the ſpoils of the enemy, and not out of his own ſubſtance, or of the increaſe of the earth; nor was it for the maintenance of Melchiſedec, as a prieſt, who alſo was a king, and was richly provided for; but to teſtify his gratitude to God, for the victory obtained, and his reverence of, and ſubjection to the prieſt of God. Firſt being by interpretation king of righteouſneſs; or a righteous king, as Melchiſedec was; not the king of a righteous place, as Aben Ezra thought, a place wherein dwelt righteouſneſs, or righteous perſons; but it was his proper name, which ſo ſignifies, and in which he was a type of Chriſt; who is righteous, not only as God, and as man, and as mediator, but particularly in the adminiſtration of his kingly office: his kingdom lies in righteouſneſs, as well as peace; the ſubjects of it are righteous perſons, and all his ways are juſt and true; his Goſpel, by which he rules, is a declaration of righteouſneſs; and he himſelf is the author of righteouſneſs, to all his people: and after that alſo king of Salem, which is king of peace; and may reſpect his peaceable government; and is very applicable to Chriſt, the prince of peace; whoſe kingdom is a kingdom of peace; his ſceptre is a ſceptre of peace; his royal proclamation is the Goſpel of peace; and his ſubjects are the ſons of peace; and he himſelf is the author of peace, not only between Jew and Gentile, but between God and his people; and he is the donor of peace, external, internal, and eternal. So Philo the Jew [c] interprets this name, king of peace, juſt as the Apoſtle does.

Ver. 3. Without father, without mother, without deſcent, &c.] Which is to be underſtood not of his perſon, but of his prieſthood; that his father was not a prieſt, nor did his mother deſcend from any in that office; nor had he either a predeceſſor or a ſucceſſor in it, as appears from any authentic accounts: or this is to be interpreted, not of his natural, but ſcriptural being; for no doubt, as he was a mere man, he had a father, and a mother, and a natural lineage and deſcent; but of theſe no mention is made in ſcripture, and therefore ſaid to be without them; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, whoſe father and mother are not written in the genealogies; or there is no genealogical account of them. The Arabic writers tell us who his father and his mother were; ſome of them ſay that Peleg was his father: ſo Elmacinus [d], his words are theſe; Peleg lived after he begat Rehu two hundred and nine years; afterwards he begat Melchiſedec, the prieſt, whom we have now made mention of. Patricides [e], another of their writers, expreſſes himſelf after this manner; "they who ſay Melchiſedec had neither beginning of days, nor end of life, and argue from the words of the Apoſtle Paul, aſſerting the ſame, do not rightly underſtand the ſaying of the Apoſtle Paul; for Shem, the ſon of Noah, after he had taken Melchiſedec, and withdrew him from his parents, did not ſet down in writing how old he was, when he went into the eaſt, nor what was his age when he died; but Melchiſedec was the ſon of Peleg, the ſon of Eber,

“ the ſon of Salah, the ſon of Cainan, the ſon of Arphaxad, the ſon of Shem, the ſon of Noah; and yet none of thoſe patriarchs is called his father. This only the Apoſtle Paul means, that none of his family ſerved in the temple, nor were children and tribes aſſigned to him. Matthew and Luke the Evangeliſts only relate the heads of tribes: hence the Apoſtle Paul does not write the name of his father, nor the name of his mother.” And with theſe writers Şahid Aben Batric[e] agrees, who expreſly affirms that Melchiſedec was, אבן פאלג, the ſon of Peleg; though others of them make him to be the ſon of Peleg's ſon, whoſe name was Heraclim. The Arabic Catena[f] on Gen. x. 25. the name of one was Peleg, has this note in the margin; “and this (Peleg) was the father of Heraclim, the father of Melchiſedec;” and in a preceding chapter, his pedigree is more particularly ſet forth: “Melchiſedec was the ſon of Heraclim, the ſon of Peleg, the ſon of Eber; and his mother's name was Salathiel, the daughter of Gomer, the ſon of Japhet, the ſon of Noah; and Heraclim, the ſon of Eber married his wife Salathiel, and ſhe was with child, and brought forth a ſon, and called his name Melchiſedec, called alſo king of Salem: after this the genealogy is ſet down at length. Melchſedec, ſon of Heraclim, which was the ſon of Peleg, which was the ſon of Eber, which was the ſon of Arphaxad, &c. till you come to, which was the ſon of Adam, on whom be peace.” It is very probable Epiphanius has regard to this tradition, when he obſerves[g], that ſome ſay that the father of Melchiſedec was called Eracla, and his mother Aſtaroth, the ſame with Aſteria. Some Greek[h] writers ſay, he was of the lineage of Sidus, the ſon of Ægyptus, a king of Lybia, from whence the Egyptians are called: this Sidus, they ſay, came out of Egypt into the country of the Canaanitiſh nations, now called Paleſtine, and ſubdued it, and dwelled in it, and built a city, which he called Sidon, after his own name: but all this is on purpoſe concealed, that he might be a more apparent type of Chriſt, who as man is, without father; for though, as God, he has a father, and was never without one, being begotten by him, and was always with him, and in him; by whom he was ſent, from whom he came, and whither he is gone; to whom he is the way, and with whom he is an advocate: yet, as man, he had no father; Joſeph was his reputed father only; nor was the Holy Ghoſt his father; nor is he ever ſaid to be begotten as man, but was born of a virgin. Some of the Jewiſh writers themſelves ſay, that the redeemer, whom God will raiſe up, ſhall be without father[i]. And he is without mother, tho' not in a ſpiritual ſenſe, every believer being ſo to him as ſuch; nor in a natural ſenſe, as man, for the virgin Mary was his mother; but in a divine ſenſe, as God: and he is without deſcent or genealogy; not as man, for there is a genealogical account of him as ſuch, in Matt. i. and Luke iii. and his pedigree and kindred were well known to the Jews; but as God; and this diſtinguiſhes him from the gods of the heathens, who were genealogized by them, as may be ſeen in Heſiod, Apollodorus, Hyginus, and other writers; and this condemns the blaſphemous genealogies of the Gnoſticks and Valentinians. It follows, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; that is, there is no account which ſhows when he was born, or when he died; and in this he was a type of Chriſt, who has no beginning of days, was from the beginning, and in the beginning, and is the beginning, and was from everlaſting; as appears from his nature as God, from his names, from his office as mediator, and from his concern in the council and covenant of peace, and in the election of his people; and he has no end of life, both as God and man; he is the living God; and tho' as man he died once, he'll die no more, but lives for ever. It is further ſaid of Melchiſedec, but made like unto the Son of God; in the above things; from whence it appears, that he is not the Son of God; and that Chriſt, as the Son of God, exiſted before him, and therefore could not take this character from his incarnation or reſurrection: abideth a prieſt continually; not in perſon, but in his antitype Chriſt Jeſus; for there never will be any change of Chriſt's prieſthood; nor will it ever be transferred to another; the vertue and efficacy of it will continue for ever; and he will ever live to make interceſſion; and will always bear the glory of his being both prieſt and king upon his throne: the Syriac verſion renders it, his prieſthood abides for ever; which is true both of Melchiſedec and of Chriſt.

Ver. 4. Now conſider how great this man was, &c.] Melchiſedec, of whom ſo many great and wonderful things are ſaid in the preceding verſes: and as follows, unto whom the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the ſpoils; of Abraham's giving tithes to him, ſee the note on ver. 2. and Melchiſedec's greatneſs is aggravated, not only from this act of Abraham's, but from Abraham's being a patriarch, who did it; he was the patriarch of patriarchs, as the ſons of Jacob are called, Acts vii. 8, 9. he is the patriarch of the whole Jewiſh nation, and of many nations, and of all believers, the friend of God, and heir of the world; how great then muſt Melchiſedec be, to whom he paid tithes? and how much greater muſt Chriſt, the antitype of Melchiſedec, be?

Ver. 5. And verily they that are of the ſons of Levi, &c.] Or Levites; who are of the tribe of Levi, whoſe deſcent is from him: who receive the office of the prieſthood; as ſome of them were prieſts, tho' not all; and the Levites therefore are ſometimes called prieſts. R. Joſhua ben Levi ſays, that in twenty-four places the prieſts are called Levites; and this is one of them, Ezek. xliv. 15. and the prieſts and Levites, &c.[k] theſe have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law; the ceremonial law, Numb. xviii. 20—26. theſe they took of all the people of Iſrael in the reſt of the tribes, by the commandment of God, on account of their ſervice in the tabernacle; and becauſe they had no inheritance in the land; and to ſhew that the Iſraelites held their land of God himſelf: that is of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham; who are their brethren and kinſmen according to the fleſh, tho' of different tribes; and from theſe they receive, notwithſtanding they are the ſons of Abraham: but here a difficulty ariſes, how the Levites that were prieſts can be ſaid to receive tithes from the people, when they received the tenth part of the tithes, or the tithe of tithes from the Levites, Num. xviii. 26. Neh. x. 38. but it ſhould be obſerved, that it was not neceſſary that the Levites ſhould give theſe tithes to the prieſts themſelves; an Iſraelite might do it, and ſo give the Levites the leſs; on which account the prieſts may be ſaid to receive from the people; beſides, Ezra in his time ordered, that the firſt tithe ſhould not be given to the Levites, but to the prieſts, becauſe they would not go up with him to Jeruſalem [l].

Ver. 6. But he whoſe deſcent is not counted from them, &c.] That is, Melchiſedec, whoſe genealogy or pedigree is not reckoned from the Levites, nor from any from whom they deſcend; his lineal deſcent is not the ſame with theirs; and ſo did not receive tithes by any law, as they did, but by virtue of his ſuperiority: received tithes of Abraham; not from the people, or his brethren, but from Abraham, the father of the people of Iſrael, and of Levi himſelf: and bleſſed him that had the promiſes; of a ſon, and of the Meſſiah, that ſhould ſpring from him, in whom all nations ſhould be bleſſed, and of the land of Canaan, and of the bleſſings of grace and glory. This ſhows that Melchiſedec had a deſcent, tho' it was not known; and that, ſince his deſcent was not the ſame with the Levites, he was a more proper type of Chriſt, who belonged not to that, but another tribe.

Ver. 7. And without all contradiction, the leſs is bleſſed of the greater.] This is a ſelf-evident truth, and is undeniable; it admits of no controverſy, and can't be gainſayed, that he that bleſſeth, is greater in that reſpect than he that is bleſſed by him; as the prieſts were greater in their office than the people who were bleſſed by them; and ſo Melchiſedec, as a prieſt of the moſt high God, and as bleſſing Abraham, was greater than he; and ſo muſt be greater than the Levites, who ſprung from him; and his prieſthood be more excellent than theirs; and conſequently Chriſt, his antitype, and who was of his order, muſt be greater too; which is the deſign of the Apoſtle throughout the whole of his reaſoning.

Ver. 8. And here men that die receive tithes, &c.] The prieſts and Levites were not only men, and mortal men, ſubject to death, but they did die, and ſo did not continue, by reaſon of death, ver. 24. but there he receiveth them, of whom it is witneſſed that he liveth; which is to be underſtood of Melchiſedec; who is not oppoſed to men, as if he was not a man, nor to mortal men, but to men that die; nor is he ſaid to be immortal, but to live: and this may reſpect the ſilence of the ſcripture concerning him, which gives no account of his death; and may be interpreted of the perpetuity of his prieſthood, and of his living in his antitype Chriſt; and the teſtimony concerning him, is in Pſ. cx. 4.

Ver. 9. And as I may ſo ſay, &c.] With truth, and with great propriety and pertinence: Levi alſo who receiveth tithes; or the Levites, who receive tithes according to the law of Moſes from the people of Iſrael: paid tithes in Abraham; that is, to Melchiſedec; and therefore Melchiſedec muſt be greater than they, and his prieſthood a more excellent one than theirs; ſince they who receive tithes from others gave tithes to him.

Ver. 10. For he was yet in the loins of his father, &c.] Abraham; namely, Levi and his whole poſterity; which is to be underſtood ſeminally, juſt as all mankind were in the loins of Adam, when he ſinned and fell, and ſo they ſinned and fell in him; and ſo Levi was in Abraham's loins, when Melchiſedec met him; which, as it proves Melchiſedec to be greater than Levi, and much more Jeſus Chriſt, who is a prieſt of his order, which is the grand thing the Apoſtle has in view; ſo it ſerves to illuſtrate ſeveral points of doctrine, in which either of the public heads, Adam and Chriſt, are concerned, with reſpect to their ſeed and offspring; ſuch as perſonal election in Chriſt, an eternal donation of all bleſſings of grace to the elect in him, eternal juſtification in him, the doctrine of original ſin, and the ſaints crucifixion, burial, reſurrection, and ſeſſion in Chriſt, and together with him.

Ver. 11. If therefore perfection were by the Levitical prieſthood, &c.] The prieſtood which was eſtabliſhed in the tribe of Levi; ſo called, to diſtinguiſh it from that which was before this inſtitution, from the times of Adam, as well as from the prieſthood of Melchiſedec, and from the prieſthood of Chriſt, and from that of his people under the Goſpel, who are all prieſts; as well as to reſtrain it to the ſubject of the Apoſtle's diſcourſe: the deſign of which is to ſhow, that there is no perfection by it; as is clear from the prieſts themſelves, who were but men, mortal men, ſinful men, and ſo imperfect, and conſequently their prieſthood; and from their offerings, between which, and ſin, there is no proportion; and at beſt were but typical of the ſacrifice of Chriſt; and could neither make the prieſts nor the worſhippers perfect, neither in their own conſciences, nor in the ſight of God: moral actions are preferred before them, and yet by theſe there is no perfection, juſtification, and ſalvation; to which may be added, that the ſacrifices the prieſts offered did not extend to all kind of ſins, only to ſins of ignorance, not to preſumptuous ones; and there were many under that diſpenſation puniſhed with death; and at moſt they only delivered from temporal, not eternal puniſhment, and only entitled to a temporal life, not an eternal one. For under it the people received the law; not the moral law, which was given to Adam in innocence, and as it came by Moſes, it was before the Levitical prieſthood took place; but the ceremonial law, and which was carnal, mutable, and made nothing perfect: the Syriac verſion renders it, by which a law was impoſed upon the people; to regard the office of prieſthood, and the prieſts in it, and bring their ſacrifices to them; and the Arabic verſion reads, the law of the prieſt's office; which office was after the law of a carnal commandment, and ſo imperfect, as is manifeſt from what follows: for had perfection been by it, what further need was there that another prieſt ſhould ariſe after the order of Melchiſedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron? that there was another prieſt promiſed and expected, and that he ſhould ariſe after the order of Melchiſedec, and who was to make his ſoul an offering for ſin, is certain, Ezra ii. 63. Pſ. cx. 4. Iſ. liii. 10. and ſuch an one has riſen, even Jeſus of Nazareth; and yet there would have been no need of him, and eſpecially, that he ſhould be of a different order from Aaron's, had there been perfection by the Levitical prieſthood.

Ver. 12. For the prieſthood being changed, &c.] Not tranſlated from one tribe, family, or order, to another, but utterly aboliſhed; for tho' it is called an everlaſting prieſthood, yet that is to be underſtood with a limitation, as the word everlaſting often is, as relating to things under that diſpenſation; for nothing is more certain than that it is done away: it was of right abrogated at the death of Chriſt, and it is now in fact; ſince the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the daily ſacrifice has ceaſed, and the children of Iſrael have been many days without one, and without an Ephod. And the Jews themſelves own, that the high prieſthood was to ceaſe in time to come [m], and which they ſay Azariel the ſon of Oded propheſied of in 2 Chron. xv. 3. There is made of neceſſity a change alſo of the law; not the moral law, that was in being before the prieſthood of Aaron, nor do they ſtand and fall together; beſides, this ſtill remains, for it is perfect, and cannot be made void by any other; nor is it ſet aſide by Chriſt's prieſthood: tho' there is a ſenſe in which it is aboliſhed; as it is in the hands of Moſes; as it is a covenant of works; as to juſtification by it; and as to its curſe and condemnation to them that are Chriſt's; yet it ſtill remains in the hands of Chriſt, and as a rule of walk and converſation; and is uſeful, and continues ſo on many accounts: but either the judicial law; not that part of it which is founded on juſtice and equity, and was a means of guarding the moral law, for that ſtill ſubſiſts; but that which was given to the Jews as Jews, and ſome parts of which depended on the prieſthood, and ſo ceaſed with it; as the laws concerning the cities of refuge, raiſing up ſeed to a deceaſed brother, preſerving inheritances in families, and judging and determining controverſies: or rather the ceremonial law, which was but a ſhadow of good things to come, and was given but for a time; and this concerned the prieſthood, and was made void by the prieſthood of Chriſt; for that putting an end to the Levitical prieſthood, the law which related to it muſt unavoidably ceaſe, and become of no effect. This the Jews moſt ſtrongly deny; God, they [n] ſay, will not change nor alter the law of Moſes for ever. The 9th article of their creed, as drawn up by Maimonides, runs thus [o]; "I believe with a perfect faith "that this law לא תהא מוחלפת ſhall not be changed, "nor ſhall there be another law from the creator, "bleſſed be his name." But the reaſoning of the Apoſtle is ſtrong and unanſwerable.

Ver. 13. For he of whom theſe things are ſpoken, &c.] In Pſ. cx. 4. and in the type of him Melchiſedec, in the preceding verſes; for not Melchiſedec is here meant, but the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as appears by what follows; the antitype of Melchiſedec, the Lord our righteouſneſs, the prince of peace, the prieſt of God, that lives for ever, without father, without mother, &c. pertaineth to another tribe; the tribe of Judah, and not the tribe of Levi: of which no man gave attendance at the altar; either of burnt-offering or of incenſe; that is, no man waited there, or took upon him and exerciſed the prieſt's office that was of the tribe of Judah: no man might lawfully do it; Uzziah indeed, thruſt himſelf into the prieſt's office, who was of that tribe, and went into the temple and burnt incenſe upon the altar of incenſe; but then he had no right to do it, and was puniſhed for it.

Ver. 14. For it is evident that our Lord ſprang out of Judah, &c.] Out of the tribe of Judah; it is certain that the Meſſiah was to ſpring from that tribe, Gen. xlix. 10. 1 Chron. v. 2. he was to be of the family of Jeſſe, and of the houſe of David; and hence he is ſometimes called David himſelf; and ſo the Jews expect that he will come from the tribe of Judah, and not from any other [p]; and it is evident that Jeſus, who is our Lord by creation, redemption, and the conqueſt of his grace, ſprung from this tribe: this is clear from the place of his birth, Bethlehem of Judah; and from his reputed father Joſeph, and real mother Mary, being both of the houſe of David; and this was known to the Jews, and it is owned by them that he was near to the kingdom [q], which he could not be if he was not of that tribe; and hence he is called the lion of the tribe of Judah: of which tribe Moſes ſpake nothing concerning the prieſthood; he ſaid many things of it in Deut. xxxiii. 8. and relates many things concerning it as ſpoken by Jacob, but nothing about the prieſthood, as if it belonged to that, or that any that ſhould ſpring from it, ſhould exerciſe that office. The Alexandrian copy, the Claromontane manuſcript, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, concerning the prieſts; whence it follows that there is a change of the prieſthood, and that the Meſſiah, as he was not to be, ſo he is not a prieſt of Aaron's order, not being of the ſame tribe.

Ver. 15. And it is yet far more evident, &c.] From a fact which cannot be denied; for that after the ſimilitude of Melchiſedec there ariſeth another prieſt; or another has riſen, even Jeſus the ſon of David, of the tribe of Judah; another from Aaron, one that is not of his family or tribe, but one like to Melchiſedec: hence we learn that Melchiſedec and Chriſt are not the ſame perſon; and that the order and ſimilitude of Melchiſedec are the ſame; and that Chriſt's being of his order only imports that there is a reſemblance and likeneſs between him and Melchiſedec, in many things, which are obſerved in the beginning of this chapter: and this ariſing does not intend Chriſt's ſetting up himſelf, only his appearance in this form; and being expreſſed in the preſent tenſe, denotes the continual being, and virtue of his prieſthood.

Ver. 16. Who was made, &c.] Not as man, much leſs as God; but as a prieſt, conſtituted and appointed one: not after the law of a carnal commandment; either the ceremonial law in general, which was a carnal one, if we conſider the perſons to whom it belonged, the Iſraelites according to the fleſh; it was incumbent upon, and might be performed by ſuch who were only carnal; and it was performed by and for men that were in the fleſh, or mortal; and if we conſider the matter of it, the ſubject on which various of its rites were exerciſed, was the fleſh or body, and which were performed by manual operation; and the ſacrifices of it were the fleſh of beaſts; and theſe were for the ſins of the fleſh, and for the removing the ceremonial uncleanneſs of it; and the virtue of them reached only to the purifying of the fleſh; and the whole of it is diſtinct from the moral law, which is ſpiritual, and reaches to the ſpirit or ſoul of man; whereas this only was concerned about temporal and external things: or elſe the law of the prieſtood is particularly intended; or that commandment which reſpected the prieſthood of Aaron; which law regarded the carnal deſcent of his ſons; injoined a carnal inauguration of them, and provided for their ſucceſſion and continuance in a carnal way; after which, Chriſt the great high-prieſt did not become one: but after the power of an endleſs life; this may be underſtood either of the Goſpel, according to which Chriſt is a prieſt; and which is called life, in oppoſition to the law which is the miniſtration of death; and becauſe it is the means of quickning dead ſinners, and of reviving drooping ſaints; and points out Chriſt the way of life, and has brought life and immortality to light: and may be ſaid to be endleſs, in diſtinction from the law, which is temporary; and becauſe it is itſelf permanent and everlaſting; contains in it the promiſe of eternal life, and is the means of bringing ſouls unto it: and there is a power goes along with it; which diſtinguiſhes it from the weak and beggarly elements of the ceremonial law, which is aboliſhed, becauſe of the weakneſs of it; for it is attended with the power of the Spirit of God, and is the power of God unto ſalvation: or elſe this intends the endleſs life which Chriſt has, in and of himſelf; and which qualifies him for a prieſt; and ſtands oppoſed to the mortality of the prieſts, and to that law, which could not ſecure them from it: the prieſts died, and the law by which they were prieſts could not prevent their death; Chriſt is the living God, the prince of life, he had power to lay down his life as man, and power to take it up again; and his life, as man, is an endleſs one, which qualifies him for that part of his prieſtly office, his interceſſion and advocacy: or it may deſign that power, which his Father has given him as mediator, of an endleſs life, both for himſelf and for all his people; and regards chiefly his ever living as a prieſt, and the perpetuity of his prieſthood, and the continual virtue and efficacy of it.

Ver. 17. For he teſtifieth, &c.] That is, either David, the penman of the pſalm, or rather the Holy Ghoſt the enditer of it, or God in the ſcripture, in Pſ. cx. 4. of this form of citing ſcripture, ſee the note on ch. ii. 6. thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec; ſee ch. v. 6, 10. and vi. 20.

Ver. 18. For there is verily a diſanulling of the commandment, &c.] Not the moral law; though what is here ſaid of the commandment may be applied to that; that is ſometimes called the commandment, Rom. vii. 12, 13. it went before the promiſe of the Meſſiah, and the Goſpel of Chriſt, and the diſpenſation of it; it is in ſome reſpects weak; it cannot juſtify from the guilt of ſin, nor free from the power of it, nor ſecure from death the puniſhment of it, nor give eternal life; tho' it has a power to command, accuſe, convince, and condemn; and it is alſo unprofitable in the buſineſs of juſtification and ſalvation; tho' otherwiſe it is profitable to convince of ſin, to ſhew what righteouſneſs is, and to be a rule of converſation to the ſaints in the hand of Chriſt; yet not this, but the ceremonial law is meant, which is the commandment that reſpected the Levitical prieſthood, and is called a carnal one, and is incluſive of many others, and which diſtinguiſhes that diſpenſation from the Goſpel one: and this may be ſaid to be going before; with reſpect to time, being before the Goſpel ſtate, or the exhibition of the new covenant of grace; and with reſpect to uſe, as a type or ſhadow of good things to come; and as it was a ſchool-maſter going before, and leading on to the knowledge of evangelical truths: and this is now diſannulled, abrogated, and made void; the middle wall of partition is broken down, and the law of commandments contained in ordinances is aboliſhed: for the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs thereof; the ceremonial law was weak; it could not expiate or atone for ſin, in the ſight of God; it could not remove the guilt of ſin from the conſcience, but there was ſtill a remembrance of it; nor could it cleanſe from the filth of ſin; all it could do was, to expiate ſin typically, and ſanctify externally to the purifying of the fleſh; and all the virtue it had was owing to Chriſt whom it prefigured; and therefore being fulfilled in him, it ceaſed: and it was unprofitable; not before the coming of Chriſt, for then it was a ſhadow, a type, a ſchool-maſter, and had its uſefulneſs; but ſince his coming, who is the body and ſubſtance of it, it is unprofitable to be joined to him; and is of no ſervice in the affair of ſalvation; and is no other than a grievous yoke of bondage; yea, is what renders Chriſt unprofitable and of no effect, when ſubmitted to as in force, and as neceſſary to ſalvation; and becauſe of theſe things, it is aboliſhed and made null and void. The Jews, tho' they are ſtrenuous aſſerters of the unalterableneſs of the law of Moſes, yet ſometimes are obliged to acknowledge the abrogation of the ceremonial law in the times of the Meſſiah; the commandment, they ſay [r], meaning this, ſhall ceaſe in the time to come; and again, "all ſacrifices ſhall ceaſe in the future ſtate, or time to come, (i. e. the times of the Meſſiah,) but the ſacrifice of praiſe [s]."

Ver. 19. For the law made nothing perfect, &c.] Or no man; neither any of the prieſts that offered ſacrifices, nor any of the people for whom they were offered; it could not perfectly make atonement for ſin; nor make men perfectly holy or righteous; it could neither juſtify nor ſanctify; neither bring in a perfect righteouſneſs, nor bring men to perfect holineſs, and ſo to eternal life and ſalvation: but the bringing in of a better hope did; not the grace of hope; that is not ſomething newly brought in, the ſaints under the Old Teſtament had it; nor is it better now than then, tho' it has greater advantages and more encouragement to the exerciſe of it: nor heaven and eternal glory, the thing hoped for; the ſaints under the legal diſpenſation hoped for this, as well as believers under the preſent diſpenſation; nor is what the latter hope for better than that the former did: nor is God the author and object of hope intended; the phraſe of bringing in will not ſuit with him; beſides, he is diſtinguiſhed from it, in the next clauſe: to underſtand it of the Goſpel, the means of hope, and of encouraging it, is no ill ſenſe; that ſtanding in direct contradiſtinction to the law: but the prieſthood of Chriſt, of which the Apoſtle is treating in the context, is generally underſtood, which is the ground of hope; for all promiſes reſpecting eternal life are confirmed by it, and all bleſſings connected with it procured; and it is better than the Aaronical prieſthood, under the law; and a better ground of hope than the ſacrifices of that law were: Chriſt himſelf may be deſigned, who is often called hope, being the object, ground, and foundation of it; and is a better one than Moſes, or his law, Aaron, or his prieſthood; and it is by him men draw nigh to God; and the bringing in of him or his prieſthood ſhews that Chriſt's prieſthood was not upon the foot of the law, and that he exiſted as a prieſt, before brought in, and as a better hope, tho' not ſo fully revealed; and it may have reſpect to his coming in the fleſh, being ſent, or brought in by his Father: now the bringing in of him and his prieſthood did make ſomething perfect; it brought to perfection all the types, promiſes, and propheſies of the Old Teſtament, the whole law, moral and ceremonial; it brought in perfect atonement, reconciliation, pardon, righteouſneſs, and redemption; it perfected the perſons of all God's elect; and perfecty provided for their holineſs, peace, comfort, and eternal happineſs: ſome read the words but it, the law, was the bringing in of a better hope; the law led unto, made way for, and introduced Chriſt, the better hope; and ſo the Arabic verſion, ſeeing it ſhould be an entrance to a more noble hope; the Syriac verſion renders it, but in the room of it entered a hope more excellent than that; than the law: by the which we draw nigh unto God; the Father, as the Father of Chriſt, and of his people in him, and as the father of mercies, and the God of all grace; and this drawing nigh to him is to be underſtood not locally but ſpiritually; it includes the whole worſhip of God, but chiefly deſigns prayer: and ought to be done with a true heart, in oppoſition to hypocriſy; and in faith, in oppoſition to doubting; and with reverence and humility, in oppoſition to raſhneſs; and with freedom, boldneſs, and thankfulneſs: and it is through Chriſt and his prieſthood, that ſouls have encouragement to draw nigh to God; for Chriſt has paid all their debts, ſatisfied law and juſtice, procured the pardon of their ſins, atonement and reconciliation for them; he is the way of their acceſs to God; he gives them audience and acceptance; he preſents their prayers, and intercedes for them himſelf.

[r] T. Bab. Nidda, fol. 61. 2.

[s] Vajikra Rabba, §. 9. fol. 153. 1. & §. 27. fol. 168. 4.

Ver. 20. And in as much as not without an oath, &c.] Our verſion ſupplies as follows, he was made prieſt; which well agrees with what is ſaid in the next verſe; the Syriac verſion renders it, and which he confirmed to us by an oath; that is, the better hope, Chriſt and his prieſthood, ſaid to be brought in, and by which men draw nigh to God; this is eſtabliſhed by the oath of God himſelf, referring to Pſ. cx. 4. afterwards cited in proof of it.

Ver. 21. For these prieſts were made without an oath, &c.] The prieſts of the tribe of Levi, and of the order of Aaron, were inſtalled into their office, and inveſted with it, without an oath; no mention is made of any when Aaron and his ſons were put into it in Moſes's time; nor was any uſed afterwards, neither by God, nor by the prieſts, nor by the people; it is true indeed that after the ſect of the Sadduces aroſe, the high-prieſt on the day of atonement was obliged to take an oath that he would not change any of the cuſtoms of the day[t]; but then this regarded not his inveſtiture, but the execution of his office; and was an oath of his and not of the Lord's, which is here deſigned: but this with an oath; that is, Chriſt was made an high-prieſt with an oath, even with an oath of God; which gives his prieſthood the preference to the Levitical prieſthood, which was without one: and this oath was made, by him that ſaid unto him; the Syriac verſion reads, as he ſaid to him by David; that is, in Pſ. cx. 4. David being the penman of that pſalm, in which ſtand the following words of the Father to Chriſt: the Lord ſware and will not repent, thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec; which proves that Jehovah ſwore that Chriſt ſhould be a prieſt, and continue ſo: ſwearing, when aſcribed to God, is after the manner of men, and is always by himſelf, and never upon any trivial account; but either to confirm his love to his people, or his covenant with them, or the miſſion of his Son to be the redeemer, or as here, his prieſtly office: and this oath was made not ſo much on Chriſt's account, as on account of the heirs of promiſe, for their conſolation; and ſhews the dignity, validity, importance, and ſingularity of Chriſt's prieſthood, as well as the durableneſs of it; and of this oath God will never repent: repentance cannot properly fall upon God, on any account; for it is contrary to his holineſs and righteouſneſs, and to his happineſs, to his unchangeableneſs, omniſcience, and omnipotence; it is indeed ſometimes aſcribed to him improperly, and after the manner of men; and only regards a change of his outward conduct according to his immutable will; and the change that is made is in the creature, and not in God himſelf: but God will not repent in any ſenſe of the prieſthood of Chriſt, nor of his oath, that it ſhould continue for ever according to the Melchiſedecian order; for he was every way qualified for it, and has faithfully performed it.

Ver. 22. By ſo much was Jeſus made a ſurety of a better teſtament.] Or covenant, for the word ſignifies both; and what is intended may be called both a teſtament and a covenant; a teſtament, becauſe it is founded in the good will and pleaſure of God, and reſpects an inheritance bequeathed by God the Father to his children, which was confirmed and comes to them by the death of Chriſt the teſtator; and a covenant, it being a compact or agreement made by the Father with Chriſt, as the repreſentative of all the elect; in which promiſes and bleſſings of all ſorts are provided and ſecured for them in him; and is called in ſcripture a covenant of life and peace, becauſe theſe are things concerned in it; and is commonly by men called the covenant of grace, becauſe it ſprings from the grace of God, the ſubject matter of it is grace, and the end of it is the glory of God's grace: now this is better than the covenant of works broken by man, and which expoſes him to the curſe and condemnation of the law; or than the covenant of the Levitical prieſthood, by which was no perfection; and the form of adminiſtration of it under the Goſpel diſpenſation is better than that under the law, for it is now revealed more clearly, and adminiſtred without types, ſhadows, and ſacrifices; and the extent of its adminiſtration is larger, reaching to Gentiles as well as Jews; and beſides, it is now actually ratified and confirmed by the blood of Chriſt, which is therefore called the blood of the everlaſting covenant: and of this teſtament or covenant Chriſt is the ſurety; the word ſignifies, one that draws nigh: Chriſt drew nigh to his Father in the council of peace, and undertook to be the ſaviour and redeemer of his people; he ſubſtituted himſelf in their place and ſtead; he interpoſed between the creditor and the debtor, and became ſurety for the payment of the debts of the latter, and ſo ſtood engaged for them, and in their room: Chriſt is not the ſurety for the Father to his people, but for them to the Father; as to ſatisfy for their ſins, to work out a righteouſneſs for them, to preſerve and keep them, and make them happy; which is an inſtance of matchleſs love.

Ver. 23. And they truly were many prieſts, &c.] There were many common prieſts at a time; and tho' there were but one high-prieſt at a time, yet there were many of them in a line of ſucceſſion from Aaron down to the Apoſtles time. The Jews ſay[u], that under the firſt temple eighteen high-prieſts miniſtred, and under the ſecond temple more than three hundred: this ſhews the imperfection of this prieſthood, ſince it was in many hands; no one continuing and being ſufficient to execute it; but Chriſt is the one and only high-prieſt; there is no other, nor is there any need of any other: the reaſon why there were ſo many under the law was, becauſe they were not ſuffered to continue by reaſon of death; death has a power to forbid a long continuance in this world, and no man does continue long here; death puts a ſtop to mens works, and to the exerciſe of their ſeveral callings; no office, even the moſt ſacred, exempts from it; no not the office of high-prieſts: theſe were but men, ſinful men, and ſo died; and their diſcontinuance by reaſon of death, ſhews the imperfection of their prieſthood: there was another reaſon beſides this which the Apoſtle gives, why the high-prieſts were ſo many, and eſpecially about this time; and that is, the office was bought for money, and men that would give moſt were put into it: hence there were frequent changes; the Jews themſelves ſay, they changed every twelve months[w].

[t] Miſn. Yoma, c. 1. §. 5.

[u] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 9. 1. Piske Toſephot Zebachim, Art. 72.

Ver. 24. But this man becauſe he continueth ever, &c.] Tho' he died, death did not forbid him to continue, as it does other men; he was not forced to die, he died voluntarily; and he continued but for a ſmall time under the power of death; beſides, his death was a branch of his prieſtly office; ſo that he not only continued in his divine nature, which ſtill had the human nature in union with it, but he continued in his office as a prieſt, and quickly roſe from the dead; and the virtue of his ſacrifice always remains, and he himſelf ever lives as an interceſſor: wherefore he hath an unchangeable prieſthood; which will never be antiquated, and give place to another; nor does it, or ever will it paſs from him to another, for it is needleſs, ſeeing he lives, and no other is ſufficient for it; and it would be injuſtice to paſs it to another; the glory of it is due to him; and this is matter of comfort to the ſaints, that he ſits a prieſt upon his throne, and that his prieſthood always continues.

Ver. 25. Wherefore he is able alſo to ſave them to the uttermoſt, &c.] Becauſe he continues ever, and has an unchangeable prieſthood. This is to be underſtood not of temporal ſalvation, nor of providential favours, but of ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation; and includes a deliverance from all evil here and hereafter, and an enjoyment of all good in this world and in that to come: Chriſt was called to this work by his Father; he was promiſed by him to do it, and was ſent by him to effect it, and has accompliſhed it; and this is the reaſon of his name Jeſus, and was the end of his coming into this world, and which the Goſpel always repreſents as ſuch: this work required ability; here was a law to be fulfilled; juſtice to be ſatisfied; ſin to be bore, removed, and atoned for; many enemies to engage with, and a curſed death to undergo: it was a work no creature, angels or men, were able to undertake and perform; the prieſts under the law could not; men cannot ſave themſelves, nor can any creature work out ſalvation for them: but Chriſt is able; as appears from the help his father laid on him, who knew him to be mighty; from his own undertaking it, being mighty to ſave; and from his having compleatly effected it; and he muſt needs be able to do it, ſince he is the mighty God: and he is able to ſave to the uttermoſt; to the utmoſt perfection, as the Arabic verſion renders it; ſo as nothing can be wanting in the ſalvation he is the author of, nor any thing added to it; or for ever, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render it; to the utmoſt of time, even to eternity, as well as to the utmoſt of mens wants: the perſons he is able to ſave, are ſuch that come to God by him; Chriſt is able to ſave all the world, were it his will; but not his abſolute power is deſigned by his ability, but that power which by his will is put into act; and reaches not to all men, for all are not ſaved; and thoſe that are, are deſcribed by ſpecial characters, as here: they are ſuch who come to God, not eſſentially conſidered, but perſonally, or in the perſon of the Father; and not as an abſolute God, but as in Chriſt; not as on a throne of juſtice, but as on a throne of grace and mercy; not only as Chriſt's Father, but as theirs; and not only as the God of nature and providence, but as the God of grace: and this act of coming to him is a fruit of his everlaſting love; an effect of Chriſt's death; is peculiar to regenerate perſons; takes in the whole ſervice of God, eſpecially prayer; is not local but ſpiritual, it is by faith; and ſuppoſes ſpiritual life, and implies a ſenſe of need, and of God's ability and willingneſs to help: the medium or mean by which ſuch come to God is Chriſt. Man had acceſs to God in his ſtate of innocence, but ſinning, was not admitted; there is no approaching now unto him without a middle perſon; Chriſt is the mediator, who having made peace, atoned for ſin, ſatisfied juſtice, and brought in an everlaſting righteouſneſs, introduces his people into God's preſence; in whom their perſons and ſervices are accepted, and through whom all bleſſings are communicated to them: ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for them; Chriſt ever lives as God, he is the living God; and tho' he died as man, he is riſen from the dead, and will not die again, but live for evermore; and he lives as mediator and redeemer, and particularly as a prieſt; one branch of whoſe office it is to intercede for his people: this he does now in heaven; not by vocal prayer and ſupplication, at leaſt not as in the days of his fleſh; or as if he was ſupplicating an angry judge; nor as controverting or litigating a point in the court of heaven; but by the appearance of his perſon for them; by the preſentation of his ſacrifice, blood, and righteouſneſs; by declaring his will, that ſuch and ſuch bleſſings be beſtowed on ſuch and ſuch perſons; and by recommending the prayers of his people, and removing the charges and accuſations of ſatan: the things he intercedes for are, the converſion of his that are in a ſtate of nature; the conſolation of diſtreſſed ones; freſh diſcoveries of pardoning grace to fallen believers; renewed ſtrength to oppoſe ſin, exerciſe grace, diſcharge duty, and bear up under temptations, and deliverance out of them; perſeverance in faith and holineſs, and eternal glorification; and he intercedes for theſe things; not for all the world, but for all the elect, even tho' tranſgreſſors; and he is very fit for this work, as the following verſe ſhews; he is the one and only mediator; and he is a very prevalent interceſſor, he always ſucceeds; and he does this work readily, willingly, chearfully, and freely; and all this proves him to be able to ſave; for tho' the impetration of ſalvation is by his death, the application of it is owing to his interceding life; had he died and not lived again, he could not have ſaved to the uttermoſt; his life is the ſecurity of his people's, and he lives for them, and as their repreſentative; the bleſſed effects of which they conſtantly enjoy.

Ver. 26. For ſuch an high-prieſt became us, &c.] Is ſuitable to us, anſwers to our caſes and neceſſities, is every way ſuch an one as is wanted: who is holy; by nature, originally and underivatively, perfectly and compleatly, internally as well as externally; he was typified by the high-prieſt, who had holineſs to the Lord written on his forehead, and far exceeds any of the prieſts in holineſs; and ſuch an one becomes us, for had he not been holy he could not have entered into the holy place for us, or have appeared there on our account, or have been our ſanctification; ſo Philo the Jew ſpeaks of the true prieſt as being not man, but the divine word, and as free from all ſin voluntary and involuntary[x]: harmleſs; without any vitioſity in his nature, without guile in his mouth, or malice in his heart; doing no injury to any man's perſon or property: the character chiefly regards the innocence and holineſs of his life and converſation; and in which he exceeded the prieſts under the law; and is a ſuitable one for us, for hereby he was fit to be made ſin, and to take it away: undefiled; with the ſin of Adam, with which all mankind are defiled; with the blood of ſlain beaſts, with which the prieſts under the law were ſprinkled; with the filthy converſation of the wicked, which affects good men: hence he was more excellent than the prieſts under the law; and one that becomes us, ſince his blood is the blood of a lamb without ſpot and blemiſh: the high-prieſts under the law, according to the Jews[y], were to excel their brethren in knowledge, beauty, and riches; but the diſtinguiſhing character of our high-prieſt is purity and holineſs: ſeparate from ſinners; not but that he took the nature of ſinners, tho' not a ſinful nature; and he was often in the company of ſinners, when on earth, and was reckoned among them, and as one of them; but he was ſeparated from them in Adam; he was not among the individuals of human nature that ſinned in him; and he was brought into the world in a different manner from them, not deſcending from Adam by ordinary generation; and he had no communion with them in ſin; nor did he encourage them to it in the days of his fleſh; and now he is removed far from them; and herein he exceeds the prieſts under the law, and is ſuitable to us: the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, ſeparate from ſins; the alluſion ſeems to be, to the ſeparating of the high-prieſt from his own houſe to one of the courts of the temple ſeven days before the day of atonement[z], and ſo before the burning of the heifer[a]: and made higher than the heavens; than the viſible heavens, the airy and ſtarry heavens, and than the angels in heaven; and ſo preferable to the high-prieſts, and exceedingly agreeable to us, ch. iv. 14. the alluſion may be to the carrying of the high-prieſt on the day of atonement to an upper chamber in the temple, called the chamber of Abtines[b]: this may be underſtood either of Chriſt's exaltation in heaven, where angels are ſubject to him and his prieſthood is compleated; or of his excelling the angels in the holineſs of his nature, which agrees with the other characters in the text, and ſtands oppoſed to the infirmities of the prieſts.

Ver. 27. Who needeth not daily as thoſe high-prieſts, &c.] They being ſinners, and he not: to offer up ſacrifice firſt for his own ſins and then for the people's; as they did on the day of atonement; ſee Lev. xvi. 6, 11, 15, 16. upon which place the Jews[c] make the ſame remark the Apoſtle does here; "he (the "high-prieſt, they ſay) offers ſacrifices for the ſins "of the people, for his own, בקדמיתא firſt, ולבתר "and afterwards, for the ſins of the people:" which was one reaſon of the imperfection and inſufficiency of their ſacrifices; but Chriſt needed not to offer for his own, nor could he, for he had none of his own; what he had was by imputation; wherefore he only needed to offer, and he only did offer for the ſins of the people; not of the Jews only, but of the Gentiles alſo, even of all God's covenant people; nor did he need to do this daily, as they did; they offered ſacrifice daily, the common prieſts every day, morning and evening, and the high-prieſt on a ſtated day once a year, on the day of atonement: for this he did once when he offered up himſelf; and in this alſo he differed from them; they offered not themſelves, but what was inferior to themſelves, and what could not take away ſin, and therefore was repeated; but Chriſt offered himſelf, his whole human nature, ſoul and body, and both as in union with his divine nature; and this being offered to God freely and voluntarily in the room and ſtead of his people, was acceptable to God: hereby juſtice was ſatisfied; the law fulfilled; ſin taken away, and compleat ſalvation obtained; ſo that there never was ſince any need of his offering again, nor never will be; which ſhews the perfection and fullneſs of his prieſthood, and the preference of it to the Levitical one.

Ver. 28. For the law maketh men high-prieſts which have infirmity, &c.] Every word has an emphaſis on it, and ſhews the difference between Chriſt and theſe prieſts: they were many; they were made prieſts by the law, the law of a carnal commandment, which made nothing perfect, and was diſannulled; they were men that were made prieſts by it, and could not really draw nigh to God, and mediate with him for themſelves, or others, nor atone either for their own or others ſins; and they were men that had infirmity, not natural and corporal, for they were to have no bodily blemiſhes and deficiences in them, but ſinful ones; and eſpecially ſuch were they who bore this office under the ſecond temple, and particularly in the times of Chriſt and his Apoſtles[d]: but the word of the oath which was ſince the law; that word which had an oath annexed to it, which declared Chriſt an high-prieſt after the order of Melchiſedec, was ſince the law of the prieſthood of Aaron; for tho' Chriſt was made a prieſt from eternity, yet the promiſe which declared it, and had an oath joined to it was afterwards in David's time, Pſ. cx. 4. and this word of the oath maketh the Son; not a ſon, but a prieſt; publiſhes and declares him to be ſo: Chriſt, tho' a man, yet he is not a mere man; he is the Son of God, and as ſuch oppoſed to men; and therefore is not the Son of God as man; and this ſhews that he was a ſon before he was a prieſt, and therefore is not ſo called on account of his office; and it is his being the Son of God which gives luſtre and glory to his prieſtly office, and virtue and efficacy to his ſacrifice and interceſſion, and gives him the preference to all other prieſts: who is conſecrated for evermore; or perfected, or perfect; he is perfect in his obedience and ſufferings, in his ſacrifice, and as he is now in heaven, in compleat glory; the law made men prieſts that did not continue, but Chriſt is a prieſt for evermore, and abſolutely perfect.

CHAP. VIII.

THE Apoſtle obſerving that the prieſthood of Chriſt is the ſum of what he had treated of in the preceding chapter, proceeds to ſhew the ſuperior excellency of it in other inſtances, particularly in the place where Chriſt now officiates, which is in heaven; he being ſet down at the right hand of God there, and ſo was a miniſter of the ſanctuary, and true tabernacle pitched by God, and not man; whereas the prieſts of Aaron's line only miniſtred on earth, and in the typical ſanctuary and tabernacle, ver. 1, 2. and after he had obſerved that Chriſt muſt have ſomething to offer, meaning his body, to anſwer to the gifts and ſacrifices prieſts were ordained to offer, ver. 3. he proves the neceſſity of his miniſtring in heaven, becauſe if he was on earth he would not be a prieſt, a compleat one, and would have been uſeleſs and needleſs, ver. 4. and beſides, it was proper that he ſhould go up to heaven, and miniſter there, as the antitype of the prieſts, who to the example and ſhadow of heavenly things, ſerved in the tabernacle which was made by Moſes, by the order of God, and according to the pattern ſhewed him in the mount, ver. 5. and that the miniſtry of Chriſt in the true ſanctuary is much more excellent than the miniſtry of the prieſts in the ſhadowy one, is evident from his being the mediator of a better covenant, ver. 6. and that the covenant he is the mediator of, is the better covenant, appears from the better promiſes of which it conſiſts, and from the faultineſs of the former covenant, ver. 6, 7. and that that was faulty, and ſucceeded by another, he proves from a paſſage in Jer. xxxi. 31—34. in which mention is made of a new covenant, and as diſtinct from that made with the Jewiſh fathers, and violated by them; and ſeveral of the promiſes of this new and ſecond covenant are rehearſed, and which manifeſtly appear to be better than what were in the former, ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. from all which the Apoſtle concludes, that a new covenant being made, the old one muſt be antiquated; and that whereas it was decaying and waxing old, it was juſt ready to vaniſh away, ver. 13.

Ver. 1. Now of the things which we have ſpoken this is the ſum, &c.] The ſcope and drift, the compendium and ſubſtance; or the principal of what has been ſaid in, or from Pſ. cx. 4. and has been diſcourſed of in the three preceding chapters, is the prieſthood of Chriſt: we have ſuch an high-prieſt; as is deſcribed in the foregoing diſcourſe, and in the following words: Chriſt is a prieſt, an high-prieſt, and the ſaints high-prieſt; they are not without one under the Goſpel-diſpenſation; and Chriſt is he, and always continues, in whoſe ſacrifice and interceſſion they have a ſhare: who is ſet on the right hand of the throne of the majeſty in the heavens; he is ſet, whereas the Levitical prieſts ſtood; which ſhews that he has done his work, and that with acceptance; and is in a ſtate of eaſe and reſt; and is poſſeſſed of honour, glory, majeſty, and authority, and which continue: the place where he is ſet is, on the right hand of the throne of the majeſty; the ſame with the right hand of God; for by the throne of the majeſty is meant, God the Father in his royal glory and dignity; ſo Tiphereth, one of the ten numbers in the Jews Cabaliſtic tree, whoſe name is Jehovah, is called כסא הכבוד the throne of glory [e]; ſo angels are called thrones, Col. i. 16. but God is a throne of majeſty ſuperior to them; and at his right hand ſits Chriſt the great high-prieſt; which is expreſſive of his high honour, glory, and power, and even of his equality with God: the phraſe, in the heavens, may refer both to God the throne of majeſty, who is there, and to Chriſt the high-prieſt, who is paſſed into them, and received by them, and ſits there.

Ver. 2. A miniſter of the ſanctuary, &c.] The heavenly one, ſo called, in alluſion to the holy of holies, the type of it; and becauſe it is truly an holy place; and which Chriſt ſanctifies and prepares for his people by his preſence and interceſſion: or of the holy ones, or ſaints; who are ſanctified or ſet apart by God the Father, to whom Chriſt is made ſanctification, and who are made holy by the Spirit of God; to theſe Chriſt is a miniſter; he was ſo in his prophetic office, to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael; and in his prieſtly office, to all the choſen ones, when on earth, offering himſelf a ſacrifice for them, and now he is a miniſter to them in heaven, interceding for them; and in his kingly office, governing, protecting, and defending them: or of holy things; to his people, ſuch as the gifts of his Spirit, grace, and all ſupplies of it, and at laſt glory; and for them, preſenting their ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe to God, which become acceptable to him through his powerful mediation: and of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man; by which is meant, not heaven, the ſame with the ſanctuary, for this would be an unneceſſary tautology, and an explanation of a word by another more obſcure; nor is there any reaſon why it ſhould be added, which the Lord pitched, and not man; ſince every one muſt believe that heaven is made by God alone; but rather the church of Chriſt, which is ſometimes called a tabernacle, and is a true one, of which the tabernacle of Moſes was a type, and is of God's building, and where Chriſt miniſters, being the high-prieſt over the houſe of God; tho' it is beſt to interpret it of the human nature of Chriſt, in which he tabernacled among men, and which was typified by the tabernacle of Moſes, and therefore is called the true one, in diſtinction from that; for as there God dwelt, and his glory was ſeen, and he granted his preſence to his people, and the ſacrifices were brought and offered up there, and to this the people looked when at a diſtance, and this appeared very coarſe without, but within full of holy things; ſo in Chriſt's human nature the fullneſs of the Godhead dwells bodily; here the glory of God is ſeen, even in the face of Jeſus; and through him God vouchſafes communion with his people; and by him the ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe are offered up; and to him do the ſaints look for the acceptance of them; and tho' in the days of his fleſh he looked very mean and deſpicable, yet was full of grace and truth, and of all the gifts of the Spirit: and the human nature of Chriſt was not of man; it was not propagated by human generation, but was produced through the power of the Holy Ghoſt; and in this tabernacle Chriſt miniſtred when on earth, and now miniſters in heaven.

Ver. 3. For every high-prieſt is ordained to offer gifts and ſacrifices, &c.] See the note on ch. ỽ. 1. wherefore it is of neceſſity that this man have ſomewhat alſo to offer; or this perſon; for the word man is not in the text, and ſeems not ſo proper a word to be ſupplied, ſince it was his human nature that it was neceſſary he ſhould have to offer; he was a perſon, and exiſted as a divine perſon antecedent to his aſſumption of human nature: as God, he had nothing to offer, or that was capable of being offered; ſomething to offer as a ſacrifice was neceſſary to him as a prieſt, but not any thing was proper to him; Levitical ſacrifices would not do, theſe could not take away ſin; beſides, the great high-prieſt was not of the tribe of Levi, nor of the order of Aaron, and therefore could not offer theſe. An angelic nature would have been improper, that is not capable of dying; and the offering up of ſuch an one would have been of no ſervice to men, for whom prieſts are ordained; but an human nature is meant, and which it was neceſſary Chriſt ſhould have, and offer, for it is for men that he became an high-prieſt; it was human nature that had offended God, and ſatisfaction muſt be made in that nature; and this was capable of ſuffering and dying; yet not human nature under any conſideration was neceſſary for him to have and offer; not merely as in a ſtate of innocence, without any infirmity, nor as ſinful, yet as perfect as to parts and qualities; and a nature, and not a perſon, was neceſſary to be had, and to be taken into cloſe and inſeparable union to his divine perſon; and of this there was a neceſſity, not abſolute, or a neceſſity of coaction and force: Chriſt was not forced unto it; but on the foot of his ſuretyſhip engagements, and becauſe of making ſatisfaction for the ſin of man, it was neceſſary; otherwiſe Chriſt voluntarily engaged to be a prieſt, and willingly became man, and freely offered himſelf, ſoul and body, in the room and ſtead of his people.

[e] Lex. Cabal. p. 483.

Ver. 4. For if he were on earth, he ſhould not be a prieſt, &c.] The Socinians from hence attempt to prove that Chriſt was not a prieſt, and did not offer ſacrifice on earth; whereas his coming into the world, and his appearance in human nature, was in the character of a prieſt, and to qualify himſelf for one; his death was his ſacrifice, which was on earth; and he never offered but one ſacrifice; and it was after he had offered himſelf that he went to heaven; ſo the ſacrifices under the law were firſt offered, before their blood was carried within: but the meaning is, either if that was on earth, namely what it was neceſſary he ſhould have to offer; if his human nature had been earthly, had been of men, had come by ordinary generation, he had not been properly, only typically a prieſt, at moſt; and had been no better than the typical ones; yea, he would have been needleſs, nay might not have offered, not being of Levi's tribe, and could not have exiſted as a prieſt with the ſons of Aaron; but he had his human nature in another way, through the power of the Holy Ghoſt from above, and therefore is ſaid to come from above, from heaven, and to be the Lord from heaven: or the ſenſe is, if he was on earth, and had not died, he had not been a prieſt; and if he had died and remained under the power of death, he had been a prieſt of no account and uſe; and had he roſe again and remained on earth, without going to heaven, with his blood and ſacrifice, he had not been a perfect prieſt; if Chriſt had remained on earth, the Levitical prieſthood had remained, and ſo he would have been no prieſt, ſince two prieſthoods could not have ſubſiſted together. The Levitical prieſthood was in force whilſt Chriſt was on earth; Chriſt's prieſthood was not perfected on earth; the Levitical prieſthood remaining whilſt he was on earth, proves he was not then a perfect prieſt, or had not compleated his prieſthood; had he been ſo, that would not have ſubſiſted; it was neceſſary therefore that Chriſt ſhould enter into the holy place, to put an end to the Levitical prieſthood: moreover, if he had remained on earth, he had been needleſs; ſeeing that there are prieſts that offer gifts according to the law; there were prieſts when Chriſt was upon earth; their work was to offer gifts the people brought, and ſacrifices for ſin, and that according to the law of Moſes, which till the death of Chriſt was in full force.

Ver. 5. Who ſerve unto the example and ſhadow of heavenly things, &c.] Things reſpecting the perſon, office, and grace of Chriſt; the prieſts themſelves were types of him; the places they miniſtred in were an exemplar of the heavenly places, as the word may be rendred, where Chriſt is; and the things they miniſtred were ſhadows of the good things which are by Chriſt; and the ſhadows were mere repreſentations, dark, obſcure, glimmering ones, and were fleeting and tranſitory: as Moſes was admoniſhed of God; by an oracle; he was a peculiar favourite of God, and was the mediator between God and the people of Iſrael, and what he received was oracle-wiſe; what he delivered to the people was what he received from God; and what was thus delivered ought to be received as from God: and this admonition or oracle was given him when he was about to make the tabernacle; the Levitical one, with every thing appertaining to the worſhip of God in it: this is aſcribed to Moſes, tho' it was made by others, becauſe it was by his direction, and under his care and overſight; and he had this admonition at the beginning of it; and at the finiſhing of it he looked upon it, and ſaw that it was all done as the Lord had commanded, Exod. xxv. 40. and xxxix. 43. for ſee, ſaith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern ſhewed to thee in the mount; Moſes was taken up into a mountain with God, even mount Sinai; and whilſt he was there, a pattern was given him of the tabernacle and all its utenſils; this was not a device of his own, but was ſhewn him by God; and this pattern reached to every particular thing; and great care and circumſpection were uſed that the moſt minute thing anſwered to it. The Jews think this pattern was given him by the miniſtry of angels; Gabriel, they ſay [f], girt himſelf with a girdle, and ſhewed to Moſes the work of the candleſtick; and they further ſay, that an ark of fire, and a table of fire, and a candleſtick of fire, deſcended from heaven, and Moſes ſaw them, and made according to them: from whence it may be obſerved that the tabernacle, and tabernacle worſhip, were of divine inſtitution; the ceremonious rites of the Jews were not, as ſome have affirmed, borrowed from the Egyptians; nor were they given as diverſions to that people, nor only to preſerve them from idolatry, and keep them ſeparate from others, but were deſigned to lead them to Chriſt, they were typical of; wherefore the abuſe, and not the uſe of them, were condemned under the former diſpenſation; tho' they were to continue no longer than till Chriſt came, and ſuffered and died; and now they are aboliſhed: moreover, it may be gathered from hence, that whatever is done in a way of religious worſhip, ſhould be according to a divine rule; a church of Chriſt ought to be formed according to the primitive pattern, and ſhould conſiſt, not of all that are born in a nation, province, or pariſh; nor ſhould all that are born of believing parents be admitted into it; no unholy, unbelieving, and unconverted perſons, ſons, only ſuch as are true believers in Chriſt, and who are baptized according as the word of God directs; the officers of a church ſhould be only of two ſorts, biſhops, elders, paſtors or overſeers, and deacons; the ordinances are baptiſm, which ſhould only be adminiſtred to believers, and by immerſion, and the Lord's ſupper, of which none ſhould partake, but thoſe who have taſted that the Lord is gracious; and this ſhould be performed as Chriſt performed it, and as the Apoſtle Paul received it from him; the diſcipline of Chriſt's houſe ſhould be regarded, and all the laws of it carefully and punctually put in execution; and a converſation becoming the Goſpel ſhould be attended to.

Ver. 6. But now hath he obtained a more excellent miniſtry, &c.] Chriſt has a miniſtry, he is the miniſter of the ſanctuary, ver. 2. he has obtained this miniſtry of his father; he was called unto it and engaged in it by him; and he has now obtained it; for tho' he was called to it from eternity, it was in time he came an high-prieſt of good things to come; and his miniſtry is a more excellent one than that of the prieſts, who offered gifts according to the law, and ſerved to the example and ſhadow of heavenly things; as abundantly appears from the preceding chapter, and from this, as well as from what follows: by how much alſo he is the mediator of a better covenant; the covenant of grace, as adminiſtred under the goſpel-diſpenſation; which is not only better than the covenant of works, that being conditional, this abſolute; that ſtood on the foot of works, this on the foot of grace, and is eſtabliſhed in Chriſt; that being broken and made void, this continues; and not only better than the covenant of the Levitical prieſthood, which was but a typical one, and is now ceaſed, but alſo than the covenant of grace, as adminiſtred under the legal diſpenſation; being better than that, as to the manner of its manifeſtation, which is more full and clear; and as to the extent of its adminiſtration, reaching to Gentiles as well as Jews; and as to the ratification of it by the blood of Chriſt, called from thence the blood of the everlaſting covenant; and as to the promiſes of it, here ſaid to be better: which was eſtabliſhed upon better promiſes; which are not now delivered out as before, under the figure of earthly and temporal things; nor under a condition to be performed nor confined to a particular people and nation; and which are attended with a greater meaſure of the Spirit, to open and apply them; and are all ſecured in Chriſt Jeſus, and confirmed by his blood: and now of this covenant Chriſt is the mediator; a mediator is of more perſons than one, and of theſe at variance; and he is a middle perſon between both; and his buſineſs is, to bring both parties together, and make peace between them: the two parties in this caſe are God and man, ſet at a diſtance from each other by the ſin of man, whereby man is become enmity to God; Chriſt is the mediator between God and man, a middle perſon between both, being both God and man, the days-man, who lays his hands on both; who brings men to God that were afar off, and makes peace for them by the blood of his croſs, and ſatisfies the juſtice of God, which he has done by the ſacrifice of himſelf; and now appears in the preſence of God for them, and intercedes for them, and applies the bleſſings of the covenant to them by his Spirit, and keeps and preſerves them ſafe to his everlaſting kingdom; and for this office he is every way fit, and in this he excels the Levitical prieſts, and has a miniſtry ſuperior to theirs, ſince he is ſuch a mediator, and a mediator of ſuch a covenant.

Ver. 7. For if that firſt covenant had been faultleſs, &c.] Not the covenant of works; that was made in paradiſe, this on mount Sinai; that was made with Adam and his poſterity, this with the Jews only; that had no mediator, this had one, Moſes; that was not dedicated with blood, this was; that had no forgiveneſs of ſin in it, this had; under that ſaints are not, but they were under this; to be under that was no privilege, but to be under this it was, as to the Iſraelites, who on this account were preferable to all other nations: nor is the pure covenant of grace, as adminiſtred under the Goſpel meant; for tho' that was firſt made, yet is the ſecond in adminiſtration; that includes the elect of God among the Gentiles, this only the Jews; that is made only with them, and is made known to them whom God calls by his grace in time, this was made with good and bad; that was of pure grace, this required works in order to life and the enjoyment of its bleſſings; that is an everlaſting covenant, this is done away; and the one is manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from the other in this chapter: but the covenant here deſigned is the covenant of grace, as adminiſtred under the legal diſpenſation, and which was a typical one; the people with whom it was made were typical of the true Iſrael of God; the bleſſings promiſed in it were ſhadows of good things to come; the works it required were typical of Chriſt's obedience to the law, in the room and ſtead of his people, by which he fulfilled it; the ſacrifices on which it were eſtabliſhed, were types of the ſacrifice and death of Chriſt; the mediator of it, Moſes, was a type of Chriſt, the mediator of the new covenant; and it was confirmed by the blood of beaſts, which was typical of the blood of Chriſt: this covenant was not faultleſs, but was faulty or blame-worthy; not that there was any thing ſinful and criminal in it, but it was deficient; there was a weakneſs in it; its ſacrifices could not make men perfect, nor take away ſin; there wanted a larger ſupply of the grace of the Spirit to write the law of God upon the heart, and to enable men to keep it; there was not in it ſo full a revelation of the mind and will of God, and of his love and grace as has ſince been made; nor did it exhibit a free and full pardon for all ſins, unclogged of every condition; the perſons that were under it were faulty; hence it follows, that God found fault with them, they could not anſwer the requirements and end of it: had it been faultleſs, then ſhould have no place been ſought for the ſecond; the covenant of grace unvailed in the Goſpel-diſpenſation, called the better teſtament, the better covenant, and the new covenant; in order to introduce which, the firſt was removed, that this might ſucceed it; juſt as becauſe there was no perfection by the Levitical prieſthood, it became neceſſary that another prieſt ſhould ariſe, of another order.

Ver. 8. For finding fault with them, &c.] Both with the covenant, which had its faults, and with the people who continued not in it, and were therefore diſregarded by the Lord, ver. 9. he ſaith, behold the days come (ſaith the Lord) when I will make a new covenant with the houſe of Iſrael, and with the houſe of Judah; the words are cited from Jer. xxxi. 31, 32. in which God promiſes a new covenant; ſo called, not becauſe new made; for with reſpect to its original conſtitution, it was made from eternity; Chriſt the mediator of it, and with whom it was made, was ſet up from everlaſting; and promiſes and bleſſings of grace were put into his hands before the world began: nor is it newly revealed, for it was made known to Adam, and in ſome meaſure to all the Old Teſtament ſaints, tho' it is more clearly revealed than it was; but it is ſo called in diſtinction from the former adminiſtration of it, which is waxen old, and vaniſhed away; and with reſpect to the order of ſucceſſion, it taking place upon the former being removed; and on account of the time of its more clear revelation and eſtabliſhment, being in the laſt days; and becauſe of its mode of adminiſtration, which is different from the former, in a new way, and by the uſe of new ordinances; and becauſe it is always new, its vigour and efficacy are perpetual; it will never be antiquated, or give place to another; and it provides for, and promiſes new things, a new heart, a new ſpirit, &c. to which may be added, that it is a famous, excellent covenant, there's none like it; juſt as an excellent ſong is called a new ſong.[f] The perſons with whom this covenant is promiſed to be made, are the houſes of Iſrael and Judah; which being literally taken, had its fulfilment in the firſt times of the Goſpel, through the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, by whom this covenant was made known to God's elect among the twelve tribes; but being myſtically underſtood, includes both Jews and Gentiles, the whole Iſrael of God; Iſrael not after the fleſh, but after the ſpirit; ſuch as were Jews inwardly; God's elect of every nation: the word, συντελεσω, rendered, I will make, ſignifies, I will conſummate, or finiſh, or end, or fulfil it; which ſhews the perfection of this covenant, and the imperfection of the former; and that what was typified in the firſt, is fulfilled in this; and that it is now eſtabliſhed and ratified by Chriſt; and is ſo finiſhed, as to the manifeſtation and adminiſtration of it, that there will be no alteration made in it, nor any addition to it: the time of doing all this is called the days to come; the laſt days, the days of the Meſſiah, which were future in Jeremiah's time: and a behold is prefixed to the whole, as a note of attention, this being an affair of great moment and importance; and as a note of demonſtration, or as pointing to ſomething that was deſired and expected; and as a note of admiration, it containing things wonderful and marvellous.

Ver. 9. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, &c.] The anceſtors of the Jews at mount Sinai: in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; which is mentioned, not only to obſerve the time when the former covenant was made with the Iſraelites, which was juſt upon their deliverance out of Egypt; but alſo to ſhew their weakneſs and inability to have delivered themſelves, and the tenderneſs of God towards them; they were like children, they could not help themſelves when God took them by the hand, and brought them forth with an outſtretched arm; and likewiſe to expoſe their ingratitude, and vindicate his conduct towards them: becauſe they continued not in my covenant; tho' they promiſed, at the reading of it, that all that the Lord had ſaid, they would hear and do; but their hearts were not right with God, and they were not ſtedfaſt in his covenant, and therefore their carcaſſes fell in the wilderneſs: and I regarded them not, ſaith the Lord; the words in Jer. xxxi. 32. are very differently rendered in our tranſlation, altho' I was an huſband unto them; and ſo it becomes an aggravation of their ſin of ingratitude, in not continuing in his covenant: in the margin it is rendered interrogatively, ſhould I have continued an huſband unto them? that is, after they had ſo treated him, no; as if he ſhould ſay, I will not behave towards them as ſuch; I'll reject them, and diſregard them. The Chaldee paraphraſe is juſt the reverſe of the Apoſtle's tranſlation, and I was well-pleaſed with them: ſome render them, I ruled over them, as a lord over his ſervants, in a very ſevere manner. Others obſerving the great difference there is between the Hebrew text, and the Apoſtle's verſion, have ſuppoſed a different Hebrew copy from the preſent, uſed by the Septuagint, or the Apoſtle, in which, inſtead of בעלתי, it was read either בחלתי, or געלתי; but there is no need of ſuch a ſuppoſition, ſince Dr. Pocock[g] has ſhewn, that בעל, in the Arabic language, ſignifies to loath and abhor, and ſo to diſregard; and Kimchi[h] relates it as a rule laid down by his father, that where-ever this word is uſed in conſtruction with ב, it is to be taken in an ill part, and ſignifies the ſame as בחלתי, I have loathed; in which ſenſe that word is uſed in Zech. xi. 8. and ſo here, I have loathed them, I abhorred them, I rejected them, I took no care of them, diſregarded them, left their houſe deſolate, and ſuffered wrath to come upon them to the uttermoſt.

Ver. 10. For this is the covenant that I will make with the houſe of Iſrael, &c.] That is, this is the ſum and ſubſtance of the covenant, which God promiſed to make with, or to make manifeſt and known to his choſen people, the true Iſraelites, under the Goſpel diſpenſation; or the following are the ſeveral articles of that covenant, he propoſed to conſummate or finiſh, as before: after thoſe days ſaith the Lord; after the times of the Old Teſtament, when the Meſſiah ſhall be come, and the Goſpel day ſhall take place. So the Jews[i] apply theſe days, when they repreſent the Iſraelites ſaying to Moſes, O that he (God) would reveal (himſelf or will) to us a ſecond time! O that he would kiſs us with the kiſſes of his mouth, and that the doctrine of the law was fixed in our hearts; when he (Moſes) ſaid to them, this is not to be done now, but לעתיד לבא, in the time to come, (i. e. in the times of the Meſſiah) as it is ſaid, Jer. xxxi. 33. I will put my law, &c. and ſo[k] they are elſewhere applied to the ſame times. And the firſt article in it is, I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; by the laws of God are meant not the precepts of the ceremonial law, which were now abrogated, but either the moral law, and its commands; which is a tranſcript of the divine nature, was inſcribed on Adam's heart in innocence, and ſome remains of it are even in the Gentiles, but greatly obliterated thro' the ſin of man; and there is in men naturally a contrary diſpoſition to it; in regeneration it is re-inſcribed by the Spirit of God; and great reſpect is had to it by regenerate perſons, in which lies one part of their conformity to Chriſt: or elſe, ſince the word law ſignifies ſometimes no other than a doctrine, an inſtruction, the doctrines of grace, of repentance towards God, of faith in Chriſt, and love to him, and every other doctrine may be intended; and the tables where, according to the tenor of this covenant, theſe are put and written, are two tables, as before, the mind and heart; but not two tables of ſtone, on which the law of Moſes was written, partly that it might not be loſt, through defect of memory, and partly to denote the firmneſs and ſtability of it, as alſo to point at the hardneſs of man's heart; but the fleſhly tables of the heart; not that part of our fleſh that is called the heart; but the ſouls of men, ſuch hearts as are regenerated and ſanctified by the Spirit of God, and ſuch minds as are renewed by him: and the putting of them into the mind, deſigns the knowledge of them, which God gives; as of the moral law, of its ſpirituality and perfection, ſhewing that there is no life and righteouſneſs by it, that it is fulfilled by Chriſt, and is a rule of converſation to the ſaints; and of all other laws, ordinances, and doctrines of Chriſt: and the writing them in, or on the heart, intends a filling the ſoul with love and affection to them, ſo that it regards them ſingly and heartily; and a powerful inclination of the heart to be ſubject to them, thro' the efficacious grace of God; and which is done, not with the ink of nature's power, but with the Spirit of the living God, 2 Cor. iii. 3. And I will be to them a God; not in ſuch ſenſe as he is the God of all mankind, or as he was the God of Iſrael in a diſtinguiſhing manner, but as he is the God of Chriſt, and of all the elect in him; and he is their God, not merely as the God of nature and providence, but as the God of all grace; he is ſo in a covenant way, and as in Chriſt, and by vertue of electing grace, and which is made manifeſt in effectual vocation; and as ſuch, he has ſet his heart on them, and ſet them apart for himſelf; he ſaves them by his Son, adopts and regenerates them, juſtifies and ſanctifies them, provides for them, protects and preſerves them; and happy are they that are intereſted in this bleſſing of the covenant, which is preferable to every thing elſe; they have every thing, and can want no good thing; they need fear no enemy; all things work together for their good; and God continues to be their God in life and in death; ſo that they may depend on his love, be ſecure of his power, expect every needful ſupply of grace, and to be carried thro' every duty and trial, and to ſhare in the firſt reſurrection, and to enjoy eternal happineſs: and they ſhall be to me a people; not in ſuch ſenſe as all mankind are, or the Jews were in a more peculiar reſpect, but as all God's elect are, whether Jews or Gentiles; and who are ſuch whom God has loved with a ſpecial love, has choſe in Chriſt, and given to him, and with whom he has made a covenant in him; whom Chriſt ſaves from their ſins by his blood, and calls them by his grace and Spirit, and who give up themſelves to him; theſe are a diſtinct and peculiar people, a people near unto the Lord, and who are all righteous in Chriſt, and are made willing in the day of his power on their ſouls.

Ver. 11. And they ſhall not teach every man his neighbour, &c.] The Alexandrian copy reads, citizen; that is, fellow-citizen; and ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions: and every man his brother, ſaying, know the Lord: this is not to be underſtood, ſo as to ſet aſide the external and public miniſtry of the word, which is a ſtanding ordinance of God under the Goſpel diſpenſation; or even the private inſtructions of ſaints one to another, in chriſtian converſation, whereby they may build up one another in their moſt holy faith; but the ſenſe is, that men ſhould not only teach, but the Spirit of God ſhould teach with them, and by them; and it ſtands oppoſed to particular and pretended revelations, and eſpecially to magiſterial dictates; and denotes the abundance of knowledge that ſhould be in Goſpel times, which ſhould not be reſtrained to particular perſons, and ſetts of men, but ſhould be ſhared by all believers, more or leſs: for all ſhall know me, from the leaſt to the greateſt; from babes to fathers in Chriſt; not with a natural, but with a ſpiritual knowledge; not with a general knowledge of him, that he is, but with a ſpecial knowledge of him, that he is theirs; not with a legal, but with an evangelical knowledge; not with the knowledge of him in, and thro' the creatures, but in Chriſt; and that not ſpeculative, but experimental and practical; ſuch as is attended with faith in him, fear of him, love to him, and a chearful obedience to his will: the knowledge of the Lord, under the New Teſtament diſpenſation, is greater than under the former diſpenſation; the ſubject-matter of it is more diſtinct; God is more known in the perſons of the Father, Son, and Spirit, in the perfections of his nature, in his titles and characters, and in his Son; the manner of it is more clear, open, and perſpicuous; the perſons to whom it is communicated are more numerous; it is not reſtrained to Jews, but is given to the Gentiles; and all this owing to a greater effuſion of the Spirit; ſee 1 John ii. 27.

Ver. 12. For I will be merciful to their unrighteouſneſs, &c.] That is, ſin; for all unrighteouſneſs is ſin, being contrary to the juſtice of God, and his righteous law: and the phraſe is expreſſive of God's forgiveneſs of it, which is a very conſiderable article of the covenant of grace; mercy is the ſpring and original of pardon; it is what God delights in, and therefore he pardons freely; it is large and abundant, and hence he pardons fully; and this lays a foundation for hope in ſenſible ſinners: and the way and means, in and by which God pardons, is the propitiatory ſacrifice of his Son; and the word here rendered merciful, ſignifies propitious; God pardons none but thoſe to whom he is pacified, or rendered propitious by Chriſt; there's no mercy, nor pardon, but through him; he pardons on the foot of reconciliation and ſatisfaction for ſin by Chriſt; ſo that forgiveneſs of ſin is an act of juſtice, as well as of mercy; or it is an act of mercy ſtreaming thro' the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt. And their ſins and their iniquities will I remember no more; by which are meant all kind of ſin, original and actual; ſins before and after converſion; every ſin but that againſt the Holy Ghoſt, and that God's covenant people are never guilty of; theſe God remembers no more; he caſts them behind his back, and into the depths of the ſea, ſo that when they are ſought for, they ſhall not be found; God will never charge them with them, or puniſh them for them: this is another phraſe to expreſs the forgiveneſs of ſins, and diſtinguiſhes the new covenant from the old one, or the former diſpenſation; in which, tho' there were many typical ſacrifices, and a typical removal of ſin, yet there was a remembrance of it every year.

Ver. 13. In that he ſaith a new covenant, &c.] In the above prophecy, ver. 8. he hath made the firſt old; this naturally follows from hence; if the ſecond is new, the firſt muſt be old; which is called ſo, not on account of its date and duration; for the covenant of grace itſelf is older than this mode of adminiſtration of it, and the manifeſtation of that to the patriarchs was before this covenant, and ſo was the covenant of works before it; but on the account of its faultineſs and deficiency, its weakneſs, and unprofitableneſs, and eſpecially its being antiquated, and made to give way to another. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vaniſh away; the Apoſtle argues from the firſt covenant, being old, to its being near to diſſolution, or a diſappearance; and the diſſolution or diſappearance of this covenant was gradual; it began when the Chaldeans ſeized the land of Canaan; and the ark, an eminent type of Chriſt, being wanting in the ſecond temple, gave a hint of its waxing old; and both the civil and eccleſiaſtical government of the Jews were in great confuſion under the ſecond temple, at leaſt towards the cloſe of it; and even before the times of Chriſt, John the Baptiſt came, and proclaimed the near approach of the Meſſiah, and his kingdom: this covenant was of right aboliſhed at the time of Chriſt's death; upon his aſcenſion the Spirit was given, and the Goſpel publiſhed among all nations, by which it more and more diſappeared; and in fact it quite vaniſhed away, when the city and temple of Jeruſalem were deſtroyed, which was in a little time after the writing of this Epiſtle; ſo that the Apoſtle, with great propriety, ſays, it is ready to vaniſh away.

CHAP. IX.

THE Apoſtle having, in the former chapter, taken notice of the firſt covenant, in this proceeds to ſhew what belonged to it, that it had ſervice performed under it, and a place in which it was performed, ver. 1. and he begins with the latter, which he diſtinguiſhes into two parts, and ſhews what was in each of them; in the firſt, which was the holy place, were a candleſtick, table, and ſhew-bread; in the ſecond, which was the holieſt of all, were a golden cenſer, the ark of the covenant, the golden pot of manna, Aaron's rod, the tables of the covenant, and the cherubim of glory over-ſhadowing the mercy-ſeat, ver. 2, 3, 4, 5. And next he ſpeaks of the ſervice performed in theſe places; in the firſt, the holy place, the common prieſts entred every day, doing ſervice, as offering ſacrifice, &c. ver. 6. and in the ſecond, the holy of holies, only the high-prieſt entred into, and that but once a year, with blood of ſlain beaſts, which he offered for his own ſins, and the ſins of the people, ver. 7. and this being ſhut up, and entred into but once a year, was an indication from the Holy Ghoſt, that the way into the holieſt of all, which this was then a figure of, was not yet made manifeſt, whilſt the tabernacle or temple was ſtanding, in which ſacrifices were offered, which could not perfect the offerer of them, or remove guilt from his conſcience, ver. 8, 9. which ſhows the imperfection of that prieſthood, it conſiſting of meats, drinks, baptiſms, and carnal ordinances impoſed on the Jewiſh nation until the times of the Meſſiah, ver. 10. which are now come, and in which there is an accompliſhment of all thoſe types and figures, Chriſt was typified by the high-prieſt; and he is come as ſuch, and the good things, the law was a ſhadow of, are come by him; who came into the world by the aſſumption of human nature, a more perfect tabernacle than the type of it was; and now having obtained eternal redemption for his people, he is gone into heaven, the moſt holy place, not as the high-prieſt, with the blood of ſlain beaſts, but with his own blood, ver. 11, 12. the efficacy of which blood is argued from the leſſer to the greater, that if the blood of beaſts, and water of ſeparation, ſanctified and purified externally, then much more muſt the blood of Chriſt purge the conſcience from ſin, that it may ſerve God, ſince Chriſt offered himſelf to God without ſpot, thro' the eternal Spirit, ver. 13, 14. The neceſſity of Chriſt's ſhedding his blood, or of his death, is proved from his being the mediator of the new covenant, which required the redemption of tranſgreſſions under the firſt teſtament, that called ones might have the promiſe of the eternal inheritance, ver. 15. And this is reaſoned from the nature of teſtaments or wills among men, which make the death of the teſtator neceſſary, they being of no force while he lives, only after his death, ver. 16, 17. And this is further illuſtrated by the firſt teſtament being dedicated by blood, and every thing belonging to it purged by it, the book, the people, the tabernacle, and all the veſſels of it; nor is there any remiſſion of ſin, whether typical or real, without ſhedding of blood, ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. wherefore, as it was neceſſary that the patterns and types of heavenly things ſhould be purified in this manner; it muſt be more ſo, that the antitypes ſhould be purified with better ſacrifices, even with the ſacrifice of Chriſt, ver. 23. and accordingly Chriſt is entred into heaven itſelf, of which the holy places in the tabernacle were figures, there to preſent and plead his ſacrifice on account of his people, ver. 24. not that it was neceſſary that he ſhould offer up himſelf again, or often, as the high-prieſt his type, went every year into the holy place with the blood of others; for then he muſt have often ſuffered ſince the world began, of which there was no need, ſince his appearing once in the end of the world, to put away ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf, is ſufficient, ver. 25, 26. for as it is the appointment of God, that men ſhould die but once, and then come to judgment, ſo it was only neceſſary that Chriſt ſhould be offered once to bear the ſins of all his people, and then appear a ſecond time without any ſin at all upon him, to the ſalvation of thoſe that look for him, ver. 27, 28.

Ver. 1. Then verily the firſt covenant had ordinances of divine ſervice, &c.] The deſign of the Apoſtle in this chapter, as it ſtands in connexion with what goes before, is to ſhew the preheminence of Chriſt, from the tabernacle, and the things in it; as well as from the prieſthood and covenant; and as alſo the abrogation of the Levitical ceremonies in particular, as well as the firſt covenant in general; and that they were all types and figures of Chriſt, and had their fulfilment in him: the word firſt, here uſed, deſigns not the tabernacle, but the covenant; therefore it is rightly thus ſupplied in our verſion, as it is in the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions: which is ſaid to have ordinances of divine ſervice; belonging to the ſervice of God, which was performed both by the prieſts, and by the people; and theſe ordinances were no other than the carnal ordinances, or rites of the ceremonial law: the word uſed ſignifies righteouſneſſes; and they are ſo called, becauſe they were appointed by a righteous God; and were impoſed on the people of the Jews in a righteous way; and by them men became externally and typically righteous; for they were figures and types of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, tho' no compleat, perfect, real righteouſneſs came by them. And a worldly ſanctuary. Philo the Jew ſays [1], it was a type of the world, and of the various things in it; tho' it was rather either a type of the church, or of heaven, or of Chriſt's human nature: the better reaſon of its being ſo called is, becauſe it conſiſted of earthly matter, and worldly things; it was in the world, and only had its uſe in the world, and ſo is oppoſed to the heavenly ſanctuary; tuary; for the Jews often ſpeak of המקדש שלמעלה, a ſanctuary above, and המקדש שלמטה, a ſanctuary below[m], and of משכנא לעילא, a tabernacle above, and משכנא לתתא, a tabernacle below[n]; which anſwer to one another: the words may be rendered a beautiful ſanctuary, a well-adorned one; and ſuch eſpecially was the temple, or ſanctuary built by Solomon, rebuilt by Zerubbabel, and repaired and adorned by Herod, Luke xxi. 5. And the Jews ſay, that he that never ſaw Herod's building, meaning the temple, never ſaw a beautiful building; ſee Luke xxi. 5.

[1] De Vita Moſis, p. 667.

Ver. 2. For there was a tabernacle made, &c.] By the direction of Moſes, according to the pattern ſhewed him in the mount: the firſt; that is, the firſt part of the tabernacle, called the holy place, in diſtinction from the holy of holies, which was the ſecond part of the tabernacle; for otherwiſe there were not a firſt and a ſecond tabernacle; there never was but one tabernacle: wherein was the candleſtick; that this was in the tabernacle, and on the ſouthſide of it, and without the vail, where the Apoſtle has placed it, is plain from Exod. xxvi. 35. and xl. 24. This was wanting in the ſecond temple[o]: it was a type of Chriſt myſtical, or the church; in the general uſe of it, to hold forth light, ſo the church holds forth the light of the Goſpel, being put into it by Chriſt; in the matter of it, which was pure gold, denoting the purity, worth, ſplendor, glory, and duration of the church; in the parts of it, it had one ſhaft in the middle of it, in which all the parts met and cemented, typical of Chriſt the principal, and head of the church, whoſe ſituation is in the midſt of the church, and who unites all together, and is but one: the ſix branches of it may intend all the members of the church, and eſpecially the miniſters of the word; the ſeven lamps with oil in them, may have a reſpect to the ſeven ſpirits of God, or the Spirit of God with his gifts and graces, and a profeſſion of religion with grace along with it: and it was typical of the church in its ornaments and decorations; its bowls, knops, and flowers, may ſignify the various gifts of the Spirit, beautifying miniſters, and fitting them for uſefulneſs; and in the appurtenances of it, the tongs and ſnuff-diſhes may ſignify church diſcipline, cenſures, and excommunications. And the table and the ſhew-bread; the table, with the ſhew-bread on it, was alſo in the tabernacle, on the north-ſide of it, and without the vail, Exod. xxvi. 35. and xl. 22. This was alſo wanting in the ſecond temple[p]: the table was typical of Chriſt, and of communion with him; of the perſon of Chriſt; in the matter of it, which was Shittim wood overlaid with gold, whereby were ſignified the two natures of Chriſt in one perſon; the human nature by the Shittim wood, which is incorruptible, for tho' he died he ſaw no corruption, and is riſen again, and lives for ever; and the divine nature by the gold, all the fulneſs of the Godhead dwelling in him; and in the decorations of it, as the border, golden crown, &c. which may reſpect the fulneſs of his grace, and the honour and glory he is crowned with, which render him exceeding valuable and precious: and it may be typical of communion with him, either hereafter, when the ſaints ſhall ſit with him as at a table, and eat and drink with him in the kingdom of his Father; or here, to which Chriſt admits them, and than which nothing is more honourable, comfortable, and deſirable; and it may be ſignificative of the miniſtration of the word and ordinances, of which Chriſt is the ſum and ſubſtance, and in which he grants his people fellowſhip with him: to this table belonged rings and bars to carry it from place to place, which was done by the prieſts; where the church is, there Chriſt is, and there is the miniſtration of his word and ordinances; and which are ſometimes moved from one place to another, by the miniſters of the word, according to divine direction. The ſhew-bread, on the table, was typical either of the church of Chriſt, the ſaints, who may be ſignified by the unleavened cakes, being true and ſincere, and without the leaven of malice and hypocriſy; and by twelve of them, which may repreſent the twelve tribes of Iſrael, the whole ſpiritual Iſrael of God; and by bread of faces, as the word for ſhew-bread may be rendered, ſince they are always before the Lord, and his eyes are continually upon them; they are ſet upon the pure table, Chriſt, on whom they are ſafe, and by whom they are accepted with God: and the ſhew-bread being ſet in rows, may denote their order and harmony; and their being removed every ſabbath-day, may ſignify the ſucceſſion of ſaints in the church, as one is removed, another is brought in; and the frankincenſe put upon each row, ſhews them to be a ſweet ſavour to God: or elſe the ſhew-bread was typical of Chriſt himſelf, who is the bread of life, the food of his people; and may be ſignified by the ſhew-bread for its fineneſs and purity, being made of fine flour, Chriſt is the fineſt of the wheat, bread from heaven, and angels food; for its quantity, twelve cakes, with Chriſt is bread enough, and to ſpare, for all the elect; for its continuance, Chriſt always abides, and ſuch as feed upon him live for ever; for its gratefulneſs, Chriſt's fleſh is meat indeed, and his blood drink indeed; and for its being only for the prieſts, as only ſuch who are made prieſts to God, live by faith on Chriſt; ſee Lev. xxv. 5—9. Moreover, the interceſſion of Chriſt may be prefigured by the ſhew-bread, or bread of faces, he being the angel of God's preſence or face, who appears in the preſence of God for his people; and this conſiſting of twelve loaves, according to the number of the tribes of Iſrael, ſhews that Chriſt repreſents the whole Iſrael of God in heaven, and intercedes for them; and whereas the ſhew-bread always continued, no ſooner was one ſett of loaves removed, but another was put in their room; this may point at the continual interceſſion of Chriſt, for his people; and the frankincenſe may denote the acceptableneſs of it to God. Which is called the ſanctuary; or holy; this refers either to the firſt part of the tabernacle, which was called the holy place, in which the prieſts in common miniſtred; or elſe to the things which were in it, now mentioned, the candleſtick-table, and ſhew-bread; to which the Ethiopic verſion adds, and the golden cenſer, which it leaves out in the fourth verſe; which verſion renders theſe words, and theſe they call holy; and ſo the Arabic verſion, which are called holy things, as they were, as well as the place in which they were; ſo the candleſtick is called the holy candleſtick in Eccleſiaſticus xxvi. 17. and the ark, candleſtick, table, cenſer, and altar, are called ϛκευη ιερα, holy veſſels, by Philo the Jew[q]; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt, when compared with the following verſe.

Ver. 3. And after the ſecond vail, &c.] Were there more vails than one? the ſcripture ſpeaks but of one, Exod. xxvi. 31. there was indeed an hanging ing for the door of the tent, but that is not called a vail; nor was there more than one vail in the tabernacle, nor in the temple of Solomon; but in the ſecond temple, under which the Apoſtle lived, there were two vails, which divided between the holy place, and the holy of holies; and the innermoſt of theſe the Apoſtle means: and ſo the Jewiſh writers [r] conſtantly affirm, that there were two vails between the ſaid places, and that two new ones were made every year [s]. So on the day of atonement, when the high-prieſt went into the moſt holy place, with the incenſe, it is ſaid [t]; that "he walked in the temple till he came between, שתי הפרוכות, the two vails, which divide between the holy, and holy of holies, and there was the ſpace of a cubit between them." The reaſon of theſe two vails may be ſeen in the account Maimonides gives of this matter [u]: "in the firſt temple there was a wall which divided between the holy, and holy of holies, the thickneſs of a cubit; but when they built the ſecond temple, it was doubted by them, whether the thickneſs of the wall was of the meaſure of the holy place, or of the meaſure of the holy of holies; wherefore they made the holy of holies twenty cubits compleat, and the holy place forty cubits compleat, and they left the ſpace of a cubit between the holy, and the holy of holies; and they did not build a wall in the ſecond temple, but they made, שתי פרוכות, two vails, one on the ſide of the holy of holies, and the other on the ſide of the holy place, and between them a cubit anſwerable to the thickneſs of the wall, which was in the firſt temple; but in the firſt temple there was but one vail only, as it is ſaid, Exod. xxvi. 33. and the vail ſhall divide unto you, &c." And to this account other Jewiſh writers [w] agree; and the ſpace between the two vails is called by them, טרקסין [x], ταραξις, from the trouble and perplexity this affair gave them. This vail, or vails, might repreſent the ſin of man, which ſeparates between God and men, excludes from heaven; but is removed by the death of Chriſt, when the vail was rent in twain; ſo that now there is an open way to heaven; Chriſt has entred into it by his own blood; and ſaints have boldneſs to enter there by faith and hope now, and ſhall hereafter perſonally enter into it: or elſe this vail may ſignify the ceremonial law, which ſeparated between Jew and Gentile, and is aboliſhed by the death of Chriſt: or rather it was typical of the fleſh, or human nature of Chriſt, called the vail of his fleſh, Heb. x. 20. ſee the note there. Now within this ſecond vail was the tabernacle, or that part of it, the ſecond part, which is called theolieſt of all; which was either typical of Chriſt, who is called the moſt holy, Dan. ix. 24. he being ſo in both natures, divine and human; or of heaven, for the holy places, made with hands, were figures of heaven, ver. 24. for its holineſs, it being the habitation of the holy God, holy angels, and ſpirits of juſt men made perfect; and for its inviſibility, and the unſeen things which faith and hope, which enter within the vail, are the evidence of; and for the things that are in it, typified by the following ones.

Ver. 4. Which had the golden cenſer, &c.] There were various cenſers uſed by the prieſts in the daily ſervice, but this was a peculiar one, which was uſed by the high-prieſt on the day of atonement; on other days he uſed a ſilver cenſer, but on that day a golden one, and with it he entred into the holy of holies [y]; and tho' Moſes does not call it a golden one, Lev. xvi. 12. yet Joſephus does [z]; and ſo do the Jewiſh doctors in the place referred to, with whom the Apoſtle agrees, and to this the alluſion is in Rev. viii. 3. but here a difficulty ariſes, how this can be ſaid to have been in the holy of holies, and within the vail, when, according to Moſes, it was without the vail, and was only carried within on the day of atonement; and ſo Philo the Jew [a] places it in the other part of the tabernacle; and it ſeems as if it was to avoid this difficulty, that the Ethiopic verſion has removed it from this verſe to verſe the ſecond, and put it among the things that were in the holy place; but there is no need of this, nor to ſay that the altar of incenſe is intended, for that is never ſo called, and beſides, was without the vail too. It ſhould be obſerved, that the Apoſtle does not ſay, that the golden cenſer was laid up in the holy of holies, and kept there, but that it had it; as it had it on the day of atonement, when it was carried in there by the high-prieſt, who there made uſe of it; and it was for the uſe of it in that place, that it was peculiarly deſigned. What was done by it, was this, burning coals were with it taken off from the altar before the Lord, and were brought in within the vail, where incenſe was put upon them, which covered the mercy-ſeat, that ſo the high-prieſt died not. The burning coals ſignify the very great ſufferings of Chriſt, not only the ſufferings of his body, which were very painful, but thoſe of his ſoul, when the wrath and hot diſpleaſure of God was poured out upon him; and thoſe coals being taken off from the altar before the Lord, ſhew, that the ſufferings of Chriſt were according to the will of God, were grateful to him, and always before him; and their being brought within the vail, does not denote that Chriſt is now in a ſuffering ſtate, tho' he is in the midſt of the throne, as a lamb that had been ſlain; but the continued virtue and efficacy of his ſufferings, and that our faith and hope which enter within the vail, have to do with his blood and ſacrifice thither carried. And the incenſe, which was carried in with thoſe coals, typified the interceſſion of Chriſt in heaven, which is pure and holy, ſweet, fragrant, and perpetual; and the prieſt having his hands full of it, expreſſes the fulneſs of Chriſt's interceſſion for all his elect, and for all things for them, and his fulneſs of merit to plead, which makes his interceſſion efficacious and prevalent; and hence, thro' his much incenſe, the prayers of his people become odorous and acceptable: and the incenſe being put upon the burning coals in the cenſer, ſhews, that Chriſt's interceſſion proceeds upon the foot of his blood and ſacrifice, his ſufferings and death; and hence it becomes grateful, and has its influence; the ſmoke of it covers the mercy-ſeat, or throne of grace, and makes that acceſſible; and as the prieſt, who offers it, never dies, ſo none of thoſe for whom he intercedes. And the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold; this is called the ark of the covenant, becauſe the tables of the covenant, afterwards mentioned, were put into it; and that it was overlaid with gold round about, is certain from Exod. xxv. 11. where it is ſaid to be overlaid with pure gold, within and without; and that the ark was within the vail, and in the moſt holy place, is manifeſt from Exod. xl. 21. 2 Chron. v. 7. that this was wanting in the ſecond temple, is generally agreed[b]; but who took it away, where it was put, or what became of it, various are the ſentiments of the Jewiſh writers: ſome ſay[c], it was carried away by Nebuchadnezzar into Babylon, and is meant by the godly veſſels of the houſe of the Lord, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10. others ſay[d], that Jeremiah the prophet took it, and hid it in a cave on mount Nebo; but the more generally received opinion is, that it was hid by king Joſiah in ſome hidden and deep place, which Solomon had built for that purpoſe under ground, knowing that the temple would be deſtroyed[e]; and it is often ſaid, that it was hid under the pavement of a room in the temple, called לשכת דיר העצים, the wood room[f]. The ark is, by ſome, thought to be a type of the church, which is the ark of God, of his building, and where he dwells; the ark of the covenant, or teſtimony, where the oracles of God, his word and ordinances are: its being made of Shittim wood may denote the incorruption and duration of it; and its being covered with gold within and without, is expreſſive of its glory; and its being portable, and carried from place to place, ſhews, that the church is not always in one place; its rings, ſtaves, and prieſts that bore it, may point at the Goſpel, and the miniſters of it, the inſtruments of moving it; and its moving from place to place, and falling into the hands of enemies, were emblematical of the church's afflictions; as its reſt at laſt, in Solomon's temple, may ſignify the church's reſt here and hereafter: but the ark is rather to be conſidered as a type of Chriſt; its various names agree with Chriſt, as the ark of God, the ark of his ſtrength, the glory of God, the face of God, the holy ark, the ark of the covenant, or teſtimony, yea Jehovah, and God himſelf: the time of its making is obſervable, it was made before the tabernacle, and the tabernacle for the ſake of it; Chriſt is before all creatures, and was ſet up as mediator before any thing exiſted, and all things are for his ſake; it being made of Shittim wood, covered with gold, may denote both the incorruption and glory of Chriſt; and its ſeveral decorations, the graces with which he was adorned, as man and mediator; its ſtaves and rings may deſign the word, ordinances, and miniſters, whereby he is carried into the ſeveral places of the world; here God granted his preſence, and counſel was aſked of him, and it was brought forth in time of war, as a ſecurity from enemies, all which is applicable to Chriſt; by it wonders were done, as the dividing of Jordan for the Iſraelites to paſs into the land of Canaan, the falling of the walls of Jericho, and the fall of Dagon; ſo Chriſt has opened the way for his people to heaven, has ſpoiled principalities and powers, and his Goſpel is powerful to the pulling down the ſtrong holds of ſin and ſatan; the moving of the ark from place to place, and its reſt in the temple may ſignify the reſt of Chriſt, after his many fatigues in this world. Wherein was the golden pot that had manna; which Aaron filled with manna by the direction of Moſes, who gave it at the appointment of God, that it might be preſerved to future ages, as a memorial of the goodneſs, care, and power of God in feeding the Iſraelites with it in the wilderneſs, Exod. xvi. 33, 34. This pot held an omer, which was more than three pints and a half; ſome ſay ſix pints: and though Moſes does not call it a golden pot, yet it is ſo called, not only by the Septuagint in Exod. xvi. 33. but alſo by Philo the Jew[g]; nor is it reaſonable to think with ſome Jewiſh writers[h], that it ſhould be made of earth, which was to continue for ages to come: this alſo was wanting in the ſecond temple[i]; and this, with Aaron's rod, after mentioned, and other things, is ſaid to be hid when the ark was, and along with it[k]: but how this pot, as well as Aaron's rod, can be ſaid to be in the ark, when it is aſſerted, at the bringing of the ark into the temple, at the dedication of it by Solomon, that there was nothing in it but two tables of ſtone, 1 Kings viii. 9. 2 Chron. v. 10. and both the pot of manna, and Aaron's rod, are ſaid to be before the teſtimony, Exod. xvi. 34. Numb. xvii. 10. and not in it, is a difficulty. Some, in order to remove it, obſerve, that the phraſe, wherein, refers not to the ark, but to the tabernacle; but ſince the tables of the covenant were in the ark, and theſe are mentioned with it, and the phraſe, over it, in the next verſe, cannot be underſtood of the tabernacle, but of the ark, this ſolution is not ſatisfactory. Others have obſerved, that they might be in the ark in Moſes's time, and in Jeremiah's time, when they are ſaid to be hid, tho' they were not in Solomon's: and others have taken notice, that the prepoſition ἐν, ſometimes ſignifies at, or with, as in Col. iii. 1. John i. 28. Eph. vi. 1, 2. and ſo the ſenſe is, that theſe were near unto it in the moſt holy place, and might be in the ſides of it, tho' not within it; for there were places in the ſides of the ark to put things into, Deut. xxxi. 26. 1 Sam. vi. 8. And certain it is from the above account from ſcripture, that they were near it; and ſo, by the Jewiſh writers, they are always mentioned along with it; when that was carried away, and hid, they were hid with it: but what a certain Jewiſh commentator[l] obſerves on 1 Kings viii. 9. is ſo expreſs, as if it was deſigned to vindicate our Apoſtle: his remark is this; "the intention of this "is not to deny that there were not the things "mentioned in the law, for they were, מונחים בו, "left in it, as Aaron's rod, and the pot of manna, "only to deny, hereby, that there was not any "thing of the law, ſave the decalogue." And it ſhould be obſerved, that it is not ſaid of theſe, that they were put before the ark, but before the teſtimony; that is, before the tables of the covenant, which were within the ark. The manna, in this pot, was typical of Chriſt; in the ſignification of its name, whether it comes from מנה, manah, which ſignifies to appoint, prepare, and diſtribute, Chriſt being appointed, prepared, and diſtributed, as food for his people; or from מן הו, man hu, what is it? the words ſaid by the Iſraelites, when they firſt ſaw it, not knowing what it was; ſo Chriſt is unknown to his people until revealed to them, and remains unknown to all natural and unregenerate men: the manna came from heaven, from God, and was a free gift of his, and ſo Chriſt: it was round in form, and may be expreſſive of Chriſt's perfection, and eternity: it was in colour white, which may ſignify his purity and innocence: it was ſweet in taſte, and ſo is Chriſt, his fruits, his word and ordinances: it was ſmall in quantity, which may denote the meanneſs and deſpicableneſs of Chriſt in the eyes of the world: the people went out and gathered it, and ground it in mills, or beat it in mortars, and baked it, and eat, which may be typical of the apprehenſion, ſufferings, and death of Chriſt, in order to be fit food for the faith of believers. The perſons that were fed by it were the Iſraelites, who were brought out of Egypt, and then in the wilderneſs, a large number, and men of all ſorts, rich and poor, and who had an equal portion, though very undeſerving; ſo thoſe who are fed by Chriſt, and nouriſhed with him, the bread of life, are the ſpiritual Iſrael of God, whom Chriſt has redeemed from worſe than Egyptian bondage and darkneſs, tho' they are yet in the wilderneſs of this world; and they are a large number, the whole family of God, who receive out of Chriſt's fulneſs grace for grace; and there is no difference of high and low, rich and poor, bond or free, male or female; they are all one in Chriſt, and Chriſt is all in all; and they have all a whole Chriſt, tho' they are very undeſerving, being by nature children of wrath as others. And as the Iſraelites had the manna every day, and all the while they were in the wilderneſs, ſo Chriſt is the daily bread of believers; by him, in his word and ordinances, is his church nouriſhed in the wilderneſs, to whom he gives to eat of the hidden manna, the food of the wilderneſs. The pot, in which this manna was kept, was typical of the ordinances of the Goſpel; in its matter, being made of gold, denoting the preciouſneſs and duration of them; in the bigneſs of it, holding an omer, ſhewing that theſe contain plenty of good things to ſatisfaction; in the ſituation of it before the ark, ſignifying the preſence of Chriſt with his ordinances; and in its uſe to hold manna, and be a memorial of it to ages to come, as the ordinances have in them food for ſouls, and are the means of remembring Chriſt in future generations, till his ſecond coming. And Aaron's rod that budded; and not only budded, but bloomed, bloſſomed, and yielded almonds, Numb. xvii. 8. This alſo was laid before the ark of the teſtimony, ver. 10. and may be ſaid to be in it, or with it, in the ſame ſenſe as the pot of manna was; it was likewiſe wanting in the ſecond temple[m], and is ſaid to be hid with the pot of manna, and other things, as before obſerved: it was a type of Chriſt: it is affirmed by the Jews, that in the days of the Meſſiah, the prieſthood ſhall return, and the rod of Aaron ſhall flouriſh[n]; it was very proble, as ſome have thought[o], an almond-tree ſtick, as that in Jer. i. 11, 12. The almond tree has its name in Hebrew from a word which ſignifies haſte and viligance; it being, as Pliny ſays[p], the firſt of trees that buds and bloſſoms, and is very haſty in putting them forth. An almond-tree rod may be a proper emblem of Chriſt's ſpeedy incarnation in the fulneſs of time; and Aaron's almond-tree rod, of his right to the prieſthood, and his vigilance in it: this was firſt a dry rod or ſtick, and may deſign the mean deſcent and appearance of Chriſt, being born of mean parents, living a mean and obſcure life; his entrance on his publick miniſtry, and continuance in it, were without any pomp or grandeur; he was as a root out of a dry ground; and tho' he did many miracles, theſe were treated with contempt; and he was at laſt apprehended, arraigned, and condemned as a malefactor, and died a ſhameful and an accurſed death: it looked very unlikely and unpromiſing, that he ſhould be the king Meſſiah; that he ſhould have all power in heaven and in earth; that he ſhould have the wiſdom he had, and do the miracles he did; and that he ſhould be the author of eternal ſalvation; and that ſuch fruits of grace, peace, pardon, and righteouſneſs, ſhould ſpring from him, as that Aaron's dry rod ſhould bud, bloſſom, and bear almonds, in which it was a lively figure of Chriſt; that lying among other rods, and perhaps being like them, may denote Chriſt's aſſuming the common nature of men, or an individual of human nature in all things like to man; and this being cut off from the tree, and being a dry ſtick, may repreſent the death of Chriſt; and its budding and bloſſoming may point at the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead; and as Aaron's prieſthood was confirmed by the budding and bloſſoming of his rod, ſo the deity and Meſſiahſhip of Chriſt are confirmed by his reſurrection; and its bringing forth almonds, may deſign the fruits of Chriſt's death and reſurrection; and moreover, the almond tree being, as Philo the Jew ſays[q], the firſt of trees that buds and bloſſoms in the ſpring, and the laſt that caſts its leaves, it may be, as he obſerves, a ſymbol of the prieſtly tribe; and it may be a figure of the perpetuity of Chriſt, and his prieſthood: and the tables of the covenant; the ſame with the teſtimony which was ordered to be put into the ark, and accordingly was, Exod. xxv. 16, 21. and xl. 20. Deut. x. 2, 5. About this there is no controverſy; tho' it is a matter of diſpute with the Jews, whether the book of the law was in the ark or no: ſome ſay it was in the ſide of it, and others within it[r]; but Maimonides[s] ſays, that Moſes wrote the whole law with his own hand before he died, and gave a book (or copy) to every tribe, and one copy he put, בארון, in the ark: ſo Jarchi ſays[t], that the book of the law of Moſes was put into the midſt of the ark, and the ark was glorious and beautiful by that which was, בתוכו, within it. Theſe tables were made of ſtone, an emblem of the hardneſs of man's heart, which is deſtitute of ſpiritual life and motion, ſenſeleſs and ſtupid, impenitent, ſtubborn, and inflexible, and on which no impreſſions can be made but by powerful and efficacious grace; and alſo of the ſtability and duration of the law, as moral, which is not antiquated by another, nor made void by the Goſpel, nor altered in its nature and terms, but remains the ſame as to the matter of it; tho' it is now no covenant of works to believers, and they are freed from the curſe and condemnation of it: the number of theſe tables is two; the whole law is reduced by our Lord to two grand precepts of it, Matt. xxii. 37—40. and the fleſhly tables, on which it is reinſcribed in regeneration, are the heart and mind, 2 Cor. iii. 3. Heb. viii. 10. The place where theſe tables were put, is the ark, which was typical of the law being in Chriſt, not only in his hands, but in his heart, Pſ. xl. 8. and in his keeping, of which he is the fulfilling end; for he being the ſurety of his people, and becoming man, anſwered every part of the law; in the holineſs of his nature, in the perfect obedience of his life, and in his ſufferings and death, in which he bore the penalty of it: and theſe tables are called the tables of the covenant, becauſe the law on mount Sinai was a covenant made with the people of Iſrael; and was typical of the covenant, of which Chriſt is the ſurety and mediator, and which is ratified by his blood.

Ver. 5. And over it the cherubim of glory, &c.] Or glorious cherubim, where the Shechinah, or divine glory, dwelt, Pſ. lxxx. 1. Theſe were over the ark, and were in number two, as were the cherubim which God placed at the garden of Eden, Gen. iii. 24. according to the opinion of the ancient Jews [u]; and very likely theſe were made after the form of them. Some have thought them to be birds of a very terrible aſpect, which were ſet there to deter Adam and Eve from coming to the tree of life; and both Philo [w] and Joſephus [x] ſay, they were winged fowls; but the generality of the Jewiſh writers take them for angels [y]; and ſome of them ſay they were deſtroying angels, or noxious ſpirits [z], which is not probable; but why angels ſhould be ſo called, and what was their appearance, there are different opinions. Jerom ſays [a], the word ſignifies a multitude of knowledge; and indeed Philo the Jew [b] obſerves, that the Greeks would interpret the Hebrew word, much knowledge and underſtanding; and another Jewiſh writer [c] affirms, that the word cherubim is a name for ſeparate intelligences, as if angels were ſo called from their great knowledge, and that the word is the ſame as cerabbim, as Rabbins, doctors, or teachers; but for the moſt part they interpret it, as young men [d], becauſe that angels have appeared in the form of young men. So in the Talmud [e] it is aſked, "what does cherub "ſignify? ſays R. Abbu, כרביא, as a young man, "for ſo in Babylon they call a young man, רביא." Some think that the word cherub, is the ſame with רכוב, Recub, the letters tranſpoſed, which ſignifies a chariot, becauſe God is ſaid to ride upon a cherub, and the angels are called the chariots of the Lord, Pſal. xviii. 10. and lxviii. 17. Zech. vi. 1, 5. to which may be added, that Ezekiel's viſion of the cherubim is frequently, by the Jews [f], called מרכבה, Mercabah, or the chariot; and mention is made of the chariot of the cherubim, in 1 Chron. xxviii. 18. to which reference may be had in Hab. iii. 8. tho' I rather think, with others, that the word is derived from כרב, Carab, which in the Syriac and Arabic languages ſignifies to plow, and ſo in the Talmud [g]; and a cherub took its name from hence, becauſe of the ox, whoſe face it had, that being a creature made uſe of in plowing; and that the face of an ox, and the face of a cherub, is the ſame, may eaſily be concluded from Ezek. i. 10. and x. 14. And now becauſe that Ezekiel's cherubim had four faces, the face of a man, the face of a lion, the face of an ox, and the face of an eagle; and the cherubim in the temple were in the ſame form, as may be gathered from Ezek. xli. 18, 19. thoſe that were placed at the garden of Eden, may be thought to be in the ſame form alſo: and ſome of late have fancied, that they were an hieroglyphic of the Trinity of perſons in the Godhead, ſignified by the ox, the lion, and eagle; and of the incarnation of the Son of God, the face of a man being added to them; to ſupport which notion, it is further obſerved, that the word, כרובים, ſhould be pronounced Ce-rubbim, and interpreted, as the mighty ones. But it ſhould be known, that the word is alſo uſed in the ſingular number, Pſ. xviii. 10. Ezek. x. 4. and every ſingle cherub had theſe four faces, ſo that each of them muſt be a repreſentation of the Trinity, and of the incarnate ſaviour, of which only the word in the ſingular number can be uſed; and then it can only be ſaid of it, ce-rub, as the mighty one; which obſervation greatly weakens what is brought to ſupport the fancy: beſides, if the cherubim were an emblem of a plurality of perſons in the Godhead, they would rather be an emblem of a quaternity, and not of a trinity of perſons, ſince each had four faces, and thoſe diſtinct from each other; for the face of a man is as much a diſtinct face as any of the reſt. Now the human nature of Chriſt is no diſtinct perſon, much leſs one in the Godhead; and beſides is the inferior nature of Chriſt, whereas the face of the man, in the cherubim, is ſuperior to the reſt, which are the faces of irrational animals. Moreover, this would give us a ſimilitude of the divine being, and of that in him which is moſt incomprehenſible by us, the Trinity of perſons in the Godhead; and ſo an anſwer may be given to ſuch queſtions, the ſenſe of which ſuggeſts, that no anſwer can be returned to them, Iſ. xl. 18, 25. and xlvi. 5. and tho' the ſecond perſon often appeared in human form, and in the fulneſs of time became incarnate, and the Holy Ghoſt once deſcended as a dove, yet the Father's ſhape was never ſeen at any time, John v. 37. to which may be added, that this notion ſeems contrary to the ſecond command, thou ſhalt not make unto thee any likeneſs of any thing that is in heaven above, Exod. xx. 4. for allowing that the cherubim at the garden of Eden, were figures made by the Lord himſelf, 'tis not credible he ſhould make ſuch, he afterwards forbid others to make; beſides, the cherubim in the tabernacle and temple, were the ſame figures with thoſe in Eden, as is owned; and theſe were ordered of God to be made by men, and therefore ſurely can't be thought to be figures, emblems, and repreſentations of God himſelf in his three divine perſons; likewiſe the cherubim are not only diſtinguiſhed from him, but inſtead of being figures of him, they are always repreſented as vehicles on which he ſits or rides, Exod. xxv. 22. Pſ. lxxx. 1. and xviii. 10. Once more, it may deſerve ſome little conſideration, that the prince of Tyre, a type of antichriſt, the man of ſin, is called a cherub, Ezek. xxviii. 14, 16. which ſurely can't be in alluſion to the divine being, and the perſons in the Godhead, but very well in alluſion to angels, the ſons of God, as civil magiſtrates, good and bad, are ſometimes called. No doubt there was ſomething ſignified by the cherubim in the tabernacle and temple; but that this ſhould be the myſtery of them, is not eaſy of belief. Philo the Jew makes the cherubim to ſignify the two powers of God, his creative and governing powers [h]; and the Jews frequently ſpeak of, רזא דכרובים, the myſtery of the cherubim [i]: the cherubim over the ark, here ſpoken of, are ſometimes allegorized of the two teſtaments, the Old and New; the matter of them being of gold may denote the excellency, purity, ſimplicity, and duration of them; their number is two, as were the Cherubim; and as they were alike, and of one meaſure and ſize, this may intend the agreement between them; the doctrines, promiſes, prophecies, types, and figures of the Old Teſtament agree with the New; and the account that the one gives of the perſon and offices, and grace of Chriſt, agree with the other; their ſituation and poſition being placed at the two ends of the mercy-ſeat, and looking towards it, may denote their being full of Chriſt, from one end to the other, and their pointing at him, and bearing witneſs to him; here God alſo reveals himſelf, as he did between the Cherubim; and theſe are glorious as they were, full of glory, containing the glorious Goſpel of the bleſſed God: tho' rather the Cherubim on the mercy-ſeat, were ſymbols and repreſentations of angels, ſince to theſe the Apoſtle Peter ſeems to allude, in 1 Pet. i. 12. their being made of gold may denote their excellency, purity, and ſimplicity; their being on the mercy-ſeat ſhews their dependence on Chriſt, their confirmation by him, and miniſtration to him; their having wings, expreſſes their readineſs to do his will; and their looking one to another, ſignifies their unity and concord among themſelves; and their looking to the mercy-ſeat, their inſpection into the myſteries of grace; and their being over the ark, and God being in the midſt of them, declares the preſence of God with them, whoſe face they always behold; and as theſe Cherubim of glory, they are very glorious creatures, and in the glory of them will Chriſt come a ſecond time: ſhadowing the mercy-ſeat; that is, with their wings, as in Exod. xxv. 20. which was typical of Chriſt; its name agrees with him, a mercy-ſeat; for in him God ſhews himſelf merciful to his people; all the ſtores of mercy are laid up in him; the miſſion of him into this world is owing to the mercy of God; and the mercy of God was glorified by him in the redemption of his people; and he himſelf is the way thro' which they obtain and receive mercy; and he is alſo a merciful high-prieſt to them: the Hebrew word for the mercy-ſeat כַּפֹּרֶת ſignifies a covering; nor is our Engliſh word in ſound, very different from it; and it was ſo called, as Kimchi [k] obſerves, becauſe it covered the ark: Chriſt is a covering to his people; their perſons are clothed with his righteouſneſs, and all their ſins are covered by it; and they are ſecured from the curſe and condemnation of the law, and wrath to come: the Septuagint interpreters render it by ιλαστηριον, the word uſed here by the Apoſtle Paul, in Rom. iii. 25. there rendred propitiation, and applied to Chriſt, who has made reconciliation for ſin, and through whom God is propitious to his people. The matter, of which the mercy-ſeat was made, was pure gold, denoting the excellency and pretiouſneſs of Chriſt; the make of it, in its length and breadth, was juſt the ſame with the ark, in which the two tables were, Exod. xxv. 10, 17. Chriſt is the fulfilling end of the law, and exactly anſwers to all its requirements; his nature, to the holineſs and ſpirituality of it; his righteouſneſs, to all the obedience it commands; and his ſufferings and death, to the penalty it enjoins: its ſituation above the ark, ſhews that there is no mercy but in a way of righteouſneſs, and that Chriſt ſtands between God and the law, and by fulfilling it, covers all the tranſgreſſions of it; and being above it, is able to ſuppreſs all its accuſations and charges: from off the mercy-ſeat, God communed with his people; the way to communion with God is by Chriſt; the encouragement to go to God is from him; and the enjoyment of him is through him: on the day of atonement the mercy-ſeat was ſprinkled with blood, typical of the blood of Chriſt, whereby peace is made, and a way opened into the holieſt of all: of which we cannot now ſpeak particularly; not only of the mercy-ſeat, but of all the things before mentioned; for the word which, is in the plural number, and refers to all the preceding things; to diſcourſe of which, largely and particularly, required more time than the Apoſtle had, and muſt have exceeded the bounds of an epiſtle. The Ethiopic verſion renders it in the ſingular number, of this.

Ver. 6. Now when theſe things were thus ordained, &c.] Or prepared and got ready; that is, when the tabernacle was finiſhed, and ſet up, and provided with all its veſſels and furniture: the prieſts went always into the firſt tabernacle; the firſt part of the tabernacle, which was called the holy place, ver. 2. here the common prieſts went continually every day, morning and evening; the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, the outward tabernacle, in diſtinction from the innermoſt part of the tabernacle, or the moſt holy place: accompliſhing the ſervice of God; by offering ſacrifices, burning incenſe, and trimming the lamps, which they did every day: the prieſts entered into the holy place every day for ſervice; but they might not go in at any other time but the time of ſervice [l]: the phraſe, of God, is not in the text, but is a ſupplement; and it was uſual with the Jews to call the worſhip of the temple, and eſpecially that part of it which lay in ſacrifices עבודה the ſervice: Simeon the Juſt uſed to ſay, the world ſtands upon three things; upon the law ועל העבודה and upon the ſervice, and upon beneficence [m]; by the ſervice, the commentators [n] on the paſſage underſtand ſacrifices; and again it is ſaid [o], no man enters into the court לעבודה for ſervice, tho' he is clean, until he has dipped himſelf: the word here uſed in the Greek text is in the plural number, and may be rendred the ſervices, becauſe there were ſeveral ſorts of ſervices performed every day, as before obſerved, and ſeveral ſacrifices offered; and the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, the offices of ſacrifices; and the Ethiopic verſion, their offerings; and the Arabic verſion, offices: and the ſervice which the high-prieſt performed in the holieſt of all once a year, was divers, which is mentioned in the following verſes, and is called ſervice, ver. 8. it is ſaid, that on the day of atonement there were five עבודות ſervices of the morning daily ſacrifice [p], in which the high-prieſt miniſtred in his golden garments: but here the ſervice of the common prieſts is meant, which was every day; and it becomes ſuch who are employed in ſacred ſervice, both to be conſtant in it, and to do it fully and compleatly.

Ver. 7. But into the ſecond went the high-prieſt alone, once every year, &c.] Tho' this is not expreſſed in ſo many words in Lev. xvi. 2. only it is ſaid that Aaron came not at all times into the holy place within the veil; yet it is the conſtant and generally received ſenſe of the Jewiſh writers, in agreement with the Apoſtle here, that the high-prieſt went into the holy of holies but once a year [q], on the day of atonement, which was on the tenth of the month Tiſri, and anſwers to part of September; not but that he went in more than once on that day, for he went in no leſs than four times[r]; the firſt time he went in to offer incenſe; the ſecond time with the blood of the bullock, to ſprinkle it; the third time with the blood of the goat; and the fourth time to bring out the cenſer[s]; and if he entered a fifth time, they ſay he was worthy of death; wherefore Philo the Jew[t] ſeems to be miſtaken when he affirms that, if he went in three or four times on the ſame day, he ſuffered death, nor was there any pardon for him; and as it was but one day in a year he might enter, ſo when he did, no other man, either Iſraelite or prieſt, might go in along with him; he went in alone without any attendance: the Jews ſay[u], that a cord or thong was bound to the feet of the high-prieſt when he went into the holy of holies, that if he died there, the reſt might be able to draw him out; for it was not lawful for another prieſt to go in, no not an high-prieſt, none beſides him on the day of atonement. Pauſanias[w] makes mention of a temple of Minerva into which the prieſts entred once every year; which very likely was obſerved in imitation of this cuſtom of the Jewiſh high-prieſt; who in it was a type of Chriſt, and of his entrance into heaven, and of his conſtant and continued interceſſion there: not without blood; for he went in with the blood of the bullock and the blood of the goat; which was typical of the blood of Chriſt, by which he entred in once into the holy place, into heaven, when he had obtained eternal redemption by it, ver. 12. which he offered for himſelf and for the errors of the people; the bullock was offered by the high-prieſt for himſelf and his family; and the goat for the ſins of the people of Iſrael, even all their iniquities, tranſgreſſions, and ſins, Lev. xvi. 11, 15, 16, 21. but Chriſt the antitype having no ſin, had no need to offer for himſelf, only for the ſins of the people; ſee the note on ch. vii. 27.

Ver. 8. The Holy Ghoſt this ſignifying, &c.] This ſhews that the Holy Ghoſt exiſted under the Old Teſtament; that he is a diſtinct perſon in the Godhead, a perſonal act being here aſcribed to him; that he is truly and properly God, the God whoſe ſervice the prieſts accompliſhed in the tabernacle; and by whom Moſes was admoniſhed to make all things in it according to the pattern, and by whom the high-prieſt was warned not to come at all times within the veil; moreover, that the Levitical ordinances were of God, and that they had a ſpiritual ſignification; that the Old Teſtament ſaints were not without ſome knowledge of the ſpiritual meaning of them; and that the Holy Ghoſt was the author of that knowledge; particularly by enjoining the high-prieſt to enter within the vail but once a year, he gave a plain and ſtrong intimation, that the way into the holieſt of all was not yet manifeſt while as the firſt tabernacle was yet ſtanding; by which is meant, not only the firſt part of the tabernacle, as in ver. 2, 6. but the whole of it; and not only that, but the temple built in its room, and alſo the whole Levitical ſervice is included; and the ſenſe is, that while the tabernacle and tabernacle worſhip, the temple and temple ſervice were in being, the way into the holieſt of all was not yet manifeſt: the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions render it, the way of the ſaints; of the prieſts who miniſtred in holy things, and were holy to the Lord, and of all the ſaints that lived before Chriſt; not that they did not go to heaven, but their way to it was not ſo manifeſtly known; life and immortality were not ſo clearly brought to light, as now by the Goſpel; tho' rather it deſigns holy places, even heaven itſelf which was typified by the holy place within the vail; and may be called the holieſt of all, it being the reſidence of the holy God, holy angels, and holy men, and is ſanctified by the preſence of Chriſt, for his people, and where perfect holineſs will be the glory of it: the way to it is not by works of righteouſneſs done by men, which being imperfect cannot juſtify, and ſo not ſave, tho' this is the way men naturally ſeek and take; but Chriſt is the only way, and he is the plain, pleaſant, and ſafe one: now let it be obſerved, that heaven was not ſhut to the Old Teſtament ſaints; there was a way into it for them, and they went the ſame way New Teſtament ſaints do; and that way was in ſome meaſure known, but it was not fully manifeſted; it lay hid in obſcure prophecies, types, ſhadows, and ſacrifices; hence being more clearly revealed under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, in compariſon of its former obſcurity, and with reſpect to the manifeſtation of it, it is called a new way.

Ver. 9. Which was a figure for the time then preſent, &c.] The tabernacle in general was a figure of Chriſt's human nature, ch. viii. 2. and the moſt holy part of it was a figure of heaven itſelf, ver. 24. the whole ſervice of it was typical and ſhadowy; but it was but a temporary figure; it was for that preſent time only; the things of it were ſuited to that diſpenſation, and are now aboliſhed, and ought not to be revived, the ordinances of the Goſpel being greatly preferable to them; and whilſt it did continue, it was only a parable, as the word here uſed ſignifies; it was like a dark ſaying; it had much obſcurity and darkneſs in it; or, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, it was a figure of the preſent time; that is, of the Goſpel-diſpenſation; it was a ſhadow of good things to come under that; it prefigured what is now accompliſhed; or rather it was a figure unto, or until the preſent time; 'till Chriſt came, when all figures, types, and ſhadows fled away, and were of no more real uſe and ſervice: in which were offered both gifts and ſacrifices; that is, in which tabernacle, or at which then preſent time, or καθ' ἣν, according to which, figure or parable, as the Alexandrian copy, and Vulgate Latin verſion read, gifts and ſacrifices were offered by the prieſts; ſee ch. v. 1. and viii. 3. that could not make him that did the ſervice perfect; neither the prieſt that offered them, nor the people whom he repreſented, and for whom he did the ſervice; they could not make real and perfect expiation for ſin, nor juſtify from it, nor cleanſe and ſanctify; the ſpiritual worſhippers had their ſins expiated by the ſacrifice of Chriſt; and their perſons were juſtified by his righteouſneſs, and they were cleanſed by his blood: the particular inſtance in which legal ſacrifices did not make perfect is, pertaining to the conſcience; there is in every man a conſcience, and when ſin is charged home upon it, that is filled with a ſenſe of divine wrath; nor can it be pacified with any thing ſhort of what will anſwer the law and juſtice of God, and which is only done by the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt.

Ver. 10. Which ſtood only in meats and drinks, &c.] That is, along with the gifts and ſacrifices offered, there only were meat-offerings and drink-offerings; things which only reſpect the body, and can't therefore make perfect, as to the conſcience; to which may be added, that while the tabernacle was ſtanding, and the typical ſervice was in being, there was a prohibition of certain meats, as unclean, and an allowance of others, as clean, Lev. xi. 2—31. and there were certain drinks which were unlawful to certain perſons, at certain times, as to the prieſts and Nazarites, Lev. x. 9. Numb. vi. 3. and which, for the above reaſon, could make no man perfect: and divers waſhings or baptiſms; the doctrine of which, the Apoſtle would not have laid again, ch. vi. 2. theſe were the waſhings of the prieſts and of the Iſraelites, and of ſacrifices, and of garments, and of veſſels and other things; and which, becauſe they were performed by immerſion, they are called baptiſms; and now ſince theſe only ſanctified to the purifying of the fleſh, or what was outward, they could not reach the conſcience, or make perfect with reſpect to that: and carnal ordinances; which belonged to the fleſh, and not the ſpirit or ſoul, and therefore could not affect that; beſides, theſe were only impoſed on them until the time of reformation; they were enjoined, the Jews only, tho' by God himſelf; and were put upon them as a burden, or a yoke, and which was on ſome accounts intolerable, but were not to continue any longer than the time of the Goſpel, here called the time of reformation, or of correction, and emendation; in which, things that were faulty and deficient are amended and perfected, and in which, burdenſome rites and ceremonies are removed, and better ordinances introduced: or rather of direction; in which ſaints are directed to Chriſt, the ſum and ſubſtance of all types, ſhadows, and ſacrifices, and in whom alone perfection is.

Ver. 11. But Chriſt being come an high-prieſt, &c.] Chriſt is come, as appears from the ceſſation of civil government among the Jews, which was not to be till Shiloh came; from the deſtruction of the ſecond temple, into which the Meſſiah was to come, and did; from the expiration of Daniel's weeks, at which he was to appear, and be cut off; from the coming of John the Baptiſt, his forerunner, and from the preaching of the Goſpel to the Gentiles, and the calling and converſion of them, and the effuſion of the Spirit upon them: and he is come an high-prieſt; he was called to be one, and was conſtituted as ſuch in the council, and covenant of peace; and he agreed to do the work of one; he was typified by the high-prieſt under the law; and he came as ſuch into this world, and has done the work of an high-prieſt, by offering himſelf a ſacrifice for ſin, and by his entrance into the holieſt of all, with his own blood: and he is come an high-prieſt of good things to come; ſuch as, peace, reconciliation and atonement, a juſtifying righteouſneſs, pardon of ſin, eternal life and ſalvation, which the law was a ſhadow, and figure of; and which under the former diſpenſation were to come, as to the actual impetration of them by Chriſt; who is called the high-prieſt of them, to diſtinguiſh him from the high-prieſts under the law, who could not bring in theſe good things, nor make the comers to them and to their offerings perfect; but Chriſt is the author and adminiſtrator of them; and theſe things are owing to the performance of his prieſtly office; and ſuch rob Chriſt of his glory, as a prieſt, who aſcribe theſe good things to their own merits, or the merits of others: and the way in which he is come is, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands, that is to ſay, not of this building; meaning the human body of Chriſt, which was greater than Moſes's tabernacle; not in bulk and quantity, but in value, worth, and dignity; and was more perfect than that, that being only an example, figure, ſhadow, and type, this being the antitype, the ſum and ſubſtance of that; and by it things and perſons are brought to perfection, which could not be, in and by that; and this is a tabernacle which God pitched, and not man; which was reared up without the help of man: Chriſt was not begotten by man, but was conceived in the womb of a virgin, under the power of the Holy Ghoſt; he came not into the world in the way of ordinary generation, but in a ſupernatural manner; and ſo his human body is a tabernacle, not of the common building, or creation, as the word may be rendred, as other human bodies are.

Ver. 12. neither by the blood of goats and calves, &c.] With which the high-prieſt entered into the holy place, within the vail, on the day of atonement, Lev. xvi. 14, 15. for Chriſt was not an high-prieſt of the order of Aaron, nor could the blood of theſe creatures take away ſin, nor would God accept of ſuch ſacrifices any longer: but by his own blood he entred in once into the holy place; which ſhews the truth of his human nature, and the virtue of its blood, as in union with his divine perſon; by which he opened the way into the holieſt of all, as the ſurety of his people, and gives them boldneſs and liberty to follow him there; he carried his blood not in a baſon, as the high-prieſt carried the blood of goats and calves, but in his veins; and by it, having been ſhed by him, he entred not into the holy place made with hands, but into heaven itſelf; and that not every year, as the high-prieſt, but once for all, having done his work; or as follows, having obtained eternal redemption; for us, from ſin, ſatan, the law, and death, to which his people were in bondage, and which he obtained by paying a ranſom price for them; which was not corruptible things, as ſilver and gold, but his precious blood: in the original text it is, having found eternal redemption; there ſeems to be an alluſion to Job xxxiii. 24. This was what was ſought for long ago by the Old Teſtament ſaints, who were wiſhing, waiting, and longing for this ſalvation; it is a thing very precious and difficult to find; it is to be had no where but in Chriſt, and when found in him, is matter of great joy to ſenſible ſinners; God found it in him, and found him to be a proper perſon to effect it; and Chriſt has found it by being the author of it: this is called an eternal redemption, becauſe it extends to the ſaints in all ages, backwards and forwards; it includes eternal life and happineſs; and ſuch as are ſharers in it ſhall never periſh, but ſhall be ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation; it is ſo called in oppoſition to the carnal expiations of the high-prieſts, and in diſtinction from temporal redemptions, deliverances, and ſalvations. Remarkable is the paraphraſe of Jonathan ben Uzziel on Gen. xlix. 18. "Jacob ſaid, when he ſaw Gideon the "ſon of Joaſh, and Sampſon the ſon of Manoah, "who ſhould be redeemers; not for the redemp"tion of Gideon am I waiting, nor for the redemp"tion of Samſon am I looking, for their redemp"tion is a temporal redemption; but for thy re"demption am I waiting and looking, O Lord, "becauſe thy redemption is פורקן עלמין an ever"laſting redemption:" another copy reads, for the redemption of Meſſiah the ſon of David; and to the ſame purpoſe is the Jeruſalem paraphraſe on the place; in Talmudic language it would be called פרייה עולמית[a].

[a] T. Shebuot, fol. 11. 2.

Ver. 13. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, &c.] Shed either on the day of atonement, or at any other time: the former of theſe Pauſanias[y] relates, was drank by certain prieſteſſes among the Grecians, whereby they were tried, whether they ſpoke truth or no, if not, they were immediately puniſhed; and the latter, he ſays[z], will diſſolve an adamantſtone; but neither of them can purge from ſin: and the aſhes of an heifer ſprinkling the unclean; the Apoſtle refers to the red heifer, Numb. xix. which being burnt, its aſhes were gathered up and put into a veſſel, and water poured upon them, which was ſprinkled with a bunch of hyſſop on unclean perſons; the aſhes and the water mixed together made the water of ſeparation, or of ſprinkling; for ſo it is called by the Septuagint, υδωρ ῥαντισμȣ, the water of ſprinkling, and in the Targum in a following citation: this was the purification for ſin, tho' it only ſanctifieth to the purifying of the fleſh; the body, or only in an external and typical way, but did not really ſanctify the heart, or purify and cleanſe the ſoul from ſin. The Jews ſay, that the waters of purification for ſin were not waters of purification for ſin, without the aſhes[a]; and to this the Targumiſt, on Ezek. xxxvi. 25. and on Zech. xiii. 1. refers, paraphraſing both texts thus; "I will forgive their ſins as they are cleanſed with "the water of ſprinkling, and with the aſhes of the "heifer, which is a purification for ſin."

Ver. 14. How much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt, &c.] Which is not the blood of a mere man, but the blood of the Son of God; and the argument is from the leſſer to the greater; that if the aſhes of the burnt heifer, which was a type of Chriſt in his ſufferings, mixed with water, typically ſanctified to the purifying of men externally, in a ceremonial way, then much more virtue muſt there be in the blood of Chriſt, to cleanſe the ſoul inwardly: who through the eternal ſpirit offered himſelf without ſpot to God; Chriſt is a prieſt, and the ſacrifice he has offered up is himſelf; not his divine nature, but his human nature, ſoul and body, as in union with his divine perſon; which gives his ſacrifice the preference to all others; and is the reaſon of its virtue and efficacy, and is expreſſive of his great love to man: and this ſacrifice was offered up to God, againſt whom his people had ſinned, and whoſe juſtice muſt be ſatisfied, and which is of a ſweetſmelling ſavour to him; beſides, he called him to this work, and engaged him in it, and is well pleaſed with this offering, as he muſt needs be, ſince it is offered up without ſpot; which expreſſes the purity of Chriſt's nature and ſacrifice, and the perfection of it, which is ſuch, that no fault can be found in it by the juſtice of God; and hence, the ſaints, for whom it is offered, are unblameable and irreprovable. There is an alluſion in the clauſe, both to the prieſts and to their ſacrifices, which were neither of them to have any ſpot or blemiſh on them; and this unblemiſhed ſacrifice was offered unto God by Chriſt, through the eternal ſpirit; not the human ſoul of Chriſt; for tho' that is a ſpirit, yet not eternal, and beſides, was a part of the ſacrifice; but rather the divine nature of Chriſt, which is a ſpirit, and may be ſo called in diſtinction from the fleſh, or human nature, as it ſometimes is, and this is eternal; it was from everlaſting, as well as is to everlaſting; and this ſupported him under all his ſufferings, and carried him through them, and put virtue into them; and Chriſt was a prieſt, in the divine, as well as human nature: tho' by it may be better underſtood the Holy Ghoſt; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, and alſo ſeveral copies; ſince the divine nature rather acts by the human nature, than the human nature by the divine; and Chriſt is often ſaid to do ſuch and ſuch things by the Holy Spirit; and as the Holy Ghoſt formed and filled the human nature of Chriſt, ſo he aſſiſted and ſupported it under ſufferings. This whole clauſe is inſerted by way of parentheſis, ſhewing the efficacy of Chriſt's blood, and from whence it is: to purge your conſcience from dead works; that is, from the works of ſin, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; which are performed by dead men, ſeparate and alienated from the life of God, are the cauſe of the death of the ſoul, and expoſe to eternal death, and are like dead carcaſſes, nauſeous and infectious; and even duties themſelves performed without faith and love, are dead works; nor can they procure life, and being depended on, iſſue in death; and even the works of believers themſelves are ſometimes performed in a very lifeleſs manner, and are attended with ſin and pollution, and need purging: the alluſion is to the pollution by the touch of dead bodies; and there may be ſome reſpect to the ſacrifices of ſlain beaſts, after the ſacrifice and death of Chriſt, by believing Jews, who were ſticklers for the ceremonies of the law, and thereby contracted guilt; but immoralities are chiefly deſigned, and with theſe the conſcience of man is defiled; and nothing ſhort of the blood of Chriſt can remove the pollution of ſin; as that being ſhed procures atonement, and ſo purges away the guilt of ſin, or makes reconciliation for it, ſo being ſprinkled on the conſcience by the Spirit of God, it ſpeaks peace and pardon, and pacifies and purges it, and removes every incumbrance from it: the Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, and Syriac verſions read, our conſcience. The end and uſe of ſuch purgation is, to ſerve the living God; ſo called to diſtinguiſh him from the idols of the Gentiles, and in oppoſition to dead works; and becauſe he has life in himſelf, eſſentially and independently, and is the author and giver of life to others; and it is but the reaſonable ſervice of his people, to preſent their ſouls and bodies as a living ſacrifice to him; and who ought to ſerve him in a lively manner, in faith, and with fervency, and not with a ſlaviſh, but a godly filial fear; and one that has his conſcience purged by the blood of Chriſt, and is ſenſibly impreſſed with a diſcovery of pardoning grace, is in the beſt capacity for ſuch ſervice. The Alexandrian copy reads, the living and true God.

Ver. 15. And for this cauſe he is the mediator of the New Teſtament, &c.] See the notes on ch. vii. 22. and viii. 6, 8. This may refer both to what goes before, and what follows after; for Chriſt, that he might offer himſelf to God, and by his blood purge the conſciences of his people from dead works, that ſo they might ſerve the living God, became the mediator of the New Teſtament, or covenant; and alſo he took upon him this character and office, that by means of death for the redemption of the tranſgreſſions that were under the firſt teſtament, they which are called, might receive the promiſe of eternal inheritance; Chriſt became the mediator of the New Teſtament, and aſſumed human nature that he might die, and by dying might obtain redemption for his people; not only for thoſe that were then in the world, or ſhould be in it, but alſo for all thoſe that had been in it. The firſt Teſtament is the firſt diſpenſation of the covenant of grace, reaching from the firſt promulgation of it to Adam after the fall, to the death of Chriſt; the tranſgreſſions that were under it are the ſins of the ſaints who lived under that diſpenſation, from Adam to Moſes, and from Moſes to Chriſt, and takes in all their iniquities of every kind: and the redemption of theſe, or from theſe, by Chriſt, at and through his death, does not ſuppoſe that there was no remiſſion of ſins, or juſtification from them, under that diſpenſation; or that the Old Teſtament ſaints did not go to heaven, but were detained in a priſon, till redeemed by the death of Chriſt; or that their ſins were only redeemed, not their perſons; for tranſgreſſions may ſtand for tranſgreſſors; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, that by his death he might be a redemption for them who tranſgreſſed the firſt Teſtament; ſo the Jews ſay, that the Meſſiah muſt die לפרות את אבות, to redeem the fathers [b]: but the ſenſe is, that tho' legal ſacrifices could not atone for ſin, nor ceremonial ablutions cleanſe from them; yet the ſins of Old Teſtament ſaints were expiated, their iniquities pardoned, and they juſtified and ſaved, through the blood of Chriſt, the lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world; whoſe death is a redemption from tranſgreſſions paſt, preſent, and to come; whoſe blood is the ranſom price for them, and was ſhed for the remiſſion of them, even of ſins that are paſt through the forbearance of God; who took the ſurety's word for the performance of all this, which in the fullneſs of time he ſtrictly fulfilled, to the ſatiſfaction of law and juſtice; ſee Rom. iii. 25. and the ultimate end of Chriſt's being a mediator, and dying for ſuch purpoſes, was, that called ones might receive the promiſed inheritance: by the eternal inheritance, is meant heaven, which is by gift and bequeſt, belongs to children only, and comes through the death of Chriſt; and is a very ſubſtantial, plentiful, and glorious one; it is incorruptible and undefiled, and that fades not away, and as here, eternal; it was prepared from the foundation of the world, and will continue for ever; and it may be ſo called, to diſtinguiſh it from the inheritance of the land of Canaan, or any temporal one: the promiſe of this was made before the world began, and was put into the hands of Chriſt, the ſurety of the better Teſtament, by whoſe death the heirs of it come to enjoy both the promiſe, and the thing promiſed; and they are ſuch who are called, not merely externally, but internally and effectually; by whom were meant, not Abraham and his natural ſeed, nor the Old Teſtament ſaints only, but all that are called with an holy calling, whether Jews or Gentiles, and who will enjoy both the promiſe of the inheritance, and that itſelf, in a way of receiving: every word ſhews this affair to be all of grace; it is an inheritance, and therefore the father's gift; it is by promiſe, and ſo of grace; and it is received, and ſo freely given, and not merited; and only ſuch who are called by grace poſſeſs it; and yet it is through the death of Chriſt, that ſo it might be received, in a way conſiſtent with the juſtice of God.

[a] Miſn. Temura, c. 1. §. 5. Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

Ver. 16. For where a teſtament is, &c.] The covenant of grace, as adminiſtred under the Goſpel diſpenſation, is a teſtament or will. The Jews have adopted the Greek word, here uſed, into their language, and pronounce it, דייתיקי, and by it underſtand a dying man's laſt will and teſtament [d]. Some of them make it to be of Hebrew derivation; as if it was ſaid, דא תהי למיקם, this ſhall be to confirm [e]; or this ſhall be ſtable and firm; though others own it to be the ſame with this Greek word διαθηκη [f]. The covenant of grace, is properly a covenant to Chriſt, and a teſtament or will to his people; it is his, and their father's will, concerning giving them both grace and glory; it conſiſts of many gifts and legacies; in it Chriſt is made heir of all things, and his people are made joint-heirs with him; they are given to him as his portion; and they have all things pertaining to life and godlineſs bequeathed to them, even all ſpiritual bleſſings; the witneſſes of it are Father, Son, and Spirit; and the ſeals of it are the blood of Chriſt, and the grace of the Spirit; and this is regiſtred in the ſcriptures by holy men as notaries; and is unalterable and immutable: and this being made, there muſt alſo of neceſſity be the death of the teſtator; who is Chriſt; he has various parts in this will or teſtament; he is the ſurety and mediator of it; and he is the executor of it; what is given in it, is firſt given to him, in order to be given to others; all things are put into his hands, and he has a power to give them to as many as the Father has given him; and here he is called the teſtator: Chriſt, as God, has an equal right to diſpoſe of the inheritance, both of grace and glory; and as mediator, nothing is given without his conſent; and whatever is given, is given with a view to his death, and comes through it, and by virtue of it: hence there is a neceſſity of that, and that on the account of the divine perfections; particularly for the declaration of God's righteouſneſs, or by reaſon of his juſtice; and alſo becauſe of his purpoſes and decrees, which have fixed it, and of his promiſes, which are yea and amen in Chriſt, and are ratified by his blood, called therefore the blood of the covenant; and likewiſe on account of the engagements of Chriſt to ſuffer and die; as well as for the accompliſhment of ſcripture prophecies concerning it; and moreover, on account of the bleſſings which were to come to the ſaints thro' it, as a juſtifying righteouſneſs, pardon of ſin, peace and reconciliation, adoption and eternal life.

Ver. 17. For a teſtament is of force after men are dead, &c.] The neceſſity of Chriſt's death is here urged, from the nature and force of a teſtament or will, among men, which does not take place, and cannot be executed till a man is dead. Otherwiſe it is of no ſtrength at all whilſt the teſtator liveth; no claim can be made by the legatees for the part they have in it, nor can any diſpoſition be made by the executor of it; not that hereby is ſuggeſted, that the teſtament or will of God was uncertain and precarious till the death of Chriſt, and ſubject to change and alteration as mens wills are till they die; nor that the inheritance could not be enjoyed by the Old Teſtament ſaints; for 'tis certain, it was entred upon by them before the death of Chriſt; but the ſenſe is, that there was a neceſſity of it, that the ſaints right unto it, upon the foot of juſtice, might be evident by it.

Ver. 18. Whereupon neither the firſt teſtament, &c.] Or the firſt adminiſtration of the covenant of grace under the law: was dedicated without blood; or confirmed without it, that diſpenſation being a typical one; and that blood was typical of the blood of Chriſt, by which the new covenant or teſtament is ratified; ſee Exod. xxiv. 7, 8.

[f] Cohen de Lara Ir David, p. 30.

Ver. 19. For when Moſes had ſpoken every precept, &c.] Contained in the decalogue, in the book of the covenant, every one of the precepts in Exod. xx, xxi, xxii, xxiii. for this is to be underſtood of the written law, and not of the oral law, the Jews talk of, which they ſay Moſes firſt delivered by word of mouth to Aaron, then to his two ſons, Eleazar and Ithamar, then to the ſeventy elders of Iſrael, and then to the whole congregation; ſo that Aaron heard it four times, his ſons thrice, the ſeventy elders twice, and all Iſrael once [g]: but this is the written law which he ſpoke audibly, and in a known language, to all the people according to the law; which God gave him on the mount: this may inſtruct perſons concerned in the publick miniſtry, to ſpeak out plainly and clearly the whole counſel of God, to all to whom they are ſent, according to the word of God, which is the rule of faith and practice: he took the blood of calves, and of goats; in the relation of this affair in Exod. xxiv. 5. which is referred to, only mention is made of oxen, bullocks, or heifers, here called calves, which were ſacrificed for peace-offerings, and not of goats; tho' perhaps they may be intended by the burnt-offerings there ſpoken of, ſince they were ſometimes uſed for burnt-offerings, Lev. i. 10. The Syriac verſion only reads, he took the blood of an heifer; and the Arabic verſion, he took the blood of calves; but all the copies, and other verſions, read both. With water, and ſcarlet wool, and hyſſop; neither of theſe are mentioned in Exod. xxiv. but ſince ſprinkling is there ſaid to be uſed, and blood and water mixed together, and ſcarlet and hyſſop were uſed in ſprinkling, as in ſprinkling the leper, and the unclean houſe, Lev. xiv. 5, 6, 7, 49, 50, 51. The Apoſtle juſtly concludes the uſe of them here; the blood, with water, was typical of the blood and water which ſprung from the ſide of Chriſt pierced on the croſs, the one ſignifying juſtification by him, the other ſanctification; the ſcarlet wool, which is originally white, but becomes ſcarlet by being dyed, may denote the native purity of Chriſt, and his bloody ſufferings and death; the hyſſop may ſignify his humility, and the purging vertue of his blood, and the ſweet-ſmelling ſavour of his perſon, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice. The Apoſtle calls ſcarlet, ſcarlet wool; tho' whenever the word is uſed in the Jewiſh laws of the Old Teſtament, wool is not expreſſed, but it is always intended; for it is a rule with the Jews [h], that "the blue, "which is ſpoken of in every place, is wool dyed "of a ſky colour; purple is wool dyed red, and "ſcarlet is wool dyed in ſcarlet." And ſprinkled both the book, and all the people, in Exod. xxiv. 8. No mention is made of the ſprinkling of the former, only of the latter, which the Apoſtle either concludes from the ſprinkling of the blood upon the altar, upon which the book might lie, or from tradition, or from divine revelation: ſome think it does not neceſſarily follow from the text, that the book was ſprinkled; and repeating the word λαϐων, he took, read the words, and he took the book and ſprinkled all the people; but this ſeems not natural, but forced; and beſides, all the Oriental verſions are expreſs for the ſprinkling of the book: the book of the law was ſprinkled, not becauſe of any impurity in it, but to ſhew the imperfection of it, and its inſufficiency to juſtify men; or rather the imperfection of man's obedience to it, and to point out what the law requires in caſe of diſobedience, even the blood and life of men; and what it would be, was it not ſprinkled with blood, or ſatisfied by the blood of Chriſt, namely, an accuſing, curſing, and condemning law: the people, all of them, being ſprinkled with the blood, were typical of God's peculiar people, even all the elect of God, being ſprinkled with the blood of Chriſt, called the blood of ſprinkling, by which they are redeemed, and which ſpeaks peace and pardon to them. Some have thought only the ſeventy elders were ſprinkled, as perſonating the whole congregation; and others, that the twelve pillars were only ſprinkled, as repreſenting the twelve tribes of Iſrael; but Moſes, and the Apoſtle agree, that they were the people that were ſprinkled.

Ver. 20. Saying, this is the blood of the teſtament, &c.] The firſt teſtament or covenant; this proves what the Apoſtle had aſſerted in ver. 18. that it was dedicated with blood, or confirmed by it; compare with this Matt. xxvi. 28. which God hath enjoined unto you; the people of Iſrael, to obſerve, and which they promiſed to do; ſee Exod. xxiv. 7, 8.

Ver. 21. Moreover, he ſprinkled likewiſe both the tabernacle, &c.] Not at the ſame time that he ſprinkled the book and the people, for then there was no tabernacle; but afterwards, at the time that it was ſet up, when it was anointed with oil, Exod. xl. 9. and tho' no mention is there made of blood, yet Joſephus, in agreement with the Apoſtle, aſſerts [i], that the tabernacle, and its veſſels, were not only anointed with oil, but ſprinkled with the blood of bulls and goats, as well as the garments of Aaron, and his ſons: the tabernacle was typical of the church, in which God dwells, being purified and cleanſed by the blood of Chriſt; and this ſhows, that there is no coming into the preſence of God, the place where he dwells, without blood. And all the veſſels of the miniſtry; which were uſed in the ſervice of the tabernacle: theſe may denote the veſſels of grace and mercy, the elect of God, whoſe hearts are ſprinkled by the blood of Chriſt from an evil conſcience, and whoſe garments are waſhed in it, and made white by it.

Ver. 22. And almoſt all things are by the law purged with blood, &c.] All except a few things, as the Arabic verſion renders it; for ſome things were cleanſed by water, and others purged by fire, Numb. xxxi. 23. Some join the word almoſt with the word purged, as if the ſenſe was, that all things were purged by blood, but not perfectly, only almoſt; but the former ſenſe is beſt. And without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion; that is, of ſin; there was no typical remiſſion without it; and there can be no real remiſſion but by the blood of Chriſt; no inſtance can be given of pardon without it; if it could have been otherwiſe, the blood of Chriſt had not been ſhed; for ſo it would ſeem to be ſhed in vain, and his ſatisfaction to be unneceſſary; nor is it agreeable to the juſtice of God to forgive ſin without ſatisfaction; nor is it conſiſtent with his veracity, and faithfulneſs to his word, Gen. ii. 17. It is a common ſaying with the Jews, and often to be met with in their writings, אין כפרה אלא בדם, there is no atonement but by blood [k]; by the ſhedding of blood; not by the ſhedding of it, as it flows out of the body of the ſacrifice, but as it is poured out on the altar; for the pouring of the blood at the four corners, and at the bottom of the altar, were the chief rites required in ſacrifices; nor did they reckon expiation, expiation, unleſs the altar was moiſtened by the blood of the ſacrifice [l].

Ver. 23. It was therefore neceſſary, &c.] On account of the divine appointment, and that types and antitypes might correſpond; and eſpecially it was neceſſary with reſpect to the Meſſiah, the ſubſtance and body of all types. So Jonathan ben Uzziel paraphraſes the text in Exod. xl 9. "and thou "ſhalt take the anointing oil, and thou ſhalt anoint "the tabernacle, and all that is in it; and thou "ſhalt ſanctify it, מטול, becauſe of the crown of "the kingdom of the houſe of Judah, and the "king Meſſiah, who ſhall redeem Iſrael in the lat-"ter days." Upon his account it was neceſſary, that the patterns of things in the heavens ſhould be purified with theſe; that is, that all the people, and the book of the covenant, and the tabernacle, and its veſſels, which were types and patterns of perſons and things in Goſpel churches, ſhould be purified with blood and water, and with ſcarlet wool and hyſſop. But the heavenly things themſelves, with better ſacrifices than theſe; the ſum and ſubſtance of the above patterns, ſhadows, and examples, ſuch as heaven itſelf; which tho' not impure in itſelf, yet ſome think it may be ſaid to be purified, becauſe ſaints are made meet for it, by being purged with the blood of Chriſt; others obſerve, that ſin reaches to heaven, and provokes God that dwells there; hence atonement for it may be called a purification of heaven; but rather this may be ſaid of it, inaſmuch as by the blood of Chriſt an entrance and preparation is made for the ſaints into it. Likewiſe, the human nature of Chriſt is among theſe heavenly things; not that it is heavenly, as to the matter and ſubſtance of it, but may be ſo called, becauſe of its wonderful formation; and which has been purified, not from any real internal pollution that was in it, but from what was imputed to it, the ſin of his people. Alſo the whole church, triumphant and militant, may be intended by heavenly things: the Old Teſtament ſaints went to heaven before Chriſt came; and tho' they were not impure, but were the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, yet their iniquities were purged by the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt, after they were gone to heaven; ſee ver. 15. and Rom. iii. 25. The church militant, or believers on earth, may be ſaid to be heavenly, ſince they are partakers of an heavenly birth and calling; their head is in heaven, and their converſation is there; and they have a right unto it, and are making meet for it; and they are in themſelves defiled with ſin, and are purified by the blood of Chriſt, and ſanctified by the offering up of his body once for all: to which may be added, that ſpiritual bleſſings are heavenly things; they are from heaven, and ſaints are bleſſed with them in heavenly places; and theſe come to them thro' the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt; yea, the Goſpel, which is from heaven, and the doctrines of it, are ſealed and confirmed by the blood of Chriſt: his ſacrifice is expreſſed in the plural number; not that there has been a repetition of it, for it is but one ſacrifice, and but once offered up, and will never be reiterated; but to ſhew the excellency of it, it being uſual with the Jews to uſe the plural number of things the moſt excellent; ſo Chriſt is called wiſdoms, Prov. i. 20. beſides, reſpect may be had to the many ſacrifices under the law, which were types of it, and were anſwered and fulfilled by it; and to the many perſons on whoſe account it was offered; and to the parts of it, the ſoul and body of Chriſt: and this is a better ſacrifice than the legal ones, in its own nature, and in its uſe and efficacy to take away ſin, and make perfect, which they could not.

Ver. 24. For Chriſt is not entred into the holy places made with hands, &c.] The moſt holy place in the tabernacle of Moſes, or in the temple built by Solomon, and rebuilt by Zorobabel, and repaired by Herod, which are the figures of the true; that is, the moſt holy place in the tabernacle and temple, was a figure of heaven, the truth of that type; ſee ver. 9. as follows. Joſephus [m] ſuggeſts the ſame, when ſpeaking of the moſt holy place, he ſays, that it was inacceſſible to the prieſts, that it might be as heaven to God. But into heaven itſelf; not the viſible heavens, the airy and ſtarry ones, thro' which he paſſed, but the third heaven, the habitation of God, angels, and glorified ſaints: this ſhows that heaven is a place; that Chriſt, as man, was out of it when on earth; and that at his aſcenſion he entred into it, having done the work he came about, and that with acceptance: the end of his entrance was now to appear in the preſence of God for us; Chriſt, as God, was always in his preſence, from everlaſting; as mediator, he was with him in the council of peace; while he was here on earth his father was with him, he was not alone; but now in his human nature he is at his right hand, where he appears before him, as a favourite before his prince, on the behalf of another, or as an advocate on the behalf of his client: Chriſt appears in the court of heaven for his elect, by repreſenting their perſons; by preſenting himſelf, his blood, ſacrifice, and righteouſneſs before God on their account; by introducing them into the preſence of God, and offering up their prayers with the incenſe of his mediation; by preſenting them to himſelf, and to his Father, and obtaining every bleſſing for them. And this he does now, ſince his entrance; not that he did not appear before God for the ſaints of the Old Teſtament, for he was the angel of God's preſence then, tho' he did not appear then in the manner he does now, as the Lamb in the midſt of the throne, as if it had been ſlain; but it denotes the continuance and perpetuity of his appearance for his people; he is ever interceding for them.

Ver. 25. Nor yet that he ſhould offer himſelf often, &c.] Or at all again; which ſhows the perfection of his ſacrifice, for juſtice was ſatisfied, the law fulfilled, ſin done away, and compleat ſalvation obtained at once; which lies againſt the error of the Socinians, who ſay he offers himſelf now in heaven; and of the Papiſts, who pretend to offer the body of Chriſt daily: as the high-prieſt entreth into the holy place every year with blood of others; not his own, nor other mens, but the blood of goats and calves; but Chriſt entred into heaven with his own blood, he having been altar, prieſt, and ſacrifice: the high-prieſt went into the moſt holy place every year, but Chriſt has entred into heaven once for all, where he ſits down and continues, having done his work effectually.

Ver. 26. For then muſt he often have ſuffered ſince the foundation of the world, &c.] For if it was neceſſary that he ſhould often offer up himſelf now, which is the ſame as to ſuffer, ſince the ſacrifice of himſelf, the ſame was neceſſary before; ſeeing ſin was in the world from the beginning, and the ſaints from the foundation of the world had their ſins expiated by the ſacrifice of Chriſt; but the truth is, Chriſt's ſufferings were but once, tho' the virtue of them is always, both before and after; nor can he ſuffer more, or again, becauſe of his power over death and the grave, and becauſe he has effectually obtained what he ſuffered for: but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf; this is to be underſtood, not of his appearance in heaven, of which mention is made in ver. 24. but of his incarnation on earth, called an appearance; not as tho' his human nature was a mere phantom or apparition, for it was a real thing; or as if he was then manifeſted to be what he really was before; for before his incarnation he was not truly and actually man; but this is ſaid with reſpect to the manifeſtation of his inviſible deity; or of him as the Son of God in human nature; and in regard to the types of the old law, under which he was hid; and with reſpect to the propheeies of his coming; and it deſigns the ſame thing with his deſcent from heaven, and coming into this world, in which he appeared in faſhion as a man, as a mean man, as an afflicted one; yea, he looked like a ſinful man, bearing the infirmities and ſins of his people; his appearance was but to a very few, and for a little time; and the time of it was, in the end of the world; the ſame with the laſt days; the laſt age of the world; the end of the Jewiſh œconomy; at the cloſe of their civil and eccleſiaſtical ſtate, according to Hab. ii. 3. ſo the Jews expect their Meſſiah, לקץ ימים, at the end of days[n]: and this appearance was but once; there were many appearances of him in an human form, under the Old Teſtament diſpenſation; and there were many after his reſurrection; but this is ſaid to be but once, in oppoſition to the many types and ſacrifices under the law, and agrees with his one oblation, and once ſuffering: the end of his appearance was, to put away ſin; the filth of it, by his blood; the guilt of it, by his atoning ſacrifice; and the puniſhment of it, by his ſufferings and death, the penalty of the law; and in conſequence of all this, the dominion of it by the power of his grace, and the very being of it hereafter: and this putting it away is ſignified by his bearing, carrying, and taking it away; by removing it as far as the eaſt is from the weſt; by finiſhing and making an end of it; by crucifying the old man, deſtroying the body of ſin, and by an utter diſannulling and aboliſhing it, as a debt, and as a law; and all this is done by the ſacrifice of himſelf; by the offering up of his body and ſoul, an offering for ſin; as in ver. 14.

[l] Reland. Heb. Antiq. par. 3. c. 2. §. 8.

[m] Antiq. l. 3. c. 5. §. 4 & c. 7. §. 8.

Ver. 27. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, &c.] Not a moral, or what is commonly called a ſpiritual death, nor an eternal one, but a corporal one; which does not ariſe from the conſtitution of nature, but from the ſin of man, and God's decree on account of it; by which it is fixed that men ſhall die, and how long they ſhall live, and when they ſhall die; ſo that they can't die ſooner nor later; all things antecedent to death, which lead on to it, and iſſue in it, are appointed by God, and ſo is death itſelf, with all its circumſtances; mens days can neither be lengthened nor ſhortened, either by Chriſt himſelf, or others: and this ſtatute and appointment of God concerns men, not angels, and reaches to all men, wicked and righteous; and tho' there have been ſome exceptions, as Enoch and Elijah; and all will not ſleep, or die, ſome will be found alive at Chriſt's appearing; yet ſuch will undergo a change which is equivalent to death, as Enoch and Elijah have done: and generally ſpeaking men die but once; it is not uſual for men to die, and live again, and then die again; there have been ſome extraordinary inſtances of this kind, but they are rare; it is the ſtatute law of heaven in common for men to die, and that but once; ſo Cicero[o] the heathen ſays, omnibus definitam eſſe mortem: Chriſt died once, he'll die no more; and it is the comfort of the ſaints, that tho' they die the firſt death, they ſhall not be hurt of the ſecond death; and the conſideration of this decree ſhould excite to diligence and induſtry: death is certain to God, but uncertain to us, as to the time, nor ſhould we curiouſly enquire into it, but patiently wait for it, and quietly ſubmit unto it: but after this the judgment; the laſt and general judgment, which will reach to all men, quick and dead, righteous and wicked, and in which Chriſt will be judge. There is a particular judgment which is immediately after death; by virtue of which, the ſouls of men are adjudged to their proper ſtate of happineſs or woe; and there is an univerſal judgment, which will be after the reſurrection of the dead, and is called eternal judgment, and to come; this is appointed by God, tho' the time when is unknown to men; yet nothing is more certain, and it will be a righteous one.

Ver. 28. So Chriſt was once offered to bear the ſins of many, &c.] As man dies but once, Chriſt was offered but once, or he ſuffered and died but once; and that was not on his own account, or for his own ſins, but to bear the ſins of many; not of angels but of men, and theſe not a few, but many; which is ſaid to magnify the grace of God, to exalt the ſatisfaction and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and to encourage ſouls to hope in him: hence many are brought to believe in him, and many are juſtified by him, have their ſins forgiven them, and are glorified; tho' Chriſt bore not the ſins of all men; for as all men have not faith, all are not juſtified, pardoned, and ſaved: what he bore were ſins; all kind of ſin, every act of ſin, and all that belongs to it; its filth, guilt, and puniſhment, even the iniquity of all his people; which muſt be a prodigious weight, and than which nothing could be more nauſeous: his bearing them ſuppoſes they were upon him, tho' not in him, imputed, tho' not inherent; that he did not ſink under them; that he made an entire ſatisfaction for them, and bore them wholly away, both from the perſons of his people, and from the ſight of juſtice. The way in which he came to bear them was this; he became a ſurety for all the elect; his father imputed to him all their ſins, and he voluntarily took them upon himſelf; where juſtice found them, and demanded ſatisfaction of him for them, and he gave it; which is an inſtance both of his great love, and of his great ſtrength: and unto them that look for him; with affection, faith, and patience: ſhall he appear the ſecond time without ſin unto ſalvation; this is to be underſtood of Chriſt's viſible and perſonal appearance on earth, which will be a glorious one; he will appear in his own glory, and in his father's glory, and in the glory of the holy angels, and in the glory of his power, to the joy of ſaints, and to the terror of the wicked; for every eye ſhall ſee him: and this is ſaid to be the ſecond time; that is, that he appears on earth, and perſonally; for tho' he often appears to his people, it is in a ſpiritual way; and tho' he appeared to Stephen and to Paul, yet not on earth, but in heaven; and this is called the ſecond time, with reference to his firſt appearance in human nature at his incarnation, and after that he aſcended to heaven; and as this will be the ſecond, it will be the laſt: the manner in which he will appear, will be, without ſin; without ſin itſelf; without any thing like it; without any infirmities, which tho' not ſinful, are the effects of ſin; without ſin imputed to him, with which he appeared before; without being a ſacrifice for ſin; and without ſin upon his people that come with him, or he ſhall meet, whom he ſhall raiſe, or change, and take to himſelf: and the end of his appearance with reſpect to them, will be unto ſalvation; the end of his firſt appearance was to obtain ſalvation for his people, and he has obtained it, and there is a comfortable application of it made unto them by the Spirit of God; but the full poſſeſſion of it will be hereafter, and into this will Chriſt put them, when he ſhall appear: the Alexandrian copy adds, by faith, and alſo ſome other copies.

[o] Pro Sextio.

CHAP. X.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle purſues his argument, ſhewing the weakneſs and imperfection of the Levitical prieſthood, and the ſuperior excellency of Chriſt's, which he cloſes with ſuitable exhortations to faith on Chriſt, as the alone high-prieſt, and to a conſtant profeſſion of him. The imperfection of the Levitical prieſthood is proved, from the law by which it was eſtabliſhed, being only a ſhadow of good things to come; from the inſufficiency of annual ſacrifices to perfect the comers to them, or to purge the conſciences of the worſhippers from ſin; and from the non-ceſſation of theſe ſacrifices which would have been, if the above ends could have been anſwered by them, ver. 1, 2. but on the contrary, by the annual return of theſe ſacrifices, ſins are afreſh remembred, and very good reaſon there is for it, ſince it is an impoſſible thing that the blood of ſlain beaſts ſhould take away ſin, ver. 3, 4. moreover, the Apoſtle proves the inſufficiency of ſuch ſacrifices, by a divine teſtimony, out of Pſ. xl. 6, 7, 8. by which it appears, that they are not agreeable to the will of God, and are rejected by him as uſeleſs, ver. 5, 6, 7, 8. and this leads the Apoſtle to diſcourſe of the excellency of Chriſt's ſacrifice above them; that they are taken away, and his is ſubſtituted in their room; that as they are not agreeable to the will of God, his is a fulfilment of it; that tho' they could not expiate ſin, yet by the offering up of the body of Chriſt, once for all, his people are ſanctified, or their ſins are expiated, ver. 9, 10. and this is further illuſtrated by a compariſon between the prieſts under the law, and Chriſt; they were many, he but one; they daily offered the ſame ſacrifices, he offered but one ſacrifice; theirs could not take away ſin, by his offering he has perfectly expiated the ſins of his people; they ſtood daily miniſtring, their work being never at an end; he is ſet down at the right hand of God, expecting his enemies to be made his footſtool, having done his work to perfection, ver. 11, 12, 13, 14. and that legal ſacrifices are ceaſed, and no more to be uſed, is proved by a teſtimony of the Holy Ghoſt, out of Jer. xxxi. 33, 34. relating to the covenant of grace, among the promiſes of which, ſtands that of the forgiveneſs of ſin; from whence the Apoſtle juſtly concludes, that where remiſſion of ſin is, there is, and there needs no more offering for it, ver. 15, 16, 17, 18. and from hence the Apoſtle paſſes to exhortations to the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty, which he ſtrongly urges from the conſideration of Chriſt's prieſthood, and the efficacy of it: and firſt, he preſſes them to the duty of prayer, to draw nigh to God to the throne of his grace. The manner in which he would have them approach to God, is in the ſincerity of their hearts, in a plerophory of faith, an high and full exerciſe of it, and in purity of ſoul and body: the motives or encouragements to it are taken from their having boldneſs and liberty to enter by faith into heaven itſelf with their prayers, thro' the blood of Jeſus; from there being a new and living way opened for them thro' the fleſh of Chriſt; and from their having ſuch an high-prieſt over the houſe of God, as he is, ver. 19, 20, 21, 22. and next he exhorts them to a conſtant and ſtedfaſt profeſſion of their faith, to which he animates them by the faithfulneſs of a promiſing God, who will never leave nor forſake his people, ver. 23. and then to conſider one another in their church relation, and to ſtir up one another to the exerciſe of the grace of love, and to the performance of good works, ver. 24. and alſo not to forſake their public aſſemblies, as was the cuſtom of ſome, but to exhort each other to greater diligence in attending there, eſpecially ſince they might obſerve that a time of great tribulation was at hand, ver. 25. and in order to deter from apoſtacy, which is expreſſed by a ſinning wilfully, after a man has received and profeſſed the knowledge of the truth, the Apoſtle obſerves that the deſtruction of ſuch is inevitable; ſince there never will be another propitiatory ſacrifice offered up, and therefore there can be no other than a dreadful expectation of an awful judgment, and of the wrath of God, which, like a conſuming fire, will deſtroy ſuch adverſaries of Chriſt, ver. 26, 27. the juſtice of which is argued from the leſs to the greater; that if the tranſgreſſors of the law of Moſes had no mercy ſhown them, but died when there were proper and ſufficient witneſſes of their crimes, then ſuch muſt be deſerving of a far greater puniſhment, who treat with the greateſt rudeneſs the perſon of the Son of God, and his precious blood, and with the greateſt contempt the perſon and grace of the Holy Spirit, ver. 28, 29. and ſuch perſons have reaſon to expect the vengeance of God will fall on them, ſince it is threatened them in the word of God, Deut. xxxii. 35, 36. and a dreadful thing it is to fall into his hands, ver. 30, 31. But in order to encourage theſe believing Hebrews to hold on and out unto the end, the Apoſtle puts them in mind of their good beginning, how well they ſet out, and how bravely they behaved, by bearing afflictions and reproaches themſelves; by being the companions of thoſe that were afflicted and reproached; by having compaſſion on the Apoſte when in bonds; and by chearfully ſuffering the loſs of their goods upon this conſideration, that they had in heaven a better and a more enduring ſubſtance, ver. 32, 33, 34. wherefore it would be exceeding wrong and very unbecoming, after all this to drop their faith and a profeſſion of it, which otherwiſe would iſſue in the enjoyment of the great recompence of reward, ver. 35. and as patience is neceſſary, it is right to exerciſe it under ſufferings for Chriſt's ſake, partly becauſe it is doing the will of God, and partly becauſe that after that is done, ſuch ſhall receive the promiſed happineſs; and what may ſerve the more to engage to the exerciſe of it is, it is but a little while and Chriſt will come and put an end to all the ſufferings of his people, ver. 36, 37. and that faith ſhould be in exerciſe, is proved from a divine teſtimony, Hab. ii. 4. and ſo muſt be pleaſing to God, when the contrary is highly reſented by him, ver. 38. and now, leſt the believing Hebrews ſhould conclude from all this that the Apoſtle ſuſpected them as going into apoſtacy, he declares his belief, that he and they were not in the number of apoſtates, but of believers, whoſe ſouls would be ſaved, ver. 39.

Ver. 1. For the law having a ſhadow of good things to come, &c.] By which is meant not the moral law, for that is not a ſhadow of future bleſſings, but a ſyſtem of precepts; the things it commands are not figuratively, but really good and honeſt; and are not obſcure, but plain and eaſy to be underſtood; nor are they fleeting and paſſing away, as a ſhadow, but laſting and durable: but the ceremonial law is intended; this was a ſhadow, a figure, a repreſentation of ſomething true, real, and ſubſtantial; was dark and obſcure, yet had in it, and gave ſome glimmering light; and was like a ſhadow, fleeting and tranſitory: and it was a ſhadow of good things; of Chriſt himſelf, who is the body, the ſum and ſubſtance of it, and of the good things to come by him; as the expiation of ſin, peace, and reconciliation, a juſtifying righteouſneſs, pardon of ſin, and eternal life; theſe are ſaid to be to come, as they were under the former diſpenſation, whilſt the ceremonial law was in force, and that ſhadow was in being, and the ſubſtance not as yet. And not the very image of the things; as it had not neither the things themſelves, nor Chriſt, the ſubſtance of them, ſo it did not give a clear revelation of them, as is made in the Goſpel, nor exhibit a diſtinct delineation of them, ſuch as an image expreſſes; it only gave ſome ſhort and dark hints of future good things, but did not exactly deſcribe them: and therefore can never with thoſe ſacrifices which they offered year by year continually; namely, the ſacrifices of bullocks and goats, which were offered on the day of atonement, year after year, in ſucceſſive generations, from the firſt appointment of that day, to the writing of this Epiſtle: ſacrifices of ſuch a kind, and ſo often repeated, could never make the comers thereunto perfect; either the people that came to the temple, and brought them to the prieſts to offer them for them, or the prieſts that offered them; ſo the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render it, perfect them that offer; and if not one, then not the other: legal ſacrifices could not make perfect expiation of ſin; there's no proportion between them and ſin; nor did they extend to all ſin, and at moſt only typically expiated; nor could they juſtify and cleanſe from ſin. Contrary to this the Jews[p] ſay, "when Iſrael was in the "holy land, there was no iniquity found in them, "for the ſacrifices which they offered every day "atoned for them;" but ſpiritual ſacrificers and worſhippers were expiated, juſtified, and cleanſed another way, even by the blood of Chriſt, ſlain from the foundation of the world in purpoſe, promiſe, and type, and to which their faith had reſpect in every ſacrifice.

Ver. 2. For then would they not have ceaſed to be offered, &c.] The Complutenſian edition, and the Syriac and Vulgate Latin verſions leave out the word not; and the ſenſe requires it ſhould be omitted, for the meaning is, that if perfection had been by the legal ſacrifices, they would have ceaſed to have been offered; for if the former ones had made perfect, there would have been no need of others, or of the repetition of the ſame; but becauſe they did not make perfect, therefore they were yearly renewed; unleſs the words are read with an interrogation, as they are in the Arabic verſion, for then would they not have ceaſed to be offered? yes, they would; they are indeed ceaſed now, but this is owing to Chriſt and his ſacrifice, and not to the efficacy of theſe ſacrifices; for yearly ſacrifices were offered for former ſins, as well as for freſh ones, as appears from the following verſe. Becauſe the worſhippers, once purged, would have had no more conſcience of ſins; there are external and internal worſhippers; the latter are ſuch who worſhip God in ſpirit and in truth: but here ceremonial worſhippers are meant, who, if they had been really purged from ſin by legal ſacrifices, and purifications, would have had no more conſcience of ſins, and ſo have had no need to have repeated them; as ſuch ſpiritual worſhippers, who are once purged from ſin by the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt; not that they have no ſin, or no ſenſe of ſin, or that their conſciences are ſeared, or that they never accuſe for ſin, or that they are to make no confeſſion and acknowledgment of ſin; but that they are diſcharged from the guilt of ſin, and are not liable to condemnation for it; and thro' the application of the blood of Chriſt to them, have peace with God, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt.

Ver. 3. But in thoſe ſacrifices, &c.] The Arabic verſion reads, but in it; that is, in the law; but the Syriac verſion reads, and ſupplies, as we do, בחון בדבחא, in thoſe ſacrifices, which were offered every year on the day of atonement: there is a remembrance of ſins made again every year; of all the ſins that were committed the year paſt, and even of thoſe that were expiated typically by the daily ſacrifice, and others that had been offered; which proves the imperfection and inſufficiency of ſuch ſacrifices: there was a remembrance of ſins by God, before whom the goats were preſented, their blood was ſprinkled, and the people cleanſed, Lev. xvi. 7, 14, 15, 30. and there was a remembrance of them by the people, who, on that day, afflicted their ſouls for them, ver. 29, 31. and there was a remembrance of them by the high-prieſt, who confeſſed them over, and put them upon the head of the goat, ver. 21. by which it was owned, that theſe ſins were committed; that they deſerved death, the curſe of the law; that the expiation of them was undertook by another, typified by the goat; that this was not yet done, and therefore there was no remiſſion, but a typical one, by theſe ſacrifices; but that ſins remained, and required a more perfect ſacrifice, which was yet to be offered up. Legal ſacrifices were ſo far from inducing an oblivion of ſins, that they themſelves brought them to remembrance, and were ſo many acknowledgments of them. Tho' Philo the Jew thinks the contrary, and gives this as a reaſon why the heart and brain were not offered in ſacrifice, becauſe "it would be fooliſh, that the ſacrifices "ſhould cauſe, not a forgetfulneſs of ſins, but a "remembrance of them[q]."

Ver. 4. For it is not poſſible, &c.] There is a neceſſity of ſin being taken away, otherwiſe it will be remembred; and there will be a conſcience of it, and it muſt be anſwered for, or it will remain marked, and the curſe and penalty of the law muſt take place: but 'tis impoſſible that the blood of bulls and goats ſhould take away ſins; which was ſhed on the day of atonement: ſin is a breach of the moral law, but theſe ſacrifices belong to the ceremonial law, which are leſs acceptable to God than moral duties; ſin is committed againſt God, and has an objective infiniteneſs in it, and therefore can never be atoned for by the blood of ſuch creatures; it leaves a ſtain on the mind and conſcience, which this blood cannot reach; beſides, this is not the ſame blood, nor of the ſame kind with the perſon that has ſinned; yea, if this could take away ſin, it would do more than the blood of the man himſelf could do; ſuch blood ſhed can never anſwer the penalty of the law, ſatisfy divine juſtice, or ſecure the honour of divine holineſs: but what the blood of theſe creatures could not do, the blood of Chriſt has done, and does; that takes away ſin from the ſight of juſtice, and from the conſciences of the ſaints. Compare with this the Septuagint verſion of Jer. xi. 15. "what has the beloved committed "abomination in my houſe? ſhall prayers, and "the holy fleſh take away thy wickedneſſes from "thee, or by theſe ſhalt thou eſcape?"

[q] De Victimis, p. 841.

Ver. 5. Wherefore when he cometh into the world he ſaith, &c.] In Pſ. xl. 7, 8. This was ſaid by David, not of himſelf, and his own times, for ſacrifice and offering were deſired and required in his times; nor was he able to do the will of God, ſo as to fulfil the law, and make void legal ſacrifices; nor did he engage as a ſurety to do this; nor was it written of him in the volume of the book that he ſhould; beſides, he ſpeaks of one that was not yet come, tho' ready to come, when the fulneſs of time ſhould be up; and who is here ſpoken of as coming into the world, and who is no other than Jeſus Chriſt; and this is to be underſtood, not of his coming into Judea, or the temple at Jeruſalem; or out of a private, into a public life; nor of his entrance into the world to come, into heaven, into life eternal, as the Targum on Pſ. xl. 7. paraphraſes it, after he had done his work on earth, for the other world is never expreſſed by the world only; nor did Chriſt go into that to do the will of God, but to ſit down there, after he had done it; beſides, Chriſt's entrance into heaven was a going out of the world, and not into it. To which may be added, that this phraſe always ſignifies coming into this terrene world, and intends mens coming into it at their birth; ſee John i. 9. and the note there; and muſt be underſtood of Chriſt's incarnation, which was an inſtance of great love, condeſcenſion, and grace; and the reaſon of it was to do what the law, and the blood of bulls and goats could not do. For it follows, ſacrifice and offering thou wouldſt not; or didſt not deſire and delight in, as the word חפץ, uſed in Pſ. xl. 7. ſignifies; meaning not the ſacrifices of wicked men, or ſuch as were offered up without faith in Chriſt; but the ceremonial ſacrifices God himſelf had inſtituted, and which were offered in the beſt manner; and that not merely in a comparative ſenſe, as in Hoſ. vi. 6. 1 Sam. xv. 22. but the meaning is, that God would not have theſe continue any longer, they being only impoſed for a time, and this time being come; nor would he accept of them, as terms, conditions, and cauſes of righteouſneſs, pardon, peace, and reconciliation; but he willed that his Son ſhould offer himſelf an offering, and a ſacrifice for a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to him. But a body haſt thou prepared me; or fitted for me; a real natural body, which ſtands for the whole human nature; and is carefully expreſſed to ſhew that the human nature is not a perſon. This was prepared in the book of God's purpoſes and decrees, and in the council and covenant of grace; and was curiouſly formed by the Holy Ghoſt in time, for the ſecond perſon, the Son of God, to cloath himſelf with, as the Syriac verſion renders it, thou haſt clothed me with a body; and that he might dwell in, and in it do the will of God, and perform the work of man's redemption: in Pſ. xl. 7. it is, mine ears thou haſt opened; digged or bored, the ear being put for the whole body; for if he had not had a body prepared, he could not have had ears opened: beſides, the phraſe is expreſſive of Chriſt's aſſuming the form of a ſervant, which was done by his being found in faſhion as a man, Phil. ii. 7. and of his being a voluntary ſervant, and of his chearful obedience as ſuch, the opening, or boring of the ear was a ſign, Exod. xxi. 5, 6. And thus by having a true body prepared for him, and a willing mind to offer it up, he became fit for ſacrifice.

Ver. 6. In burnt-offerings and ſacrifices for ſin, &c.] Which were the principal kinds of offerings under the law: thou haſt had no pleaſure; not only in compariſon of moral duties, or ſpiritual ſacrifices, ſuch as thoſe of praiſe and thankſgiving, Pſ. lxix. 30, 31. but ſo as to accept of the offerers for the ſake of them, and ſmell a ſweet ſavour in them; for theſe could not ſatisfy his juſtice, appeaſe his anger, or expiate ſin; and when they were in full force, and offered in the moſt agreeable manner, they were no otherwiſe well-pleaſing to God, than as they were types of, and had reſpect unto the ſacrifice of his Son. In the Hebrew text it is, thou didſt not require, or aſk for; for them, when the time was up that Chriſt ſhould come into the world.

Ver. 7. Then ſaid I, lo I come, &c.] Chriſt obſerving that legal ſacrifices were not acceptable to God; that there was a body prepared for him; and that it was written of him in the book of God, that he ſhould come; and the time being now come, with a note of attention and admiration, the matter being of great moment and concern, he chearfully expreſſes his readineſs to come, immediately, without any compulſion, even he himſelf, and not another. In the volume of the book it is written of me; in the book of the law, as the Targum and Kimchi on Pſ. xl. 8. interpret it; and which may deſign the bible in general, the whole book of the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament: ſo ספר, the book, is uſed for the whole bible[r]; and it is ſaid[s], all the whole law, that is, all ſcripture is called, מגילה, a volume; accordingly there are things written of Chriſt in all the writings of the Old Teſtament, in the law, and in the prophets, and in the pſalms. Jarchi interprets it of the law of Moſes, and ſo it may deſign the pentateuch, or the five book of Moſes; and there are ſeveral places therein, in which it is written of Chriſt, and particularly in Geneſis, the firſt of theſe books, and in the head, the beginning, the frontiſpiece, the firſt part of that book; namely, ch. iii. 15. which may be principally deſigned. Books were formerly written in rolls of parchment, and hence called volumes; ſee the notes on Luke iv. 17, 20. The end of his coming is next expreſſed by him, to do thy will, O God; which, when he came, he ſet about with the utmoſt delight, diligence, and faithfulneſs, in preaching the Goſpel, performing miracles, doing good to the bodies and ſouls of men, and in finiſhing the great work of man's redemption, which was the main part of his Father's will he came to do; and which he did, by fulfilling the law in its precept and penalty; by offering himſelf a ſacrifice to God; by ſuffering death, the death of the croſs; by deſtroying all his, and our enemies, and ſo working out everlaſting ſalvation.

Ver. 8. Above, when he ſaid, &c.] In the afore-cited place, Pſ. xl. 7, 8. Sacrifice and offering, and burnt-offerings, and offering for ſin thou wouldſt not, neither hadſt pleaſure therein; this is a recapitulation of what is before ſaid; and all kind of ſacrifices are mentioned, to ſhew that they are all imperfect, and inſufficient, and are aboliſhed; and the abrogation of them is expreſſed in the ſtrongeſt terms, as that God would not have them, and that he took no pleaſure in them: which are offered by the law; according as that directs and enjoins: this clauſe is added, to diſtinguiſh theſe ſacrifices from ſpiritual ones, under the Goſpel diſpenſation, and which are well-pleaſing to God; and to prevent an objection againſt the abolition of them, taken from hence, that they are according to the law; and yet notwithſtanding this, God will not have them, nor accept of them.

Ver. 9. Then ſaid he, lo, I come to do thy will, O God, &c.] See the note on ver. 7. he taketh away the firſt, that he may eſtabliſh the ſecond; the ſenſe is, either that God has taken away, and aboliſhed the law, that he might eſtabliſh the Goſpel; or he has cauſed the firſt covenant to vaniſh away, that place might be found for the ſecond, or new covenant; or he has changed and abrogated the prieſthood of Aaron, that he might confirm the unchangeable prieſthood of Chriſt; or rather he has taken away that which was firſt ſpoken of in the above citation, namely, ſacrifice, offering, burnt-offerings, and ſin-offerings; theſe he has removed and rejected as inſignificant and uſeleſs, that he might eſtabliſh what is mentioned in the ſecond place; namely, the will of God, which is no other than the ſacrifice of Chriſt, offered up according to the will of God, and by which his will is done.

Ver. 10. By the which will we are ſanctified, &c.] That is, by the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which was willingly offered up by himſelf, and was according to the will of God; it was his will of purpoſe that Chriſt ſhould be crucified and ſlain; and it was his will of command, that he ſhould lay down his life for his people; and it was grateful and well-pleaſing to him, that his ſoul ſhould be made an offering for ſin; and that for this reaſon, becauſe hereby the people of God are ſanctified, their ſins are perfectly expiated, the full pardon of them is procured, their perſons are compleatly juſtified from ſin, and their conſciences purged from it: even through the offering of the body of Jeſus Chriſt once for all; this is ſaid, not to the excluſion of his ſoul; it deſigns his whole human nature, and that as in union with his divine perſon; and is particularly mentioned, in alluſion to the legal ſacrifices, the bodies of ſlain beaſts, which were types of him, and with a reference to his Father's preparation of a body for him, for this purpoſe, ver. 5. Moreover, his obedience to his Father's will was chiefly ſeen in his body; this was offered upon the croſs; and his blood, which atones for ſin, and cleanſes from it, was ſhed out of it: and this oblation was once for all; which gives it the preference to Levitical ſacrifices; deſtroys the Socinian notion of Chriſt's continual offering himſelf in heaven; and confutes the error of the Popiſh maſs, or of the offering of Chriſt's body in it.

Ver. 11. And every prieſt ſtandeth daily miniſtring, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, one of Stephens's, the Complutenſian edition, the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, every high-prieſt; who might miniſter daily, if he would; but ſince the daily ſacrifice was generally offered by the common prieſts, theſe are rather deſigned. The Apoſtle paſſes from the anniverſary ſacrifices offered by the high prieſt on the day of atonement, having ſhewn the inſufficiency and imperfection of them, to the lambs of the daily ſacrifice which were offered morning and evening, and whatſoever elſe might be daily offered on other accounts; and which he alſo ſhews, are equally ineffectual to take away ſin; almoſt every word he uſes ſhews the imperfection of the prieſthood of Aaron, and ſerves to illuſtrate the prieſthood of Chriſt. When he ſays every prieſt, it ſuppoſes there were more than one, as indeed there were many, not only in ſucceſſion to one another, but together, having different parts of ſervice to perform; and every one of them ſtandeth at the altar, ſhewing that his work was not done; and the preſent tenſe is uſed, becauſe ſacrifice in fact had not ceaſed at the writing of this Epiſtle, tho' of right it ought to have done; and he ſtood daily miniſtring; every day, and ſometimes often in a day, and always morning and night, Exod. xxix. 38, 39. The prieſt always ſtood to miniſter, Deut. xviii. 5. Hence the Jews ſay [t], there is no miniſtration or ſervice, אלא מעומד, but ſtanding; and perhaps ſome reference may be had to מעמדות, the ſtations [u], or ſtationary men, who were always upon the ſpot at Jeruſalem, to offer for ſuch as were at a diſtance. And offering oftentimes the ſame ſacrifices; as a lamb in the morning, and another at evening; and if it was a burnt-offering, or a ſin-offering, or an offering for the purification of a woman, or for the cleanſing of the leper, they were always the ſame: and this frequent offering, and the offering of the ſame things, ſhow, that they were ſuch which can never take away ſins; for notwithſtanding theſe many and repeated offerings, even the ſins of Old Teſtament ſaints remained to be atoned for by Chriſt; ſee Rom. iii. 25. Heb. ix. 15.

Ver. 12. But this man, &c.] Jeſus Chriſt, for he is a man, tho' not a mere man; or this great high-prieſt, who came to do the will of God, and whoſe body was offered once for all: after he had offered one ſacrifice for ſins; the ſacrifice of himſelf, body and ſoul, and this but once: for ever ſat down on the right hand of God; as having done his work effectually, and that with acceptance; and therefore is placed as a token of honour at the right hand of God, where he ſits enjoying reſt, eaſe, and pleaſure, and that for ever; all which is oppoſed to the prieſts under the law; they were many, he but one; they offered many ſacrifices, he but one; they offered theirs often, every day, he but once; they ſtood miniſtring, he ſat down; his ſacrifice being effectual to take away ſin, when theirs was not.

Ver. 13. From henceforth expecting, &c.] According to God's promiſe and declaration to him, Pſ. cx. 1. Till his enemies be made his footſtool. See the note on chap. i. 13.

Ver. 14. For by one offering, &c.] The ſame as before; himſelf, body and ſoul; this is a reaſon why he is ſet down, and will continue ſo for ever, and why he expects his enemies to be made his footſtool; becauſe, by one ſacrifice for ſin, which he has once offered, he hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified; that is, who are ſanctified by God the Father, Jude i. or, who are ſet apart by him in eternal election, from the reſt of the world, for his own uſe, ſervice, and glory, to a ſtate of grace and holineſs here, and happineſs hereafter; for this is not to be underſtood either of their being ſanctified in Chriſt, though the Syriac verſion reads, that are ſanctified in him, or by his Spirit, though both are true of the ſame perſons; theſe Chriſt, by his ſacrifice, has perfected, and has perfectly fulfilled the law for them; he has perfectly expiated their ſins; he has obtained the full pardon of all their ſins, and compleat redemption; he has perfectly juſtified them from all things, and that for ever; which ſhews the continued virtue of Chriſt's ſacrifice, in all generations, to all the elect of God, and the fulneſs and duration of their ſalvation; and ſo Chriſt by his one ſacrifice did, what the law, and all its ſacrifices, could not do, ver. 1.

Ver. 15. Wherefore the Holy Ghoſt alſo is a witneſs to us, &c.] In Jer. xxxi. 33, 34. This preface to the following citation ſhows, that the books of the Old Teſtament are of divine original and authority; that the penmen of them were inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt; that he exiſted in the times of the Old Teſtament; that he is truly and properly God, the Lord, or Jehovah, that ſpeaks in the following verſes; and that he is a diſtinct divine perſon, and the author of the covenant of grace; and in what he ſays in that covenant, he bears teſtimony to the truths before delivered, concerning the inſufficiency and abolition of legal ſacrifices, and of full and perfect remiſſion of ſin, by the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt: for after that he had ſaid before; what is expreſſed in the following verſe.

Ver. 16. This is the covenant that I will make with them, &c.] See the note on ch. viii. 10.

Ver. 17. And their ſins and iniquities will I remember no more.] See the note on ch. viii. 12. The words are cited to a different purpoſe here than there; the principal thing for which they are cited here, is to obſerve God's promiſe of non-remembrance of ſin; which is no other than remiſſion of ſin, and which is not conſiſtent with legal ſacrifices, in which there is a remembrance of ſin every year, ver. 3. and conſequently, ſince this new covenant has taken place, legal ſacrifices muſt be aboliſhed, as the Apoſtle argues in the next verſe. In one of Beza's copies are inſerted, at the beginning of this verſe, theſe words, then he ſaid, which ſeem neceſſary to anſwer to the laſt clauſe of ver. 15.

Ver. 18. Now where remiſſion of theſe is, &c.] That is, of theſe ſins; and that there is remiſſion of them, is evident from this promiſe of the covenant, juſt now produced; from God's gracious proclamation of it; from the ſhedding of Chriſt's blood for it; from his exaltation at the Father's right hand to give it; from the Goſpel declaration of it; and from the ſeveral inſtances of perſons favoured with it: there is no more offering for ſin; there may be other offerings, as of praiſe and thankſgiving, but none for ſin; there is no need, as the Syriac verſion; or there is not required, as the Arabic verſion; there is no need of the reiteration of Chriſt's ſacrifice, nor will he be offered up any more, nor of the repetition of legal ſacrifices, nor ought they to continue any longer. The Jews themſelves ſay[w], that "in the time "to come (i. e. in the times of the Meſſiah) all "offerings ſhall ceaſe, but the ſacrifice of praiſe." And one of their writers ſays[x], when "the king "Meſſiah, the ſon of David ſhall reign, there will "be no need of כפרה, an atonement, nor of deli"verance, or proſperity, for all theſe things will "be had."

Ver. 19. Having therefore brethren, &c.] As they were to the Apoſtle, in a natural and civil ſenſe, being Hebrews, as well as in a ſpiritual relation, being believers in Chriſt; which is obſerved, to teſtify his affection to them, and to engage their regard to the duties hereafter urged, particularly brotherly love, and to ſignify their common and equal right to the privilege next mentioned, which is, boldneſs to enter into the holieſt, by the blood of Jeſus: the place ſaints have boldneſs to enter into is heaven, called the holieſt, in reference to the holy of holies, in the tabernacle; which was a type of it, for the ſacredneſs and inviſibility of it, and for what was in it, went into it, or was brought thither; as the Shekinah, or divine majeſty, which reſided there; the high-prieſt who went into it once a year; the blood of ſacrifices which was carried into it; the ſweet incenſe; the ark of the teſtimony, in which was the law; and the mercy-ſeat; all which were typical of Chriſt, his perſon, blood, ſacrifice, righteouſneſs, interceſſion, and the grace and mercy which come thro' him. Heaven was ſymbolically ſhut by the ſin of man, when he was drove out of the garden of Eden; it was typically opened by the entrance of the high-prieſt into the holy of holies, on the day of atonement; Chriſt has in perſon entred into it by his blood, and opened the way for his people; and believers in him may enter now, and they do, when they exerciſe grace on him, who is there, and when they come and preſent their prayers and praiſes to God by him; and they have now an actual right to enter, into the place itſelf, and will hereafter enter in perſon: and the manner of their preſent entrance is, with boldneſs; which ſignifies their right unto it, the liberty granted them by God, and the liberty which they ſometimes have in their own ſouls, and great courage and intrepidity of mind; which ariſes from a ſenſe of remiſſion of ſins, as may be concluded from the connexion of theſe words with the preceding; and is found to be true by experience; and ſuch boldneſs is conſiſtent with reverence, humility, and ſubmiſſion. The way of entrance is by the blood of Jeſus; and which gives both entrance and boldneſs; for hereby ſin is removed both from the ſight of God, and the conſcience of the believer; peace is made with God, and ſpoken to him; pardon is procured, law and juſtice ſatisfied, and neither to be feared, and the everlaſting covenant confirmed.

Ver. 20. By a new and living way, &c.] Which is Chriſt, the God-man and mediator; who is called the new way, not as to contrivance, revelation, or uſe; for it was contrived before the world was, and was revealed to our firſt parents, immediately after the fall, and was made uſe of by all the Old Teſtament ſaints; but in diſtinction to the old way of life, by the covenant of works; and becauſe newly revealed with greater clearneſs and evidence; ſee ver. 8. and becauſe it is always new, it never will be old, nor otherwiſe, there never will be another way: ſome render it, a new ſlain way; becauſe Jeſus was but newly ſlain, and his blood lately ſhed, by which the way is, and entrance is with boldneſs: and Chriſt is a living way; in oppoſition to the dead carcaſſes of ſlain beaſts, and to the dead and killing letter of the law; Chriſt gives life to all his people; and all that walk in him, the way, live; and none in this way ever die; it leads to eternal life, and infallibly brings them thither: which he hath conſecrated for us; either God the Father, and ſo it intends the deſignation of Chriſt to be the way to life and happineſs, neſs, and the qualification of him for it, by preparing a body, an human nature for him, and anointing it with the Holy Spirit, and the inſtalment of him into his prieſtly office, called a conſecration, ch. vii. 28. or elſe Chriſt himſelf, and ſo deſigns his compliance with his Father's will, and his devoting of himſelf to this ſervice; his preparation of himſelf to be the way, by the ſhedding of his blood, and by his entrance into heaven, and by giving a clearer diſcovery of this way in the Goſpel, by which life and immortality are brought to light: and this is done thro' the vail, that is to ſay, his fleſh; the human nature of Chriſt, thro' which the way to heaven is opened, renewed, and conſecrated, is compared to the vail of the tabernacle, Exod. xxvi. 31, 32, 33. the matter of which that was made, was fine-twined linnen, which the Jews [y] ſay was of thread ſix times doubled; which may denote the holineſs of Chriſt's human nature; the ſtrength, courage, and ſtedfaſtneſs of it, under all its ſorrows and ſufferings; and the purity and duration of his righteouſneſs: the colours of it were blue, purple, and ſcarlet, which may ſignify the ſufferings of the human nature; the preciouſneſs of Chriſt's blood, and the dignity of his perſon, and his royalty; purple and ſcarlet, being wore by kings: the vail was of cunning work, which may intend the curious workmanſhip of Chriſt's human nature, and the graces of the Spirit, with which it is adorned; and it was made with cherubim, pointing to the miniſtration of angels, both to Chriſt, and to his people. The pillars of it may ſignify the deity of Chriſt, the ſupport of his human nature, in which it has its perſonal ſubſiſtence; and being of Shittim wood, may denote his eternity; and being covered with gold, his glory: its hooks and ſockets may be ſymbolical of the union of the two natures in him.

Ver. 21. And having an high-prieſt over the houſe of God.] The church of God, over which Chriſt is as prophet, prieſt, and king, and as the ſon and owner of it; ſee the notes on ch. iii. 6. and iv. 14. In the Greek text it is, a great prieſt; ſo the Meſſiah is called by the Targum on Zach. vi. 12. כהן רב, a great prieſt, as he is; even a great high-prieſt, as in ch. iv. 14. and greater than Aaron, and any of his ſons.

Ver. 22. Let us draw near with a true heart, &c.] Either to the holieſt of all, into which the ſaints have boldneſs to enter; or to Chriſt the high-prieſt who is entered there; or to the houſe of God, over which he is an high-prieſt; or rather to God himſelf, as on a throne of grace, on the mercy-ſeat in heaven, the moſt holy place: to draw near to him is a ſacerdotal act, common to all the ſaints, who are made prieſts to God; and includes the whole of divine worſhip, but more eſpecially deſigns prayer; to which believers are encouraged from the liberty and boldneſs they may have and uſe, of entring into the holieſt by the blood of Jeſus; from Chriſt's being the new and living way into it, and from his being an high-prieſt over the houſe of God: the manner of drawing near, is, with a true heart; not with the body only, but with the heart principally; with a renewed one, one that is right with God, and is ſingle and ſincere, is hearty in its deſires, and upright in its ends. In full aſſurance of faith; in God, Father, Son, and Spirit; without faith, drawing near to God, can neither be acceptable to him, nor of ſervice to men; and a full aſſurance of faith, with reſpect to the object drawn nigh unto, and of the way unto him, and of acceptance with him thro' Chriſt, and of having the petitions put up to him granted, is very comfortable to believers, greatly becomes them, and is well-pleaſing to God: having our hearts ſprinkled from an evil conſcience; which is blind, inactive, partial, ſtupid, or guilty; and 'tis the blood of Chriſt, which being ſprinkled on it by the Spirit of God, purges it from dead works, cleanſes it from all ſin, and ſpeaks peace and pardon to it; and ſuch may draw near with freedom and boldneſs, with readineſs and chearfulneſs, and with reverence and godly fear: and our bodies waſhed with pure water; not baptiſmal water, but the grace of the Spirit, which is often compared to water, in ſcripture: the body, as well as ſoul, needs waſhing, and renewing; internal grace influences outward actions, which adorn religion, and without which bodies cannot be preſented holy to God. The alluſion is to a cuſtom of the Jews, who were obliged to waſh their bodies, and make them clean, when they prayed. So Aben Ezra obſerves on Gen. xxxv. 2. "that every "Iſraelite, when he went to pray at a fixed place, "was obliged to have, גופו נקי, his body pure, and "his garments pure." So a prieſt might not enter into the court for ſervice, tho' clean, until he had waſhed himſelf all over [z]; and it is to ſacerdotal acts that the reference is here.

Ver. 23. Let us hold faſt the profeſſion of our faith without wavering, &c.] Either in the grace or doctrine of faith, or in the profeſſion of both; ſee the note on ch. iv. 14. For he is faithful that promiſed; that is, God; and it is true of Father, Son, and Spirit; but God the Father may be more eſpecially deſigned: he is a promiſing God, and is known to be ſo by his people; he is eminently and emphatically the promiſer; and all other promiſers, and the promiſes made by them, ſignify little; but the promiſes of God are exceeding great and precious, very ancient, free, and unconditional, irrevocable and immutable, and are admirably ſuited to the caſes of his people, and will be fulfilled every one of them: they include in them things temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal; things temporal, as that his people ſhall not want, that their afflictions ſhall work for good, and that he will ſupport them under all their troubles; things ſpiritual, as that he will be their God, which takes in his everlaſting love to them, and his gracious preſence with them, and his protection of them; and that all grace ſhall be wrought in them, and every bleſſing of grace beſtowed on them: and things eternal; as everlaſting glory and happineſs; the promiſe of eternal life was in God's heart, made in the covenant, and put into Chriſt's hands before the world began, and is declared in the Goſpel: now God is faithful to all his promiſes, nor can he fail, or deceive; he is all-wiſe and fore-knowing of every thing that comes to paſs; he never changes his mind, nor forgets his word; and he is able to perform, and is the God of truth, and cannot lye; nor has he ever failed in any one of his promiſes, nor will he ſuffer his faithfulneſs to fail; and this is a ſtrong argument to hold faſt a profeſſion of faith.

Ver. 24. And let us conſider one another, &c.] Saints ſhould conſider one another as men, that they are but men, of like paſſions and infirmities; they ſhould conſider their different tempers, and make allowance for them, and their outward ſtate and condition in the world: they ſhould conſider one another as ſaints, partakers of the ſame grace; as that they are all loved with the ſame love, all conceived and brought forth in the womb of God's eternal electing grace, intereſted in the ſame covenant, redeemed by the ſame blood, and have the ſame graces and privileges, and an equal right to glory; having one and the ſame ſpirit, the ſame grace of faith, the ſame righteouſneſs, the ſame fountain to waſh in, the ſame fulneſs to partake of, the ſame throne of grace to go to, and the ſame inheritance to enjoy: they ſhould conſider one another as church members, the grace and gifts of one another, their different age and ſtanding in the church, their relation to each other as brethren; they ſhould conſider them under ſuffering or ſorrowful circumſtances, under afflictions, temptations, deſertions, declenſions, and as attended with infirmities and ſins: and the end of ſuch conſideration ſhould be, to provoke unto love; to brotherly love, to ſtir it up, and ſtir up to it, which is apt to wax cold, that ſo it may be rekindled, and give a moſt vehement flame; for this is Chriſt's new commandment, the bond of perfection, the evidence of regeneration, that which makes the ſaints communion comfortable and delightful, and without which a profeſſion of religion is in vain. And to good works; not for juſtification before God, and in order to procure ſalvation; but that God may be glorified, the Goſpel adorned, the mouths of gainſayers ſtopped, faith evidenced to the world, and gratitude to God for his benefits ſhewn, and for the profit and advantage of fellow-creatures, and fellow-chriſtians.

Ver. 25. Not forſaking the aſſembling of ourſelves together, &c.] Or the epiſynagogue of one another; which word is uſed to diſtinguiſh chriſtian aſſemblies from Jewiſh ſynagogues, and to denote the coalition of Jews and Gentiles in one church-ſtate, and to expreſs the ſaints gathering together to Chriſt; ſee 2 Theſſ. ii. 1. and their act of meeting together in ſome one place to attend his worſhip, word, and ordinances. Now to forſake ſuch aſſembling, ſignifies a great infrequency in attending with the ſaints, a rambling from place to place, and takes in an entire apoſtacy. It is the duty of ſaints to aſſemble together for public worſhip, on the account of God, who has appointed it, who approves of it, and whoſe glory is concerned in it; and on the account of the ſaints themſelves, that they may be delighted, refreſhed, comforted, inſtructed, edified, and perfected; and on account of others, that they may be convinced, converted, and brought to the knowledge and faith of Chriſt; and in imitation of the primitive ſaints. And an aſſembling together ought not to be forſaken; for it is a forſaking God, and their own mercies, and ſuch are like to be forſaken of God; nor is it known what is loſt hereby; and it is the firſt outward, viſible ſtep to apoſtacy, and often iſſues in it. As the manner of ſome is; or cuſtom; and this prevailing cuſtom among theſe Jews might ariſe from contempt of the Gentiles, or from fear of reproach and perſecution: and in our day, this evil practice ariſes ſometimes from a vain conceit of being in no need of ordinances, and from an over-love of the world, and from a great declenſion in the exerciſe of grace; the conſequence of it is very bad. The Jews[a] reckon among thoſe that go down to hell, and periſh, and have no part in the world to come, הפורשים מדרכי צבור, who ſeparate from the ways of the congregation; that is, who do not do the duties thereof, attend with it, and faſt when that does, and the like: but exhorting one another; to prayer, to attend public worſhip, to regard all the duties of religion, to adhere to Chriſt, and a profeſſion of him, and to conſider him, and walk on in him: or comforting one another; by meeting privately together, and conferring about experience, and the doctrines of grace; and by obſerving to one another the promiſes of God, relating to public worſhip; and by putting each other in mind of the bright day of the Lord, that is coming on: and ſo much the more, as ye ſee the day approaching; either of death, or the laſt judgment, or rather of Jeruſalem's deſtruction; which at the writing of this Epiſtle was near at hand; and was an affair that greatly concerned theſe Hebrews; and by various ſymptoms might be obſerved by them, as approaching; and which was no inconſiderable argument to engage them to a diligent diſcharge of their duty; unleſs the day of darkneſs, infidelity, and blaſphemy in the laſt days of the world, ſhould be intended, after which will ſucceed the latter day glory.

Ver. 26. For if we ſin wilfully, &c.] Which is not to be underſtood of a ſingle act of ſin, but rather of a courſe of ſinning; nor of ſins of infirmity thro' temptation, or even of groſſer acts of ſin, but of voluntary ones; and not of all voluntary ones, or in which the will is engaged and concerned, but of ſuch which are done on ſet purpoſe, reſolutely and obſtinately; and not of immoral practices, but of corrupt principles, and acting according to them; it intends a total apoſtacy from the truth, againſt light and evidence, joined with obſtinacy. After that we have received the knowledge of the truth; either of Jeſus Chriſt, or of the ſcriptures, or of the Goſpel, or of ſome particular doctrine, eſpecially the principal one, ſalvation by Chriſt; of which there may be a notional knowledge, when there is no experimental knowledge; and which is received not into the heart, but into the head: and whereas the Apoſtle ſpeaks in the firſt perſon plural we, this is uſed not ſo much with regard to himſelf, but others; that ſo what he delivered might come with greater weight upon them, and be more readily received by them; when they obſerved he entertained no hard thoughts or jealouſies of them, which would greatly diſtreſs the minds of thoſe that were truly gracious. Moreover, the Apoſtles uſe this way of ſpeaking, when they don't deſign themſelves at all, but others, under the ſame viſible profeſſion of religion, and who belonged to the ſame community of believers; ſee 1 Pet. iv. 3. Tit. iii. 3. Eph. ii. 3. compared with Acts xxii. 3. and xxvi. 5. Phil. iii. 6. Beſides, theſe words are only hypothetical, and don't prove that true believers could, or ſhould, or do ſin in this manner: to which may be added, that true believers are manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from theſe perſons, ver. 38, 39. there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſins; meaning, not typical ſacrifice; for tho' the daily ſacrifice ought to have ceaſed at the death of Chriſt, yet it did not in fact until the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; but the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which will never be repeated; Chriſt will die no more; his blood will not be ſhed again; nor his ſacrifice reiterated; nor will any other ſacrifice be offered; there will be no other ſaviour; there is no ſalvation in any other, nor any other name whereby we muſt be ſaved. Theſe words have been wrongly made uſe of to prove that perſons ſinning after baptiſm, are not to be reſtored to communion again upon repentance; and being underſtood of immoral actions wilfully committed, have given great diſtreſs to conſciences burdened with the guilt of ſin, committed after a profeſſion of religion: but the true ſenſe of the whole is this, that after men have embraced and profeſſed the truths of the Goſpel, and particularly this great truth of it, that Jeſus Chriſt is the only ſaviour of men by his blood and ſacrifice; and yet after this, againſt all evidence, all the light and convictions of their own conſciences, they wilfully deny this truth, and obſtinately perſiſt in the denial of it; ſeeing there is no more, no other ſacrifice for ſin, no other ſaviour, nor any ſalvation in any other way, the caſe of theſe men muſt be deſperate; there is no help for them, nor hope of them; for by this their ſin they ſhut up againſt themſelves, in principle and practice, the way of ſalvation, as follows.

[a] T. Bab. Roſh Haſhanah, fol. 17. 1. Maimon. Hilch. Teſhuba, c. 3. §. 6, 11.

Ver. 27. But a certain fearful looking for of judgment, &c.] Either of ſome outward viſible judgment in this life, which ſometimes falls on ſuch perſons; or of the particular judgment, which immediately follows after death; or of the univerſal judgment after the reſurrection, and the dreadful ſentence of condemnation which will then paſs, and be immediately executed; and which will be done by Chriſt, and according to truth, and in ſtrict juſtice; it is certain, and there will be no eſcaping it, for it will be general. Now there is in this life an expectation in men of a future judgment, and in wicked men it is a fearful one; it is dreaded by them, and more eſpecially in ſuch men before deſcribed, when their conſciences are awakened; it is a very dreadful one, inexpreſſibly ſo: and fiery indignation which ſhall devour the adverſaries; which is to be underſtood, not of the fire of purgatory, for this is after judgment, that is pretended to be before it; this devours, that only purges, according to the papiſts; this is for adverſaries, that, as is ſuppoſed, is for friends: but perhaps ſome fiery judgment, expreſſive of the wrath and indignation of God, ſuch as befel Sodom and Gomorrha, the two ſons of Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and the men that roſe up with Korah againſt Moſes and Aaron: or rather the fire of hell, which is not corporal and material, but is the wrath of God let down into the conſcience; which ſhews the vile nature of ſin, the ſtrictneſs of God's juſtice, and the intolerableneſs of future puniſhment: and this is ſaid to devour the adverſaries; not only open ones, but ſecret, under-hand enemies, as the word here ſignifies; as ſuch apoſtates are, before deſcribed, to God, and Chriſt, and the Spirit; to the Goſpel, its doctrine, diſcipline, and ordinances; and to the children of God, and to the power of godlineſs in them: and with the fire of God's wrath, they ſhall be devoured; not ſo as to be annihilated, but ſhall be eternally deſtroyed both ſoul and body; that is, everlaſtingly puniſhed, or puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction.

Ver. 28. He that deſpiſed Moſes's law, &c.] By breaking it wilfully, and preſumptuouſly, for which there was no ſacrifice; meaning the law which Moſes was the miniſter of, not the author; and it reſpects the whole body of laws given by him, from God; and is inſtanced in for the ſake of the compariſon between him and Chriſt, and between the law and the Goſpel, and for the illuſtration of the caſe in hand. Now one that tranſgreſſed that law, either in whole, or in part, by denying it entirely, or by breaking any particular precept of it, preſumptuouſly, died without mercy; a corporal death; there was no atonement nor ſacrifice for him, nor pity to be ſhewn him, Deut. xiii. 8. and xix. 13. Under two or three witneſſes; who ſtood by, or were preſent, as the Arabic verſion renders it, when the tranſgreſſion was committed; or that accuſed him, as the Ethiopic verſion; that were witneſſes againſt him, and plainly and fully proved the fact, Deut. xvii. 6. and xix. 15.

Ver. 29. Of how much ſorer puniſhment, &c.] Than a mere corporal death, which was the puniſhment inflicted on the tranſgreſſors of the law of Moſes. Suppoſe ye; the Apoſtle appeals to the Hebrews themſelves, and makes them judges of what puniſhment ſhall he be thought worthy; who is deſcribed as follows: who hath trodden under foot the Son of God: this ſeems to be a ſtronger expreſſion than crucifying him again, ch. vi. 6. and is to be underſtood, not of what was in fact committed, but in will by perſons; who could they have had their will of him, would have pulled him from his throne, and trampled upon him: it is a phraſe expreſſive of the utmoſt ſcorn, contempt, and ill uſage; and which ſuch are guilty of, who deny his deity, and eternal Sonſhip; who render him uſeleſs in his offices, undervalue his ſacrifice, deſpiſe his righteouſneſs, and ſtrip him of the glory of his perſon, office, and grace. And this is aggravated by his being the Son of God, who is thus uſed, who became the ſon of man for the ſake of men, is ſuperior to men, and equal with God: and hath counted the blood of the covenant wherewith he was ſanctified, an unholy thing; or common thing; putting it upon a level with the blood of a bullock, or at moſt counting it, איך דכלנש, as that of another man, as the Syriac verſion renders it; yea, reckoning it as unclean and abominable, as the blood of a very wicked man: this is aggravated by its being the blood of the covenant; of the covenant of grace, becauſe that is ratified and confirmed by it, and the bleſſings of it come thro' it; and from ſanctification by it: either of the perſon, the apoſtate himſelf, who was ſanctified or ſeparated from others by a viſible profeſſion of religion; having given himſelf up to a church, to walk with it in the ordinances of the Goſpel; and having ſubmitted to baptiſm, and partook of the Lord's ſupper, and drank of the cup, the blood of the New Teſtament, or covenant; tho' he did not ſpiritually diſcern the body and blood of Chriſt in the ordinance, but counted the bread and wine, the ſymbols of them, as common things; or who profeſſed himſelf, and was looked upon by others, to be truly ſanctified by the Spirit, and to be juſtified by the blood of Chriſt, tho' he was not really ſo: or rather the Son of God himſelf is meant, who was ſanctified, ſet apart, hallowed, and conſecrated, as Aaron and his ſons were ſanctified by the ſacrifices of ſlain beaſts, to miniſter in the prieſt's office: ſo Chriſt, when he had offered himſelf, and ſhed his precious blood, by which the covenant of grace was ratified, by the ſame blood he was brought again from the dead, and declared to be the Son of God with power; and being ſet down at God's right hand, he ever lives to make interceſſion, which is the other part of his prieſtly office he is ſanctified by his own blood to accompliſh. This clauſe, wherewith he was ſanctified, is left out in the Alexandrian copy: and hath done deſpight unto the Spirit of grace; by denying his being, deity, and perſonality; deſpiſing his powerful operations as enthuſiaſm; treating his extraordinary gifts as illuſions; and aſcribing his miracles to ſatan, and repreſenting the Goſpel dictated by him, as a fable, or a lye: and this is aggravated by his being the Spirit of grace; the author, giver, and applier of all grace to the ſaints; and who therefore ought not to be in the leaſt ſlighted, but highly eſteemed and honoured; nor will ſuch affronts go unpuniſhed.

Ver. 30. For we know him that hath ſaid, &c.] That is God, whom the Apoſtle and the Hebrews knew; not merely by the works of creation and providence, but by the ſcriptures, which they were favoured with, and by which they were diſtinguiſhed from the Gentiles, and by which they knew his being, nature, and perfections; particularly, that what he ſaid he was able to perform, and that he was true and faithful to every word of his, and to what he has ſaid, Deut. xxxii. 35. vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompenſe, ſaith the Lord. Vengeance belongs to God, not as to the affection, as if there was any ſuch paſſion in him; but as to the effect, there being that produced by him, which anſwers to the effect of ſuch a paſſion among men, namely puniſhment: and puniſhment for ſin belongs to God, againſt whom it is committed; and not to heathen deities, one of which goes by the name of vengeance, Acts xxviii. 4. nor to ſatan, and his ſpiteful angels; nor to men, to exerciſe it in a private and perſonal way; though civil magiſtrates, being in God's ſtead, are allowed to exerciſe it in a public way, according to the laws of God: and there is good reaſon to believe, that what the Lord here ſays, I will recompenſe, or revenge ſin, ſhall be done; which may be concluded from his hatred of ſin; from his purity, holineſs, and juſtice; from his faithfulneſs to his word; from his omnipotence; from the notice he takes of ſin, in his own people, in a way of chaſtiſement, and correction; and from the vengeance he has poured on his own Son, as their ſurety. And again, in Deut. xxxii. 36. the Lord ſhall judge his people; ſuch as are truly ſo, his choſen and covenant people, his redeemed and called ones; theſe he judges by chaſtizing them in a fatherly way, that they may not be condemned with the world; and by governing and protecting them; and by vindicating and pleading their cauſe, and avenging them on their enemies: or elſe ſuch as are only his people by profeſſion; on theſe he'll write a lo-ammi; he diſtinguiſhes them from his own, and judges between them, and his people, and will condemn them; nor will their profeſſion ſkreen them from his wrath and vengeance.

Ver. 31. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.] For this is to be underſtood not in a good ſenſe; ſo in general all mankind may be ſaid to fall into, or be in the hands of God, as they are the work of his hands, the care of his providence, and are ſubject to his ſovereignty; and in eſpecial manner, believers, whoſe times and perſons are in God's hand, which beſpeaks his great affection for them, their nearneſs to him, the ſupport they have by him, and protection from him; and they chuſe to fall into the hands of him as a chaſtizing father, rather than into the hands of men, and at death commend themſelves into his hands: but here it is taken in a bad ſenſe, and ſignifies to be arreſted by juſtice as a criminal, and be brought to the bar of God, and receive the ſentence of condemnation; when ſuch will feel the weight of his hand, and the fierceneſs of his wrath; and this is a fearful thing: it is a dreadful thing to fall into the hands of men, injured and affronted, and that have power, and will ſhew no mercy; it is very tremendous to fall into the hands of God, in the way of his judgments in this world; the apprehenſions of a future judgment are terrible before hand; and the apparatus of the judgment, when it comes, will be very ſtriking and ſurprizing; but to ſtand before the judge, charged with ſin, naked, and without a righteouſneſs, ſpeechleſs, and no one to ſpeak in favour of them; to hear the dreadful ſentence pronounced, and feel the wrath of God to the uttermoſt, how horrible muſt this be! the aggravations of this are, that it is into the hands of God, that ſuch fall, and not into the hands of men, or mere creatures; but of God, who is omniſcient, and ſees thro' all pretences; omnipotent, and none can reſcue out of his hands by force; omnipreſent, and [illegible] no eſcaping from him; juſt and faithful, and not to be bribed, inexorable, immutable and unalterable: and that he is the living God; in oppoſition to the lifeleſs deities of the Gentiles, and to mortal men; and is expreſſive of his eternity, and ſo of the duration of the ſinner's puniſhment, that falls into his hands.

Ver. 32. But call to remembrance the former days, &c.] The words may be conſidered, either as a declaration of what they had done, and be read, but ye do call to remembrance, &c. or as an exhortation to remember the days of their eſpouſals, the times of their firſt converſion: and the Apoſtle's deſign in this, is, to mitigate the terror the preceding words might ſtrike them with; and to aggravate the diſgrace of turning back, when they had behaved ſo bravely in former times; and to encourage their faith and truſt in God: in which after ye were illuminated, by the ſpirit of God, to ſee their impurity, impotence, and unrighteouſneſs, and their loſt and miſerable ſtate by nature; and to behold Chriſt and ſalvation by him; and to have ſome light into the doctrines of the Goſpel; and ſome glimmering of the glories of another world. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render it baptized; now ſuch as are converted, and are brought to make a publick profeſſion of their faith, and ſubmit to the ordinances of Chriſt, are, in common, immediately called to ſuffer reproach and perſecution of one kind or another; ſo Chriſt, after his baptiſm, was led into the wilderneſs to be tempted by the devil: Satan is ſpiteful and malicious, and God ſuffers afflictions to befall his people to try their graces, and to inure them to troubles betimes, as follows; ye endured a great fight of afflictions; meaning ſome violent perſecution from their own countrymen, either at the death of Stephen, in which the Apoſtle, being then unconverted, was concerned himſelf; or rather ſome other time of trouble, after the Apoſtle was converted, to which he ſeems to have reſpect in 1 Theſſ. ii. 14, 15. theſe Hebrews, being enliſted as ſoldiers under Chriſt, the captain of their ſalvation, were quickly engaged in a warfare, and were called forth to fight a fight of afflictions, and a very great one; and which they endured with patience, courage, and intrepidity.

Ver. 33. Partly whilſt ye were made a gazingſtock, &c.] Brought upon the ſtage or theatre, and made a ſpectacle to the world, angels, and men, 1 Cor. iv. 9. both by reproaches and afflictions; ſuffering both in their characters and reputations, and in their perſons and ſubſtance: and partly whilſt ye became companions of them that were ſo uſed; they maintained their communion with them, relieved them in diſtreſs, and ſympathized with them.

Ver. 34. For ye had compaſſion of me in my bonds, &c.] When he was bound at Jeruſalem, by the chief captain Lyſias, with two chains, Acts xxi. 33. or when he was in bonds elſewhere; which they did by ſympathizing with him in their hearts; by their prayers for him, and in their letters to him; and by ſending preſents to him for his relief and ſupport.

The Alexandrian copy, and two of Stephens's, the Vulgate Latin, and Syriac verſions, read, had compaſſion on the priſoners; or them that were bound; meaning priſoners in general, remembring them that were in bonds, as bound with them; or particularly ſuch, as were priſoners for the ſake of Chriſt, and his Goſpel; and it may be ſome of them, which the Apoſtle himſelf committed to priſon, in his ſtate of unregeneracy: and took joyfully the ſpoiling of your goods; the furniture of their houſes, their worldly ſubſtance, of which they were ſtripped by their perſecutors; and this they took quietly and patiently, yea, joyfully; rejoicing that they were counted worthy to ſuffer the confiſcation of their goods, for the ſake of Chriſt: the reaſon of which joy, was, knowing in yourſelves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring ſubſtance: that which is laid up for the ſaints in heaven is ſubſtance; it is ſignified by an houſe, a city, a kingdom; and ſo it is rendred here in the Ethiopic verſion; and by riches, true, glorious, and durable; and by a treaſure and an inheritance: and this is better than any thing in this world; as to the quality of it, it being celeſtial; and as to the quantity of it, it being all things; and as to the place where it is, in heaven; tho' this clauſe is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions; and as to the company with whom it is enjoyed, ſaints in light; yea, God himſelf is the portion of his people: and this is an enduring ſubſtance; it cannot be waſted by the ſaints themſelves; nor taken away from them by others; nor can it decay in its own nature; and the ſaints will always endure to enjoy it: and this they may be ſaid to have; it is promiſed to them, and prepared for them; they have a right unto it, and the earneſt of it; and they have it already in Chriſt, their head and repreſentative; ſo that it is, upon all accounts, ſure unto them: and this they know in themſelves; from what they find and feel in their own hearts; from the ſealing teſtimony and earneſt of the ſpirit, and from the promiſe of Chriſt, Matt. v. 10.

Ver. 35. Caſt not away therefore your confidence, &c.] The ſame word is uſed here, as in ver. 19. where it is tranſlated boldneſs; and may deſign here, as there, an holy boldneſs in prayer, free from a ſervile and baſhful ſpirit; and which appears in a liberty of ſpeaking to God, and in a confidence of being heard; prayer itſelf ſhould not be left off, nor ſhould freedom, boldneſs, and confidence in it be ſlackened, or laid aſide: or elſe a profeſſion of faith is intended, which ought to be free and open, bold and courageous, firm and conſtant; and which ought by no means to be let go and dropped: or the grace of faith in its full aſſurance, with reſpect to intereſt in God, as a covenant God and father, and in his love; and with reſpect to intereſt in Chriſt, and in his grace, and a right to the glorious inheritance, the better and enduring ſubſtance; and this ſhield of faith is by no means to be caſt away; it was reckoned infamous and ſcandalous in ſoldiers, to loſe or caſt away their ſhield; with the Grecians it was a capital crime, and puniſhed with death[b]; to which the Apoſtle may here allude. There are two ſorts of believers, nominal and real; and there are two ſorts of faith; an hiſtorical one, which may be in perſons deſtitute of the grace of God, and is in devils; and a true and unfeigned one, which has ſalvation connected with it; the former may be caſt away and loſt; the latter, though it may be remiſs and weak in its exerciſe, yet it cannot be wholly and finally loſt; and this exhortation may be deſigned, as a means of continuing it, and of perſeverance in it: the reaſon urging it follows, which hath great recompence of reward; freedom and boldneſs in prayer has its reward, for ſuch that aſk in faith ſhall have; and ſo has a firm and conſtant profeſſion of religion, for he that endures to the end ſhall be ſaved; and ſo has a true and ſtrong faith in Chriſt; everlaſting ſalvation is connected with it; the reward of the inheritance follows upon it; and this reward is the recompence of God's own grace: and it is a very great one; it is the fruit of great love and grace; yea, it is no other than God himſelf, who is the exceeding great reward of his people; it is Chriſt and his glory, and the riches of it; it is a reward exceeding, and beyond all deſerts of men, and beyond all thought and expreſſion.

Ver. 36. For ye have need of patience, &c.] Not that they were deſtitute of the grace of patience; for where God is the God of all grace, he is the God of patience; and ſuch, who are called by grace, are conformed to the image of Chriſt, and, among other things, are like him in this; and thoſe who are born of the Spirit, have the fruits of the Spirit, and this, among the reſt; to whom the word of God is effectual, this fruit is produced in them, that being the word of patience; and ſuch who are brought into the kingdom of Chriſt, are alſo in the patience of Jeſus; where there is one grace, there is every grace; ſaints are immediately called to ſufferings and trials, which require patience; and, without this, there can be no enjoyment of a man's ſelf: but the meaning is, that they needed the continuance, exerciſe, and increaſe of it; in general, to run the race ſet before them; to bear afflictions from the hand of God, and reproaches and perſecutions from men; to wait for God, when he hides his face, and for anſwers of prayer, when they are deferred; and to bear up, and not to ſink under temptations; and to live in the conſtant expectation of heaven and happineſs: and, in particular, it is neceſſary for the following, that after ye have done the will of God: there is the purpoſing will of God, which is done by himſelf; and there is his revealed will, touching the ſalvation of men, which is done by his ſon; and there is his will of precept to be done by men; and which, when done aright, is done according to the rule of his word, in faith, from love, through the ſtrength of Chriſt, and by the aſſiſtance of his Spirit and grace, with a view to his glory, and without any dependance on what is done: and the will of God regards ſuffering, as well as doing; for to that the ſaints are alſo called, to which patience is neceſſary: ye might receive the promiſe; that is, of eternal life; not the promiſe itſelf, which they had received already, but the thing promiſed; which is the ſenſe, in which this word is often uſed in this book, chap. vi. 12, 17. and xi. 13, 39. which is ſo called, to ſhew that it is not of works, for promiſe and merit do not agree together; but that it is of grace, and will certainly be enjoyed, but muſt be patiently waited for.

Ver. 37. For yet a little while, and he that ſhall come will come, &c.] That the perſon ſpoken of, is the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, is evident from the prophecy in Hab. ii. 3. here referred to, and from the character of him that is to come, Matt. xi. 3. and from parallel places, Jam. v. 7, 8, 9. and this is to be underſtood, not of his coming in the fleſh, for he was come in the fleſh already; though Habakkuk indeed refers to his firſt coming, yet not to that only, but including his ſecond coming alſo; but of his coming in his kingdom and power to deſtroy Jeruſalem, and take vengeance on the Jews, for their rejection of him: the kingdom of Chriſt was at hand, when he began to preach; upon his aſcenſion to heaven, it began to appear more viſible; but ſtill the temple was ſtanding, and that worſhip continued, which ſtood in the way of the glory of his kingdom; during which time the ſaints ſuffered much: but in a little while, from the writing of this Epiſtle, he, who was to come, did come, even within about ten years after this, and ſhewed his power and his glory, in delivering his people, and deſtroying his enemies; ſee Matt. xvi. 28. Mark ix. 1. It may be applied to his coming to help his people in time of need; the afflictions of the ſaints are many; they are all for an appointed time, and but for a while; and Chriſt has promiſed to come, and viſit them; and which he does often, and ſpeedily, and ſeaſonably: it may alſo be accommodated to Chriſt coming to take his people to himſelf by death; Chriſt may be ſaid to come in this ſenſe, and he will certainly come; and this will be in a little while; man is but of few days; death is certain, and ſhould be patiently expected: and it may likewiſe be ſuitably improved, with reſpect to Chriſt's coming to judgment; that he will come is certain, from prophecies, particularly from the prophecy of Enoch, from his own words, from the teſtimony of angels, from the inſtitution of the Lord's ſupper, 'till he comes, and from the general expectation of the ſaints; and this coming of his is deſirable, becauſe it will be the marriage of the lamb, and the redemption of the ſaints, and becauſe of the grace and glory, that will be brought unto them, and becauſe they ſhall then be for ever with him; and this will be quickly, in a little time, in compariſon of the time that went before his firſt coming, and of the eternity that will follow after this; and tho' it may ſeem long, yet with God it is but a little while, with whom a thouſand years are as one day; and however, ſince it is certain that he will come, and will not tarry, beyond the appointed time, patience ſhould be exerciſed.

[b] Alex. ab Alexand. Genial. Dier. l. 2. c. 13.

Ver. 38. Now the juſt ſhall live by faith, &c.] The juſt man is one not in appearance only, but in reality; not by his obedience to the law, but by the obedience of Chriſt; and he is evidently ſo by the Spirit, and by faith: and he is one, who lives ſoberly and righteouſly; and the life he lives, and ſhall live, at preſent, is not eternal life; for tho' he ſhall live that life, yet this is not intended; for it is a living by faith, that is ſpoken of, and as antecedent to the coming of Chriſt; but a ſpiritual life is meant, a life of juſtification in Chriſt, a life of communion with Chriſt, and a life of holineſs from Chriſt, with peace, joy, and comfort through him: and the manner of this juſt man's living is by faith; not upon his faith, but upon Chriſt, the object of it; and by his faith, as in Hab. ii. 4. his own, and not another's; or by the faith of Chriſt: the Syriac verſion here renders it, by the faith of my ſelf; that is, by the faith of Chriſt, who ſpeaks, and who is the author and object of faith: the Alexandrian copy and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, my juſt man ſhall live by faith; and this life is to be now, in the mean while, until Chriſt comes, and becauſe he will certainly come: but if any man draw back, my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him. The Hebrew Word עפלה, uſed in Hab. ii. 4. and which, by the Septuagint there, and by the Apoſtle here, is tranſlated by υποϛειληται, and rendred draw back; according to R. David Kimchi[c], ſignifies pride and haughtineſs of heart; and, according to R. Sol. Jarchi[d] it ſignifies impudence; R. Moſes Kimchi[e] takes it to be the ſame with עפל, which is uſed for a tower, or fortified place; and thinks, it deſigns one, who betakes himſelf to ſuch a place for ſafety from the enemy, and ſeeks not to God for deliverance: ſo that ſuch a perſon ſeems to be deſigned, who ſwells with pride and confidence in his own righteouſneſs; who betakes himſelf to ſome fortreſs of his own for ſafety; who withdraws from the aſſembly of the ſaints, thro' fear of reproach and perſecution; who witholds the truth, ſhuns to declare it, or maintain a profeſſion of it; plays the hypocrite, and deals deceitfully in religious things; and, in ſhort, it may intend one, who finally and totally apoſtatizes from the doctrine of faith, and the profeſſion of it: and in ſuch perſons God has no pleaſure, never had, nor never will have; but, on the contrary, they are abominable to him, and will lie under his ſore diſpleaſure, and feel the keen reſentments of it; ſuch ſtand oppoſed to the juſt man, that lives by faith, walks humbly with God, in a dependance, not on his own righteouſneſs, but on the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, in which he is ſafe from condemnation, and ſecure of the divine favour; for drawing back is not ſuppoſed of the juſt man, but of any man, as we, with the Ethiopic verſion, rightly ſupply; and is to be underſtood of any one of the external profeſſors of religion, who forſake the aſſembling of the ſaints, ver. 25. and is denied of the truly righteous in the following words.

Ver. 39. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition, &c.] There is a drawing back which is not unto perdition; perſons may be attended with much unbelief, may be very cold and indifferent to Goſpel ordinances, may fall into great ſins, and may greatly backſlide, and yet be recovered, as David, Peter, and others: and there is a drawing back to perdition; when Chriſt is rejected as the alone ſaviour; when he is not held to as the head; when falſe doctrines, and damnable hereſies are given into; and when men draw back, and never return, nor are they, nor can they be returned, and their apoſtacy is total, and final: but true believers do not, and cannot draw back in this ſenſe; becauſe they are held faſt in the arms, and with the cords of everlaſting love, are choſen of God unto ſalvation, are given unto Chriſt, and ſecured in him; they are redeemed and purchaſed by him; they are united to him, and built upon him; they are intereſted in his prayers and preparations, and are his jewels, and his portion; they are regenerated, ſanctified, inhabited, and ſealed by the Spirit of God, and have the promiſes and power of God on their ſide. But of them that believe to the ſaving of the ſoul; or of faith, to the ſalvation of the ſoul; not of faith of miracles, nor of an hiſtorical faith; but of that faith, which is the faith of God's elect, is the gift of God, and the operation of his Spirit; by which a ſoul ſees Chriſt, goes to him, lays holds on him, commits all to him, and expects all from him: this ſtands oppoſed to drawing back; for by faith a man lives, walks, and ſtands; and with this is connected the ſalvation of the ſoul, as oppoſed to perdition; not as tho' it is a cauſe of ſalvation, but as a means of God's appointing to receive the bleſſings of ſalvation, and which is entirely conſiſtent with the grace of God; and ſince ſalvation and faith are inſeparably connected together, ſo that he that has the one ſhall have the other, it follows, that true believers can never periſh. The nature and excellency of this grace is largely treated of in the following chapter.

CHAP. XI.

THE Apoſtle having, in the preceding chapter, ſpoken in commendation of the grace, and life of faith, and of its uſefulneſs to preſerve from apoſtacy, proceeds in this to give ſome account of the nature and actings of it; and which he illuſtrates by the examples of many of the Old Teſtament ſaints: he begins with a definition of it, which conſiſts of two parts, ver. 1. and with an account of the uſefulneſs of it to the elders in general, who by it obtained a good report, ver. 2. and of the ſervice it is of in underſtanding the creation of the worlds, the author and original of them, ver. 3. and then goes on to give particular inſtances and examples of faith among the elders, or ancient believers, which are reduced into ſeveral claſſes; and the firſt is of the ſaints before the flood, Abel, Enoch, and Noah. Abel's faith lay in offering a more excellent ſacrifice than Cain, in obtaining a teſtimony from God that he was righteous, and in yet ſpeaking, tho' dead, ver. 4. Enoch's faith is evidenced by his tranſlation of God, that he ſhould not ſee death, and by the teſtimony he received from him before it, that he was acceptable to him; by which it is clear he had faith, ſince without it, it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; nor can any come aright unto him, without believing that he is, and has a gracious reſpect to all that diligently ſeek him, ver. 5, 6. Noah's faith was ſeen in preparing an ark, by the order of God, for the ſaving of his family, and in condemning the world by ſo doing, and by becoming an heir of righteouſneſs thro' faith, ver. 7. The next claſs is, that of the ſaints from the flood, to the times of Moſes, in which are Abraham and Sarah, Iſaac, Jacob, and Joſeph. Abraham's faith is celebrated for his obedience to the divine call, quitting the country where he was, and going he knew not where; and for his ſojourning in the promiſed land, as in a ſtrange one, in which Iſaac and Jacob dwelt with him in tabernacles; and for looking by faith for the heavenly city built by the Lord; and for his offering up his ſon at the command of God, who was the ſon of promiſe, believing God was able to raiſe him from the dead, from whence he received him by faith, ver. 8, 9, 10, 17, 18, 19. Sarah's faith lay in receiving ſtrength thro' it to conceive, bear, and bring forth a child when paſt age, which was founded upon the faithfulneſs of a promiſing God; hence from Abraham, by her, ſprung a large poſterity, like the ſtars of the ſky, and the ſand on the ſea-ſhore, ver. 11, 12. Now all theſe patriarchs, both before and after the flood, as they lived by faith, they died in it; who, though they had not received the things promiſed, yet by faith ſaw them at a diſtance, were very well perſuaded they would come to paſs, and ſo, in ſome ſenſe, enjoyed them; hence, whilſt they lived, they lived like pilgrims and ſtrangers, ſhewing that they had no regard to the country they came from, and had no mind to return thither, but ſought another, a better, and an heavenly one; ſo that God is not aſhamed to be called their God, he having prepared a city for them, ver. 13, 14, 15, 16. Iſaac's faith is commended in bleſſing his two ſons with reſpect to things future, ver. 20. and Jacob's faith is well ſpoken of for bleſſing both the ſons of Joſeph in his laſt moments, worſhipping on the top of his ſtaff, ver. 21. and Joſeph's faith is inſtanced in two things; in making mention of the departure of the Iſraelites out of Egypt, as a certain thing; and in giving them ſtrict orders to carry his bones along with them, when they went from thence, ver. 22. the third claſs of men, famous for faith, is that of ſuch from the times of Moſes to the Judges, in which are the parents of Moſes, Moſes himſelf, the Iſraelites in general, and the harlot Rahab. The parents of Moſes ſhewed their faith in hiding him three months, ſeeing him to be a lovely child, contrary to the king's edict, ver. 23. Moſes's faith lay in refuſing to be called the ſon of Pharaoh's daughter; in preferring afflictions to the pleaſures of ſin, and the reproach of Chriſt, to the riches of Egypt; he having, by faith, a reſpect to the heavenly glory, another inſtance of it; and by forſaking Egypt, without fear of the king's diſpleaſure, by faith ſeeing a king who is inviſible; and by keeping the paſſover, with the ſprinkling of blood, that ſo the deſtroyer of the firſt-born of Egypt might not touch the Iſraelites, ver. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. The inſtances of the faith of the Iſraelites are their paſſage thro' the red ſea, as on dry land, when the Egyptians, who attempted it, were drowned; and their compaſſing the walls of Jericho ſeven days, believing they would fall, as accordingly they did, ver. 29, 30. The faith of Rahab, the harlot, is commended for two things; for peaceably receiving the ſpies that came to her; and for the ſalvation ſhe believed ſhe ſhould have, and had, when the unbelieving inhabitants of Jericho periſhed, ver. 31. And the laſt claſs of heroes for faith, includes the times of the judges, kings, prophets, and the Maccabees; the judges, kings, and prophets are lumped together, and only a few of their names are obſerved as a ſpecimen of the reſt, the Apoſtle not having time to mention every particular one, ver. 32. and various inſtances of faith, without reference to particular perſons to whom they belong, are recorded; ſome which lay in doing things greatly heroic, and even miraculous, ver. 33, 34, 35. and others in ſuffering things the moſt cruel and torturing, and death itſelf in divers ſhapes, ver. 35, 36, 37, 38. And thus, by an induction of particulars, the Apoſtle proves both his definition of faith, ver. 1. and the uſefulneſs of it to the elders, ver. 2. they by it obtaining a good report, tho' they did not receive the thing promiſed, ver. 39. wherefore New Teſtament ſaints have great encouragement, and much more reaſon, to exerciſe this grace; ſince God has provided for them the better thing he promiſed to others, that the one without the other might not be perfect, ver. 40.

Ver. 1. Now faith is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, &c.] The faith here ſpoken of is not a mere moral virtue, which is a branch of the law; nor a bare aſſent to any thing revealed, declared, and affirmed in the Goſpel; nor a faith of doing miracles; nor an implicit one; nor a mere profeſſion of faith, which ſometimes is but temporary; nor the word or doctrine of faith; but that which is made mention of in the preceding chapter, by which the juſt man lives, and which has the ſalvation of the ſoul annexed to it: and it does not ſo much deſign any particular branch, or act of faith, but as that in general reſpects the various promiſes, and bleſſings of grace; and it chiefly regards the faith of Old Teſtament ſaints, tho' that, as to its nature, object, and acts, is the ſame with the faith of New Teſtament ones; and is a firm perſuaſion of the power, faithfulneſs, and love of God in Chriſt, and of intereſt therein, and in all ſpecial bleſſings: it is deſcribed as the ſubſtance of things hoped for; and which, in general, are things unſeen, and as yet not enjoyed; future, and yet to come; difficult to be obtained, tho' poſſible, otherwiſe there would be no hope of them; and which are promiſed and laid up; and in particular, the things hoped for by Old Teſtament ſaints, were Chriſt, and eternal glory and happineſs; and by New Teſtament ones, more grace, perſeverance in it, the reſurrection of the dead, and eternal life. Now faith is the ſubſtance of theſe things; it is the ground and foundation of them, in which there is ſome ſtanding for hope; in which ſenſe the word υποστασις is uſed by the Septuagint in Pſ. lxix. 2. The word of promiſe is the principal ground and foundation of hope; and faith, as leaning on the word, is a leſs principal ground; it is a confident perſuaſion, expectation, and aſſurance of them. The Syriac verſion renders it, the certainty of them; it is the ſubſiſtence of them, and what gives them an exiſtence, at leaſt a mental one; ſo with reſpect to the faith and hope of the Old Teſtament ſaints, the incarnation, ſufferings, and death of Chriſt, his reſurrection, aſcenſion, and ſeſſion at God's right hand, are ſpoken of, as if they then were; and ſo are heaven, and glory, and everlaſting ſalvation, with regard to the faith and hope of New Teſtament ſaints: yea, faith gives a kind of poſſeſſion of thoſe things before hand, John vi. 47. Philo the Jew [e] ſays much the ſame thing of faith; "the "only infallible and certain good thing, ſays he, "is, that faith which is faith towards God; it is "the ſolace of life, πληρωμα χρηστων ελπιδων, the "fulneſs of good hopes, &c." It follows here, the evidence of things not ſeen; of things paſt, of what was done in eternity, in the council and covenant of grace and peace; of what has been in time, in creation, and providence; of the birth, miracles, ſufferings, death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion of Chriſt; of things preſent, the being, perfections, love, &c. of God; of the ſeſſion of Chriſt at God's right hand, and his continual interceſſion; and of the various bleſſings of grace revealed in the Goſpel; and of future ones, as the inviſible realities of another world: faith has both certainty and evidence in it.

Ver. 2. For by it the elders obtained a good report.] By whom are meant, not merely old men, or elders in age, but ſuch who lived in ancient times; ſome before the flood, and to a great age, and others who were in office, civil or eccleſiaſtical, and were the anceſtors and predeceſſors of the Hebrews; who in general obtained, or received a good report from God; that they were the choſen of God, and were juſtified and accepted with him; that they were the children and friends of God, and ſhould be glorified; and from men, from good men, for their faith and holineſs; and from evil men, for their good works: and theſe alſo believed the report of the Goſpel, and gave a good report of God, and of the good land, and adorned their profeſſion; particularly, Abel received a good report, that he was righteous; and Enoch, that he pleaſed God, and walked with him; and Noah, that he was a juſt man, perfect in his generation, and alſo walked with God; and Abraham, that he was a believer, a friend of God, and one that feared and obeyed him; and Job, that he was a man that feared God, and ſhunned evil; and Moſes, that he was a meek man, and a faithful one; and David, that he was a man after God's own heart, and fulfilled his will; and ſo others: and they received this report by faith, and as a fruit of it; which ſhows that faith is no new thing, and that the character of a believer is an old and honourable one. The Apoſtle mentions this, to take off the Hebrews from any eſteem of their traditionary elders, who had got a name, not by their faith, but by their traditions; and to engage their imitation of men of antiquity, authority, and wiſdom ſuperior to them; and to let them know, unleſs they had the ſame faith with their anceſtors, it would be a vain thing to boaſt of deſcent from them.

Ver. 3. Through faith we underſtand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, &c.] The celeſtial world, with its inhabitants, the angels; the ſtarry and etherial worlds, with all that is in them, the ſun, moon, ſtars, and fowls of the air; the terreſtrial world, with all upon it, men, beaſts, &c. and the watry world, the ſea, and all that is therein: perhaps ſome reſpect may be had to the diſtinction of worlds among the Jews; ſee the note on ch. 1, 2. tho' the Apoſtle can ſcarce be thought to have any regard to their extravagant notions of vaſt numbers of worlds being created: they often ſpeak of three hundred and ten worlds, in all which, they ſay, there are heavens, earth, ſtars, planets, &c [f]. and ſometimes of eighteen thouſand [g]; but theſe notions are rightly charged by Philo [h] with ignorance and folly. However, as many worlds as there are, they are made by the word of God; by Chriſt, the eſſential Word of God, to whom the creation of all things is aſcribed in John i. 1, 2, 3. And this agrees with the ſentiments of the Jews, who aſcribe the creation of all things to the Word of God, as do the Targumiſts [i], and Philo the Jew [k]. And theſe are framed by the Word, in a very beautiful and convenient order; the heavens before the earth; things leſs perfect, before thoſe that were more ſo in the viſible world, or terraqueous globe; and things for men, before men, for whom they were; and it is by divine revelation and faith, that men form right notions of the creation, and of the author of it, and particularly of the origin of it, as follows; ſo that things which are ſeen; as the heaven, earth, and ſea, and in which the inviſible things of God, the perfections of his nature, are diſcerned: were not made of things which do appear; they were not made from pre-exiſtent matter, but out of nothing, out of which the rude and indigeſted chaos was formed; and from that inviſible maſs, covered with darkneſs, were all viſible things brought into a beautiful order; and all from ſecret and hidden ideas in the divine minds; and this alſo is the faith of the Jews, that the creation of all things is, מאין, out of nothing [l]. There ſeems to be an alluſion to the word ברא, uſed for creation, which ſignifies to make appear a thing unſeen; and is rendered in the Septuagint verſion by δεικνυμι, Numb. xvi. 30. and καταδεικνυμι, Iſ. xl. 26. and xli. 20. to ſhew, or make appear; and thus God created, or made to appear, the heavens and earth, which before were not in being, and unſeen, Gen. i. 1, 2. and created to make, as in Gen. ii. 3. that is, made them to appear, that he might put them into the form and order they now are.

Ver. 4. By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent ſacrifice than Cain, &c.] The Apoſtle proceeds to examples of faith, and begins with Abel: it may ſeem ſtrange that Adam and Eve are not mentioned; this omiſſion is not becauſe they were not believers; but either becauſe of the fall and ruin of mankind by them; or becauſe the Apoſtle ſpeaks only of ſuch who had received ſome eminent teſtimony by faith, and therefore paſſes by many believers, and haſtens to Abraham, the father of the Jews. The ſuperior excellency of Abel's ſacrifice to Cain's, lay both in the matter, and in the manner of it; the one was offered heartily to the Lord, the other only in ſhow; the one was offered in faith, the other not; Abel looked thro' his ſacrifice to the ſacrifice of Chriſt, not ſo Cain. Abel's ſacrifice was a lamb, a type of Chriſt, the Lamb of God; a firſtling, a figure of him who is the firſt-born of every creature; one of the fatteſt of his flock, expreſſive of the excellency of Chriſt; and this was offered up at the end of days, as Chriſt at the end of the world; and the ſuperior excellency of the ſacrifice of the one to that of the other, appears from God's regard to the one, and not to the other, Gen. iv. 3, 4, 5. from whence it may be obſerved, that ſacrifices were of divine inſtitution, and were very early types of Chriſt; and that there always were two ſorts of worſhippers, ſpiritual and carnal ones, whom God can diſtinguiſh, for he ſeeth not as man ſeeth; that the acceptance of perſons is in Chriſt, and is previous to their offerings; that whatſoever works do not ſpring from faith, are unacceptable to God; that no dependence is to be had on birth-privileges, or outward actions; and that electing and diſtinguiſhing grace very early took place, and appeared. By which he obtained witneſs that he was righteous; not righteous by his offering, nor by his faith, but by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which his faith in his ſacrifice looked unto; tho' it was by his faith that he obtained, or received a witneſs in his own conſcience, from the Spirit of God, teſtifying that he was a juſtified perſon; and in conſequence of this, he had an outward teſtimony bore to him in the ſcriptures, that he was a righteous perſon; hence he is called righteous Abel, Matt. xxiii. 35. God teſtifying of his gifts; not of his own gifts, temporal or ſpiritual, but of Abel's gifts, which he offered to the Lord; that is, his ſacrifices; of theſe he teſtified, when he ſhowed reſpect either by an audible voice, declaring his acceptance of them; or by ſending down fire from heaven, upon his ſacrifice, which in after-times was a ſymbol of acceptance. And by it, he being dead, yet ſpeaketh; good men die, and ſome of them die a violent death, as did Abel, yet he ſpeaks in the ſcriptures, which have a voice in them, Luke xvi. 29. or by his blood, which calls for vengeance; or rather by, or becauſe of his faith, tho' he is dead, he is yet ſpoken of, as the word may be rendered.

Ver. 5. By faith Enoch was tranſlated, &c.] Which is to be underſtood, not of a ſpiritual tranſlation from the power of darkneſs, into the kingdom of Chriſt, as all converted perſons are tranſlated, and doubtleſs Enoch was; nor of a rapture, or removal from one part of the earth to another, or from one part of a country to another, as Philip was caught away by the Spirit, after the baptiſm of the enunch; but of a tranſlation from earth to heaven; and not for a while only, as Paul was caught up to the third heaven; but as Elijah was, there to continue, and as the living ſaints will be at the laſt day; and this was a tranſlation of him, ſoul and body, to heaven, to eternal glory and happineſs, by a change from mortality to immortality, which paſſed upon him; and which is a pledge of the reſurrection of the dead, and a proof of the Old Teſtament ſaints knowing, expecting, and enjoying eternal life. And with this agrees the ſenſe of ſome of the Jewiſh writers concerning this affair. Jonathan ben Uzziel, in his paraphraſe on Gen. v. 24. has theſe words: "and Enoch worſhipped in truth before the Lord; and behold he "was not with the inhabitants of the earth, אתנגיד, "he was tranſlated, and aſcended to the firmament, "(or heaven) by the Word before the Lord." And the Jeruſalem Targum to the ſame purpoſe; "and Enoch worſhipped in truth before the Lord; "and lo he was not, for he was tranſlated by the "Word from before the Lord;" or by the Word of the Lord, which went out from him; for this tranſlation was of God, as our Apoſtle afterwards aſſerts. R. Eleazar ſays[m], "the holy bleſſed God "took Enoch, and cauſed him to aſcend to the "higheſt heavens, and delivered into his hands all "the ſuperior treaſures, &c." He is ſaid[n] to be one of the ſeven which entred into paradiſe in their life; and ſome of them ſay[o], that God took him, בגוף ונפש, body and ſoul; ſee the wiſdom of Solomon, iv. 10. and Eccleſiaſt. xliv. 16. And this tranſlation is ſaid to be by faith; not thro' any virtue and efficacy in that grace to procure it; nor thro' faith, in that particular point; but God put an honour upon the faith of Enoch, and on him as a believer, this way. That he ſhould not ſee death; meaning not a ſpiritual or moral death; nor an eternal one, tho' ſome have ſuggeſted this to be the ſenſe; and which is favoured by the character ſome of the Jewiſh writers give of Enoch, which will be hereafter taken notice of; but a corporal death, which he died not; to which agrees the Targum of Onkelos on Gen. v. 24. "and Enoch walked in the "fear of the Lord, and he was not, for the Lord, "לא אמית, did not kill him, or cauſe, or ſuffer "him to die:" though an exemplar of that paraphraſe is cited[p], without the negative particle, thus, "and he was not, for the Lord killed him," or inflicted death on him: and it is the ſenſe of ſeveral of the Jewiſh commentators, that he did die a common death, as Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and others; who by the phraſe, God took him, underſtand death, for which they cite the following places, 1 Kings xix. 4. Ezek. xxiv. 16, 18. and was not found, becauſe God had tranſlated him; that is, he was not found among men, in the land of the living; he appeared no more there, for God had removed him from earth to heaven; ſo Elijah, after his rapture and tranſlation, was ſought for, but could not be found, 2 Kings ii. 16, 17. for before his tranſlation he had this teſtimony, that he pleaſed God; he did thoſe things which pleaſed him; he walked with God before, Gen. v. 22, 24. which the Targumiſts explain by worſhipping in truth, and walking in the fear of the Lord, which are things well-pleaſing to God; he walked with God by faith in the ways of his worſhip and ſervice; and he was acceptable to him in Chriſt; the ſame phraſe is uſed in the Wiſdom of Solomon iv. 10. and Eccleſ. xliv. 16. This teſtimony he received from God, from men, and in his own conſcience, and which now ſtands in the ſacred ſcriptures, Gen. v. 24. Some of the Jewiſh writers very wickedly, and without any ground and foundation, give a different rent character of him; ſome of them ſay, that he was a hypocrite, ſometimes righteous, and ſometimes wicked, and that the holy bleſſed God removed him, while he was righteous [p]; and others [q], that allow him to be a righteous and worthy man, yet repreſent him, as fickle and inconſtant; and, therefore, God, foreſeeing that he would do wickedly, and to prevent it, made haſte, and took him away, by death, before his time: and, which is not only contrary to what the Apoſtle here ſays, but to the account of Moſes, concerning him; from whence, it appears, that he was a walker with God; that the courſe of his converſation was holy and upright; and, which was the reaſon of his being taken, or tranſlated; and, which was an high honour beſtowed upon him: and, upon the whole, he has obtained a better teſtimony, than thoſe men give him.

Ver. 6. But without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe him, &c.] Or do things, well-pleaſing in his ſight; or, any of the duties of religion, in an acceptable way; as prayer, praiſe, attendance on the word and ordinances, or any good works whatever; becauſe ſuch are without Chriſt, and without his Spirit; and have neither right principles, nor right ends; for this is not to be underſtood of the perſons of God's elect, as conſidered in Chriſt; in whom they are well-pleaſing to him before faith; being loved by him, with an everlaſting love; and choſen in Chriſt, before the foundation of the world; ſee the note on Rom. viii. 8. for he that cometh to God; to the throne of his grace, to pray unto him, to implore his grace and mercy, help and aſſiſtance; to the houſe of God, to worſhip, and ſerve him, and in order to enjoy his preſence, and have communion with him; which coming ought to be ſpiritual, and with the heart; and ſuppoſes ſpiritual life; and muſt be through Chriſt, and by faith: wherefore ſuch a comer to God, muſt believe that he is; or exiſts, as the Arabic verſion; and he muſt not barely believe his exiſtence, but that, as it is revealed in the word: he muſt believe in the three perſons in the Godhead; that the firſt perſon is the Father of Chriſt; that the ſecond perſon is both the Son of God, and Mediator; and that the third perſon is the Spirit of them both, and the applier of all grace; for God the Father is to be approached unto, thro' Chriſt the Mediator, by the guidance and aſſiſtance of the Spirit: and he muſt believe in the perfections of God; that he is omniſcient, and knows his perſon and wants; is omnipotent, and can do for him, beyond his thoughts and petitions; is all-ſufficient, and that his grace is ſufficient for him; that he is immutable, in his purpoſes and covenant; that he is true and faithful to his promiſes; and is the God of grace, love, and mercy: and he muſt believe in him, not only as the God of nature and providence, but as his covenant God and Father in Chriſt: and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him; who are ſuch, as are firſt ſought out by him; and who ſeek him in Chriſt, where he is only to be found; and that with their whole hearts, and above all things elſe: and, of ſuch, God is a rewarder, in a way of grace; with himſelf, who is their exceeding great reward; and with his Son, and all things with him; with more grace; and, at laſt, with eternal glory, the reward of the inheritance.

Ver. 7. By faith Noah being warned of God, &c.] In the Greek text, Noah is called Noe, and ſo the Septuagint interpreters of the Old Teſtament call him; but Joſephus calls him Noeos: or having received an oracle from God; in which he was admoniſhed, how to make an ark, as Moſes was, in like manner, how to make a tabernacle, ch. viii. 5. This oracle or warning is extant, in Gen. vi. 13—22. and it was of things not ſeen as yet; as the univerſal deluge; the building of an ark or ſhip, which was the firſt that ever was in the world; the entrance of all creatures into it; their preſervation in it, and the deſtruction of all without it: and this divine warning, or oracle, concerning things of ſuch a nature, delivered to Noah, and received by him, ſhews, that he was a favourite of God; that his faith reſted in the word of God; and that it agreed with the Apoſtle's definition of faith, ver. 1. moved with fear; not with a fear of his own damnation; nor with a diſtruſt of the ſalvation of himſelf and his family in the ark; but with an awful ſenſe of the judgments of God upon the wicked; and with reverence of God, from whom he received the oracle; and with a religious fear, with which he worſhipped God, and which he diſcovered by a regard to his word and ordinances; and which fear does not ariſe from nature, but from grace; and is increaſed by the diſcoveries of divine love; and is conſiſtent with faith, goes along with it, and is a fruit of it: hence he prepared an ark for the ſaving of his houſe. Immediately, and without delay, he ſet about the building of the ark, and made it exactly according to the pattern, which was given him; and his end in it was to ſecure his family, himſelf and his wife, his three ſons and their wives, from the flood, which he believed would ſhortly come upon the world, according to the word of God; and in this his faith was ſeen: and from hence it may be obſerved, that, tho' God can ſave without means, yet, generally ſpeaking, it is his will to ſave by them; and that, as God ſaved Noah and his family in the waters, ſo he can, and does, ſave his people in afflictions; and alſo, that true faith is attended with obedience: by the which he condemned the world; the inhabitants of the world, the world of the ungodly: as a preacher, he declared they would be condemned, in caſe of impenitence and unbelief; and his words heard, and his actions ſeen by them, were aggravations of their condemnation; for by his works, as well as by his words, he reproved, and condemned them; by building the ark, as he declared his own faith, ſo he condemned their unbelief; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 41. and became heir of the righteouſneſs which is by faith; not of the law, but of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and of eternal life through that; for he was not only heir of this world, as Abraham, but of that which is to come; and not through works of righteouſneſs done by him, but through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt received by faith, or through faith in Chriſt, the antitype of the ark.

Ver. 8. By faith Abraham, when he was called, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, by faith he who was called Abraham; but this call is not to be underſtood of his name; for though his firſt name Abram might be given him, in the faith of his being a great man, and his ſecond name Abraham, when he himſelf was a believer; yet this change was made ſome years after the call referred to; which is that in Gen. xii. 1. when he was called out of his own country, kindred and father's houſe; which was an emblem of the call of God's people out from among the men of the world, and from their friends, relations, and acquaintance, and even out of themſelves; and, as Abraham was called from Ur of the Chaldees, ſo they, from darkneſs, bondage, idolatry, and communion with wicked men; that, as he, they might not periſh with idolaters, being choſen veſſels, and for whom God has peculiar bleſſings in ſtore: and ſo the grace of God is ſeen in calling them, without any reſpect to their deſerts, as in calling Abraham: and the care and goodneſs of God may be obſerved, in raiſing up fit inſtruments to propagate his cauſe and intereſt. Now Abraham, being called to go out into a place; from Ur of the Chaldees, to the land of Canaan; which he ſhould afterwards receive for an inheritance; not in his own perſon, but in his ſeed and poſterity, unleſs after the reſurrection, in the New Jeruſalem church-ſtate, and which inheritance was typical of heaven; obeyed the divine call; and which was a fruit and evidence of his faith, and may be called the obedience of faith: and he went out not knowing whither he went: for though he went forth to go into the land of Canaan, and into the land of Canaan he came, Gen. xii. 5. yet, when God called him to go forth, and he prepared to obey his call, he knew not what land he was to go into; for it is only ſaid, Gen. xii. 1. unto a land that I will ſhew thee: upon which words, a Jewiſh commentator [r] has this note; "he (God) did not "immediately make known the land unto him, "that ſo it might be lovely in his eyes;" and it is, elſewhere, ſaid by the Jews [s], that Abraham "came "from Aſpamia, (i. e. Meſopotamia) and its companions, ולא היה יודע היכן, and he knew not "where he was, as a man that is in the dark;" all which agrees with our Apoſtle: and, from hence, it may be obſerved, that God ſometimes leads his people in ways they have not known, though they are known to him, and are always right; and that it is the property of faith to follow God, when it cannot ſee its way; and a great mercy it is to have God for a guide. This alſo ſhews, that Abraham's faith agrees with the Apoſtle's definition of it, v. 1.

[q] Zohar in Gen. fol. 44. 2. 3. Jarchi in Gen. v. 24. Wiſd. c. iv. 11,12,13,14.

Ver. 9. By faith he ſojourned in the land of promiſe, &c.] The land of Canaan, ſo called, becauſe it was promiſed to Abraham and his ſeed; and is typical of heaven, which is not by the works of the law, but by the free promiſe and grace of God: here Abraham ſojourned for a while, as in a ſtrange country; which was not his native place, and not his own, but another's; ſee Acts vii. 5. and an idolatrous one; here he ſojourned by faith, believing, that as it was promiſed, it would be given to him, and his ſeed: ſo all God's people are ſojourners in this world, ſtrangers and pilgrims in it; this is not their dwelling-place; they do not belong to it, but to another; their ſtay in it, is but for a while; and, whilſt they are in it, don't look upon themſelves at home, but are looking out for another, and better country; they are unknown to the men of the world, and the men of the world are ſtrangers to them; tho' they have a civil converſation with them, they ſeparate from them, both as to prophaneneſs and ſuperſtition, and live by faith, in the expectation of the heavenly country, as Abraham alſo did: dwelling in tabernacles with Iſaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the ſame promiſe; the ſame promiſed land, the ſame promiſed bleſſings, and the ſame promiſed ſeed, the Meſſiah; ſee Gen. xii. 3. and xxvi. 3, 4. and xxviii. 13, 14. with theſe Abraham dwelt, for he lived until Iſaac was ſeventy-five years of age, and Jacob fifteen; he was an hundred years old, when Iſaac was born, Gen. xxi. 5. and he lived one hundred and ſeventy-five years, Gen. xxv. 7. and Iſaac was ſixty years old, when Jacob was born, Gen. xxv. 26. and Abraham dwelt with them in tabernacles, or tents, which they pitched at pleaſure, and moved from place to place. So true believers, as they are Abraham's ſeed, they are heirs with him, according to the promiſe; and are heirs together of the grace of life; and dwell in earthly tabernacles, in houſes of clay, which are erected for a while, and then taken down.

Ver. 10. For he looked for a city which hath foundations, &c.] Not the city of Jeruſalem, nor the Goſpel church-ſtate; but either the city of the new Jeruſalem, ſaid to have twelve foundations, Rev. xxii. 14. and in which glorious ſtate, Abraham, with the reſt of the ſaints, being raiſed from the dead, will in perſon poſſeſs the promiſed land; or elſe the ultimate glory of the ſaints in heaven, where God dwells, and keeps his palace; and which will be the dwelling-place of the ſaints, and will have in it many habitations; and which will be, both peaceable and ſafe, and full of glory, riches, joy and pleaſure; and, into which, none but holy and righteous perſons will enter; the foundations of which, are the everlaſting love of God, eternal election, the covenant of grace, the promiſe and preparation of it by God, from the foundation of the world, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, his blood and righteouſneſs; which ſhew the immoveableneſs of it, it being oppoſed to the tabernacles Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob dwelt in, and to the tranſitory enjoyments of this world: and for this ſure, immoveable and comfortable ſtate of things, Abraham was looking by faith; he looked through, and above temporal things, to ſpiritual things; he went through difficulties with chearfulneſs, did not greedily covet earthly things, but looked with diſdain upon them, and to heaven with faith, affection, and earneſt deſire; and this proves his faith to be, as that is defined, ver. 1. whoſe builder and maker is God: God the Father has prepared this glory from the foundation of the world, and has promiſed it, before the world began, and has choſen his people to it; the Spirit of God makes it known, and prepares them for it; and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt is the forerunner entred, who is gone to get it ready for them, and will put them into the poſſeſſion of it: this ſhews the ſuperior excellency of this city, or glorious ſtate; and, that God has the ſole right to diſpoſe of it.

Ver. 11. Through faith alſo Sarah herſelf, &c.] Some copies add being barren; and ſo read the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions; which is a circumſtance, which makes her faith appear the greater: but it is a queſtion, whether the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the faith of Sarah, or of Abraham; ſome think, he ſpeaks of Abraham's faith; and that it was through his faith, that Sarah conceived; and obſerve, that the laſt clauſe may be rendred, becauſe he judged him faithful, &c. and the rather, becauſe the Apoſtle, both before, and after, is ſpeaking of Abraham's faith, ver. 8, 9, 10, 17. and in ver. 12. mention is made only of one, even of Abraham; and in Rom. iv. 17. only notice is taken of Abraham's faith, reſpecting this matter; nor is Sarah's faith obſerved in the hiſtory of it, but her diffidence: but why may not Sarah be joined with Abraham, in this commendation, as well as Iſaac and Jacob? and though, at firſt, ſhe diſtruſted, yet ſhe, afterwards, feared, and believed: other women are mentioned in this catalogue of believers; and they ſhare in the ſame grace and priviledges, as men: and Sarah, being a believer, as well as Abraham, received ſtrength to conceive ſeed: ſometimes, ſtrength itſelf ſignifies ſeed, as in Prov. xxxi. 3. and ſo to receive ſtrength, is to receive ſeed; which the female does as from the male; hence that ſaying of the Jews[t], the male does not receive ſtrength from another, but the female, מקבלת כח, receiveth ſtrength from another; but here it is to be underſtood of receiving power from God to retain ſeed, received from men, and conceive by it; which Sarah, in her circumſtances, without the interpoſition of the almighty power, could never have done. The nymph Anobret is ſo called, in imitation of this conception of Sarah's; or as ſhe is called in the Phœnician language, חן ענברת, which ſignifies conceiving by grace; as this conception muſt be entirely aſcribed to the power and grace of God: and was delivered of a child when ſhe was paſt age; of bearing and bringing forth children, being ninety years of age, Gen. xvii. 17. Now tho' the conception, bearing, and bringing forth of children are things natural, ordinary, and common, yet here was a particular promiſe reſpecting this matter; and there were great difficulties in nature attending it, and ſuch as to reaſon were inſuperable; but theſe were got over, thro' the power and grace of God, and which is aſcribed to faith in the faithfulneſs of a promiſing God: becauſe ſhe judged him faithful who had promiſed; that ſhe ſhould have a ſon at the time of life; ſee the note on ch. x. 23.

Ver. 12. Therefore ſprang there even of one, &c.] That is, Abraham: the Arabic verſion has here a ſtrange interpolation; "this faith Iſaac and Rebecca conceived in mind, and ſo there were born "of one, Eſau and Jacob." And him as good as dead; being an hundred years of age; ſee the note on Rom. iv. 19. The Ethiopic verſion reads, the bodies of both were like a dead carcaſs; both of Abraham and Sarah: ſo many as the ſtars of the ſky in multitude, and as the ſand which is by the ſea-ſhore innumerable; as was promiſed to Abraham, Gen. xv. 5. and xxii. 17. which has been fulfilled, Iſ. x. 22. and will ſtill have a further fulfillment, Hoſ. i. 10.

Ver. 13. Theſe all died in faith, &c.] Not all the ſeed of Abraham, but all the believers in the preceding verſes, excepting Enoch, particularly the three patriarchs, with Sarah; theſe died a corporal death, which is common to all, to the righteous, and to the wicked; and yet ſaints die not as other men; they die in faith, having the grace itſelf, which being once implanted, can never be loſt; and ſometimes in the exerciſe of it, as theſe believers did: they died in the faith of their poſterity, inheriting the land of Canaan, and in the faith of the promiſed Meſſiah, and in the believing views of the heavenly glory; and ſo to die, is comfortable to themſelves, and a confirmation of the truth of religion to others, and is very precious, deſirable, and gainful. It may be rendered, according to faith; they died according to the life of faith they lived, and the doctrine of faith they profeſſed, being the Lord's both living and dying. Not having received the promiſes; the things promiſed, the land of Canaan, the Meſſiah, and the bleſſings of the Goſpel diſpenſation; they had the promiſes of theſe things, and though they were not fulfilled in their days, they believed they would be fulfilled, and died in the faith of them: having ſeen them afar off; the things themſelves in the promiſe; as Abraham ſaw the going forth of his poſterity out of Egypt, after they had been afflicted four hundred years, and ſaw the day of Chriſt at a greater diſtance ſtill, Gen. xv. 13, 14. John viii. 56. And were perſuaded of them, and embraced them; they had a full aſſurance of faith, that what was promiſed would be fulfilled; and they took a kind of poſſeſſion of them before hand, as Abraham did of the land of Canaan, by ſojourning in it; as did alſo Iſaac and Jacob; and all of them by faith embraced the Meſſiah, and dealt with, and laid hold upon his blood, righteouſneſs, ſacrifice, and grace, by which they were ſaved, as New Teſtament ſaints are. And confeſſed that they were ſtrangers and pilgrims on the earth; for they ſojourned in the land of Canaan, as in a ſtrange land, as the ſaints do in this world; ſee ver. 9. And they were pilgrims, travelling thro' this world to the heavenly country, and they confeſſed themſelves to be ſuch, Gen. xlvii. 9. nor are believers aſhamed to own and confeſs their mean eſtate in this world; for it is only with reſpect to earth, and earthly things, that they are ſtrangers and pilgrims, and only whilſt they are on earth; and it is therefore but for a little time, that they are ſo, ere long they'll be at home, and know as they are known.

Ver. 14. For they that ſay ſuch things, &c.] That they are ſtrangers and pilgrims on earth: declare plainly that they ſeek a country; heaven, ſo called, for the largeneſs of it; it is a good land, a land of uprightneſs; a pleaſant land, a land of reſt, tho' a land afar off; here the Father of Chriſt, and Chriſt himſelf, and all his people dwell: the Syriac verſion renders it, their own city; the place of their nativity, of which they were citizens: the act of ſeeking it ſuppoſes ſome things, with reſpect to the place where they were, as that they were in a ſtrange land, had no ſettlement there, nor ſatisfaction in it, and that they ſat looſe to the world, and the things of it; and ſome things reſpecting the country ſought after, as that they were not in it; that it was at a diſtance from them; that they had ſome knowledge of it, and of the way to it; that their deſires were after it, and that they had a ſtrong affection and value for it: the right way to this country is not mere civility and morality, nor legal righteouſneſs, nor birth privileges, nor ſubmiſſion to outward ordinances, nor a mere profeſſion of religion, but the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; he is the true way to eternal life; it is his righteouſneſs which gives a title to it, and on account of which believers expect it, tho' not without holineſs, nor without trouble. The right manner of ſeeking it, is, in the firſt place, above all things elſe, with the whole heart, by faith, and by patient continuance in well-doing. Many are the reaſons which may induce believers to ſeek it; it is their own, and their Father's country; it is a better one than that in which they are; and becauſe of the company they ſhall there enjoy, and the work they ſhall be employed in; and becauſe of the happineſs they will be poſſeſſed of; and becauſe their inheritance, riches, and treaſures lie here.

Ver. 15. And truly if they had been mindful of that country, &c.] Chaldea, which was Abraham's country: from whence they came out; as Abraham and Sarah did, in perſon, and their poſterity in them: they might have had opportunity to have returned; for the way from Canaan or Egypt, where they ſojourned, was ſhort and eaſy: and though Abraham ſent his ſervant thither to take a wife for his ſon Iſaac, yet he would not go thither himſelf, nor ſuffer his ſon; nay, made his ſervant ſware that he would not bring him thither, if even the woman ſhould refuſe to come; ſo unmindful was he of that country; ſo little did he regard it; yea, ſo much did he deſpiſe it: ſo when men are called by grace, and converted, they come out of a country, this world, which is a land of ſin and iniquity, of great folly and ignorance, of darkneſs, and of the ſhadow of death; a deſert, a mere wilderneſs; a country where ſatan reigns, full of wicked and ungodly men; and which is the land of their nativity, as to their firſt birth: and they may be ſaid to come out of it, not in a natural and civil ſenſe, but in a ſpiritual one; and it is the character of a converted man, or one that is come out of the world, and is ſeparated from it, to be unmindful of it; not ſo as not to conſider from whence he came out, as owing to rich grace; nor ſo as not to lament the iniquities of it; nor ſo as not to pray for the converſion of the inhabitants of it; but he is unmindful of it, ſo as to be deſirous of the company of the men of it, or to have the affections ſet upon it, and the heart tickled with the pleaſures of it, or ſo as to deſire to return to it, for which there is a great deal of reaſon: for this country is not worth minding; and there is much in it to ſet a gracious mind againſt it; a good man has better things to mind; and it is below, and unworthy of a chriſtian, to mind the world; and beſides, worldly-mindedneſs is attended with bad conſequences. Moreover, tho' the ſaints have opportunities of returning, yet they do not; they are near it, and the country they are ſeeking is afar off; many things in it are alluring and enſnaring; a corrupt and deceitful heart often lingers after them, and ſatan is not wanting to tempt unto, and by them. And yet they do not return; ſome that bear the name of chriſtians, but are not truly ſuch, may wholly return, and never come back more; and true believers may ſtrangely go back again in ſome inſtances; but they ſhall not return finally and totally: for they are held and drawn with the cords of love; they are in the hands of Chriſt, and are ſecured in the covenant of grace; they are returned to Chriſt, in effectual vocation, who will keep them; they are of the houſhold of God, and ſhall be no more foreigners; ſhould they return in ſuch ſenſe, they would be condemned with the world, which cannot be.

[t] Caphtor, fol. 21. 2.

Ver. 16. But now they deſire a better country, &c.] Which is not to be underſtood of the then preſent time, in which the Apoſtle wrote; for the patriarchs, of whom he ſpeaks, were not then on earth, nor in any third place between heaven and earth; they were then in heaven: and though there are indeed in heaven deſires after perfect happineſs, in ſoul and body; yet this intends the deſires of theſe ſaints when on earth, and which are common to all believers in the preſent ſtate of things; who, as the patriarchs deſired a better country than Chaldea, or even Canaan itſelf, ſo they deſire a better country than this world; and ſuch is heaven: it is on high; here are no noxious and peſtilential vapours, no miſts or fogs beclouding, no ſtorms and tempeſts, but it is full of light and glory; having the delightful breezes of divine love, and the comfortable gales of the bleſſed Spirit; here's no heat of perſecution, nor coldneſs, nor chills of affection; here is plenty of moſt delicious fruits, no hunger nor thirſt; and here are riches, which are ſolid, ſatisfying, durable, ſafe and ſure: many are the liberties and privileges here enjoyed; here's a freedom from a body ſubject to diſeaſes and death, from a body of ſin and death, from ſatan's temptations, from all doubts, fears, and unbelief, and from all ſorrows and afflictions; the inhabitants of it are the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, angels, God, Father, Son, and Spirit, and Chriſt in human nature; upon all which accounts it is abundantly the better country, and as it is explained, that is, an heavenly; an inheritance in heaven, an houſe eternal in the heavens, the kingdom of heaven; and it is no wonder that it ſhould be deſired by ſuch who know it, and the nature of it: the word denotes a vehement deſire; and it is ſuch, that the ſaints deſire to depart from this world, and go unto it; which ſhows that they are weaned from this, and have ſeen ſomething glorious in another. Remarkable is the ſaying of Anaxagoras [v], who, when one ſaid to him, haſt thou no regard to thy country? anſwered, I have, and that the greateſt, pointing with his fingers towards heaven: and, ſays Philo the Jew [w], the ſoul of every wiſe man has heaven for his country, and the earth as a ſtrange place: wherefore God is not aſhamed to be called their God; their covenant God and Father; ſee the note on ch. viii. 10. even though he is the God of the whole earth: for he hath prepared for them a city; in his council and covenant, and by his Son; ſee the note on ver. 10. This proves, that he is not aſhamed of the relation he ſtands in to them, ſince he has made a proviſion for them to dwell with him to all eternity.

Ver. 17. By faith Abraham when he was tried, &c.] Or tempted; that is, by God, Gen. xxii. 1. This temptation or trial reſpects the command given by God to Abraham, to offer up his ſon Iſaac; which lays no foundation for a charge againſt God, either of ſin or cruelty; for God's will is the rule of juſtice and goodneſs, and whatever he requires is juſt and good; and tho' his creatures are bound by the laws he preſcribes them, he himſelf is not: beſides, he is the Lord of life, the giver and preſerver of it; and he has a right to diſpoſe of it, and to take it away, when, and by what means, and inſtruments, he thinks fit; to which may be added, that the ſecret will of God was not that Iſaac ſhould die, but a command was given to Abraham to offer him up, for the trial of his faith and love; this was a temptation of probation, not of ſeduction, or to ſin, as are the temptations of ſatan; for God tempts no man with ſin. The Jews ſpeak [x] of ten temptations, with which Abraham was tried, and in all which he ſtood; and ſay, that this of the binding of Iſaac was the tenth and laſt. Offered up Iſaac; he ſhewed great readineſs to do it; as ſoon as he had the command given him, he travelled three days journey in order to it; took the wood of the burnt-offering, and laid it on his ſon; took fire, and a knife in his hand, with the one to burn the wood, with the other to ſlay his ſon; he built an altar, laid the wood in order on it, and bound his ſon, and laid him on that; and took the knife, and ſtretched forth his hand to ſlay him, and fully intended to do it, had he not been prevented: and all this he did by faith; he believed the equity, juſtice, and wiſdom of the divine command; he was fully aſſured of the truth and faithfulneſs of God in his promiſes, however contrary this might ſeem thereunto; and he was ſtrongly perſuaded of the power of accompliſhing them in ſome way or another. This was great faith, and it was greatly tried, as follows: and he that had received the promiſes offered up his only-begotten ſon; he had a promiſe made him that he ſhould have a ſon, and that a numerous iſſue ſhould ſpring from him, which ſhould inherit the land of Canaan; yea, that the Meſſiah himſelf ſhould be of his ſeed: and he had received theſe promiſes; given credit to them, and firmly believed them, and fully expected the performance of them; as he had reaſon to do, ſince the firſt was fulfilled, the ſon was born; and yet now he is called to offer him up, on whom his expectation was placed: every thing was trying; it was an human creature he was called to offer, whoſe blood is not to be ſhed by man; a child of his own, a part of himſelf; a ſon, an own ſon; an only-begotten ſon; a ſon whom he loved; an Iſaac, a ſon of joy; a ſon of promiſe; and his heir, the ſon of his old age, and who was now a grown-up perſon. The Jews are divided about the age of Iſaac at his binding; Joſephus[y] ſays he was twenty-five years of age; others ſays twenty-ſix[z]; ſome ſay[a] thirty-ſix: but the more prevailing opinion is[b], that he was thirty-ſeven years of age; only Aben[c] Ezra makes him to be about thirteen; rejecting the more commonly received account, as well as that he was but five years old, that being an age unfit to carry wood. Some chriſtian writers have thought he might be about three and thirty years of age, the age of Chriſt when he ſuffered, of whom he was a type.

Ver. 18. Of whom it is ſaid, &c.] That is, of Iſaac, Abraham's own ſon, whom he offered up; or rather, to whom it was ſaid, as the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions render it; that is, to Abraham, for to him was this ſaid, Gen. xxi. 12. that in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called; that numerous natural ſeed of his, which ſhould inherit the land of Canaan; and his ſpecial famous ſeed the Meſſiah, to whom the promiſes were made; ſee the note on Rom. ix. 7.

Ver. 19. Accounting that God was able to raiſe him up, even from the dead, &c.] Abraham did not go about this affair without thought; and yet he did not conſult with fleſh and blood; his reaſoning was the reaſoning of faith; and the concluſion of it was, not that he believed that God would raiſe his ſon from the dead, but that he was able to do it. He knew that he had received him at firſt, as it were, from the dead; he ſprung from his own dead body, and out of Sarah's dead womb; and tho' his faith did not preſcribe to God, yet as he believed the doctrine of the reſurrection of the dead, he might believe that God would raiſe up his ſon from the dead, rather than that his promiſe ſhould fail; and this concluſion proceeded upon the power and faithfulneſs of God: from whence alſo he received him in a figure; or for an example of faith and obedience; or for a parable or proverb, that ſuch a proverbial expreſſion might be made uſe of, for the comfort and encouragement of ſaints in diſtreſſed and difficult circumſtances, as is in Gen. xxii. 14. or as a type of the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, whoſe type he was in other things, as well as in this; as in his birth, and the circumſtances of it; he was long promiſed and expected, as Chriſt was; his birth was beyond the ordinary courſe of nature, and attended with great joy; he was circumciſed the eighth day; at his weaning a great feaſt was made, typical of the Goſpel feaſt; and as he was perſecuted by Iſhmael, ſo was Chriſt by Herod, in his infancy: and he was a figure of him in his oblation; they were both ſons of Abraham; both only-begotten and beloved ſons; both heirs; both carried the wood on which they were offered; both were offered on a mount, and by their father, by whom neither of them were ſpared; and both by the command of God, and alone, none were with them: and Iſaac prefigured him in his deliverance; Abraham ſtretched out his hand, but was reſtrained, and not a bone of Chriſt muſt be broken; not Iſaac, but the ram was ſlain, not the divine, but the human nature ſuffered; both were delivered on the third day, the one as from death, the other really from death; and both returned to their father's houſe. Moreover, Abraham received his ſon in the ſimilitude of a reſurrection; it was as life from the dead; it was like the return of the prodigal, Luke xv. 32. Abraham looked upon him as dead to him, and Iſaac thought himſelf a dead man; ſo that he that was accounted as one dead, was received alive. The Jews ſpeak of this matter agreeable to the Apoſtle; they ſay, a man has two breaths or ſouls, one in this world, and another in the world to come; and of Iſaac they ſay[d], that "in the time "that he was offered upon the altar, his ſoul (or "breath) which he had in this world, went out; "and when it was ſaid to Abraham (or by him) "bleſſed be he that quickeneth the dead, his ſoul "(or breath) which he had in the world to come, "returned to him —— for אתחשב כמת, he was "accounted as dead." They ſpeak of him, as if he was juſt dead; they ſay[e], "when he ſaw "the ſword over his neck, his breath fled from "him, and came to the place of the ſoul, כאילו חיה, "as if he was at the point of giving up the ghoſt." So that a Jew can't find fault with the Apoſtle for expreſſing himſelf in this manner.

Ver. 20. By faith Iſaac bleſſed Jacob and Eſau, &c.] The hiſtory of this is in Gen. xxvii. 33—39. The former of theſe was a good man, and tho' the youngeſt ſon, he is ſet before, and was bleſſed before the eldeſt; and the latter was a wicked man, and yet had a bleſſing; for temporal bleſſings are enjoyed in common: and this bleſſing was prophetical, it was concerning things to come. Jacob's bleſſing was plenty of temporal things, and under which may be ſignified the dews of divine grace, the fatneſs of God's houſe, the bread of life, and wine of divine love, which true Iſraelites partake of; alſo dominion over his brother, and government over nations, which had their accompliſhment in his poſterity; and may be expreſſive of the ſpiritual reign of the ſaints, and their dominion, by grace; and of the kingdom that ſhall hereafter be put into their hands; and of the extenſiveneſs of Chriſt's kingdom in the latter day, who was to ſpring from him. Eſau's bleſſings were merely temporal ones, and reſpected things future, which were fulfilled in his poſterity; and theſe ſeveral bleſſings Iſaac pronounced upon them by faith, believing they would be beſtowed on them; and ſo his faith anſwered to the account of faith in ver. 1. It may be aſked how Iſaac can be ſaid to have bleſſed Jacob by faith, when he was deceived by him? it is certain he took him to be Eſau, when he bleſſed him, wherefore it was not the deſign of Iſaac, tho' it was the will of God, that he ſhould bleſs him, Gen. xxvii. 18—30. but yet notwithſtanding this, Iſaac might do it in faith, believing that the perſon he bleſſed, would be bleſſed, tho' he was miſtaken in him; and which he confirmed when he did know him, ver. 33, 37.

to which the Apoſtle may have reſpect; and beſides, he bleſſed him after this, Gen. xxviii. 1, 2, 3.

Ver. 21. By faith Jacob, when he was a dying, &c.] Which was the uſual time of bleſſing with the patriarchs; and the reaſon of it was, that what was ſaid might be more attended to and regarded, and more ſtrongly impreſſed upon the mind; and this is a proof that it was done in faith by Jacob, when there was no appearance of the fulfillment of theſe things, and it was not likely that he ſhould ſee them; and this ſhews the truth of what the Apoſtle ſays in ver. 1, 13. bleſſed both the ſons of Joſeph; whoſe names were Ephraim and Manaſſeh; the form of bleſſing them is recorded in Gen. xlviii. 15, 16. and which was done in faith, and under the direction and inſpiration of the Spirit of God, as appears by his ſetting Ephraim before Manaſſeh, ver. 13, 14, 17, 18, 19. and when he delivered the bleſſing he firmly believed it would be fulfilled, tho' they were then in a ſtrange land: and worſhipped, leaning upon the top of his ſtaff; not that he worſhipped the top of his ſtaff, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, either his own, or Joſeph's, or any little image upon the top of it; which would be an inſtance of idolatry, and not faith, contrary to the ſcope of the Apoſtle; nor is there any need to interpret this of civil worſhip and reſpect paid to Joſeph, as a fulfillment of his dream, and with a peculiar regard to Chriſt, of whom Joſeph was a type; whereas, on the contrary, Joſeph at this time bowed to his father, as was moſt natural and proper, Gen. xlviii. 12. nor is there any neceſſity of ſuppoſing a different punctuation of Gen. xlvii. 31. and that the true reading is not Mittah, a bed, but Matteh, a ſtaff, contrary to all the Targums [f], and the Talmud [g], which read Mittah, a bed, ſeeing it is not that place the Apoſtle cites or refers to; for that was before the bleſſing of the ſons of Joſeph, but this was at the ſame time; and the Apoſtle relates what is no where recorded in Geneſis, but what he had either from tradition, or immediate revelation; or elſe he concludes it from the general account in Gen. xlviii. and the ſenſe is, that Jacob, having bleſſed the two ſons of Joſeph, being ſat upon his bed, and weak, he leaned upon the top of his ſtaff, and worſhipped God, and gave praiſe and glory to him, that he had lived to ſee, not only his ſon Joſeph, but his ſeed alſo; ſee Gen. xlviii. 2, 11, 20.

Ver. 22. By faith Joſeph, when he died, &c.] The riches and honours of Joſeph, as they could not ſecure him from death, ſo they did not make him unmindful of it; nor was he afraid of dying, or uneaſy about it; nor did his proſperity make him proud, or above ſpeaking to his brethren, nor revengeful to them, nor unthoughtful of their future afflictions; nor did his affluence of temporal things take off his regards to divine promiſes, nor weaken his faith in them, which is here commended in the following inſtances; as that at the time of his death, he made mention of the departing of the children of Iſrael; that is, out of the land of Egypt: he remembred it himſelf, and put his brethren in mind of it, by ſpeaking of it to their comfort, with great aſſurance; he knew they were well ſituated in the land of Egypt, and yet ſpeaks of their departure out of it; he foreſaw, and firmly believed they would be greatly afflicted in it, and that God would look upon them, and viſit them, and bring them out of it, into the land of Canaan; all which ſhows the ſtrength of his faith, and that it was about things not ſeen. And gave commandment concerning his bones; and the command was a very ſtrict one when he gave it; he took an oath of his brethren to fulfil it; it was concerning his bones, not his body; which ſhows, that he believed their departure out of Egypt was at a great diſtance, when his fleſh would be conſumed, and only his bones left, as it was about two hundred years after his death; it reſpects the carrying them out of Egypt with them, and burying them, in the land of Canaan, when they came there; and this is an inſtance of his humility, in chuſing to lie with his fathers, rather than with the kings, and great men in Egypt, and of his care to prevent idolatry, which he might obſerve the Egyptians would be prone unto: and this command was a great inſtance of Joſeph's faith, that the children of Iſrael would return to Canaan, and which might ſerve greatly to confirm their faith in it; it alſo ſhows his belief of the reſurrection of the dead, and of his enjoying the heavenly inheritance, ſignified by the land of Canaan; ſee Gen. l. 24, 25. the papiſts, from hence, plead for the reliques of ſaints; but it ſhould be obſerved, that it was at the requeſt, and by the command of Joſeph, that his bones were preſerved, which is not the caſe of the ſaints, whoſe reliques are pleaded for; beſides, theſe were the true and real bones of Joſeph, whereas the reliques of the ſaints are only pretended; to which may be added, that the bones of Joſeph were ordered to be buried, not to be ſhewed for a ſight, much leſs worſhipped, as popiſh reliques are. Joſeph's coffin, the Jews ſay [h], was put into the river Nile; and ſo ſays Patricides [i], an Arabic writer: others ſay, it was in the burying-place of the kings, until it was taken up and removed by Moſes.

Ver. 23. By faith Moſes, when he was born, &c.] Which is to be underſtood, not of the faith of Moſes, but of the faith of his parents, at the time of his birth; which was when Pharaoh had publiſhed an edict, ordering every male child to be caſt into the river; but inſtead of obeying this order, Moſes was hid three months of his parents; that is, in his father's houſe, as it is ſaid in Acts vii. 20. and is here expreſſed in the Ethiopic verſion. According to the Targumiſt [k], his mother went with him but ſix months, at the end of which he was born, and that ſhe hid him three months, which made up the nine, the time in which a woman uſually goes with child; and after that ſhe could conceal him no longer: the hiding of him is here aſcribed to both his parents, tho' in Exod. ii. 2 it is repreſented as the act of his mother; which, no doubt, was done, with the knowledge, advice, and conſent of his father; and the Septuagint there renders it, εσκεπασαν, they hid him; tho' the order of the hiſtory makes it neceſſary, that it ſhould be read in the ſingular. Parents ought to take care of their children; and perſons may lawfully hide themſelves, or others, from the cruelty of tyrants, and that as long as they can, for their ſafety; and this was ſo far from being wrong in the parents of Moſes, that it is commended, as an inſtance of faith: they believed the promiſe in general, that God would deliver the people of Iſrael; they believed this to be about the time of their deliverance, and had ſome intimation, that this child in particular would be the deliverer, becauſe they ſaw he was a proper child; not only of a goodly and beautiful countenance, but that he was peculiarly grateful and accceptable to God; they perceived ſomething remarkable in him, which to them was a token, ſhould be of his ſeed: and he had received theſe promiſes; given credit to them, and firmly believed them, and fully expected the performance of them; as he had reaſon to do, ſince the firſt was fulfilled, the ſon was born; and yet now he is called to offer him up, on whom his expectation was placed: every thing was trying; it was an human creature he was called to offer, whoſe blood is not to be ſhed by man; a child of his own, a part of himſelf; a ſon, an own ſon; an only-begotten ſon; a ſon whom he loved; an Iſaac, a ſon of joy; a ſon of promiſe; and his heir, the ſon of his old age, and who was now a grown-up perſon. The Jews are divided about the age of Iſaac at his binding; Joſephus [y] ſays he was twenty-five years of age; others ſays twenty-ſix [z]; ſome ſay [a] thirty-ſix: but the more prevailing opinion is [b], that he was thirty-ſeven years of age; only Aben [c] Ezra makes him to be about thirteen; rejecting the more commonly received account, as well as that he was but five years old, that being an age unfit to carry wood. Some chriſtian writers have thought he might be about three and thirty years of age, the age of Chriſt when he ſuffered, of whom he was a type.

Ver. 21. By faith Jacob, when he was a dying, &c.] Which was the uſual time of bleſſing with the patriarchs; and the reaſon of it was, that what was ſaid might be more attended to and regarded, and more ſtrongly impreſſed upon the mind; and this is a proof that it was done in faith by Jacob, when there was no appearance of the fulfillment of theſe things, and it was not likely that he ſhould ſee them; and this ſhews the truth of what the Apoſtle ſays in ver. 1, 13. bleſſed both the ſons of Joſeph; whoſe names were Ephraim and Manaſſeh; the form of bleſſing them is recorded in Gen. xlviii. 15, 16. and which was done in faith, and under the direction and inſpiration of the Spirit of God, as appears by his ſetting Ephraim before Manaſſeh, ver. 13, 14, 17, 18, 19. and when he delivered the bleſſing he firmly believed it would be fulfilled, tho' they were then in a ſtrange land: and worſhipped, leaning upon the top of his ſtaff; not that he worſhipped the top of his ſtaff, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, either his own, or Joſeph's, or any little image upon the top of it; which would be an inſtance of idolatry, and not faith, contrary to the ſcope of the Apoſtle; nor is there any need to interpret this of civil worſhip and reſpect paid to Joſeph, as a fulfillment of his dream, and with a peculiar regard to Chriſt, of whom Joſeph was a type; whereas, on the contrary, Joſeph at this time bowed to his father, as was moſt natural and proper, Gen. xlviii. 12. nor is there any neceſſity of ſuppoſing a different punctuation of Gen. xlvii. 31. and that the true reading is not Mittah, a bed, but Matteh, a ſtaff, contrary to all the Targums [f], and the Talmud [g], which read Mittah, a bed, ſeeing it is not that place the Apoſtle cites or refers to; for that was before the bleſſing of the ſons of Joſeph, but this was at the ſame time; and the Apoſtle relates what is no where recorded in Geneſis, but what he had either from tradition, or immediate revelation; or elſe he concludes it from the general account in Gen. xlviii. and the ſenſe is, that Jacob, having bleſſed the two ſons of Joſeph, being ſat upon his bed, and weak, he leaned upon the top of his ſtaff, and worſhipped God, and gave praiſe and glory to him, that he had lived to ſee, not only his ſon Joſeph, but his ſeed alſo; ſee Gen. xlviii. 2, 11, 20.

Ver. 22. By faith Joſeph, when he died, &c.] The riches and honours of Joſeph, as they could not ſecure him from death, ſo they did not make him unmindful of it; nor was he afraid of dying, or uneaſy about it; nor did his proſperity make him proud, or above ſpeaking to his brethren, nor revengeful to them, nor unthoughtful of their future afflictions; nor did his affluence of temporal things take off his regards to divine promiſes, nor weaken his faith in them, which is here commended in the following inſtances; as that at the time of his death, he made mention of the departing of the children of Iſrael; that is, out of the land of Egypt: he remembred it himſelf, and put his brethren in mind of it, by ſpeaking of it to their comfort, with great aſſurance; he knew they were well ſituated in the land of Egypt, and yet ſpeaks of their departure out of it; he foreſaw, and firmly believed they would be greatly afflicted in it, and that God would look upon them, and viſit them, and bring them out of it, into the land of Canaan; all which ſhows the ſtrength of his faith, and that it was about things not ſeen. And gave commandment concerning his bones; and the command was a very ſtrict one when he gave it; he took an oath of his brethren to fulfil it; it was concerning his bones, not his body; which ſhows, that he believed their departure out of Egypt was at a great diſtance, when his fleſh would be conſumed, and only his bones left, as it was about two hundred years after his death; it reſpects the carrying them out of Egypt with them, and burying them, in the land of Canaan, when they came there; and this is an inſtance of his humility, in chuſing to lie with his fathers, rather than with the kings, and great men in Egypt, and of his care to prevent idolatry, which he might obſerve the Egyptians would be prone unto: and this command was a great inſtance of Joſeph's faith, that the children of Iſrael would return to Canaan, and which might ſerve greatly to confirm their faith in it; it alſo ſhows his belief of the reſurrection of the dead, and of his enjoying the heavenly inheritance, ſignified by the land of Canaan; ſee Gen. l. 24, 25. the papiſts, from hence, plead for the reliques of ſaints; but it ſhould be obſerved, that it was at the requeſt, and by the command of Joſeph, that his bones were preſerved, which is not the caſe of the ſaints, whoſe reliques are pleaded for; beſides, theſe were the true and real bones of Joſeph, whereas the reliques of the ſaints are only pretended; to which may be added, that the bones of Joſeph were ordered to be buried, not to be ſhewed for a ſight, much leſs worſhipped, as popiſh reliques are. Joſeph's coffin, the Jews ſay [h], was put into the river Nile; and ſo ſays Patricides [i], an Arabic writer: others ſay, it was in the burying-place of the kings, until it was taken up and removed by Moſes.

Ver. 23. By faith Moſes, when he was born, &c.] Which is to be underſtood, not of the faith of Moſes, but of the faith of his parents, at the time of his birth; which was when Pharaoh had publiſhed an edict, ordering every male child to be caſt into the river; but inſtead of obeying this order, Moſes was hid three months of his parents; that is, in his father's houſe, as it is ſaid in Acts vii. 20. and is here expreſſed in the Ethiopic verſion. According to the Targumiſt [k], his mother went with him but ſix months, at the end of which he was born, and that ſhe hid him three months, which made up the nine, the time in which a woman uſually goes with child; and after that ſhe could conceal him no longer: the hiding of him is here aſcribed to both his parents, tho' in Exod. ii. 2 it is repreſented as the act of his mother; which, no doubt, was done, with the knowledge, advice, and conſent of his father; and the Septuagint there renders it, εσκεπασαν, they hid him; tho' the order of the hiſtory makes it neceſſary, that it ſhould be read in the ſingular. Parents ought to take care of their children; and perſons may lawfully hide themſelves, or others, from the cruelty of tyrants, and that as long as they can, for their ſafety; and this was ſo far from being wrong in the parents of Moſes, that it is commended, as an inſtance of faith: they believed the promiſe in general, that God would deliver the people of Iſrael; they believed this to be about the time of their deliverance, and had ſome intimation, that this child in particular would be the deliverer, becauſe they ſaw he was a proper child; not only of a goodly and beautiful countenance, but that he was peculiarly grateful and accceptable to God; they perceived ſomething remarkable in him, which to them was a token, that he would be the deliverer of God's people, and therefore they hid him; ſee the note on Acts vii. 20. And they were not afraid of the kings commandment; nor did they obſerve it, for it was contrary to nature, and to the laws of God, and to the promiſe of God's multiplying of that people, and to their hopes of deliverance: there is a great deal of courage and boldneſs in faith; and tho' faith may be weakned, it cannot be loſt; and a weak faith is taken notice of, as here; for tho' they feared not at firſt, they ſeem to be afraid afterwards; but when God deſigns to work deliverance, nothing ſhall prevent.

Ver. 24. By faith Moſes, when he was come to years, &c.] Or was great; a nobleman in Pharaoh's court; or when he was arrived to great knowledge, being learned in all the wiſdom of the Egyptians; or rather, when he was well advanced in years, being full forty years of age, Acts vii. 22, 23. refuſed to be called the ſon of Pharaoh's daughter; by whom Moſes was taken up out of the water; by whom he was named, and provided for; ſhe reckoned him as her own ſon, and deſigned him for Pharaoh's ſucceſſor, as Joſephus reports [l]: he refuſed all this honour, both in words, and by facts; he denied that he was the ſon of Pharaoh's daughter, as the words will bear to be rendered; for to be called, often ſignifies only to be; and by taking part with the Iſraelites, and againſt the Egyptians, he plainly declared, that his deſcent was from the former, and not the latter: and this diſcovered great faith; and ſhowed, that he preferred being called an Iſraelite to any earthly adoption, and the care of the church, and people of God, to his own worldly honour and intereſt; and that he believed the promiſes of God, before the flatteries of a court; and eſteemed afflictions and reproaches, with the people of God, and for his ſake, better than ſinful pleaſures, and earthly riches, as in the following words. Of Pharaoh's daughter, ſee the note on Acts vii. 21.

Ver. 25. Chuſing rather to ſuffer affliction with the people of God, &c.] The Iſraelites, who were God's choſen and peculiar people, and were the true worſhippers of him; Moſes choſe to be with thoſe: the company and converſation of ſuch, is moſt eligible to every good man, becauſe God is with them; his word and ordinances are with them; there are large proviſions of grace in the midſt of them; ſo that it is profitable, delightful, and honourable, to be among them, and is attended with comfort, peace, and ſatisfaction: but then thoſe are a poor, and an afflicted people; affliction is with them, for the ſake of God, and Chriſt, and the truths, which they profeſs, and the worſhip and ſervice they are engaged in; and their afflictions are many and grievous: and now Moſes choſe to ſuffer theſe with them, to ſuffer the ſame afflictions they did, and to ſympathize with them: and this was more eligible to him, than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon; meaning, either the pleaſures, honours, and riches in Pharaoh's court, attended with ſin; as indulging himſelf in the luxury of a court, when his brethren were in diſtreſs; approving Pharaoh's cruelty and perſecution, at leaſt conniving at it, and not oppoſing it, which could not be without ſin; carrying himſelf as the ſon of Pharaoh's daughter, when he was an Hebrew; and preferring his own eaſe to the deliverance of his people; and now theſe, had he continued at court, would have been but for a ſhort ſeaſon: or elſe ſinful luſts in general are intended, in which men promiſe themſelves much pleaſure, when it is only imaginary, and laſts but for a while neither; and both may be intended, and are what the Jews call [m], תענוגי רגע, pleaſures for a moment, or momentary ones. And the reaſons which might induce Moſes, and ſo every good man, to ſuch a choice, may be taken partly from the nature of afflictions themſelves, which are ſuch that God has choſen for them, and appointed them unto, and which he gives them to ſuffer for his name, and which are an honour to them, and iſſue in their good, and in the glory of God; and partly from the nature of ſinful pleaſures; there is no ſolidity, nor ſatisfaction, in the beſt of worldly enjoyments; there can be no true pleaſure in ſin; there is always bitterneſs in the end, and it iſſues in death, if grace prevent not: now it was by faith Moſes made this choice, for it is manifeſtly contrary to fleſh and blood; it ſhowed him to be a man thoroughly acquainted with the nature of ſin; and that he looked beyond the things of ſenſe and time, to thoſe of eternity.

Ver. 26. Eſteeming the reproach of Chriſt, &c.] That is, either Chriſt perſonal; meaning not any reproach that lay upon Chriſt, as the immediate object of it; nor upon the people of Iſrael for the delay of his coming; but rather for the ſake of Chriſt: Chriſt was made known to the Old Teſtament ſaints, and they believed in him; he was typified by ſacrifices which they offered; and they were reproached for his ſake, for the ſacrifices they offered, and for the worſhip they performed, for their faith in the Meſſiah, and their expectation of him: or this may be underſtood of Chriſt myſtical, the church; called Chriſt, becauſe of the union, communion, ſympathy, and likeneſs there is between them, inſomuch that what is done to the one, is done to the other: when the ſaints are reproached, Chriſt himſelf is reproached; and therefore all reproaches of this nature ſhould be bore willingly, chearfully, courageouſly, patiently, and conſtantly: and ſuch Moſes reckoned greater riches than the treaſures in Egypt; he counted reproach itſelf riches; that is, he eſteemed that riches for which he was reproached, as Chriſt, his word, and ordinances, and communion with the ſaints in them; all which are comparable to gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones; yea, are more valuable and deſirable than thouſands of gold and ſilver, or than the treaſures in Egypt, which were very large; money, cattle, and lands coming into the hands of the king, thro' the ſeven years famine in it, Gen. xlvii. 14, 17, 20. and for which immenſe treaſure, treaſure-cities were built, Exod. i. 11. which would have become Moſes's, had he been Pharaoh's ſucceſſor, to which he bid fair, before he diſcovered himſelf. For he had reſpect unto the recompence of the reward; by which is meant, either the deliverance of the Iſraelites from their bondage, which he judged a ſufficient recompence for all his afflictions and reproaches he endured, as the Apoſtle Paul did for the elect's ſake, for the ſake of Chriſt's body the church, Col. i. 24. 2 Tim. ii. 10. or the enjoyment of the land of Canaan, promiſed for an inheritance to the ſeed of Abraham; or the enjoyment of God's preſence among his people, who is their ſhield, and exceeding great reward; or rather eternal glory, which is the reward of the inheritance, and is a reward of grace, and not of debt; this he had reſpect unto, looked for, and believed he ſhould enjoy; ſo that his faith was of things unſeen; and this cauſed him to prefer even afflictions with the ſaints, and reproaches for Chriſt, to all worldly riches and grandeur.

[m] Aben Ezra in Pſ. xxiii. 4.

Ver. 27. By faith he forſook Egypt, &c.] Either when he fled to Midian; this was before the eating of the paſſover, and ſo it ſtands in its proper order; whereas, his going out of Egypt with the children of Iſrael was after it, and mentioned in ver. 29. The word, forſook, implies fleeing; and then it was, when Pharaoh's wrath was kindled againſt him: but it may be ſaid, that Moſes ſeemed then to be afraid of it, ſeeing he fled: to which it may be anſwered; that he ſhewed great courage and intrepidity, in ſlaying the Egyptian; and he took no methods to gain the king's favour, when the thing was known: his fleeing was conſiſtent with courage, and was a point of prudence, and in obedience to the will of God: his departure ſhews, that he would not deſiſt from the work, he was called unto; but that he waited God's time, when he ſhould be again employed; wherefore he endured affliction and meanneſs in Midian, and waited, patiently, 'till God ſhould call him again to ſervice: or this is to be underſtood of the time, when he led the children of Iſrael out of Egypt; when he had many difficulties on the part of that people: they were ſeated and ſettled in the land of Egypt; they knew nothing of Canaan, nor of the way to it; and, beſides, that was in the poſſeſſion of others; they were a very moroſe, impatient, ſtiff-necked, and an ungovernable people, whom he led into a wilderneſs, without food or arms; and their number was very large; and he had many difficulties, on the part of Pharaoh, and the Egyptians. The Iſraelites were in the midſt of them; he brought them out from among them, with the ſpoil of them in their hands; he knew the changeableneſs and fury of Pharaoh's mind, and yet he led them out, and left Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king; of Pharoah, king of Egypt; tho' it was, as the roaring of a lion: ſo ſuch as are called by grace, from a ſtate of darkneſs and bondage, and out of a ſtrange land, forſake this world, and leave their ſituation in it, their ſinful luſts and pleaſures, the company of wicked men, and every thing that is near and dear, when it is in competition with Chriſt; not fearing the wrath of any temporal king or prince; nor of Satan, the prince of this world: for he endured; afflictions, reproach and menaces, with patience and courage; his mind was not broken with them, nor overborn by them; he expected divine help, and perſevered; and ſo do ſuch, who are called by the grace of God: as ſeeing him who is inviſible; that is God, as the Syriac verſion expreſſes it; who is not to be ſeen corporally, tho' intellectually; not in his eſſence, tho' in his works of creation and providence; not immediately, tho' mediately in and through Chriſt; not perfectly now, tho' face to face hereafter. Moſes ſaw him viſionally, and ſymbolically in the buſh; he ſaw him by faith, and with the eyes of his underſtanding; and ſo believing in his power, faithfulneſs, &c. did what he did.

Ver. 28. Through faith he kept the paſſover, &c.] Which Moſes made, or appointed by divine direction; he kept it, with all its rites and ceremonies, and cauſed the people of Iſrael to obſerve it; and which he did, in faith of the ſpeedy deliverance of the children of Iſrael, from the houſe of bondage; and in the faith of the Meſſiah, of whom the paſſover was a type; ſee the note on 1 Cor. v. 7. The Syriac verſion reads, through faith they kept the paſſover; that is, the Iſraelites: and the ſprinkling of blood; of the paſchal lamb; which was received into a baſon, and was ſprinkled upon the lintel, and two ſide-poſts of the doors of the houſes, in which the Iſraelites dwelt; which was done with a bunch of hyſſop dipped into it: leſt he that deſtroyed the firſt-born ſhould touch them; for the Lord, ſeeing the blood ſprinkled, as above, when he ſmote the firſt-born of Egypt, paſſed by the houſes of the Iſraelites, ſo diſtinguiſhed; and they were all ſafe within, and not one of them touched: this was typical of the blood of Chriſt being ſprinkled upon the hearts and conſciences of his people; whereby they are purified through faith; which blood is looked upon by Jehovah, ſo that juſtice paſſes by them; and they are all ſafe and ſecure, and will be, when others are deſtroyed; nor can they be hurt by the ſecond death.

Ver. 29. By faith they paſſed through the red-ſea, as by dry land, &c.] Not through a river, but through the ſea, the red-ſea, the ſea of Suph, or weeds; ſee the note on Acts vii. 36. Some ſay, they came out on the ſame ſide, they went in; but, it ſhould ſeem rather, by the phraſe here uſed, that they paſſed through it, from one ſide to the other; and, that all one, as if it had been on dry ground; even Moſes, and all the children of Iſrael: and this they did by faith, believing, that God would make a paſſage quite through it for them, and deliver them out of the hands of their enemies, who were cloſely purſuing them: which the Egyptians aſſaying to do, were drowned. Theſe, were Pharoah, and his numerous army; who, obſerving the Iſraelites march on through the ſea, as on dry land, thought they could do the ſame; and ſo made an attempt, but were every one of them drowned; in juſt retaliation for the cruel edict for drowning the male infants of the Iſraelites, as ſoon as born.

Ver. 30. By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, &c.] Of themſelves, not from any natural cauſe: the Jews ſay [n], they ſunk right down into the ground, and were ſwallowed up; even the whole wall fell round about, as the Septuagint verſion in Joſh. vi. 20. expreſſes it: or, it may be only that, which was over-againſt the camp of Iſrael, as Kimchi obſerves; ſince Rahab's houſe was built upon the wall, and yet fell not. And this was by the faith of Joſhua, and the Iſraelites, who believed the walls would fall, at the ſound of the rams horns, as God ſaid they ſhould: after they were compaſſed about ſeven days; which was a trial of their faith and patience: the Jews ſay [o], it was on the ſabbath-day, that they fell: this was a preternatural act, and can't be aſcribed to any ſecond cauſe; nothing is impoſſible with God; no defences, ever ſo ſtrong, are any thing againſt him; unlikely means are ſometimes made uſe of by him; faith ſticks at nothing, when it has the Word of God to reſt upon; and what God does, he does in his own time, and in his own way. This may be an emblem, of the fall of the walls of the hearts of unregenerate men; of their unbelief, hardneſs, enmity, and vain confidence; and of the converſion and ſubjection of them unto Chriſt, thro' the preaching of the Goſpel; which, in the eyes of men, is, as mean and deſpicable, and as unlikely to bring about ſuch an event, as the ſounding of the rams horns might be to the inhabitants of Jericho: and, it may be alſo an emblem of the fall of Babylon, and other antichriſtian cities, Rev. xvi. 19.

Ver. 31. By faith the harlot Rahab, &c.] The Targum on Joſh. ii. 1. calls her אתתא פונדקיתא a woman, that kept a victualling houſe: this paraphraſe

---

[n] Targum Jon. Jarchi & Kimchi in Joſh. vi. 5.

[o] Jarchi & Kimchi in ver. 15.

phraſe is taken notice of by Jarchi and Kimchi on the place, who interpret it, a ſeller of food: and even the Hebrew word זונה is ſo explained by a conſiderable Jewiſh writer [p]; and this may rather ſeem to be the ſenſe of the word, and to be her proper buſineſs, from the ſpies going to her houſe, as being an houſe of entertainment; and from Salmon's marrying her, which might be thought ſtrange, that a prince of Iſrael would, had ſhe been a perſon of ill fame; to which may be added, the encomiums of her, for her faith and works, both by our Apoſtle, and by James: but yet, the conſtant uſe of the word, in this form, the teſtimonies of two Apoſtles, and her making no mention of her huſband and children, when ſhe agreed with the ſpies, confirm the generally received character of her, that ſhe was an harlot. Some Jewiſh writers ſay [q], that ſhe was ten years of age, when the Iſraelites came out of Egypt; and, that all the forty years they were in the wilderneſs, זנתה, ſhe played the harlot; and was one and fifty years of age, when ſhe was proſelyted. She is called an harlot; not with reſpect to her preſent, but paſt life. In the Greek text, ſhe is here called Raab, as alſo in Jam. ii. 25. and ſo in the Septuagint in Joſh. ii. 1. and i. 5. Rachab, which exactly anſwers to the Hebrew word רחב, Joſh. ii. 1. and by Joſephus [r] Rachabe. This woman was a wonderful and ſingular inſtance of the free, ſovereign, diſtinguiſhing, powerful, and efficacious grace of God; being one, that ſprung from Canaan, and was of the nations, that were abhorred; but, being called by grace, became an eminent believer: ſhe believed, that the God of the Iſraelites, was God in heaven and on earth; that he had given the land of Canaan to them; ſhe received the ſpies, and hid them thro' that faith; ſhe cauſed them to ſwear by the Lord, that they would ſhew mercy to her, and her family; and gave credit to them; and obſerved their inſtructions: and ſo ſhe periſhed not with them that believed not; the inhabitants of Jericho, who were unbelievers, and diſobedient, and all periſhed by the ſword: but Rahab periſhed not, neither temporally, nor eternally; her temporal ſalvation, was an emblem and type of her ſpiritual ſalvation; her receiving the ſpies, was an emblem of a ſoul's receiving the Goſpel, and the miniſters of it; the ſcarlet thread, that was hung out, was an emblem of the blood of Chriſt, by which, ſins, tho' as ſcarlet, are made white, as wool; and the ſaving of her whole family, is an emblem of the compleat ſalvation of all the elect, ſoul and body by Chriſt: when ſhe had received the ſpies with peace; and had hid them, for ſome time, in her houſe, and then let them down by the wall; and who, at the taking of the city, ſaved her, and hers, according to their promiſe and oath: the number of theſe ſpies were two, according to Joſh. ii. 1. The Jews [s] ſay, one of them, was Phinehas, the ſon of Eleazar, the high-prieſt; and others [t] of them ſay, they were Phinehas and Caleb.

Ver. 32. And what ſhall I more ſay, &c.] Intimating he had ſaid enough, to prove the definition of faith, he had given; and that the elders, by it, had obtained a good report; and yet he had not ſaid all, he could; and that he had ſo much to ſay, that he could not ſay all: for the time would fail me; either the time of life, and ſo it is an hyperbolical expreſſion; or the time convenient for the writing this epiſtle: to enumerate all the inſtances of faith, and enlarge upon them, would take up too much of his time, and make the epiſtle prolix and tedious: this form of ſpeech is often uſed by Philo, the Jew [u], and by Julian, the emperor [w]. It may be obſerved, that many, who are not mentioned by name, do not ſtand excluded from being believers; and that the number of believers, under the Old Teſtament, was very large: to tell of Gedeon; ſo Gideon is called in the Septuagint verſion of Judg. vi. 11. and other places; and by Joſephus [x], and Philo [y], the Jew, as here: he was a man, but of a mean extract, and had his infirmities; and, even in the exerciſe of that particular grace, for which he is mentioned; but was, no doubt, a good man, and is commended for his faith; which appeared in aſcribing former mercies and preſent afflictions to the Lord; in deſtroying the altar of Baal; in crediting the Word of the Lord, that Iſrael ſhould be ſaved by him; which he ſhewed, by the preparation he made, and in marching, againſt a numerous army, with only three hundred men, and they but weak: all which may be ſeen in the book of Judges, chapters vi, vii, and viii. and of Barak; who was before Gideon, as Jephtha was before Sampſon, and Samuel before David; for the Apoſtle does not obſerve ſtrict order, reciting theſe in haſte. Barak, when the Word of the Lord came to him, ſhewed ſome diffidence, yet acted, in obedience to it, under the ſole direction and counſel of a woman; he engaged Siſera's vaſt army, with a ſmall number, and gave the glory of the victory to the Lord, Judg. iv. and v. and of Sampſon; who was a child of promiſe, and devoted to the Lord; he was famous for his great ſtrength; he had his infirmities, but was, without doubt, a good man: the laſt act of his life ſeems to be a great inſtance of faith; he did it, with calling upon the Lord; he was ſtrengthened for it, by the Lord; he acted, not as a private perſon, but as the judge of Iſrael; nor did he act from private revenge, but from zeal for God, and love to his country; and his intention was not to deſtroy himſelf, but his enemies; in which he acted as a type of Chriſt: and of Jephtha; the Syriac verſion calls him Nepthe, and the Arabic verſion Naphtah; he was baſe born; and, for a time, joined himſelf to vain men, but became a believer; and is remarked for his faith, in aſcribing the conqueſts of Iſrael in the wilderneſs to the Lord; in fighting with the Ammonites, whom he conquered; and in his conſcientiouſneſs, in obſerving his vow, Judg. xi. of David alſo; a man after God's own heart, raiſed up to fulfil his will; whoſe faith appeared in his dependence on God, when he fought with Goliah; in encouraging himſelf in the Lord his God, when in exile and diſtreſs; and in believing his intereſt in the covenant of grace, when his houſe and family were in a diſagreeable ſituation, and he juſt going out of the world: and Samuel; a child of prayer, and early devoted to the Lord, who miniſtred to him, when a child; was always ready to hearken to his voice; was uſed very familiarly by him, and behaved with great uprightneſs, all his days; and had a good report of God and man: and of the prophets; from Samuel to John the Baptiſt, who were famous for their truſt in God, their faith in the Meſſiah, and and for their honourable walk and converſation.

Ver. 33. Who through faith ſubdued kingdoms, &c.] As David did particularly; who ſubdued Syria, Moab, Ammon, Amaleck, Edom, and the Philiſtines, liſtines, 2 Sam. viii. 12, 14. War, in ſome caſes, is lawful; and kingdoms may be ſubdued; and faith makes uſe of means to do it: theſe kingdoms, tho' ſubdued by faith, yet not without fighting. Believers have no reaſon to be afraid of kings, or kingdoms; and this ſhould encourage the ſaints, in their combats with the powers of darkneſs. Wrought righteouſneſs; exerciſed vindictive juſtice, in taking vengeance on the enemies of God, and his people; civil righteouſneſs, in the diſcharge of their offices; and moral righteouſneſs, in their converſation before God and men; which, being imperfect, was not juſtifying: wherefore they ſtood in need of another, and better righteouſneſs, which is perfect and durable; and, in conſequence of which being known, embraced and received, men work righteouſneſs: it may be obſerved, that to do works of righteouſneſs in faith, and by it, is ſomething very conſiderable; it is reckoned here among actions of the greateſt fame; and, that true faith is an operative grace, it works by love, and is always attended with works of righteouſneſs; and that righteouſneſs is a fruit and evidence of faith; and that faith is not the believer's righteouſneſs; and that the righteouſneſs of faith is not that which faith works, but which it receives. Obtained promiſes; the promiſe of the land of Canaan; particular promiſes of victory over their enemies; promiſes concerning the Meſſiah, and of everlaſting life and happineſs: their faith was not the cauſe of promiſes being made, nor of their being fulfilled; but was the grace, by which theſe believers received them, believed them, and waited for the accompliſhment of them; and, in ſome ſenſe, enjoyed the things promiſed before-hand; their faith realizing things future and inviſible to them: to obtain a promiſe from God, is a great and marvellous thing; it is an inſtance of rich grace; and there is never a promiſe, but what is great in itſelf, and precious to the ſaints: all God's promiſes are obtained; they are ſure, and are certainly fulfilled; and it is the work and buſineſs of faith to receive, and enjoy them. Stopped the mouths of lions: a lion was ſlain by Sampſon, and another by David; but the moſt remarkable inſtance of ſtopping the mouths of lions, was in the den, into which Daniel was caſt; and this may encourage the faith of God's people, when they are in the midſt of men, comparable to lions; and may animate them not to fear the devouring lion, ſatan.

Ver. 34. Quenched the violence of fire, &c.] Which may be ſaid to be done, when a believer, or a righteous man, is delivered out of it, as Lot from Sodom, when God rained fire and brimſtone on it; when, by prayer, it is ſtopped, as by Moſes, at Taberah, Numb. xi. 1, 2. when perſons are not hurt by it, as Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, when caſt into Nebuchadnezzar's fiery furnace; and many of the martyrs have triumphed in the flames: ſo believers are delivered out of the fire of afflictions, and are not conſumed thereby; and quench the fiery darts of ſatan, thrown at them; and are untouched by the fire of God's wrath, in every ſtate and caſe; and ſhall not be hurt of the ſecond death, which is a lake of fire, burning with brimſtone. Eſcaped the edge of the ſword; and were not deſtroyed by it; as Lot, Abraham, Moſes; Joſhua, the Judges, David, Elijah, Eliſha, and others. Out of weakneſs were made ſtrong; being recovered from bodily diſeaſes, as David, Hezekiah, &c. by an increaſe of bodily ſtrength, as Samſon; by being filled with courage, and ſtrength of mind, when before timorous, as Barak, &c. ſo believers, when they have been weak, in the exerciſe of grace, have been made ſtrong: waxed valiant in fight; as Barak, Gideon, David, &c. ſo believers, in the ſpiritual fight of faith, have waxed valiant; being engaged in a good cauſe, and under a good captain; being well provided with armour, and aſſured of victory, and a crown. Turned to flight the armies of the aliens; ſuch, as the Canaanites, the Moabites, Ammonites, Philiſtines, and others; who, were put to flight, by Joſhua, the Judges, David, and others.

Ver. 35. Women received their dead raiſed to life again, &c.] As the widow of Sarepta, and the Shunamite, 1 Kings xvii. 22. 2 Kings iv. 34, 35. Their ſons were really dead, and they received them alive again, from the hands of the prophets, Elijah and Eliſha, in the way of a reſurrection, and by faith; by the faith of the prophets: and others were tortured; racked, or tympanized; referring to the ſufferings of ſeven brethren, and their mother, in the times of Antiochus, recorded in 2 Maccab. vii. as appears, from the kind of torment endured by them; from the offer of deliverance rejected by them; and from their hope of the reſurrection: for it follows, not accepting deliverance; when offered them by the king, 2 Maccab. vii. 24, 25. that they might obtain a better reſurrection; which they died in the faith of, 2 Maccab. vii. 9, 11, 14. The reſurrection of the ſaints, which is unto everlaſting life, is a better reſurrection, than mere metaphorical, and figurative ones, as deliverances from great afflictions, which are called deaths; or real ones, which were only to a mortal ſtate, and in order to die again, as thoſe under the Old Teſtament, and under the New, before the reſurrection of Chriſt; or then the reſurrection of the wicked: for the reſurrection, the ſaints will obtain, will be firſt, at the beginning of the thouſand years; the wicked will not live, 'till after they are ended; it will be by virtue of union to Chriſt, whereas, the wicked will be raiſed, merely by virtue of his power; the ſaints will riſe with bodies glorious, powerful, and ſpiritual, the wicked with baſe, vile, and ignoble ones; the righteous will come forth to the reſurrection of life, the wicked to the reſurrection of damnation. The conſideration of the better reſurrection is of great uſe to ſtrengthen faith, under ſufferings, for righteouſneſs ſake, and this is obtained by ſuffering; not that ſuffering is the meritorious cauſe of it, but ſaints in this way come to it; it is promiſed to ſuch, and it will be attained unto, and enjoyed by ſuch; for all that live godly, do, and muſt ſuffer perſecution in one way or another.

Ver. 36. And others had trial of cruel mockings, &c.] As Sampſon by the Philiſtines; Eliſha by the children, whom the bears devoured; Jeremiah by Paſhur, and others; the Jews by Sanballat and Tobiah, when rebuilding the temple; the prophets, whom God ſent to the Jews, as his meſſengers, Judg. xvi. 25—28. 2 Kings ii. 23, 24. Jer. xx. 7, 8. Nehem. iv. 1.—6. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15, 16. and ſcourgings; or ſmitings, as Jeremiah and Micajah, Jer. xx. 2. 2 Chron. xviii. 23, 24. yea moreover of bonds and impriſonment; as Joſeph, Sampſon, and Jeremy, Gen. xxxix. 20. Judg. xvi. 21. Jer. xx. 2. and xxxvii. 15. Now, of theſe things they had trial, or experience; their graces were tried by them, and they patiently endured them.

Ver. 37. They were ſtoned, &c.] As Naboth, by the order of Ahab, 1 Kings xxi. 13,---19. Zachariah in the court of the Lord's houſe; 2 Chron. xxiv. 21. and the character of Jeruſalem is, that ſhe ſtoned the Prophets that were ſent unto her, Matt. xxiii. 37. They were ſawn aſunder; to which there ſeems to be an alluſion in Matt. xxiv. 51. There is no inſtance of any good men being ſo uſed in Scripture: perhaps reference is had to ſome that ſuffered thus in the time of Antiochus. The Jews have a tradition, that the Prophet Iſaiah was ſawn aſunder in the times of Manaſſeh, and by his order; which ſome think the Apoſtle refers unto; though it ſeems to be all fictitious, and ill put together. The tradition is in both Talmuds: in the one, the account is this; [z] that "Manaſſeh ſought to kill Iſaiah, and he fled "from him, and fled to a cedar, and the cedar "ſwallowed him up, all but the fringe of his garment; they came and told him (Manaſſeh), "he ſaid unto them, go and ſaw the cedar, ונסרו "and they ſawed the cedar, and blood was ſeen to "come out." And in the other [a] thus, "ſays "R. Simeon ben Azzai, I found a book of genealogies in Jeruſalem, and in it was written, that "Manaſſeh ſlew Iſaiah." And after relating the occaſion of it, being ſome Paſſages in Iſaiah, Manaſſeh was diſpleaſed with and objected to; and the Prophet not thinking it worth his while to return an anſwer, or attempt to reconcile them with other paſſages objected, knowing that the king would uſe him contemptuouſly; he is made to ſay, "I "will ſwallow (or put myſelf into) a cedar, they "brought the cedar, ונסרו and ſawed it aſunder, "and when it (the ſaw) came to his mouth, he "expired." Another Jewiſh writer [b] out of the Midraſh, reports it thus; "Manaſſeh ſought to "ſlay him, and Iſaiah fled, and the Lord remembred him, and he was ſwallowed up in the "middle of a tree; but there remained without "the tree the fringe of his garment; and then "Manaſſeh ordered the tree to be cut down, and "Iſaiah died." And it is become a generally received opinion of the antient chriſtian writers, that Iſaiah was ſawn aſunder; as of Juſtin Martyr [c], Origen [d], Tertullian [e], Lactantius [f], Athanaſius [g], Hilary [h], Cyril of Jeruſalem [i], Gregory Nyſſene [k], Jerom [l], Iſidorus Peluſiota [m], Gregentius [n], Procopius Gazæus [o], and others; but more perſons ſeem to be deſigned: were tempted; either by God, as Abraham and Job; or by the Devil, as all the ſaints are; or rather by cruel tyrants, to deny the faith, and renounce the worſhip of God, as Eleazar, and the ſeven brethren with their mother; at leaſt ſome of them were, Maccab. vi. and vii. chapters. Some think the true reading is ἐπρήσθησαν, were burned, as one of the ſeven brethren were, 2 Maccab. vii. 5. and as Zedekiah and Ahab were roaſted in the fire, by the king of Babylon, Jer. xxix. 22. though they were lying prophets, and cannot be referred to here; ſee Dan. xi. 33. This clauſe is wanting in the Syriac verſion: were ſlain with the ſword; as the prieſts at Nob, by the order of Saul; 1 Sam. xxii. 18, 19. the Prophets of the Lord by Jezabel, 1 Kings xviii. 23. and xix. 10. and many in the times of the Maccabees; Dan. xi. 33. 2 Maccab. v. 14. they wandered about in ſheeps ſkins and goats ſkins; with the wool or hair upon them; and with ſuch Elijah and Eliſha might be arrayed; ſince the former is ſaid to be a hairy man, or covered with a hairy garment, as John the Baptiſt was, who came in his ſpirit and power, and alſo in his form; and the latter wore the mantle of the other; 2 Kings i. 8. and ii. 8, 14. and to theſe, reference may be had, who were obliged to wander about, becauſe of thoſe who ſought their lives; and was the caſe of others who were forced, by reaſon of perſecution, to quit their habitations, and wander abroad; and ſome cloathed themſelves in this manner, to ſhew their contempt of the world, and their contentment with mean apparel; and others, becauſe they could get no other raiment: being deſtitute; of bodily food, as Elijah, who was fed by ravens, and by the widow of Sarepta; 1 Kings xvii. 6,—15. afflicted; preſſed, drove to the greateſt ſtraits, deſpairing of life, and weary of it, as the ſame prophet, 1 Kings xix. 4,---10. tormented; or evilly treated, reproached, vilified, perſecuted, and made the filth of the world, and the offscouring of all things.

Ver. 38. Of whom the world was not worthy, &c.] Theſe words are inſerted in a parentheſis, to remove or prevent ſuch objections as theſe; that they were reſtleſs and unquiet perſons, that made diſturbance in the world, and ſo unfit to live in it; and that they were deſervedly puniſhed for crimes they were guilty of; and to ſhew the great worth and ineſtimable value of the people of God, which exceeds that of the whole world; and to intimate the removal of them out of the world, or from dwelling among the men of it, is by way of puniſhment to it: they wandered in deſarts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth; as Elijah did; 1 Kings xviii. 4. and xix. 9, 10. and many in the times of the Maccabees; 2 Maccab. x. 6.

Ver. 39. And theſe all having obtained a good report through faith, &c.] This may either be limited to the ſufferers in the preceding verſes, who were martyred, or ſuffered martyrdom for the faith, as the words may be rendred; and who are called martyrs or witneſſes, in ch. xii. 1. and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders the clauſe, and all theſe were witneſſes concerning the faith: or it may be extended to all the inſtances of faith throughout the chapter; and ſo the Apoſtle reaſſerts what he had ſaid, ver. 2. having proved it by a variety of examples; ſee the note there: received not the promiſe; not that they did not receive the promiſe of the land of Canaan, for ſo did Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, Joſeph, Moſes, &c. nor that they did not receive the promiſe of deliverance and victory, for ſo did Joſhua, the Judges and others; or that they did not receive the promiſe of eternal life, for that they all did; but the promiſe of the Meſſiah, that is, the Meſſiah promiſed: for they had the promiſe, but not the thing; who is called the promiſe, emphatically, becauſe he is the firſt and grand promiſe; and becauſe in him all the promiſes center, and are yea, and amen: him the Old Teſtament ſaints received not; they greatly deſired to ſee him in the fleſh; they ſaw him by faith; they believed in him, and rejoiced in the expectation of his coming; but he was not exhibited to them incarnate. Now ſince theſe ſaints ſo ſtrongly believed, and ſo chearfully ſuffered before Chriſt came; the Apoſtle's Argument is, that much more ſhould the ſaints now, ſince Chriſt is come, and the promiſes received, go on believing in him, and readily ſuffering for his ſake; ſee ch. xii. 1,---4.

Ver. 40. God having provided ſome better thing for us, &c.] Not a better ſtate of the church, in ſuch reſpect, as to be free from ſuffering reproach and perſecutions; for this is the caſe of ſaints under the New Teſtament as under the Old; nor the felicity of the ſoul after death; nor any greater degree of happineſs in the other world; nor the perfection of bleſſedneſs in ſoul and body; things common to all believers; but Chriſt, as now exhibited in the fleſh: Jeſus Chriſt was the ſame in the yeſterday of the Old Teſtament, as he is in the preſent day of the Goſpel diſpenſation; he was ſlain from the foundation of the world; and the ſaints then were ſaved as now, by his grace and righteouſneſs: only with this difference between them and us; they had Chriſt in the promiſe, we have him himſelf that was promiſed; they had him in type and ſhadow, we have him in reality and truth; they believed in, and were ſaved by Chriſt, who was to come; we believe in him, and are ſaved by him, as being come. Hence our caſe is, with reſpect to theſe circumſtances, better than theirs; we have a better covenant, or a better adminiſtration of the covenant of grace; we have a better prieſthood, and a better ſacrifice; the goſpel is diſpenſed in a better manner, more clearly and fully: our condition is better than theirs; they were as children under tutors and governours, and were under a ſpirit of bondage; but we are redeemed from under the law, and are clear of its burdenſome rites, as well as of its curſe and condemnation; and have the ſpirit of liberty and adoption. And this God has provided for us in his council and covenant: for this denotes God's determination, deſignation, and appointment of Chriſt, to be the propitiatory ſacrifice for ſin; and has reſpect to the nature and circumſtances of his death, which were fixed in the purpoſes of God; as well as the time of his coming into the world, and the ſeaſon of his death; and in all this God has ſhewn his great goodneſs, his amazing love, and the riches of his grace: and his end herein is, that they without us ſhould not be made perfect; the Old Teſtament ſaints are perfectly juſtified, perfectly ſanctified, and perfectly glorified; but their perfection was not by the law, which made nothing perfect, but by Chriſt, and through his ſacrifice, blood and righteouſneſs; and ſo were not made perfect without us; ſince their ſins and ours are expiated together by the ſame ſacrifice; their perſons and ours juſtified together, by the ſame righteouſneſs; they and we make up but one church, and general aſſembly; and as yet all the elect of God among the Jews are not called, and ſo are not perfect in themſelves, or without us. Jews and Gentiles will incorporate together in the latter day; and beſides, they and we ſhall be glorified together, in ſoul and body, to all eternity.

CHAP. XII.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle preſſes to a conſtant exerciſe of faith and patience, amidſt the various afflictions the ſaints are exerciſed with; delivers out ſeveral exhortations uſeful in the chriſtian life; and ſhews the difference between the legal and goſpel diſpenſations. Having in the preceding chapter given many illuſtrious inſtances and examples of faith, he makes uſe of this cloud of witneſſes, as he calls them, to engage the Hebrews to drop their unbelief, and run with faith and patience the race ſet before them, ver. 1. and which he further urges from the example of Chriſt; from his concern in faith, being the author and finiſher of it; from what he ſuffered when here on earth, both the contradiction of ſinners, and the death of the croſs, for the joy of having his people with him in heaven; and from his glorious ſtate, being ſet down at the right hand of God. Whereas, as yet, they had not been called to ſhed their blood in their warfare againſt ſin, ver. 2, 3, 4. And that they muſt expect chaſtiſement, and ſhould bear it patiently, he cites a paſſage of ſcripture out of Prov. iii. 11, 12. which ſuggeſts, that thoſe who are the children of God, and are loved and received by him, are chaſtened and ſcourged, ver. 5, 6. Wherefore this was no other than dealing with them as children; and ſhould they not be thus dealt with, it would be an argument that they were baſtards, and not ſons, ver. 7, 8. And next the Apoſtle argues from the right of parents to chaſtize their children, and the ſubjection that is yielded to them; that if the corrections of them, who were the fathers of their bodies, were quietly ſubmitted to; then much more ſhould thoſe of the father of their ſouls; and the rather, ſince the chaſtenings of the former are only for temporal good, and according to their fallible judgments; whereas the latter are for ſpiritual profit, and an increaſe of holineſs, ver. 9, 10. And though it muſt be allowed, that no chaſtening, for the preſent time, is matter of joy but of grief; yet the effects of them are the peaceable fruits of righteouſneſs, to them that are exerciſed by them, ver. 11. Wherefore the Apoſtle exhorts the believing Hebrews to encourage themſelves and others under afflictions; and to behave in ſuch manner, and carry it ſo evenly, that they might not be an occaſion of ſtumbling to weak believers, ver. 12, 13. He exhorts them in general to follow peace with all men, and particularly holineſs; which is abſolutely neceſſary to the beatific viſion of God, ver. 14. and to take care that no hereſy or immorality ſpring up among them, and be connived at, and cheriſhed by them, to the troubling of ſome, and defiling of others, ver. 15. and particularly, leſt the ſin of uncleanneſs, or any ſort of prophaneneſs ſhould be found among them; of which Eſau, the brother of Jacob, from whence they ſprung, was guilty; whoſe prophaneneſs lay in ſelling his birthright for a morſel of meat, and whoſe puniſhment was, that he ſhould be deprived of the bleſſing; which decree was irrevocable, notwithſtanding his tears, ver. 16, 17. and to enforce theſe exhortations, the Apoſtle obſerves to theſe believers, that they were not now under the law, but in a goſpel church ſtate. The terror of the legal diſpenſation they were delivered from, is deſcribed by the place where the law was given, a mount burning with fire; by circumſtances attending it, blackneſs, darkneſs, and tempeſt, and the ſound of a trumpet; by the matter of it, a voice of words, which they that heard, intreated they might hear no more; and by the effect the whole had upon Moſes himſelf, who quaked and trembled at what he ſaw and heard, ver. 18, 19, 20, 21. The happineſs of the goſpel diſpenſation, or of the goſpel church ſtate, is expreſſed bv the names of it, called mount Zion, the city of the living God, the new Jeruſalem; and by the company the ſaints have there, and their fellowſhip with them; angels innumerable; elect men, whoſe names are written in heaven, and whoſe ſpirits are made perfectly juſt; God the judge of all, and Jeſus the mediator of the new covenant; whoſe blood being ſprinkled, on their conſciences, ſpoke peace and pardon to them; ſuch as neither Abel's blood nor ſacrifice could ſpeak, ver. 22, 23, 24. From whence the Apoſtle argues, that care ſhould be taken not to neglect and deſpiſe the voice of Chriſt, who is now in heaven, and ſpeaks from thence in his goſpel and ordinances; ſeeing they eſcaped not who rejected him that ſpake on earth, at mount Sinai, which was ſhaken by his voice; and the rather, ſince it appears from a prophecy in Hagg. ii. 6, 7. that under the goſpel diſpenſation, not only the earth but the heavens would be ſhaken, ver. 25, 26. which is an emblem of the ſhaking and removing the ordinances of the ceremonial law; that goſpel ordinances might take place, and remain for ever, verſe 27. Upon the whole, the Apoſtle exhorts the believing Hebrews, that ſeeing they had received the immoveable kingdom of grace, and were admitted into the goſpel diſpenſation, or church ſtate; that they would hold faſt the goſpel of the grace of God, and ſerve the Lord, according to his revealed will, with reverence and godly fear, which would be acceptable to him; or otherwiſe he would be a conſuming fire; as he is to all the deſpiſers and neglecters of his goſpel and ordinances, ver. 28, 29.

Ver. 1. Wherefore ſeeing we alſo are compaſſed about, &c.] As the Iſraelites were encompaſſed with the pillar of cloud, or with the clouds of glory in the wilderneſs, as the Jews ſay; ſee the note on 1 Cor. x. 1. to which there may be an alluſion here, ſince it follows, with ſo great a cloud of witneſſes; or martyrs, as the Old Teſtament ſaints, the inſtances of whoſe faith and patience are produced in the preceding chapter: theſe, ſome of them, were martyrs in the ſenſe in which that word is commonly uſed; they ſuffered in the cauſe, and for the ſake of true religion; and they all bore a noble teſtimony of God, and for him; and they received a teſtimony from him; and will be hereafter witneſſes for, or againſt us, to whom they are examples of the above graces: and theſe may be compared to a cloud, for the comfortable and reviving doctrines which they dropped; and for their refreſhing examples in the heat of perſecution; and for their guidance and direction in the ways of God; and more eſpecially for their number, being like a thick cloud, and ſo many, that they compaſs about on every ſide, and are inſtructive every way. Hence the following things are inferred and urged, let us lay aſide every weight; or burden; every ſin, which is a weight and burden to a ſenſible ſinner, and is an hindrance in running the chriſtian race; not only indwelling ſin, but every actual tranſgreſſion, and therefore to be laid aſide; as a burden, it ſhould be laid on Chriſt; as a ſin, it ſhould be abſtained from, and put off, with reſpect to the former converſation: alſo worldly cares, riches, and honours, when immoderately purſued, are a weight depreſſing the mind to the earth, and a great hindrance in the work and ſervice of God, and therefore to be laid aſide; not that they are to be entirely rejected, and not cared for and uſed, but the heart ſhould not be ſet upon them, or be over anxious about them: likewiſe the rites and ceremonies of Moſes's law were a weight and burden, a yoke of bondage, and an intolerable one, and with which many believing Jews were entangled and preſſed, and which were a great hindrance in the performance of evangelical worſhip; wherefore the exhortation to theſe Hebrews, to lay them aſide, was very proper and pertinent, ſince they were uſeleſs and incommodious, and there had been a diſanulling of them by Chriſt, becauſe of their weakneſs and unprofitableneſs. Some obſerve, that the word here uſed ſignifies a tumour or ſwelling; and ſo may deſign the tumour of pride and vain-glory, in outward privileges, and in a man's own righteouſneſs, to which the Hebrews were much inclined; and which appears in an unwillingneſs to ſtoop to the croſs, and bear afflictions for the ſake of the Goſpel; all which is a great enemy to powerful godlineſs, and therefore ſhould be brought down, and laid aſide. The Arabic verſion renders it, every weight of luxury; all luxurious living being prejudical to real religion: and the ſin which doth ſo eaſily beſet us; the Arabic verſion renders it, eaſy to be committed; meaning either the corruption of nature in general, which is always preſent, and puts upon doing evil, and hinders all the good it can; or rather ſome particular ſin, as what is commonly called a man's conſtitution-ſin, or what he is moſt inclined to, and is moſt eaſily drawn into the commiſſion of; or it may be the ſin of unbelief is intended, that being oppoſite to the grace of faith, the Apoſtle had been commending, in the preceding chapter, and he here exhorts to; and is a ſin which eaſily inſinuates itſelf, and prevails, and that ſometimes under the notion of a virtue, as if it would be immodeſt, or preſumptuous to believe; the arguments for it are apt to be readily and quickly embraced; but as every weight, ſo every ſin may be deſigned: ſome reference may be had to Lam. i. 14. where the church ſays, that her tranſgreſſions were wreathed, ישתרגו, wreathed themſelves, or wrapped themſelves about her. The alluſion ſeems to be to runners in a race, who throw off every thing that incumbers, drop whatſoever is ponderous and weighty, run in light garments, and lay aſide long ones, which entangle and hinder in running, as appears from the next clauſe, or inference. And let us run with patience the race that is ſet before us. The ſtadium, or race-plot, in which the chriſtian race is run, is this world; the prize run for is the heavenly glory; the mark to direct in it, is Chriſt; many are the runners, yet none but the overcomers have the prize; which being held by Chriſt, is given to them: this race is ſet before the ſaints; that is, by God; the way in which they are to run is marked out by him in his word; the troubles they ſhall meet with in it, are appointed for them by him, in his counſels and purpoſes; the mark to direct them, is ſet before them in the Goſpel, even Jeſus, the author and finiſher of faith, whom they are to look unto; the length of their race is fixed for them, or how far, and how long they ſhall run; and the prize is determined for them, and will be given them, and which is held out for their encouragement, to have reſpect unto: and it becomes all the ſaints, and belongs to each, and every one of them, to run this race; which includes both doing and ſuffering for Chriſt; it is a motion forward, a preſſing towards the mark for the prize, a going from ſtrength to ſtrength, from one degree of grace to another; and to it ſwiftneſs and agility are neceſſary; and when it is performed aright, it is with readineſs, willingneſs, and chearfulneſs: it requires ſtrength and courage, and a removal of all impediments, and ſhould be done with patience; which is very neceſſary, becauſe of the many exerciſes in the way; and becauſe of the length of the race; and on account of the prize to be enjoyed, which is very deſirable: the examples of the ſaints, and eſpecially of Chriſt, the forerunner, ſhould move and animate unto it.

Ver. 2. Looking unto Jeſus, the author and finiſher of our faith, &c.] Not with bodily eyes, for at preſent he is not to be looked upon in this manner, but with the eyes of the underſtanding, or with the eye of faith; for faith is a ſeeing of the Son; it is a ſpiritual ſight of Chriſt, which is at firſt but glimmering, afterwards it increaſes, and is of a ſoul-humbling nature; it is marvellous and ſurprizing; it transforms into the image of Chriſt, and fills with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory: a believer ſhould be always looking to Chriſt, and off of every object elſe, as the word here uſed ſignifies. Chriſt is to be looked unto as Jeſus, a ſaviour, who being appointed and ſent by God to be a ſaviour, came, and is become the author of eternal ſalvation; and to him only ſhould we look for it: he is able and willing to ſave; he is a ſuitable, compleat, and only ſaviour; and whoever look to him by faith, ſhall be ſaved; and he is to be conſidered, and looked unto, as the author and finiſher of faith: he is the author or efficient cauſe of it; all men are by nature without it; it is not in the power of man to believe of himſelf; it is a work of omnipotence; it is an inſtance of the exceeding greatneſs of the power of God; and it is the operation of Chriſt, by his Spirit; and the increaſe of it is from him, Luke xvii. 5. and he is the finiſher of it; he gives himſelf, and the bleſſings of his grace, to his people, to maintain and ſtrengthen it; he prays for it, that it fail not; he carries on the work of faith, and will perform it with power; and brings to, and gives that which is the end of it, eternal life, or the ſalvation of the ſoul. Who for the joy that was ſet before him; the word αντι, rendered for, ſometimes ſignifies, in the room or ſtead of, as in Matt. ii. 22. and xx. 28. and is ſo rendered here in the Syriac and Arabic verſions; and then the ſenſe is, that Chriſt, inſtead of being in the boſom of the Father, came into this world; inſtead of being in the form of God, he appeared in the form of a ſervant; inſtead of the glory which he had with his Father from eternity, he ſuffered ſhame and diſgrace; inſtead of living a joyful and comfortable life on earth, he ſuffered a ſhameful and an accurſed death; and inſtead of the temporal joy and glory the Jews propoſed to him, he endured the ſhame and pain of the croſs: ſometimes it ſignifies the end for which a thing is, as in Eph. v. 31. and may intend that, for the ſake of which Chriſt underwent ſo much diſgrace, and ſuch ſufferings; namely, for the ſake of having a ſpiritual ſeed, a numerous offspring with him in heaven, who are his joy, and crown of rejoicing; for the ſake of the ſalvation of all the elect, on which his heart was ſet; and for the glorifying of the divine perfections, which was no ſmall delight and pleaſure to him. And to this agrees the Chaldee paraphraſe of Pſ. xxi. 1. "O "Lord, in thy power ſhall the king Meſſiah, "יחדי, rejoice, and in thy redemption how greatly "will he exult!" And alſo becauſe of his own glory as mediator, which was to follow his ſufferings, and which includes his reſurrection from the dead, his exaltation at the right hand of God, and the whole honour and glory Chriſt has in his human nature; ſee Pſ. xvi. 8, 9, 10, 11. and with a view to all this, he endured the croſs; which is to be taken not properly for that frame of wood, on which he was crucified; but, improperly, for all his ſufferings, from his cradle to his croſs; and particularly the tortures of the croſs, being extended on it, and nailed unto it; and eſpecially the death of the croſs, which kind of death he endured to verify the predictions of it, Pſ. xxii. 16. Zech. xii. 10. and to ſhew that he was made a curſe for his people; and this being a Roman puniſhment, ſhews that the ſceptre was taken from Judah, and therefore the Meſſiah muſt be come; and that Chriſt ſuffered for the Gentiles, as well as Jews: and this death he endured with great courage and intrepidity, with much patience and conſtancy, and in obedience to the will of his Father: deſpiſing the ſhame; of the croſs; for it was an ignominious death, as well as a painful one; and as he endured the pain of it with patience, he treated the ſhame of it with contempt; throughout the whole of his life, he deſpiſed the ſhame and reproach that was caſt upon him; and ſo he did at the time of his apprehenſion, and when upon his trial, and at his death, under all the ignominious circumſtances that attended it; which ſhould teach us not to be aſhamed of the reproach of Chriſt, but count it an honour to be worthy to ſuffer ſhame for his name. And is ſet down at the right hand of the throne of God; which is in heaven; and is expreſſive of the majeſty and glory of God; and of the honour done to Chriſt in human nature, which is not granted to any of the angels: here Chriſt ſits as God's fellow, as equal to him, as God, and as having done his work as man, and mediator; and this may aſſure us, that when we have run out our race, we ſhall ſit down too, with Chriſt upon his throne, and be at reſt.

Ver. 3. For conſider him, &c.] In the greatneſs of his perſon, as God, the Son of God, the heir of all things; and in his offices of prophet, prieſt, and king, as the ſaviour of loſt ſinners, the leader and commander of the people, as the apoſtle and high-prieſt of our profeſſion: conſider him in his human nature, his converſation on earth, and what he did, and ſuffered for men; how that in his nature he was pure and holy, in his converſation harmleſs and innocent, in his deportment meek and lowly; who went about doing good to the ſouls of men, and at laſt ſuffered and died, and is now glorified: conſider the analogy between him and us, and how great is the diſproportion; and therefore if he was ill treated, no wonder we ſhould: conſider him under all his reproaches and ſufferings: that endured ſuch contradiction of ſinners againſt himſelf; againſt his perſon, they denying his deity, and ſpeaking againſt his ſonſhip, and againſt his offices; mocking him as a king, deriding him as a prophet, and treating him with the utmoſt contempt as a prieſt and ſaviour; and againſt his actions, his works of mercy to the bodies of men, when done on the ſabbath-day; his converſing with ſinners for the good of their ſouls, as if he was an encourager of them in ſin, and a partner with them; his miracles, as if they were done by the help of the devil; and againſt the whole ſeries of his life, as if it was criminal. Now we ſhould analogize this contradiction, and ſee what proportion there is between this, and what is endured by us: we ſhould conſider the aggravations of it, that it was againſt himſelf; ſometimes it was againſt his diſciples, and him thro' them, as it is now againſt his members, and him in them; but here it was immediately directly againſt himſelf: and this he endured from ſinners; ſome more ſecret, as the Scribes, Sadducees, and Phariſees; ſome more open, as the common people; ſome of them the vileſt of ſinners, the moſt abandoned of creatures, as the Roman ſoldiers, and Herod's men of war: and this ſhould be conſidered, that we can't be contradicted by viler or meaner perſons; and it is worthy of notice, with what courage and bravery of mind, with what patience and invincible conſtancy he endured it: this ſhould be recollected for imitation and encouragement, leſt ye be wearied, and faint in your minds; contradiction is apt to make perſons weary, and faint, as Rebekah was, becauſe of the daughters of Heth, and as Jeremiah was, becauſe of the deriſion of the Jews, Gen. xxvii. 46. Jer. xx. 8, 9. but a conſideration of Jeſus, and of what he has endured, tends to relieve the ſaints in ſuch a condition; ſee Matt. x. 25. Luke xxiii. 31.

Ver. 4. Ye have not yet reſiſted unto blood, &c.] They had reſiſted ſin, and ſatan, and the world, the men of it, and the luſts of it, and its frowns and flatteries, and alſo falſe teachers, even every adverſary of Chriſt, and their ſouls; but they had not, as yet, reſiſted unto blood, or to the ſhedding of their blood, as ſome of the Old Teſtament ſaints had done; as ſome in the times of the Maccabees, and as James the Apoſtle of Chriſt, and as Chriſt himſelf: wherefore the Apoſtle ſuggeſts, that they ought to conſider, that they had been indulged; and what they had been ingaged in, were only ſome light ſkirmiſhes; and that they muſt expect to ſuffer as long as they were in the world, and had blood in them; and that their blood, when called for, ſhould be ſpilled for the ſake of Chriſt: ſtriving againſt ſin; which is the principal antagoniſt the believer has, and is here particularly pointed out: ſin is here, by ſome, thought to be put for ſinful men; or it may deſign the ſin of thoſe men, who ſolicited the ſaints to a defection from the truth; or the ſin of apoſtacy it ſelf; or that of unbelief; or rather indwelling-ſin, and the luſts of the fleſh, which war againſt the ſoul. Now this is ſaid, to ſharpen and increaſe the ſaints reſentment and indignation againſt it, as being their antagoniſt, with whom they ſtrive and combat, and which is the cauſe of all the evils in the world, expoſes to wrath to come, and ſeparates from communion with God; and to encourage them to bear their ſufferings patiently, ſince they are not without ſin, as Chriſt was; and ſince their afflictions and ſufferings are for the ſubduing of ſin, and the increaſe of holineſs.

Ver. 5. And ye have forgotten the exhortation, &c.] Or conſolation, the conſolatory word or doctrine, in Prov. iii. 11. This, by their conduct, the Apoſtle feared they had forgotten, and therefore puts them in mind of it; or it may be read by way of queſtion, and have ye forgotten, &c? don't ye remember? it would be right to call it to mind: which ſpeaketh unto you as unto children; not as the children of Solomon, but as the children of God, or of Chriſt, the wiſdom of God: here, by a proſopopeia, the word of exhortation is introduced as a perſon ſpeaking, my ſon, deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Lord; by which is meant, not vindictive puniſhment; this would not be ſpeaking to them, nor dealing with them as children, and would be contrary to the love of God towards them; beſides, chaſtiſement in this ſenſe has been upon Chriſt for them, and it would be unjuſt to lay it on them again; but a fatherly correction is deſigned, and which is given in love by God, as a father, and for the inſtruction of his children, as the word uſed ſignifies: and it is called not the chaſtening of men, but of the Lord; every chaſtening, or afflictive providence, is appointed by God, and is looked upon by believers, when grace is in exerciſe, as coming from him; and it is directed, and governed, and limited by him, and is over-ruled by him for his own glory, and their good: and this is not to be deſpiſed, as ſomething nauſeous and loathſome, or as unuſeful and unprofitable, or as inſignificant and unworthy of notice, but ſhould be eſteemed for the good ends, which are ſometimes anſwered by it: nor faint when thou art rebuked of him; God has various ways of rebuking, reproving and convincing, ſometimes by his Spirit, ſometimes by his word and miniſters, and ſometimes by afflictive providences; by theſe he rebukes his people for their ſins, convinces them of them, and brings them to acknowledgment and confeſſion; he makes them hereby ſenſible of their duty, in which they have been remiſs, and brings them to a more conſtant and fervent diſcharge of it; he reproves them for, and convinces of their folly in truſting in the creature, or loving it too much, and of every wrong way they have been walking in; and theſe rebukes are not in a way of wrath, but love, and therefore ſaints ſhould not faint at them: there are two extremes they are apt to run into, under ſuch a diſpenſation; either to take no notice, and make light of an affliction, or elſe to be overwhelmed by it, and ſink under it; both are guarded againſt in this exhortation.

Ver. 6. For whom the Lord loveth he chaſteneth, &c.] All men are not the objects of God's love, only a ſpecial people, whom he has choſen in Chriſt; for whom he has given his ſon, when they were ſinners and enemies; whom he quickens and calls by his grace, juſtifies, pardons, and accepts in Chriſt; and whom he cauſes to love him; theſe he loves with an everlaſting and unchangeable love, and in a free and ſovereign way, without any regard to any motive or condition in them. Now theſe are chaſtened by him, and loved while they are chaſtened; their chaſtening is in love, as appears from the nature of God's love to them, which changes not; from the nature of chaſtening itſelf, which is that of a father; from the divine ſupports granted under it; from the ends of it, which are, among others, that they might be more and more partakers of holineſs, and not be condemned with the world; and from the iſſue of it, which is a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. So the Jews[p] often ſpeak of, יסורין של אהבה, chaſtiſements of love, in diſtinction from evil chaſtiſements, or vindictive ones: and ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth; by whom are meant, not any of the angels, nor all the ſons of men, but ſuch whom God has predeſtinated to the adoption of children, and in the covenant of his grace has declared himſelf a father to; for whom Chriſt has a ſpecial regard, as children, and therefore partook of human nature, and died to gather them together, and redeemed them, that they might receive the adoption of children; and who appear to be the children of God by faith in Chriſt; and who have the ſpirit of adoption, witneſſing their ſonſhip to them; this is a valuable bleſſing of grace, and ſprings from love: and ſuch are received by God, into his heart's love and affection, with complacency and delight; and into the covenant of his grace, to ſhare all the bleſſings and promiſes of it; and into his family, to enjoy all the privileges of his houſe, and into communion with himſelf; and they will be hereafter received by him into glory: now theſe he ſcourges; he ſuffers them ſometimes to be ſcourged by men, and to be buffeted by ſatan; and ſometimes he ſcourges them himſelf with the rod of men, and with the ſtripes of the children of men, but always in love.

[p] Zohar in Gen. fol 39. 3. & 102. 4. & in Exod. fol. 98. 2. & 102. 2. & in Lev. fol. 19. 3.

Ver. 7. If ye endure chaſtening, &c.] In faith, with patience, with courage and conſtancy, with humility and reverence: there are many things which may encourage and animate the ſaints to endure it in ſuch a manner; as that it is but a chaſtening, and the chaſtening of a father; it ſhould be conſidered from whence it comes, and for what ends; that it comes from the Lord, and is for his glory, and their good; the example of Chriſt, and of other ſaints, ſhould excite unto it. The Jews have a ſaying[q], that "the doctrine of chaſtiſements is ſilence;" that is, they are to be patiently bore, and not murmured at. The Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, read the words as an exhortation; the former of theſe renders it, perſevere in diſcipline; the Syriac verſion, endure correction; the Arabic verſion, be ye patient in chaſtiſement; and the Ethiopic verſion, endure your chaſtening; but then the word, for, ſhould be ſupplied in the next clauſe, as it is in the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, making that to be a reaſon enforcing this, for God dealeth with you as with ſons: chaſtening is owning of them for his children, and it diſcovers them to be ſo, and ſhows that they continue ſuch; he does not chaſten them but when it is neceſſary; and whenever he does, it is in love and mercy, and for good, and in the beſt time, ſeaſonably, and in meaſure: for what ſon is he whom the father chaſteneth not? no one can be named, not the Son of God himſelf; he had the chaſtiſement of our peace upon him; nor the more eminent among the children of God, as Abraham, David, and others; nor any in any catalogue, or liſt of them, ſuch as in the preceding chapter; not one in any age or period of time whatever, in any bodies, ſocieties, or communities of them, either under the Old or New Teſtament.

Ver. 8. But if ye be without chaſtiſement, &c.] Or have no affliction: whereof all are partakers; that is, all the children of God; they are all alike children; they are all in a ſtate of imperfection, and prone to ſin; God has an impartial reſpect unto them; and tho' they are not all alike chaſtened, nor chaſtened at all times, yet none are exempted from chaſtiſement, but have it in ſome way or another, and at ſome time or another. Then are ye baſtards, and not ſons; all are not ſons that are under a profeſſion of religion; all that are under a profeſſion of religion are not chaſtiſed; but then thoſe are not the children of God, but the children of the world, of ſatan, and of the anti-chriſtian harlot; for tho' all that are chaſtiſed are not children, yet all that are children are chaſtiſed: hence we learn, that outward peace and proſperity is not a note of a true church; and that ſuch have reaſon to diſtruſt their ſtate, who know not what it is to have the chaſtiſing rod of God upon them; and that afflictions are rather arguments for, than againſt ſonſhip,

Ver. 9. Furthermore, we have had fathers of our fleſh, &c.] Earthly parents; who are ſo called, becauſe they are the immediate cauſes and inſtruments of the generation of their children, and of their fleſhly bodies, and worldly beings; and to diſtinguiſh them from the Father of ſpirits: and this ſhows; that they have not the ſpirit or ſoul from them, only the fleſh or body, and which is frail and corrupt; and therefore goes by this name. Which corrected us; betimes, and at proper ſeaſons, in love, and for inſtruction, and to prevent ruin, and death: and we gave them reverence; by ſubmitting to their correction, and hearkening to it; by taking ſhame to themſelves, and acknowledging the offence committed; by retaining the ſame affection for them; and by a carefulneſs not to offend for the future. Shall we not much rather be in ſubjection to the Father of ſpirits, and live? that is to God, who is ſo called; not becauſe he is the creator of angels, who are ſpirits; but becauſe he is the creator of the ſouls of men; the ſoul is the more noble and excellent part of man: it bears a reſemblance to God; it is the life of man, and is immortal; it is exceeding precious, and the redemption of it; this was at firſt immediately created by God; and he ſtill continues to create ſouls, which he preſerves in their being, and has the power of ſaving and deſtroying them. Beſides, God may be ſo called, becauſe he is the author and donor of all ſpiritual gifts, and particularly of regenerating grace; it is he who renews a right ſpirit in men, and puts a new ſpirit into them: now ſuch ought to be in ſubjection to him; not only as creatures to a creator, and as ſubjects to their prince; but as children to a father, and particularly to him, as and when correcting; they ſhould bow to his ſovereignty, reſign to his will, be humble under his mighty hand, be ſtill and quiet, and bear all patiently; the advantage ariſing from ſuch a ſubjection, is life: and live; or that ye may live; or and ye ſhall live; more comfortably, and more to the glory of God, in communion and fellowſhip with him here, and in heaven to all eternity.

Ver. 10. For they verily for a few days chaſtened us, &c.] Which reſpects not the minority of children, during which time, they are under the correction of parents, and which is but a few days; nor the ſhort life of parents; but rather the end which parents have in chaſtening their children, which is their temporal good, and which laſts but for a few days; which ſenſe, the oppoſition in the latter part of the text requires: and this they do after their own pleaſure; not to pleaſe and delight themſelves in the pains and cries of their children, which would be brutiſh and inhuman; tho' corrections are too often given to gratify the paſſions; nor merely in an arbitrary way, and when they pleaſe; but the ſenſe is, they correct as ſeems good unto them; in the beſt way and manner; to the beſt of their judgments, which are fallible: but he for our profit; ſaints are no loſers by afflictions; they loſe nothing but their droſs and tin; they don't loſe the love of God; nor their intereſt in the covenant of grace; nor the preſence of God; nor grace in their own hearts; nor ſpiritual peace and comfort; on the contrary, they are real gainers by them; their graces gain by them freſh luſtre and glory; they obtain a greater degree of ſpiritual knowledge, and a larger ſtock of experience; and are hereby reſtored to their former ſtate, duty, and zeal; and become more conformable to Chriſt; yea, their afflictions conduce to their future glory; many are the profits ariſing from them. The Alexandrian copy reads in the plural number, profits: particularly God's end in chaſtening of his children is, that we might be partakers of his holineſs; not the eſſential holineſs of God, which is incommunicable; but a communicative holineſs of his, which it is his determining will his people ſhould have: it comes from him, from whom every good and perfect gift does; it is in Chriſt for them, and is received out of his fulneſs; and is wrought in them by the Spirit; and it bears a reſemblance to the divine nature: now men are naturally deſtitute of this holineſs; they have it not by nature, but by participation, as God's gift; and they firſt partake of it in regeneration; and here an increaſe of it is deſigned, a gradual participation of it; and it may include perfect holineſs in heaven: afflictions are deſigned as means to bring perſons to this end; to bring them to a ſenſe of ſin, an acknowledgment of it, an averſion to it, and to a view of pardon of it; to purge it away; to wean the ſaints from this world; to increaſe their grace, and lead them on to a perfect ſtate of glory, where there will be no more ſin, and no more ſorrow.

[q] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 62. 1.

Ver. 11. Now no chaſtening for the preſent ſeemeth to be joyous, &c.] Theſe words anticipate an objection, taken from the grief and ſorrow that comes by afflictions; and therefore how ſhould they be for profit and advantage? The Apoſtle anſwers, by granting that no affliction ſeemeth to be joyous, in outward appearance to fleſh and blood, and according to the judgment of carnal ſenſe and reaſon; in this view of afflictions, it muſt be owned, they don't appear to be matter, cauſe, or occaſion of joy; though they really are, when viewed by faith, and judged of by ſanctified reaſon; for they are tokens of the love of God and Chriſt; are evidences of ſonſhip; and work together either for the temporal, or ſpiritual, or eternal good of the ſaints: and ſo likewiſe indeed for the preſent time, either whilſt under them, or in the preſent ſtate of things, they ſeem ſo; but hereafter, either now when they are over; or however in the world to come, when the grace, goodneſs, wiſdom, and power of God in them, in ſupporting under them, bringing out of them, and the bleſſed effects, and fruits of them, will be diſcerned, they will be looked upon with pleaſure: but for the preſent, and when carnal ſenſe and reaſon prevail, it muſt be allowed, that they are not matter of joy, but grievous; or matter, cauſe, and occaſion of grief; they cauſe pain and grief to the afflicted, and to their friends and relations about them; and eſpecially, they are very grieving, and occaſion heavineſs, and are grievous to be born, when ſoul troubles attend them; when God hides his face, and the ſoul is filled with a ſenſe of wrath, looking upon the chaſtening, as being in wrath and hot diſpleaſure; when Satan is let looſe, and caſts his fiery darts thick and faſt; and when the ſoul has loſt its views of intereſt in the love of God, and in the grace of Chriſt, and in eternal glory and happineſs. Nevertheleſs, afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteouſneſs unto them that are exerciſed thereby; who are uſed unto afflictions; trained up and inſtructed in the ſchool of afflictions, as the word may ſignify; in which many uſeful leſſons of faith, and hope, patience, and experience, humility, ſelf-denial, and reſignation of will are learned: and to ſuch, afflictions yield the fruit of peace; external peace and proſperity ſometimes follow upon them; and oftentimes internal peace is enjoyed in them; and they always iſſue to ſuch in eternal peace and everlaſting happineſs; and this peace ariſes from the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, laid hold upon by faith, which produces a true conſcience-peace, and entitles to that everlaſting joy and reſt which remains for the people of God. Moreover, the fruit of holineſs may be deſigned, which ſaints by afflictions are made partakers of, and the peace enjoyed in that; for there is a peace, which tho' it does not ſpring from, yet is found in the ways of righteouſneſs; and tho' this peace may not be had for the preſent, or while the affliction laſts, yet it is experienced afterwards; either after the affliction is over, in the preſent life, or however in eternity, when the ſaints enter into peace; for the end of ſuch diſpenſations, and of the perſons exerciſed by them, is peace.

Ver. 12. Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, &c.] Theſe words may be conſidered, as ſpoken to the Hebrews, with reſpect to themſelves; accordingly, the Syriac verſion reads, your hands, and your knees; who were ſluggiſh and inactive in prayer, in hearing the word, in attendance on ordinances, in holding faſt their profeſſion, and in the performance of thoſe things which adorn it; they were weary and fatigued with weights and burdens of ſins and afflictions; and were faint, fearful, and timorous, thro' diſtruſt of the promiſed good, becauſe of their perſecutions, being in preſent diſtreſs, and in a view of approaching danger, with which they might be ſurprized, as well as affected with their preſent afflictions: and then the exhortation to lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees, is to be active in every duty; to be courageous againſt every enemy; to bear patiently every burden; to take heart, and be of good chear under every afflictive providence: or elſe they may be conſidered as an exhortation to them with reſpect to others, which ſeems to be moſt agreeable to Iſ. xxxv. 3. from whence they are taken; and then what is ſignified in them is done by ſympathizing with perſons in diſtreſs; by ſpeaking comfortably to them, and by bearing their burdens.

Ver. 13. And make ſtraight paths for your feet, &c.] By feet are meant the walk and converſation of the ſaints, both in the church, and in the world, Cant. vii. 1. and there are paths made ready for theſe feet to walk in; as the good old paths of truth, of the word and worſhip of God, of faith and holineſs: and to make theſe paths ſtraight, is to make the word of God the rule of walking; to avoid carefully joining any thing with it as a rule; to attend conſtantly on the ordinances of Chriſt; to go on evenly in a way of believing on him; to walk in ſome meaſure worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called, and by way of example to others. Leſt that which is lame be turned out of the way; a lame member, as the Syriac verſion, a lame member of the body of Chriſt, the church; or a lame perſon, as the Arabic verſion, a weak believer; one that is ready to halt, either thro' the corruption of nature, or thro' the weakneſs of grace, or thro' want of light and judgment, and thro' inſtability and inconſtancy; leſt ſuch an one ſhould, thro' the irregular walk and converſation of others, be ſtumbled and offended, and go out of the way, and leave the paths of righteouſneſs and truth. God takes care of, and has a regard to ſuch, and he would have others alſo, Mic. iv. 6. Zeph. iii. 19. The Ethiopic verſion reads, that your halting may be healed, and not offended; that you yourſelves may not halt and ſtumble. But let it rather be healed; the faln believer be reſtored, the weak brother be confirmed, the halting profeſſor be ſtrengthened, and every one be built up and eſtabliſhed upon the moſt holy faith, and in the pure ways of the Goſpel.

Ver. 14. Follow peace with all men, &c.] That are in a natural and domeſtic relation to one another, being of the ſame family; and that are in a civil and political one, being of the ſame nation, city, or ſociety; and that are in a ſpiritual one, being members of the ſame church; or, if not, yet being ſaints, and tho' in ſome things different in judgment; yea, even peace is to be followed with enemies, as much as in us lies: and perhaps by all men, the Gentiles may be more eſpecially deſigned, whoſe peace the Hebrews thought they were not to ſeek, Deut. xxiii. 6. miſtaking the ſenſe of the text, by applying it to the Gentiles in general: to follow peace, ſignifies an eager purſuit after it, in the uſe of proper means; exerting the utmoſt of a man's power to attain it, in all things poſſible: many things ſerve to enforce this upon the ſaints; this is moſt agreeable to all the three divine perſons; to God, who is the God of peace; to Chriſt, the prince of peace; and to the Spirit, one of whoſe fruits is peace; and to the characters of the ſaints, who are ſons of peace, and who are called to peace, and who make a profeſſion of the Goſpel of peace; and to the privileges they enjoy, being intereſted in the covenant of peace, partaking of ſpiritual peace now, and being entitled to eternal peace hereafter: and this agrees with the ſayings and counſels of the ancient Jews. It was a ſaying of Hillell[r], who lived about the times of Chriſt; "be thou one of the diſciples of Aaron, who loved "peace, ורודף שלום, and followed peace." This is ſaid of Aaron in the Talmud[s], that "he loved "peace, and followed peace, and made peace be"tween a man and his neighbour, as is ſaid, Mal. "ii. 6." They recommend peace on many accounts, and ſay, great is peace, and among the reſt, becauſe it is one of the names of God[t]: and holineſs; this being added to peace, ſhows, that peace is no further to be followed, than is conſiſtent with holineſs; and holineſs here does not deſign any particular branch of holineſs, as chaſtity of the body and mind, but the whole of holineſs, inward and outward; and intends true holineſs, in oppoſition to ceremonial holineſs, which the Hebrews were fond of, and purſued after: it means even perfect holineſs; for tho' holineſs is not perfect in this life, yet it will be in heaven; and there is a perfection of it in Chriſt; and it is to be followed after, by going to Chriſt for more grace, and exerciſing faith upon him, as our ſanctification; and by eager deſires, that the Spirit of God would ſanctify us more and more, and enable us, by his grace and ſtrength, to walk in the way of holineſs, till we get ſafe to heaven: without which no man ſhall ſee the Lord; or God, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read; that is, with the beatific viſion in heaven: or the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, our Lord, as the Syriac verſion reads; even in this life, ſo as to have communion with him; and hereafter, ſo as to behold his glory, both intellectually and corporally: to ſuch a ſight holineſs is neceſſary; for God is holy, and Chriſt is holy, and ſo is heaven, and ſo are the angels, and the ſouls of men in it.

Ver. 15. Looking diligently, &c.] Acting the part of biſhops, or overſeers, as the word ſignifies; and ſo this exhortation either reſpects officers of the church of the Hebrews, whoſe buſineſs it was more eſpecially to inſpect into the principles and practices of the members of it, and take care that they did not imbibe falſe doctrines, or live immoral lives; or rather the ſeveral members of the church, whoſe buſineſs it is to watch over one another, ſince this Epiſtle ſeems to be written to the whole church. Leſt any man fail of the grace of God; not the free favour and love of God in Chriſt, which is everlaſting, unchangeable, and from whence there is no ſeparation; nor the grace of God implanted in the heart in regeneration, which is incorruptible, never-failing, but always remains, as do faith, hope, and love; but either the whole doctrine of the Goſpel, which is a declaration of the grace of God; or particularly the doctrine of free juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which men may receive in vain, and fall from, 2 Cor. vi. 1. Gal. v. 4. to which theſe Hebrews might be prone: and ſuch fail of it, who either come ſhort of it, don't come up to it, receive and embrace it; or who having profeſſed it, drop it and deny it: now ſuch ſhould be looked after, and ſuch a caſe ſhould be diligently looked into; becauſe the glory of God, the honour of Chriſt, the good of ſouls, and the well being, and even the continuance of the church ſtate are concerned: leſt any root of bitterneſs ſpringing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled; the Alexandrian copy reads οι πολλοι, the many, the common people, the private members of the church; tho' it may intend either things or perſons: it may deſign things; and theſe either the corruption of nature in general, which is a root that lies hidden in a man's heart; and is a root or gall of bitterneſs; and is apt to ſpring up, and bring forth bitter fruit, and gives trouble both to a man's ſelf, and others; and is of a defiling nature, in particular ſins; ſuch as malice, ſtrife, and contention, covetouſneſs, luſt, pride, oppreſſion, idleneſs, &c. which make bitter work, and occaſion great trouble in churches, oftentimes: or errors, and hereſies, which ſometimes, like roots, lie under ground, ſecret and undiſcovered; and are bitter ones in their effects, bringing ruin and ſwift deſtruction on the ſouls of men; and theſe ſometimes ſpring up in churches, whilſt miniſters and members are aſleep, or not ſo diligent and watchful as they ſhould be; and occaſion great trouble, and are very infectious, and defiling: moreover, perſons may be deſigned; which agrees well with Deut. xxix. 18. from whence this phraſe is taken; and with the inſtance in the following verſe, ſuch as all immoral perſons, and falſe teachers, particularly, ſelf-juſticiaries, that preach up the doctrine of juſtification by the works of the law: this was the capital miſtake, and rooted error of the Jewiſh nation; and a bitter one it was; it produced many bitter fruits of pride and vain-glory; and this ſprung up in the church, and troubled and defiled many there and elſewhere, being ſpread by the abettors of it; ſee Acts xv. 24. Gal. i. 6. and v. 9, 10. Now, care ſhould be taken, that no ſuch perſon be in churches, holding ſuch an error; becauſe of the glory of God, Father, Son, and Spirit; the comfort of ſouls; the peace of the church, and the growth and increaſe of it, which muſt be hurt by ſuch men and doctrines; ſo ϱιζα αμαϱτωλος, a ſinful root, is uſed for a wicked man, in 1 Maccab. i. 11. and שורש המרי, a root of bitterneſs ſignifies in Jewiſh writings[u], an error, or hereſy, in oppoſition to a root of faith, or a fundamental doctrine.

Ver. 16. Leſt there be any fornicator or prophane perſon, &c.] The firſt of theſe is guilty of a ſin againſt the ſecond table of the law, as well as againſt his own body; and which is oppoſed to the holineſs, the Apoſtle had before exhorted to; ſuch who are guilty of it, are not to be continued in the communion of the church; and it is a ſin, which lived in unrepented of, excludes from the kingdom of heaven: the latter is one who is a tranſgreſſor of the firſt table of the law; who is an idolater, a ſwearer, a deſpiſer of public worſhip and ordinances, and who behaves irreverently in divine ſervice, and mocks at the future ſtate, as Eſau; to whom both theſe characters ſeem to belong: and this agrees with what the Jews ſay concerning him: they have a tradition[w], that he committed five tranſgreſſions on the day he came out of the field weary. "He committed idolatry; he ſhed innocent blood; "and lay with a virgin betrothed; and denied the "life of the world to come, (or a future ſtate;) "and deſpiſed his birthright." It is elſewhere[x], a little differently expreſſed. "Eſau the wicked, "committed five tranſgreſſions on that day: he lay "with a virgin betrothed; and killed a perſon; "and denied the reſurrection of the dead; and denied the root, or foundation, (i. e. that there is "is a God;) and deſpiſed his birthright; and beſides, he deſired his father's death, and ſought "to ſlay his brother." It is common for them to ſay of him, that he was an ungodly man; and particularly, that he was a murderer, a robber, ונואף, and an adulterer[y]; and that he has no part in the world to come[z]: who for one morſel of meat ſold his birthright; the account of which is in Gen. xxv. 29—34. this includes all the privileges which he had a right unto, by being the firſt-born; as a peculiar bleſſing from his father; a double portion of goods; and dominion over his brethren: and it is commonly ſaid by the Jews, that the prieſthood belonged to the firſt-born, before the Levitical diſpenſation; and that for this reaſon, Jacob coveted the birthright[a], Eſau being a wicked man, and unfit for it. The birthright was reckoned ſacred; it was typical of the primogeniture of Chriſt; of the adoption of ſaints, and of the heavenly inheritance belonging thereunto; all which were deſpiſed by Eſau: and ſo the Jewiſh paraphraſes[b] interpret the contempt of his birthright, a deſpiſing of his part in the world to come, and a denial of the reſurrection of the dead: and his contempt of it was ſhewn in his ſelling it; and this was aggravated by his ſelling it for one morſel of meat; which was, bread, and pottage of lentiles, Gen. xxv. 34. The Jewiſh writers ſpeak of this bargain and ſale much in the ſame language as the Apoſtle here does; they ſay[c] of him, this is the man that ſold his birthright בעד ככר לחם, for a morſel of bread; and apply to him the paſſage in Prov. xxviii. 21. for a piece of bread that man will tranſgreſs.

Ver. 17. For ye know how that afterwards, &c.] After he had had his pottage; after he had ſold his birthright for it, and the bleſſing with it; after his father had bleſſed Jacob: this the Apoſtle relates to the Hebrews, as a thing well known to them; they having read the books of Moſes, and being converſant with them, in which the whole hiſtory of this affair is recorded: how that when he would have inherited the bleſſing, he was rejected; by his father, who refuſed to give him the bleſſing, but confirmed what he had given to Jacob; and alſo by God, he being the object of his hatred; concerning whom he had ſaid, even before his birth, the elder ſhall ſerve the younger, Rom. ix. 11, 12, 13. for he found no place of repentance, tho' he ſought it carefully with tears, Gen. xxvii. 34, 38. tho' he was very ſolicitous for the bleſſing, and ſhed many tears to obtain it, yet he had no true repentance for his ſin in ſelling the birthright. Tears are not an infallible Sign of repentance: men may be more concerned for the loſs and miſchief that come by ſin, than for the evil that is in it; and ſuch repentance is not ſincere; it does not ſpring from love to God, or a concern for his glory; nor does it bring forth proper fruits: or rather, the ſenſe of the words is, that notwithſtanding all his ſolicitude, importunity, and tears, he found no place of repentance in his father Iſaac; he could not prevail upon him to change his mind; to revoke the bleſſing he had beſtowed on Jacob, and confer it on him, Gen. xxvii. 33. for he plainly ſaw it was the mind of God, that the bleſſing ſhould be where it was; whoſe counſel ſhall ſtand, and he'll do all his pleaſure. This latter ſeems to be the better interpretation of the words, tho' the former agrees with the Targum on Job xv. 20. "all "the days of Eſau the ungodly, they expected "that he would have repented, but he repented "not."

Ver. 18. For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, &c.] The deſign of the Apoſtle in the following words is, in general, to engage the Hebrews to adhere cloſely to the Goſpel, from the conſideration of the ſuperior excellency of it to the law; and in particular, to enforce his former exhortations, to chearfulneſs under afflictions; to an upright walk in the ways of God; to follow peace with all men, even with the Gentiles, and holineſs both of heart and life; and to value the doctrine of the Goſpel; and to take heed that none fail of it, or act unbecoming it: and here the Apoſtle obſerves, what the believing Hebrews were not come to, being delivered from it, namely, the legal diſpenſation, which was their privilege; the happineſs of which is expreſſed by a detail of particular circumſtances, which attended the giving of the law to the Jews: it was given on a mount which might be touched; that is, by God, who deſcended on it, and by touching it cauſed it to ſmoke, quake, and move, Exod. xix. 18. Compare with this, Pſ. lxviii. 8. and civ. 32. and cxliv. 5. for it was not to be touched by the Iſraelites, nor by their cattel, Exod. xix. 12, 13. that is, at the time that the law was given, and Jehovah was upon it, otherwiſe it might be touched; and the meaning is, that it was an earthly mountain, that might be approached to, and be ſeen and felt, and not of a ſpiritual nature, as Sion, or the church of God; and ſo may be expreſſive of the carnality of the law, and alſo of the moveableneſs of it: and that burned with fire; as mount Sinai did, Exod. xix. 18. Deut. iv. 11. and v. 23. which ſet forth the majeſty of God, when upon it, at whoſe feet went forth burning coals; and alſo the wrath of God, as an avenging lawgiver and judge; and the terror of that law, which ſtrikes the minds of the tranſgreſſors of it with an expectation of fiery indignation; and ſo points out the end of ſuch tranſgreſſors, which is to be burnt: nor unto blackneſs and darkneſs; which covered the mount when God was upon it, Exod. xix. 16, 18. Deut. iv. 11. and which alſo may expreſs the majeſty of God, round about whom are clouds and darkneſs; and alſo the horror of the legal diſpenſation, and the obſcurity of it; little being known by the Jews of the ſpirituality of the law, of the ſtrict juſtice of God, and of the righteouſneſs which the law requires, and of the end and uſe of it; and eſpecially of the way of ſalvation by Chriſt; and ſo dark were they at laſt, as to prefer their own traditions before this law: tis added, and tempeſt; there being thunderings and lightnings, which were very terrible, Exod. xix. 16. and xx. 18. and tho' there is no expreſs mention made of a tempeſt by Moſes, yet Joſephus[d] ſpeaks not only of very terrible thunderings and lightnings, but of violent ſtorms of wind, which produced exceeding great rains; and the Septuagint on Deut. iv. 11. and v. 22. uſe the ſame words as the Apoſtle does here, blackneſs, darkneſs, and tempeſt. This alſo may denote the majeſty of God who was then preſent; the terror of that diſpenſation; the horrible curſes of the law; and the great confuſion and diſquietude raiſed by it in the conſcience of a ſinner.

Ver. 19. And the ſound of a trumpet, &c.] Exod. xix. 16, 19. and xx. 18. which made it ſtill more awful, as, the ſound of the trumpet will at the laſt day: and the voice of words; of the ten words, or decalogue; which was an articulate voice, formed by angels; and, therefore, the law, is called the word ſpoken by angels, Heb. ii. 2. and is repreſented, as the voice of God himſelf, Exod. xx. 1. who made uſe of the miniſtry of angels, to deliver the law to Moſes; which voice is called קול דברים, the voice of words, in Deut. iv. 12. and this voice, they that heard, intreated that the word ſhould not be ſpoken to them any more; fearing that they ſhould die; wherefore, they deſired Moſes to be their mediator, and draw nigh to God, and hear his words, and ſpeak them to them, from him, Exod. xx. 19. Deut. v. 24—27.

Ver. 20. For they could not endure that which was commanded, &c.] In the law; not, that they diſliked and deſpiſed the law, as unregenerate men do; but they could not endure it, or bear it, as a yoke, it being a yoke of bondage; nor as a covenant of works, it requiring perfect obedience, but giving no ſtrength to perform; and as it ſhewed them their ſins, but did not direct them to a ſaviour; as it was an accuſing, curſing and condemning law; and, as a fiery one, revealing wrath, and filling the conſcience with it; unleſs this ſhould have any reſpect to the following edict, more particularly: and if ſo much as a beaſt touch the mountain, it ſhall be ſtoned or thruſt through with a dart; and, if a beaſt, much more a man: and, how eaſily, through inadvertence, might this be done? and, how terrible was the puniſhment? nothing leſs than death, by ſtoning, or being ſhot: and this they could not bear to hear, and think of: the laſt clauſe, or thruſt through with a dart, is wanting, in the Alexandrian and Beza's Claromontane copies, in the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions; and yet is neceſſary to be retained, being in the original text, in Exod. xix. 12, 13.

Ver. 21. And ſo terrible was the ſight, &c.] Of the ſmoke, fire, and lightnings; or of God himſelf, who deſcended on the mount; with which agrees the Arabic verſion, which renders the words, and ſo terrible was he who vouchſafed himſelf to be ſeen; not in the buſh burning with fire; at which time Moſes was afraid to look upon God, Exod. iii. 6. but on mount Sinai, when the law was given: that Moſes ſaid, I exceedingly fear and quake: perhaps, he might ſay this, when he ſpake, and God anſwered him, Exod. xix. 19. Theſe words are no where recorded in ſcripture; wherefore the Apoſtle had them, either by divine revelation, or from tradition, confirmed by the former: for the Jews have a notion, that Moſes did quake and tremble, and when upon the mount; and that he expreſſed his fear and dread. They have ſuch a tradition, as this[e]; "when Moſes aſcended on high, the miniſtring angels ſaid before the holy bleſſed God, "Lord of the world, what has this man, born of "a woman, to do among us? he ſaid unto them, "to receive the law he is come; they replied before him, that deſirable treaſure, which is treaſured up with thee, nine hundred, and ſeventy, and "four generations, before the world was created, "doſt thou ſeek to give to fleſh and blood? What "is man that thou art mindful of him, and the ſon of "man, that thou viſiteſt him? who haſt ſet thy glory "above the heavens! The holy bleſſed God ſaid "to Moſes, return them an anſwer; he ſaid, before "him, Lord of the world, מתיירא אני I am afraid, "leſt they ſhould burn (or conſume) me, with the "breath of their mouth." Compare this laſt clauſe with 2 Theſſ. ii. 8. and elſewhere[f], thoſe words being cited, he called unto Moſes, Exod. xxiv. 16. it is obſerved; "this ſcripture comes not, but "לאיים עליו to terrify him; that ſo the law might "be given with fear, fervour, and trembling; as it "is ſaid, Pſ. ii. 11." Once more[g], "at the "time, that the holy bleſſed God ſaid to Moſes, "go, get thee down, for thy people have corrupted "themſelves, Exod. xxxii. 7. אזדעזע משה Moſes "trembled; and he could not ſpeak, &c." And again, it is ſaid[h], that when Moſes was on mount Sinai, ſupplicating for the people of Iſrael, five deſtroying angels appeared, and immediately נתיירא משה Moſes was afraid. Now this circumſtance is mentioned, by the Apoſtle, to aggravate the terror of that diſpenſation; that Moſes, a great, and good man; and who had much familiarity with God; the general of the people of Iſrael; their leader and commander; a man of great courage and preſence of mind; and was their mediator between God and them; and yet feared, and quaked: the beſt of men are not without ſin; and the moſt holy man on earth can't ſtand before a holy God, and his holy law, upon the foot of his own righteouſneſs, without trembling: it is an awful thing to draw nigh to God; and there is no ſuch thing, as doing it, without a mediator; and that mediator muſt be more than a creature: and it is our happineſs, that we have ſuch a mediator, who never feared, nor quaked; who failed not, nor was he diſcouraged.

Ver. 22. But ye are come unto mount Sion, &c.] The Alexandrian copy reads, as in ver. 18. for ye are not come; which may ſeem to favour that interpretation of this paſſage, which refers it to the heavenly ſtate; to which, ſaints, in this preſent life, are not, as yet, come: but, by mount Sion, and the other names, here given, is meant the church of God, under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, to which the believing Hebrews were come; in diſtinction from the legal diſpenſation, ſignified by mount Sinai, from which they were delivered: and this is called Mount Sion, becauſe, like that, it is beloved of God; choſen by him; and is the place of his habitation; here his worſhip is, and his word and ordinances are adminiſtred; here he communes with his people, and diſtributes his bleſſings: and this, as mount Sion, is a perfection of beauty; the joy of the whole earth; is ſtrongly fortified by divine power, and is immoveable; and is comparable to that mountain, for its height and holineſs: and, to come to Sion, is to become a member of a Goſpel-church, and partake of the ordinances, enjoy the privileges, and perform the duties belonging to it: and unto the city of the living God; the Goſpel-church is a city, built on Chriſt, the foundation; and is full of inhabitants, true believers, at leaſt, it will be, in the latter day; it is pleaſantly ſituated by the river of God's love, and by the ſtill waters of Goſpel ordinances; it is governed by wholeſome laws, of Chriſt's enacting, and is under proper officers, of his appointing; and is well guarded by watchmen, which he has ſet upon the walls of it; and it is endowed with many privileges, as, acceſs to God, freedom from the arreſts of juſtice and from condemnation, adoption, and a right to the heavenly inheritance: and this may be called, the city of God, becauſe it is of his building, and here he dwells, and protects, and defends it; and, who is ſtiled, the living God, to diſtinguiſh him from the idols of the Gentiles, which are lifeleſs, and inanimate, no other than ſtocks and ſtones. The heavenly Jeruſalem: the church of God goes by the name of Jeruſalem often, both in the Old and in the New Teſtament; with which it agrees in its name, which ſignifies the viſion of peace, or they ſhall ſee peace: Chriſt, the king of it, is the prince of peace; the members of it, are ſons of peace, who enjoy a ſpiritual peace now, and an everlaſting one hereafter: like that, it is compact together, conſiſting of ſaints, cemented together in love, in the order and fellowſhip of the Goſpel; and is well fortified, God himſelf, and his power, being all around it, and having ſalvation, for walls and bulwarks, and being encamped about by angels; and it is a free city, being made ſo by Chriſt, and, through him, enjoying the liberty of grace now, and having a title to the liberty of glory in the world to come; as Jeruſalem was, it is the object of God's choice, the palace of the great king, and the place of divine worſhip: it is called, heavenly, to diſtinguiſh it from the earthly Jeruſalem; and to expreſs the excellency of it, as well as to point out its original: the members of it, are from heaven, being born from above; their converſation is now in heaven; and they are deſigned for that place; and its doctrines and ordinances are all from thence. And to an innumerable company of angels; which are created ſpirits, immaterial and immortal; very knowing, and very powerful; and ſwift to do the will of God; they are holy, and immutably ſo, being the elect of God, and confirmed by Chriſt: and ſaints now are brought into a ſtate of friendſhip with them, and into the ſame family; and are ſocial worſhippers with them; and they have acceſs into heaven, where angels are; and with whom they ſhall dwell for ever: and, in the preſent ſtate of things, they ſhare the benefit and advantages of their kind offices; who have, ſometimes, provided food for their bodies; healed their diſeaſes; directed and preſerved in journeys; prevented outward calamities; delivered them out of them, when in danger; reſtrained things hurtful, and cut off their enemies: and, with regard to things ſpiritual, they have, ſometimes, made known the mind and will of God, unto the ſaints; have comforted them under their diſtreſſes; helped them againſt ſatan's temptations; are preſent at death, and carry their ſouls to glory; and will gather the ſaints together, at the laſt day: and, as to the number of them, they are innumerable; they are the armies of heaven; and there is a multitude of the heavenly hoſt; there are more, than twelve legions of angels; their number is ten thouſand times ten thouſand, and thouſands of thouſands: and this makes both for the glory and majeſty of God, whoſe attendants they are; and, for the comfort and ſafety of ſaints, to whom they miniſter, and about whom they encamp: a like phraſe is uſed in 2 Eſdras vi. 3.

[g] Zohar in Exod. fol. 24. 4.

[h] Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 69. 4.

Ver. 23. To the general aſſembly, &c.] A panegyris, the word here uſed, was a public and ſolemn aſſembly of the Greeks, either at their games, or feaſts, or fairs, or on religious accounts; and ſignifies a large collection and convention of men; and, ſometimes, the place, where they met together[l]; and is here uſed, by the Apoſtle, for the church of God, conſiſting of all his elect, both Jews and Gentiles, and the meeting of them together: they met together, in the infinite mind of God, from all eternity; and in Chriſt, their head and repreſentative, both then and in time; and at the laſt day, when they are all gathered in, they'll meet together perſonally; and a joyful meeting it will be; and a very general one, more ſo, than the aſſembly of the Jews, at any of their ſolemn feaſts, to which the Apoſtle may have ſome reſpect; ſince this will conſiſt of ſome of all nations, that have lived in all places, and in all ages of time: and church of the firſt-born, which are written in heaven; by the church, is not meant any particular, or congregational church, nor any national one; but the church catholic, or univerſal, which conſiſts only of God's elect, and of all of them, in all times and places; and reaches, even to the ſaints in heaven: this church is inviſible, at preſent, and will never fail; of which Chriſt is the head, and for which he has given himſelf: now the perſons, that belong to this church, are ſtiled the firſt-born; who are not the Apoſtles only, who received the firſt-fruits of the Spirit; nor the firſt converts among the Jews, who firſt truſted in Chriſt; but all the choſen of God, who are equally the ſons of God, and born of him; are equally loved by him, and equally united to Chriſt, and intereſted in him: they have the ſame privileges, honours, and dignity, and ſhall enjoy the ſame inheritance; they are all firſt-born, and are ſo called, with reſpect to the angels, the ſons of God, as Chriſt is, with reſpect to the ſaints, the many brethren of his: and theſe are ſaid to be written in heaven; not in the earth, Jer. xvii. 13. ſuch writing abides not; nor in the book of the ſcriptures, for the names of all are not written there; nor in the general book of God's decrees, which relate to all mankind; but in the lamb's book of life, kept in heaven; and is no other, than their election of God: and this way of ſpeaking, concerning it, ſhews it to be perſonal and particular; that it is firm, ſure and conſtant; that it is, out of the reach of men and devils, to eraſe it; it denotes the exact knowledge God has of them, and expreſſes their right to heaven, and the certainty of their coming there: now all ſuch, who are truly come to Sion, are openly come to this aſſembly and church, and appear to be a part thereof, and are among the firſt-born, and have their names written in heaven: and to God the judge of all: the Ethiopic verſion reads, the judge of righteouſneſs, or the righteous judge: ſome think, that Chriſt is here meant; who is, truly and properly God, and is the judge: all judgment is committed to him; he is judge of all; he is ordained judge of quick and dead; for which he would not have been fit, had he not been God: true believers come to him by faith, and that, as their judge, king, and governour; and it is their privilege, that Chriſt is, and will be, the judge of all at the laſt day; and hence is his coming to judgment deſirable to them. But ſince Chriſt is ſpoken of, in the next verſe, as a diſtinct perſon, to whom the ſaints come, God the father ſeems rather to be deſigned here: and it is one of the privileges of the ſaints, in the preſent life, that they have acceſs to God: all men are at a diſtance from him, in a ſtate of nature; and they naturally run further and further from him, and have no deſire after him; and, when they are made ſenſible of ſin, they are afraid and aſhamed to come to him; nor is there any coming to God, but through Chriſt; and this is a fruit of God's everlaſting love, what follows upon electing grace, is an effect of Chriſt's death, and is owing to the quickning grace of the ſpirit; it is performed in a ſpiritual way, and is by faith; it is a coming to the throne of God, even to his ſeat, to communion with him, and to a participation of his grace: and it is their privilege that they have acceſs to him as the judge of all; not only as a father, and as the God of all grace, but as a judge, and a righteous one, to whom they can come without terror; for tho' he is juſt, yet he is a Saviour, and the juſtifier of his people, on account of the righteouſneſs of his Son; whoſe ſins he pardons in a way of juſtice, through the blood of Chriſt; and is their patron, protector, and defender, who will right their wrongs, and avenge their cauſe: and to the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect; which may be underſtood of the ſaints on earth, who are juſt men; not naturally, for ſo no man is, but the reverſe; nor in opinion only, or merely externally, as the ſcribes and phariſees were; nor by the deeds of the law; nor by obedience to the Goſpel; nor by faith, either as wrought in them, or done by them, tho' by the object of it; nor by an infuſion of righteouſneſs into them; but by the imputation of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt unto them: and theſe are made perfect; not as to ſanctification, unleſs in Chriſt, or in a comparative ſenſe, and with reſpect to the parts of the new man, but not as to degrees; for no man is without ſin, and the beſt ſtand in need of freſh ſupplies of grace; but as to juſtification, Chriſt has perfectly fulfilled the law for them, and has perfectly expiated their ſins, and perfectly redeemed them from all ſin, and has procured a full pardon of them; and they are compleatly righteous through his righteouſneſs: and the ſpirits, or ſouls of theſe are only mentioned, becauſe the communion of ſaints in a Goſpel-church ſtate lies chiefly in the ſouls and ſpirits of each other, or in ſpiritual things relating to their ſouls; and their ſouls are greatly affected, and knit to each other: tho' the ſaints in heaven may be here intended, at leaſt included; whoſe ſpirits or ſouls are ſeparate from their bodies; and they are the ſouls of juſt men, for none but ſuch enter into the kingdom of heaven; where they are made perfect, in knowledge, in holineſs, in peace, and joy; tho' they have not their bodies, nor as yet all the ſaints with them. Now, believers, in the preſent ſtate of things, may be ſaid to be come to them, being come to the church below, which is a part of that above; as alſo in hope, expectation, and deſire. The Apoſtle ſeems to have reſpect to ſome diſtinctions among the Jews: they divide mankind into three ſorts; ſome are perfectly wicked; and ſome are perfectly righteous; and there are others that are between both[k]: they often ſpeak of צדיקים גמורים, juſt men perfect[l]; and diſtinguiſh between a juſt man perfect, and a juſt man that is not perfect[m]; as they do alſo between penitents and juſt men perfect; ſee the note on Luke xv. 7.

Ver. 24. And to Jeſus, the mediator of the new covenant, &c.] Of the new covenant, and of Chriſt's being the mediator of it, ſee the notes on ch. viii. 6, 8. Coming to Chriſt is by faith; and is different from a corporal coming to him in the days of his fleſh; and from an outward attendance on ordinances: it is a coming to him under a ſenſe of want, and upon a ſight of fullneſs; and is the produce of God's efficacious grace; and ſouls muſt come to Chriſt as naked ſinners, and without a mediator, without any thing of their own to ingratiate them; and it is free to all ſenſible ſinners to come to him, and is the great privilege of ſaints: it is the bleſſing of bleſſings; ſuch are ſafe, and ſettled, and at peace, who are come to Jeſus; they can want no good thing, for all are theirs; they have free acceſs to God through him, and a right to all privileges: and to the blood of ſprinkling; that is, the blood of Chriſt; ſo called, either in alluſion to the blood of the paſſover, which was received in a baſon, and with a bunch of hyſſop was ſprinkled upon the lintel and two ſide-poſts of the doors of the houſes, in which the Iſraelites were; which being looked upon by Jehovah, he paſſed over them, and all were ſafe within, ſo that the deſtroyer did not touch them, when the firſt-born in Egypt were deſtroyed, Exod. xii. which is the caſe of all ſuch as are ſprinkled with the blood of Jeſus: or elſe to the blood of the covenant, ſprinkled by Moſes on the book, and on all the people, Exod. xxiv. 8. or to the ſeveral ſprinklings of blood in the legal ſacrifices: and the phraſe may denote the application of Chriſt's blood to his people, for juſtification, pardon, and cleanſing, which is their great mercy and privilege: that ſpeaketh better things than that of Abel; either than Abel, as the Vulgate Latin, and Syriac verſions render it; who being dead, yet ſpeaks; and who was a type of Chriſt in his death, and the puniſhment of it; for as he was ſlain by his own brother, who was puniſhed for it, ſo Chriſt was put to death by his own nation and people, the Jews, for which wrath is come upon them to the uttermoſt: but the efficacy of Chriſt's blood for the procuring pardon, peace, reconciliation, and the redemption and purchaſe of his church and people, ſhews him to be greater than Abel; and it ſpeaks better things than he did, or does: or elſe, than the blood of Abel, as the Arabic verſion renders it; Abel's blood cried for vengeance; Chriſt's blood cries for peace and pardon, both in the court of heaven, where it is pleaded by Chriſt, and in the court of conſcience, where it is ſprinkled by his Spirit: or than the ſprinkling of the blood of Abel's ſacrifice, or than Abel's ſacrifice; which was the firſt blood that was ſprinkled in that way, and the firſt ſacrifice mentioned that was offered up, by faith, and was typical of Chriſt's; but then Chriſt's ſacrifice itſelf is better than that; and the ſprinkling of his blood, to which believers may continually apply for their juſtification, remiſſion, and purgation, and by which they have entrance into the holieſt of all, is of greater efficacy than the ſprinkling of blood in Abel's ſacrifice; and calls for, and procures better things than that did; which ſenſe may the rather be choſen, ſince the Apoſtle's view, in this epiſtle, is to ſhew the ſuperior excellency of Chriſt's ſacrifice to all others, even to the more excellent of them, as Abel's was, ch. xi. 4.

Ver. 25. See that ye refuſe not him that ſpeaketh, &c.] Jeſus, the mediator of the new covenant, whoſe blood ſpeaks better things than Abel, or than his blood and ſacrifice: he was the ſpeaker in the council and covenant of grace, that ſpoke for the elect; in the creation of all things out of nothing, that ſaid, and it was done; in giving the law to the Iſraelites, in the wilderneſs, for he is the angel which ſpake to Moſes in mount Sinai, he ſpoke to God for the Old Teſtament ſaints, and was the angel of God's preſence to them; he ſpoke in his own perſon, as the prophet of the church, in the days of his fleſh; and he now ſpeaks in heaven, by appearing in the preſence of God for his people, and by preſenting his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice; he ſpeaks by his Spirit, in and to the hearts of his ſaints; and by his miniſters in the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it: nor ſhould he be refuſed, as he is, when his Goſpel is made light of, and neglected; when men excuſe themſelves from an attendance on it; when they will not hear it; or, when they do, and contradict and blaſpheme, deſpiſe and reproach it, or leave off hearing it. Care ſhould be taken that Chriſt is not refuſed in the miniſtry of the word; which may be enforced from the greatneſs and excellency of the perſon ſpeaking, who is God, and not a mere man; from the excellency of the matter ſpoken, the great ſalvation: and the rather, diligent heed ſhould be had unto him, ſince there is a backwardneſs to every thing that is ſpiritual and heavenly; and ſince ſatan is vigilant and induſtrious to put off perſons from hearing the Goſpel, or to ſteal the word from them: for if they eſcaped not who refuſed him that ſpake on earth; the Ethiopic verſion renders it, who appeared to them on the mount; that is, on mount Sinai; meaning either God himſelf, who deſcended on the mount, and ſpoke the ten commandments to the children of Iſrael; or Chriſt, the Angel that ſpake to Moſes, in it; or rather, Moſes himſelf, who was on the earth, and of the earth, earthly; who ſpake from God to the people, being their mediator; him the Jews refuſed, would not obey him, but thruſt him away, Acts vii. 39. tho' they promiſed to hear and do all that was ſaid to them; wherefore they did not eſcape divine vengeance and puniſhment; their carcaſſes fell in the wilderneſs at ſeveral times, in great numbers, and were not ſuffered to enter into Canaan's land: much more ſhall not we eſcape, if we turn away from him that ſpeaketh from heaven; that is, Chriſt, who came from heaven originally; is the Lord from heaven; whoſe doctrine is from heaven; and who, having done his work, is gone to heaven; where he now is, and from whence he ſpeaks; and from hence he'll come a ſecond time, as judge of all. There have been, and are ſome, that turn away from him; from a profeſſion of him, and his Goſpel and ordinances, and draw back unto perdition; ſuch ſhall not eſcape divine wrath and vengeance; the ſoreſt puniſhment ſhall be inflicted on them; ſee ch. x. 29.

Ver. 26. Whoſe voice then ſhook the earth, &c.] That is, at the giving of the law on mount Sinai: Chriſt was then preſent; his voice was then heard; which was either the voice of thunder, or the voice of the trumpet, or rather the voice of words: this ſhook the earth, Sinai, and the land about it, and the people on it; which made them quake and tremble, even Moſes himſelf; ſee Exod. xix. 18. Pſ. lxviii. 8. but now he hath promiſed, ſaying in Hagg. ii. 6. yet once more I ſhake not the earth only, but alſo heaven; not only the land of Judea, and particularly Jeruſalem, and the inhabitants of it, who were all ſhaken, and moved, and troubled at the news of the birth of the Meſſiah, the deſire of all nations, the prophet Haggai ſpeaks of, Matt. ii. 2, 3. but the heaven alſo; by prodigies in it, as the appearance of a wonderful ſtar, which guided the wiſe men from the eaſt; and by the motions of the heavenly inhabitants, the angels, who deſcended in great numbers, and made the heavens reſound with their ſongs of praiſe, on account of Chriſt's incarnation, Matt. ii. 2. Luke ii. 10, 13, 14. How the Apoſtle explains and applies this, may be ſeen in the next verſe.

Ver. 27. And this word yet once more, &c.] Or as it is in Hagg. ii. 6. yet once it is a little while; which ſuggeſts, that as ſomething had been done already, ſo in a very little time, and at once, ſomething very marvellous and ſurpriſing would be effected: and it ſignifieth the removing of thoſe things that are ſhaken, as of things that are made; which ſome underſtand of what will be done at Chriſt's coming to judgment; as the paſſing away of the heavens and the earth, which are things that are made, or created, by the power of God; when there will be a ſhaking of them, ſo as that they ſhall be removed, and paſs away with a great noiſe; and ſo they interpret the next clauſe, of the permanency of the new heavens and the new earth, and of the immoveable kingdom of glory, and the never-fading inheritance of the ſaints; and of their fixed, unalterable, and unſhaken ſtate: but rather this is to be underſtood of Chriſt's coming to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; when there was an entire removal of the Jewiſh ſtate, both political and eccleſiaſtical; and of the whole Moſaic œconomy; and of things appertaining to divine worſhip, which were made with hands, as the temple, and the things in it; and which were made to be removed; for they were to continue no longer than the time of reformation: and this removing of them deſigns the abolition of them, and entire putting an end to them; at which time, not only their civil government was wholly put down, but their eccleſiaſtic ſtate alſo; for the place of their worſhip was deſtroyed, the daily ſacrifice ceaſed, and the old covenant, and the manner of adminiſtring it, vaniſhed away; and all the legal inſtitutions and ordinances which were aboliſhed by the death of Chriſt, were no more performed, in Jeruſalem; the temple, and temple-ſervice periſhing together: that thoſe things which cannot be ſhaken may remain; the kingdom and prieſthood of Chriſt, which are everlaſting; and the good things which come by him, as remiſſion of ſins, juſtification, adoption, ſanctification, and the heavenly inheritance; as alſo the Goſpel, and the doctrines, and ordinances of it, baptiſm, and the Lord's ſupper, and the mode of Goſpel-worſhip; all which are to continue until Chriſt's ſecond coming.

Ver. 28. Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, &c.] Not the kingdom of glory; eternal glory is a kingdom, and it is an immoveable one; and is a free gift of God, and may be ſaid to be now received; God's people are called unto it, and are made meet for it, and have a right unto it, and have it in faith and hope, and in Chriſt their head and repreſentative: but the kingdom of grace, under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, is meant: there are ſeveral things in this diſpenſation which are called a kingdom; as a Goſpel church, the Goſpel itſelf, and the privileges and bleſſings of grace beſtowed, eſpecially ſpiritual and internal ones, Matt. xxv. 1. Luke xvi. 16. Rom. xiv. 17. and the whole diſpenſation is called the kingdom of heaven, Matt. iii. 2. and iv. 17. Chriſt he is king, believers are his ſubjects, the Goſpel is his ſceptre, and the ordinances are his laws and appointments, and all are immoveable; and a man may be ſaid to receive this kingdom, when he is delivered from the power of darkneſs, is regenerated, and has the bleſſings of grace actually beſtowed on him, and is brought to Zion: let us have grace; by which is meant, not thankfulneſs for ſo great a bleſſing, tho' this is highly requiſite and neceſſary; nor the favour of God, tho' as the reception of the kingdom ſprings from hence, a ſenſe of it ought to abide; nor the habit or principle of grace in the heart, unleſs particularly the grace of faith, and the exerciſe of it, ſhould be deſigned; but rather the doctrine of grace, the Goſpel, is intended; and the ſenſe is, εχωμεν, let us hold it, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; let us hold the Goſpel faſt, and a profeſſion of it: the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions read, we have grace; this goes along with the immoveable kingdom; all that have truly received the one, have the other: whereby we may ſerve God; God is to be ſerved, and not a creature, nor the elements of this world, the ceremonial law, and its rites; nor is he to be ſerved in any form, only in a ſpiritual way; and without holding to the Goſpel, there is no ſerving him in an evangelic manner; the true and right way of ſerving him is as follows: acceptably; in Chriſt, in the Goſpel of his Son, and by faith in him, without which it is impoſſible to pleaſe God: with reverence; of the majeſty of God, with ſhame for ſin, and with a ſenſe of unworthineſs: and godly fear; which has God for its author and object; and which ſprings from his grace, and is increaſed by diſcoveries of his goodneſs; and which is conſiſtent with faith, and ſpiritual joy; ſee Pſ. ii. 11. and v. 7.

Ver. 29. For our God is a conſuming fire.] Either God perſonally conſidered, God in the perſon of Chriſt; ſo the Shekinah, with the Jews, is called a conſuming fire [n]. Chriſt is truly God, and he is our God and Lord; and tho' he is full of grace and mercy, yet he will appear in great wrath to his enemies, who will not have him to reign over them: or rather God eſſentially conſidered; whoſe God he is, and in what ſenſe, and how he comes to be ſo, ſee the note on ch. viii. 10. what is here ſaid of him, that he is a conſuming fire, may be underſtood of his jealouſy in matters of worſhip, Deut. iv. 23, 24. and ſo carries in it a reaſon why he is to be ſerved acceptably, with reverence and godly fear. God, and he only is to be worſhipped; and he is to be worſhipped in a way ſuitable to himſelf; and he has the ſole right of fixing the manner of worſhip, both as to the external and internal parts of it: under the legal diſpenſation, he was worſhipped in a way he then pitched upon, and ſuitable to it; and under the Goſpel-diſpenſation he is to be worſhipped in an evangelical way; and he is to have all the glory in every part of worſhip; and the ordinances of Goſpel-worſhip are immoveable; nor are they to be altered, or others put in their room, without incurring his diſpleaſure. Moreover, this phraſe may be expreſſive of the preſervation of his people, and of the deſtruction of their enemies, Deut. ix. 1, 2, 3. We commonly ſay, that God out of Chriſt is a conſuming fire; meaning, that God, as an abſolute God, is full of wrath and vengeance; and it is a truth, but not the truth of this text; for here it is our God, our covenant God, our God in Chriſt; not that he is ſo to the ſaints, or to them that are in Chriſt: he is indeed as a wall of fire in his providences, to protect and defend them, and as fire in his word to enlighten and warm them, to guide and direct them, but not a conſuming fire to them; this he is to their enemies, who are as thorns, and briars, and ſtubble before him: and ſo the Jews interpret Deut. iv. 24. of a fire conſuming fire [o]; and obſerve, that Moſes ſays, thy God, and not our God [p]; but the Apoſtle here uſes the latter phraſe.

CHAP. XIII.

THE Apoſtle having finiſhed the doctrinal part of this Epiſtle, cloſes it with practical exhortations to theſe Hebrews, puts up prayers for them, and ſends ſalutations to them. The exhortations are to brotherly love, and the continuance of it, ver. 1. to hoſpitality, by which ſome have entertained angels unawares, ver. 2. to ſympathy with thoſe that are in bonds, and in afflictions, ver. 3. to purity and chaſtity in the honourable ſtate of marriage, urged by the judgment of God on unclean perſons, ver. 4. to avoid covetouſneſs, and to be content with preſent things, enforced by the promiſes of God, which give boldneſs and ſtrength to faith, ver. 5, 6. to remember their ſpiritual guides and governours, the preachers of the Goſpel to them; to follow their faith, and conſider the end of their converſation, which is Chriſt Jeſus, the ſame yeſterday, to-day, and for ever, ver. 7, 8. And then he cautions them from being carried about with the doctrines of men, which are divers and ſtrange; which he urges from the profitable effect of the Goſpel to eſtabliſh the heart, and from the unprofitableneſs of meats to legal worſhippers, and from the chriſtians having an altar, which is Chriſt, which thoſe who are ſeeking life by the ſervice of the law have nothing to do with, ver. 9, 10. And this he illuſtrates in the type of burnt-offerings, which were burnt without the camp, and there was nothing left for the prieſts to eat of, ver. 11. In like manner Chriſt, the antitype, ſuffered without the gates of Jeruſalem, for the ſanctification of his people, by his blood; and who only, and not thoſe who ſeek for righteouſneſs by the law, have an intereſt in, ver. 12. However, it becomes the ſaints to quit every thing, and all dependence on themſelves, and fellowſhip with others, and go forth to Jeſus, believing in him, whatſover reproach they ſuffer on his account; for here is nothing permanent and durable in this world; but there is a ſtate of happineſs to come, which will laſt for ever, ver. 13, 14. And ſince Chriſt has offered himſelf for his people, they ought to offer up the ſacrifices of praiſe to God by him, and to do acts of beneficence and goodneſs, which are ſacrifices well-pleaſing to God thro' him, ver. 15, 16. And to theſe exhortations the Apoſtle adds others; as to obey their ſpiritual rulers and governours, and ſubmit unto them; ſince they watch for their ſouls, and muſt give an account, which to do with joy, and not with grief, is beſt and profitable, ver. 17. and to pray for the Apoſtle, and other miniſters, ſince they had a good conſcience, and were willing to live honeſtly; and the rather, that he might be reſtored to them the ſooner, ver. 18, 19. and to engage them to this their duty, he ſets them an example, by putting up prayers for them, ver. 20, 21. and deſires them to take in good part the letter he had wrote unto them, ver. 22. and acquaints them, that Timothy was ſet at liberty, with whom he hoped to ſee them in a ſhort time, ver. 23. and then cloſes the Epiſtle with his own, and the ſalutations of others, and with his uſual benediction, ver. 24, 25.

Ver. 1. Let brotherly love continue.] The Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions add, in you; or among you, as a church and ſociety of chriſtians; for this is not to be underſtood of love to all mankind, or to thoſe of the ſame nation, or who are in a ſtrict natural relation brethren, tho' they are all in a ſenſe brethren, and to be loved; but of love to thoſe who are in the ſame ſpiritual relation, to God, as their Father, to Chriſt, as the firſt-born among many brethren; and are in the ſame church-ſtate, at leaſt partakers of the ſame grace: and which love ought to be univerſal, and reach to all the ſaints, and be fervent and unfeigned, and as Chriſt hath loved us; and when it is genuine, it is active and laborious; and ſhews itſelf in praying with, and for one another; in bearing one another's burdens; in forbearing and forgiving one another; in admoniſhing one another in love; in building up each other in the moſt holy faith; and in ſtirring up one another to the ſeveral duties of religion: and without this excellent and uſeful grace, a profeſſion of religion is in vain; this is an evidence of regeneration; it is the bond of perfectneſs, and what renders the ſaints communion delightful and edifying: many are the arguments moving to the exerciſe of it; as the love of God, and Chriſt; the new commandment of Chriſt; the relation ſaints ſtand in to one another; the comfort and joy of Goſpel-miniſters, and our own peace and edification: and this ſhould continue; for the love of God and Chriſt continues; the relation between the ſaints continues; and without this, churches can't continue long: the Apoſtle means, not the grace itſelf, the internal principle, for that where it once is, always continues, and can never be loſt; but the exerciſe and increaſe of it, an abounding in it yet more and more. One of the Jewiſh prayers is to this purpoſe [q]; "he that dwells in this houſe, let him "plant among you, אחוה ואהבה, brotherhood "and love, (or brotherly love) peace and friend-"ſhip."

Ver. 2. Be not forgetful to entertain ſtrangers, &c.] By whom are meant, not unconverted men, who are ſtrangers to God and Chriſt, and the covenants of promiſe; nor ſaints, who are as pilgrims and ſtrangers in this world; but ſuch as are of another country, and are unknown; and even tho' wicked men, they are not excluded; though ſuch as are obliged to quit their own country for righteouſneſs ſake, are chiefly deſigned; all ſtrangers in diſtreſs are meant, and hoſpitality is to be exerciſed towards them; which lies negatively in doing nothing to diſtreſs them, and poſitively in providing food, raiment, lodging, &c. for them, and in comforting, counſelling, and directing them in all matters in which they may ſtand in need thereof: and that this is a duty, appears from the light of nature, and practices of the heathens, Acts xxviii. 2, 7. from the expreſs law of God, Deut. x. 19. and many others made in favour of ſtrangers, binding on the Jews; from the ſundry exhortations to it in the New Teſtament, Rom. xii. 13. 1 Pet. iv. 9. and from the exhortation here, not to forget it; and from the great regard which Chriſt will ſhew to ſuch as mind it, and his diſregard to others at the laſt day: the perſons who are to exerciſe it, are not only the miniſters of the Goſpel, who ſhould be given to hoſpitality; but all the ſaints, even the meaner ſort are not exempted, but ſhould uſe it according to their ability; tho' it is chiefly binding on thoſe that are rich. And this ſhould not be forgot, but purſued and followed after; it ſhould be frequently performed; men ſhould be given, and uſed to it; it ſhould be done without grudging, and in a friendly and loving manner: for thereby ſome have entertained angels unawares; as Abraham, Gen. xviii. 1—8. he knew them not to be angels at firſt; they appeared as men, and he treated them as ſuch; but they were angels, yea, one of them was Jehovah himſelf; and hereby he received many favours, ver. 10, 17, 23, 33. and Lot, Gen. xix. 1, 2, 3. who knew not that they were angels, he took into his houſe; but they were, and he was delivered by them from the burning of Sodom; yea, ſome have unawares, this way, entertained Chriſt himſelf, Luke xxiv. 15—31. and indeed, entertaining of his members, is entertaining him, Matt. xxv. 38, 40. It is an obſervation of a Jewiſh writer [r] upon the firſt of theſe inſtances; "from "hence we learn, ſays he, how great is the ſtrength "(or virtue) of the reception of travellers (or hoſ-"pitality) as the Rabbins of bleſſed memory ſay, "greater is, הכנסת אורחים, hoſpitality, than the "reception of the face of the Shekinah." And this is ſaid to be one of the ſix things which a man enjoys the fruit of, in this world, and for which there remains a reward in the world to come [s].

Ver. 3. Remember them that are in bonds, &c.] Not for criminal actions, or for debt, tho' ſuch ſhould be remembred, and pity ſhowed them, eſpecially the latter; but ſuch as are in bonds for the ſake of Chriſt, and the Goſpel. This has been often the lot of God's people, who ſhould be remembred, by praying for them, ſending comfortable letters to them, perſonally viſiting them, and relieving them under their diſtreſſes: as bound with them; as if it were ſo, as if in the ſame condition, and circumſtances; by ſympathizing with them; by conſidering themſelves liable to the ſame bonds; by dealing with them, as it would be deſirable to be dealt with in the ſame caſe: and them which ſuffer adverſity; outward afflictions of body, diſtreſs for want of temporal mercies, food and raiment, and perſecution by enemies; or ſpiritual adverſity, as the prevailings of corruptions, and particularly unbelief, the hidings of God's face, and the temptations of ſatan. As being yourſelves alſo in the body; as if in their bodies, enduring the ſame things; or as being afflicted in the body with diſeaſes, neceſſities, and perſecutions; or as being in the body, the church, of which theſe afflicted ones are a part, and therefore ſhould have a fellow-feeling with them; or rather, as being in this world, in the fleſh, or in a body and ſtate, ſubject to the like adverſities, temporal and ſpiritual.

Ver. 4. Marriage is honourable in all, &c.] Some read theſe words as an exhortation, let it be ſo; others as an aſſertion, it is ſo. Marriage is the conjunction of one man and one woman in wedlock, whereby they become one fleſh; it is a joining together of male and female in this relation, and of two only, and of ſuch as are not within the degrees of blood forbid by the law, Lev. xvi. 6—18. and of ſuch as are fit for marriage: and this is honourable, as it was inſtituted by God, and has been honoured with the preſence of Chriſt, Gen. ii. 22, 24. John ii. 1—11. And it is ſo in the ends of it, being to procreate children, multiply the earth, build up families, preſerve a legitimate offspring, and prevent fornication, and all uncleanneſs; and it is ſo, when the duties of the relation are performed on both ſides: and it is honourable in all; in all things, in all reſpects, upon all accounts; every way, as the Arabic verſion renders it; or as the Ethiopic verſion, every where; it has been honourably eſteemed of among all nations; it becomes perſons of all ranks and degrees, quality, and order; and it is honourable in all that are lawfully married, and do not violate the marriage-contract, or defile the marriage-bed: hereby are condemned, ſuch who deſpiſe marriage, that they may give a looſe to their wandring and unſatiable luſts; and ſuch who, under a pretence of greater ſanctity and perfection, reject it as unlawful; and the Papiſts, who deny it to men employed in ſacred work: and the bed undefiled; the Arabic verſion reads, his bed; and the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, their bed; the bed of ſuch whoſe marriage is honourable; which is not polluted by admitting others into it, or by acts of fornication and adultery: but, or for, as the Alexandrian copy reads, whoremongers and adulterers God will judge; the former of theſe may be rendered fornicators, as it is by the Vulgate Latin verſion: fornication is a ſin committed by ſingle perſons, unmarried ones; and tho' it was reckoned among the Gentiles a thing indifferent, yet is contrary to the law of God, and is a work of the fleſh, and makes unfit for the kingdom of God, and brings down the judgments of God both here and hereafter. And this is in oppoſition to marriage, which is appointed to prevent it. The ſin adulterers are guilty of, is a ſin committed by perſons, who are either one or both in a married ſtate, and ſo is directly a pollution of the marriage-bed: this was puniſhable with death by the law of God, and light of nature; and tho' men may make light of it, God will judge and puniſh ſuch as commit it, both in this life, with diſeaſes, poverty, and diſgrace, and in the world to come, at the great day of account; for however ſecretly it may be committed, God, who is omniſcient, ſees it, and will bring it into judgment; nor ſhall any be able to eſcape the righteous judgment of God, for he is omnipotent, as well as omniſcient. The Jews ſay, "whoever lies with "another man's wife, ſhall not eſcape, דינה, the "judgment, or damnation of hell[t]."

Ver. 5. Let your converſation be without covetouſneſs, &c.] Which is an immoderate deſire of riches, an over-anxious care for worldly things, attended with diſſatisfaction, and diſcontent with their preſent ſtate: it diſcovers itſelf many ways; in preferring the world to religion; in laying up treaſure for a man's own ſelf, without being any ways uſeful to others; in with-holding from himſelf the neceſſaries of life, and in making no uſe of his ſubſtance for the glory of God, and the intereſt of religion: this is a very great evil; it is called idolatry, and is ſaid to be the root of all evil; and is very pernicious to true religion: a believer's converſation ſhould be without it; in his family, for whom he ſhould provide things convenient and honeſt; and in the world, where he ſhould deal uprightly, and not defraud and over-reach; and in the church, where he ſhould be liberal, and generouſly communicate, upon all occaſions; and ſuch a converſation is becoming the Goſpel, which is a declaration of things freely given to us of God. The reaſon of the Apoſtle's mentioning this ſin of covetouſneſs is, becauſe the Jews were prone to it, and theſe believing Hebrews might be inclined to it, and be diſſatisfied with their preſent condition, in which they ſuffered the ſpoiling of their goods; and beſides, unleſs this was avoided, the above-mentioned duties could not be performed aright, as brotherly love, hoſpitality, remembring and relieving perſons in bonds, and adverſity. And be content with ſuch things as ye have; or with preſent things; with preſent riches, or with preſent poverty; with preſent loſſes and croſſes; with preſent reproaches and afflictions; and contentment with theſe things ſhows itſelf, by thankfulneſs for every mercy, and by ſubmiſſion to the will and providence of God in every ſtate of life: and there are many things which may move and engage unto it; as the conſideration of the ſtate and condition men are in, when they come into the world, and will be when they go out of it; the will of God, and the diſpoſition of his providence according to it, which is unalterable; a ſenſe of their own unworthineſs; a view of intereſt in God and Chriſt; and an eye to the recompence of reward; as well as the many promiſes of God to ſupport and ſupply his: and among the reſt, what follows, for he hath ſaid, I will never leave thee, nor forſake thee; which is a promiſe made to Joſhua, and belongs to all believers, Joſh. i. 5. which may regard things temporal, as, that God will not leave his people in the hands of their enemies, nor forſake them in diſtreſs, nor with-hold any good thing from them needful for them, but will ſupply them with the neceſſaries of life, with which they ſhould be content: and this paſſage is very pertinently cited for this purpoſe, and could be eaſily underſtood in this ſenſe by the Hebrews; for the Jews explain ſuch places as ſpeak of God's not forſaking men, of the ſuſtenance of them, as Pſ. xxxvii. 25. and obſerve that the word עזיבה, forſaking, is never uſed but with reſpect to, פרנסה, ſuſtenance[u]: tho' the words may alſo relate to things ſpiritual, as that God will not leave them to themſelves, to their own corruptions, which would over-power them; nor to their own ſtrength, which is but weakneſs; nor to their own wiſdom, which is folly; nor to ſatan, and his temptations, who is an over-match for them; nor to the world, the frowns and flatteries of it, by which they might be drawn aſide; nor will he leave them deſtitute of his preſence; for tho' he ſometimes hides his face, and withdraws himſelf, yet not wholly, nor finally; nor will he forſake the work of his own hands, in them, but will perform it until the day of Chriſt; he'll not leave or forſake them, ſo as that they ſhall periſh; he'll not forſake them in life, nor at death, nor at judgment.

Ver. 6. So that we may boldly ſay, &c.] Or confidently aſſert; for nothing is more true than this, the Lord is my helper; he is able to help, and does help, when none elſe can; he has promiſed to be the helper of his people; he has laid help for them on Chriſt, who is mighty; and he has helped him as man, that he might help them; he has ſet up a throne of grace for them to come to, where they may find help; and experience confirms the truth of this aſſertion; every believer can ſet up an Ebenezer, and ſay, hitherto hath the Lord helped me: the people of God are of themſelves helpleſs ones; there is no help for them in man; their help is only in the Lord; who helps them out of the pit of ſin and miſery; out of the hands of all their enemies; out of all their afflictions, and out of all the dangers they are expoſed unto, by ſatan and his temptations, by reaſon of a body of ſin and death, and on account of the world, and the men of it: he helps them in the exerciſe of grace, and in the diſcharge of duty; in bearing the croſs; in fighting the Lord's battles; and in their journeying thro' the wilderneſs: he helps them to temporal bleſſings, and ſpiritual ones; to ſpiritual food and raiment, and to all needful ſupplies of grace, and at laſt, to eternal glory and happineſs: and the help he now affords is quick and preſent, ſuitable and ſeaſonable, and is what is ſufficient; and is ſometimes with, and ſometimes without means. And I will not fear what man ſhall do unto me. There is a becoming fear and reverence which is due to men that are our ſuperiors, whether in civil or religious affairs; but men are not to be feared, when oppoſed to God; not a ſingle man only is not to be feared, but even all men; and not they only, but all that they can do; the utmoſt of which is to kill the body; the ground of this fearleſſneſs in believers, are the infinite power, grace, and goodneſs of God. The words ſeem to be taken out of Pſ. liv. 4. and lvi. 4. and cxviii. 6.

Ver. 7. Remember them which have the rule over you, &c.] Chriſt's church is a kingdom, and he is king in it; paſtors of churches are ſubordinate governours; who rule well when they rule, not in an arbitrary way, according to their own wills, but according to the laws of Chriſt, with all faithfulneſs, prudence, and diligence. The word may be rendered guides or leaders; for ſuch point out the way of peace, life, and ſalvation to men, and direct them to Chriſt; and guide them into the underſtanding of the ſcriptures, and the truths of the Goſpel; and lead them in the paths of faith and holineſs, and are examples to them. The Greek word, here uſed, is what the Jews call chriſtian biſhops by; and ηγεμονια, is, by Maimonides [w], ſaid to be the ſame as פקידות, a biſhoprick: to remember them is to know, own, acknowledge, and reſpect them as their governours; to obey them, and ſubmit to them; to treaſure up in memory their doctrines and exhortations; to be mindful of them at the throne of grace, to pray for them; and to take care of their maintenance and outward ſupply of life: who have ſpoken unto you the word of God; of which God is the author, being agreeable to the ſcriptures, given by inſpiration of God; the ſubject of which is the love and grace of God in Chriſt; and which God makes uſeful for converſion and comfort; and which, when ſpoken aright, is ſpoken freely, boldly, and faithfully: whoſe faith follow; or imitate; meaning either their faithfulneſs, by owning the truths and ordinances of the Goſpel before men; by reproving fellow-chriſtians in love; by diſcharging the ſeveral duties of their place in the church; and by performing the private duties of life: or the grace of faith, their ſtrong exerciſe of it, together with its fruits and effects, love, and good works; alſo the profeſſion of their faith, which they hold faſt unto the end; and the doctrine of faith, by embracing the ſame, as it appears agreeable to the word; by abiding by it, ſtanding faſt in it, ſtriving for it, and perſevering in it to the end. Conſidering the end of their converſation; which may intend the whole of their conduct in the diſcharge of the ſeveral duties of their office; the end of which deſigns either the manner of it, as De Dieu explains it, agreeable to the ſenſe of the Hebrew word, תוצאות, in Pſ. lxviii. 20. or the drift and ſcope of it, which was Chriſt, his honour and glory, as in connexion with the following verſe; or the event of it in life, being for the glory of God, and the good of men; or rather the iſſue of it in death, or what a comfortable end they made; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, conſidering their laſt manner of living, in their exit out of the world; and this is to be conſidered for imitation and encouragement.

Ver. 8. Jeſus Chriſt the ſame yeſterday, and today, and for ever.] Who is the ſubſtance of the word ſpoken by the above-mentioned rulers, the author and object of their faith, and the end in which their converſation terminated. Theſe words may be expreſſive of the duration of Chriſt: he was yeſterday, which does not deſign the day immediately foregoing, nor ſome little time paſt, but ancient times, formerly, of old; and tho' it does not extend to eternity, which is true of Chriſt, yet may be carried further than to the days of his fleſh here on earth, even to the whole Old Teſtament diſpenſation; yea, to the beginning of the world, when he exiſted not only as the eternal Word, the everlaſting I am, but as the ſaviour and redeemer of his people; during which diſpenſation, he frequently appeared in an human form, and was the ſum of all promiſes and prophecies, and the ſubſtance of all types and ſhadows, and the ſpiritual food of his people: and he is to-day under the Goſpel diſpenſation; in his perſon as God-man, and in his offices as prophet, prieſt, and king; and will be ſo for ever: he will never die more; his kingdom is an everlaſting kingdom, and his prieſthood an unchangeable one. Moreover, theſe words may regard the immutability of Chriſt; who is unchangeable in his perſon, perfections, and eſſence, as God; and in his love to his people; and in the fulneſs of his grace, and in the efficacy of his blood, and in the virtue of his ſacrifice and righteouſneſs: it may be obſerved, that ο αυτος, tranſlated the ſame, anſwers to הוא, he, a name of God, Pſ. cii. 27. Iſ. xlviii. 12. and which is uſed in Jewiſh writings [x] for a name of God; and ſo it is among the Turks [y]: and it is expreſſive of his eternity, immutability, and independence; and well agrees with Chriſt, who is God over all, bleſſed for ever.

Ver. 9. Be not carried about with divers and ſtrange doctrines, &c.] The word divers may denote the variety and multitude of other doctrines; referring either to the various rites and ceremonies of the law, or to the traditions of the elders, or to the ſeveral doctrines of men, whether Jews or Gentiles; whereas the doctrine of the ſcriptures, of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, is but one; it is uniform, and all of a-piece; and ſo may likewiſe denote the diſagreement of other doctrines with the perfections of God, the perſon and offices of Chriſt, the ſcriptures of truth, the analogy of faith, and even with themſelves: and ſtrange doctrines may deſign ſuch as were never taught by God, nor are agreeable to the voice of Chriſt, nor to be found in the word word of God; and which are new, and unheard of, by the Apoſtles and churches of Chriſt; and appear in a foreign dreſs and habit: wherefore, the Apoſtle exhorts the believing Hebrews, not to be carried about with them; as light clouds and meteors in the air, by every wind: for ſo to be, is to be like children; and diſcovers great ignorance, credulity, levity, inconſtancy, uncertainty, fluctuation, and inconſiſtency: for it is a good thing that the heart be eſtabliſhed with grace; with the doctrine of grace, which is food for faith, and does not leave men at uncertainties, about things; but eſtabliſhes the heart, with reſpect to the love and favour of God, and builds ſouls upon the foundation, Chriſt; ſo that they are not, at a loſs, about the expiation of ſin, juſtification, and ſalvation; but firmly look for, and expect, eternal happineſs by Chriſt, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God: not with meats; referring to the diſtinction of meats among the Jews; or the ſacrifices eat both by the prieſts, and by the people; or the whole ceremonial law, which ſtood in divers meats and drinks: which have not profited them that have been occupied therein; they were only profitable to the body; and could be of no uſe to the ſoul, when they were in force, than as they led to Chriſt, and were regarded by believers; for they were of no advantage to hypocrites and carnal men; they could not ſanctify, nor juſtify, nor chear the ſpirits, nor eſtabliſh the heart; and are of no manner of ſervice at all, ſince the death of Chriſt, whereby the whole ceremonial law is aboliſhed.

Ver. 10. We have an altar, &c.] By which is meant, not the croſs of Chriſt, on which he was crucified; nor the Lord's table, where his fleſh and blood are preſented to faith, as food, tho' not offered; but Chriſt, himſelf, who is altar, ſacrifice, and prieſt: he was typified by the altar, of the burnt-offering, and the ſacrifice, that was offered upon it; the altar was made of Shittim wood, and covered with braſs, denoting the incorruptibleneſs, duration and ſtrength of Chriſt: the horns of it, at the four corners, were for refuge; whoever fled to it, and laid hold on them, were ſafe; ſo Chriſt is a refuge to his people, that come from the four corners of the earth; and who believe in him, and lay hold on him, are, preſerved and protected, by his power and grace: the uſe of it, was for ſacrifice to be offered upon it; which being a male, without blemiſh, and wholly burnt with fire, was a ſweet ſavour to God; and which was typical of Chriſt's human nature, offered on the altar of his divine nature; which was pure and holy, ſuffered the fire of divine wrath, and was for a ſweet ſmelling ſavour to God: this altar was but one, and moſt holy, and ſanctified what was put upon it; all which is true of Chriſt: now this altar the ſaints have, and have a right to eat of it; even all Chriſt's friends and beloved ones; all that are made prieſts unto God by him; all that know him, believe in him, have a ſpiritual diſcerning of him, and hunger and thirſt after him: whereof they have no right to eat that ſerve the tabernacle: there is ſomething of this altar, or that was offered up upon this altar, that is to be eat, even the fleſh and blood of Chriſt; and to eat of it, is to believe, that Chriſt is come in the fleſh, and is become an offering for ſin, and for us that eat; it is to receive, embrace, and poſſeſs the bleſſings, procured by it; which is done by faith, with ſpiritual joy and gladneſs, and with ſincerity and ſingleneſs of heart: now thoſe, who ſerved the tabernacle, or adhered to the ſervice of the ceremonial law, they had no right to eat of this altar: the alluſion is to the prieſts eating of the ſacrifices, and to ſome ſacrifices, of which they might not eat, Lev. ii. 10. and vi. 16, 18, 26, 29. and vii. 9. and xvi. 27. and this is not to be underſtood of believers, before the coming of Chriſt, who did attend tabernacle ſervice; for they eat the ſame ſpiritual meat, and drank the ſame ſpiritual drink, as believers do now; but of ſuch, who obſtinately perſiſted in the ceremonies of the law, when they were aboliſhed; and ſo cut off themſelves from all right to the ſubſtance of theſe ſhadows. See Gal. v. 2, 3, 4.

Ver. 11. For the bodies of thoſe beaſts, &c.] Not the red heifer, Numb. xix. nor the ſin-offering in general, Lev. vi. 30. nor thoſe for the prieſt and people, Lev. iv. 11, 12. and xxi. 6, 7, 18. but the bullock and goat, on the day of atonement, Lev. xvi. 11—18, 27. which were typical of Chriſt, in the bringing of their blood into the moſt holy place, by the high-prieſt, for ſin; and in the burning of them without the camp: theſe beaſts were ſlain, their blood was ſhed, and was brought into the moſt holy place, by the high-prieſt; and was ſprinkled on the mercy-ſeat, and the horns of the altar of incenſe; and, by it, atonement was made, for the prieſt, his houſe, and all Iſrael; which was a type of the death of Chriſt; the ſhedding of his blood; the carrying of it into heaven; the ſprinkling it upon the throne of grace and mercy; by which reconciliation is made for the ſins of all God's people: whoſe blood is brought into the ſanctuary; that is, into the holy of holies, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it: by the high-prieſt for ſin; to make atonement for it, for his own, and for the ſins of his family, and of all Iſrael: are burnt without the camp, Lev. xvi. 27. even their ſkins, fleſh, and dung; and the men, that burnt them, were unclean, tho', upon being waſhed, were received: which was typical of the dolorous ſufferings of Chriſt, without Jeruſalem, as the next verſe ſhews; and points out the extent of his ſufferings, reaching to all parts of his body, and even to his ſoul; and expreſſes, not only the pains, but the ſhame and reproach he endured, ſignified by the burning of the dung; and hints at the pardon of the wicked Jews, who were concerned in his ſufferings; which was applied unto them upon their repentance.

Ver. 12. Wherefore Jeſus alſo, &c.] In order to anſwer the type of him; that he might ſanctify the people with his own blood: by the people, are meant the people, who are the objects of divine love and favour; a choſen and covenant people; a diſtinct and peculiar people; Chriſt's own ſpecial people, by the gift of his father to him: and the ſanctification of them does not deſign the internal ſanctification of them, tho' this is from Chriſt, and in conſequence of his blood; nor does it ſo much regard the cleanſing of the filth of ſin, tho' Chriſt's blood ſanctifies, in this ſenſe; but, rather the expiation of the guilt of ſin, which Chriſt has fully took away; compleat pardon being procured, and a perfect righteouſneſs brought in: and this by his own blood; the prieſts ſanctified, to the purifying of the fleſh, with the blood of others, with the blood of bulls and goats; but Chriſt, with his own blood, which he was, really, a partaker of; and his human nature, being in union with his divine perſon, as the Son of God, it had a virtue in it, to ſanctify and cleanſe from all ſin, and to make full expiation of it; in ſhedding of which, and ſanctifying with it, he has ſhown great love to his people: and, that he might do this agreeable to the types of him on the day of atonement, he ſuffered without the gate; that is, of Jeruſalem: the Syriac verſion reads, without the city; meaning Jeruſalem; which anſwered to the camp of Iſrael, in the wilderneſs; without which, the bodies of beaſts were burnt, on the day of atonement: for ſo ſay [z] the Jews; "as "was the camp in the wilderneſs, ſo was the camp "in Jeruſalem; from Jeruſalem to the mountain of "the houſe, was the camp of Iſrael; from the "mountain of the houſe to the gate of Nicanor, "was the camp of the Levites; and from thence "forward, the camp of the Shechinah, or the Divine "Majeſty:" and ſo Joſephus [a] renders the phraſe, without the camp, in Lev. xvi. 27. by εν τοις προαστειοις; in the ſuburbs; that is, of Jeruſalem, where Chriſt ſuffered.

Ver. 13. Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, &c.] Either of legal ceremonies, which are to be quitted; or of this world, which may be compared to a camp, for its inſtability, a camp not being always in one place; and for its hoſtility, the world being full of enemies to Chriſt and his people; and for the noiſe and fatigue of it, it being a troubleſome and weariſome place to the Saints, abounding with ſins and wickedneſs; as alſo camps uſually do; and for multitude, the men of the world being very numerous: and a man, may be ſaid to go forth from hence, when he profeſſes not to belong to the world; when his affections are weaned from it; when the allurements of it don't draw him aſide; when he forſakes, and ſuffers the loſs of all, for Chriſt; when he withdraws from the converſation of the men of it, and breathes after another world, and to go forth, from hence, unto him, unto Chriſt, ſhews, that Chriſt is not to be found in the camp, in the world; he is above, in heaven, at the right hand of God; and, that going out of the camp externally, or leaving the world only in a way of profeſſion, is of no avail, without going to Chriſt: yet, there muſt be, a quitting of the world, in ſome ſenſe, or there is no true coming to Chriſt, and enjoyment of him; and Chriſt is a full recompence, for what of the world may be loſt, by coming to him; wherefore, there is great encouragemnt, to quit the world, and follow Chriſt: now to go forth to him, is to believe in him; to hope in him; to love him; to make a profeſſion of him, and follow him: bearing his reproach; or reproach for his ſake: the reproach, which ſaints meet with, for the ſake of Chriſt, and a profeſſion of him, is called his, becauſe of the union, there is between them, and the ſympathy and fellow-feeling, he has with them in it; he reckons, what is ſaid and done to them, as ſaid and done to himſelf; and, beſides, there is a likeneſs between the reproach, which Chriſt perſonally bore, and that, which is caſt upon his followers; and this is to be bore, by them, willingly, chearfully, courageouſly, and patiently.

Ver. 14. For here have we no continuing city, &c.] Neither for religious worſhip, the city of Jeruſalem being quickly to be deſtroyed, nor for civil life to dwell in; and ſo may have a peculiar regard to the Hebrews, whoſe temple and city would, in a ſhort time, become deſolate; tho' it was the general caſe of the ſaints, in thoſe times, to be obliged to flee from one city to another, having no certain dwelling-place: and it may reſpect the common inſtability of this world, and of the ſtate of the ſaints in it: this world, and all things in it, are unſtable, and tranſitory, the riches, honours, pleaſures, and profits of it, and the perſons in it, and even the world itſelf; the faſhion of it paſſes away: the ſaints have no ſettlement and abiding here; they are not of it, tho' in it; and tho' they are in it, it is but for a time; and, when they have done the will of God, they are taken out of it; another place is prepared for them; they are but ſojourners, and ſtrangers, and pilgrims; and this they are ſenſible of, and own, and acknowledge: and it is their mercy, that they are not to continue here; ſince, whilſt in it, they are expoſed to a great many ſorrows and afflictions, both of ſoul and body; are often diſturbed with ſatan's temptations; and are liable to the ſnares, inſults, and reproaches of the world; and, ſeeing they have no continuance here, they'll be the ſooner at home: and they have that to ſupport them, under the inſtability of worldly things, which others have not; they are intereſted in an unchangeable God, and in his love; and in an unchangeable Saviour; and in an unchangeable covenant; and have a right to eternal glory and happineſs, a city, which has foundations, as follows: but we ſeek one to come; heaven, which is compared to a city; is future, yet to come; tho' certain, being built and prepared by God; and is continuing, will abide, being well founded: hence the ſaints ſeek for it; ſee the note on ch. xi. 10.

Ver. 15. By him therefore let us offer the ſacrifice of praiſe, &c.] For temporal and ſpiritual mercies; particularly for ſanctification, or expiation of ſin, by the blood of Chriſt; and for heaven, the continuing city, that is to come: this ſacrifice is not a proper, nor a propitiatory one, but ſpiritual and evangelical; it is enjoined by God, is well pleaſing to him, and glorifies him; and is our reaſonable ſervice, that believe in Chriſt; for being made prieſts by him to God, and having faith in him, ſuch are capable of offering it aright; to do which, they are under the greateſt obligations: and it is to be offered up by Chriſt, who is the ſame, yeſterday, to day, and for ever; and who has ſuffered without the gate, that he might ſanctify the people by his blood; it is to be done, in imitation of him, and by his aſſiſtance; and for him, and bleſſings in him; and on him, as the altar, which ſanctifies the gift; and, through him, as the high-prieſt and mediator; for, as there is no coming to God, but by Chriſt, and all our mercies come to us, through him, and our thankſgivings are only acceptable to God, on his account, it muſt be right to offer them up by him: and that, to God continually; as the creator and preſerver of us, in our beings; as the father of mercies; as the father of Chriſt; and as our covenant God and father in him; ſince he is always beſtowing mercies on us, of one kind or another; and, therefore, ſhould be continually praiſed, even in times of adverſity, affliction, and temptation; in the midſt of reproach and perſecution; even, when unſettled in mind, body, and eſtate; ſince there is a continuing city to come; nor can a believer be in any ſtate of life, but he has ſomething to be thankful for: that is, the fruit of our lips; the ſacrifice of praiſe is ſo called, in alluſion to the offering of the firſt-fruits under the law; and to diſtinguiſh it from legal ſacrifices; and to ſhew, in what way and manner, we are to praiſe God, namely, with our lips: in Hoſ. xiv. 3. which is thought to be referred to here, it is, the calves of our lips; ſacrifices of praiſe, being inſtead of calves: and the Apoſtle interprets it, in great agreement, with the Jewiſh writers; the Chaldee paraphraſe explains it, by מלי ספותנא, the words of their lips: and ſo Jarchi, דברי שפתינו, the words of our lips; and Kimchi, וידוי שפתינו, the confeſſion of our lips: and it may be obſerved, that there is a great nearneſs in פרים, calves, and פרי, fruit; tho' perhaps rather the phraſe is borrowed from Iſ. lvii. 19. where it is expreſly had; the Septuagint indeed have it in Hoſ. xiv. 3. the Apoſtle adds, for further explanation, giving thanks to his name; to the name of God; to the glory of his name; to the honour of his divine perfections; for mercies of every kind: the word ſignifies, a ſpeaking together; and may deſign not only the conjunction of the heart and tongue together in praiſe, but a ſocial giving thanks to God by the ſaints, as a body together: the phraſe ϑυσια αινεσεως, the ſacrifice of praiſe, is uſed by the Septuagint in 2 Chron. xxix. 31. and xxxiii. 16. The Apoſtle having ſhewn, that legal ſacrifices were all ſuperſeded and aboliſhed by the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which is the deſign of this epiſtle, points out what ſacrifice believers ſhould offer up to God, under the Goſpel-diſpenſation; and the Jews themſelves ſay, that "in future time (i. e. in the "days of the Meſſiah) all ſacrifices ſhall ceaſe, but "קרבן תודה, the ſacrifice of praiſe ſhall not ceaſe [b]."

Ver. 16. But to do good and to communicate forget not, &c.] Which is to be underſtood, not of doing good works in general, but of acts of beneficence, or communicating to the poor, as the Syriac verſion renders it: the Apoſtle proceeds to take notice of another ſort of ſacrifice, which continues under the Goſpel-diſpenſation; and that is, alms; which ſhould be attended to: alms ſhould be given, or beneficence be exerciſed to all men in need, even to our enemies, as well as to our friends and relations; and eſpecially to poor ſaints, and miniſters of the Goſpel: and this believers ſhould not forget; which ſhews that it it is a duty of importance; and that men are too apt to neglect it, and ſhould be ſtirred up unto it: for with ſuch ſacrifices God is well pleaſed; not that they are meritorious of the favour of God and of eternal life; for what a man gives in a way of charity, is but what God has given him, and cannot be profitable to God, tho' it is to a fellow-creature; nor is there any proportion between what is given, and grace and glory which the ſaints receive; yet doing good in this way, when it is done in faith, ſprings from love, and is directed to the glory of God, is well-pleaſing to him; yea, theſe ſacrifices are preferred by him to legal ones, Hoſ. vi. 6. and the Jews alſo ſay, that "greater is he who does alms than (if he offered) "all ſacrifices [c]."

Ver. 17. Obey them that have the rule over you, &c.] Not the eccleſiaſtical rulers among the Jews, for to theſe they were no longer obliged, they being no longer under ſuch tutors and governors; nor civil magiſtrates, tho' it was their duty to obey them, even heathen ones; for as for chriſtian magiſtrates, as yet there were none; but their ſpiritual guides and governors, the ſame that are mentioned ver. 7. theſe the Apoſtle exhorts them to obey; by conſtantly attending upon the word preached by them, and hearkening to it; by receiving it with faith and love, as it appears agreeable to the ſcriptures; for a contrary behaviour is pernicious to ſouls, and highly reſented by God; and by being preſent at, and joining with them in the ordinances of Chriſt, as adminiſtred by them; and by regarding their admonitions, counſels and advice: and ſubmit yourſelves; to the laws of Chriſt's houſe, as put in execution by them; and to their cenſures and reproofs, as delivered by the authority of the church; for they are ſpiritual fathers, and children ſhould obey their parents, and ſubmit to them; they are the ambaſſadors of Chriſt, ſtand in his ſtead, and repreſent him, wherefore their authority is great; and they are paſtors or ſhepherds of the flock, whom the ſheep ſhould follow: for they watch for your ſouls, as they that muſt give account; they watch not for themſelves, for their worldly gain and advantage, and for the eſtates of men; but for the ſouls of men, to do them good, to comfort and edify them, to feed them with knowledge and underſtanding, and for the ſalvation of them; as ſuch that muſt give an account to their own conſciences, that they diſcharge their work aright, or they can't be ſatisfied; and to the church, to whom they miniſter, to whom they are accountable, if they are dilatory and negligent; and eſpecially, as ſuch as muſt ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, and give an account to him of their miniſtry, of their uſe of talents committed to them, and of ſouls that are put under their care and charge; how they have diſcharged their duty to the ſouls of men, and how theſe have behaved towards them under the miniſtry of the word: the Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, for they watch, as thoſe that muſt give an account for your ſouls; the ſenſe is much the ſame: that they may do it with joy, and not with grief; either do their work with joy, chearfully; which they do, when they are obeyed and ſubmited to; when men attend upon the word and ordinances adminiſtred by them, and receive advantage, and grow in grace and ſpiritual knowledge; when they abide by the Goſpel, and walk worthy of it; otherwiſe they do their work heavily, and with ſorrow: or elſe give up their account with joy, and not with grief; either at the throne of grace, where they either rejoice or complain; or at the great day, when they will be witneſſes, either for, or againſt thoſe that have been committed to them: for that is unprofitable unto you; for whoſe ſouls they watch; that is, the latter would be ſo, either to do their work ſorrowing, or to give up their account by way of complaint; either of them muſt be to the diſadvantage of ſuch perſons that occaſion grief and ſorrow.

Ver. 18. Pray for us, &c.] Who are in the miniſtry; your guides and governors; ſince the work is of ſo much moment, and ſo arduous and awful, and you have ſuch a concern in it; ſee the note on 2 Theſſ. iii. 1. for we truſt we have a good conſcience; there is a conſcience in every man, but it is naturally evil: a good conſcience is a conſcience ſanctified by the ſpirit of God, and ſprinkled by the blood of Jeſus; here it chiefly reſpects the upright diſcharge of it in the miniſterial work: this the Apoſtle often aſſerts, and appeals to, and which he here expreſſes with modeſty, and yet with confidence; and which he uſes as an argument for prayer for them: in all things willing to live honeſtly; not only as men, but as miniſters; faithfully diſpenſing the word of truth, without any regard to the favour or frowns of men, as good ſtewards of the myſteries of God; which contains in it another reaſon for prayer: the phraſe, in all things, is ſo placed, that it may be read in connexion with either clauſe; and the ſenſe is either that they exerciſed a good conſcience in all things, in which they were concerned with God, or man, and among all perſons, Jews and Gentiles; or that they were willing to live honeſtly in every reſpect, as men, chriſtians, and miniſters.

Ver. 19. But I beſeech you the rather to do this, &c.] To pray earneſtly; to ſtrive together in their prayers for them, Rom. xv. 30, 31, 32. that I may be reſtored to you the ſooner; Chriſt's miniſters are ſometimes hindred from being with their people, through ſatan, or his emiſſaries, creating troubles, or caſting them into priſon; which might be the Apoſtle's caſe now; but God can make their way through all; and for this he ſhould be prayed unto.

Ver. 20. Now the God of peace, &c.] This is the concluding part of the epiſtle, which is ended with a prayer, made up of very ſuitable petitions for the Hebrews; and as the Apoſtle deſires them to pray for him and other miniſters, he, in turn, and by way of example, prays for them: and he addreſſes God, as the God of peace; who is ſo called, becauſe of his concern in the peace and reconciliation of his people; becauſe he is the giver of conſcience-peace to them; becauſe he is the author of all felicity and proſperity, temporal and ſpiritual; the promoter of peace and concord among ſaints, and at laſt brings them to eternal peace; ſee the note on Rom. xv. 33. a conſideration of this gives boldneſs at the throne of grace; furniſhes out a reaſon why bleſſings aſked for may be expected; has a tendency to promote peace among brethren; may bear up ſaints under a ſenſe of infirmity and imperfection, in prayer and other duties; and be an encouragement to them under ſatan's temptations, and all afflictions. The Arabic verſion, makes the God of peace to be Chriſt himſelf; whereas Chriſt is manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from him in the next verſe; and even in that verſion, reading the words thus, now the God of peace raiſed from the dead, Jeſus the ſhepherd of the ſheep, magnified by the blood of the everlaſting covenant; Jeſus, I ſay, our Lord confirm you, &c. through Jeſus Chriſt; for which verſion there is no foundation in the original text. The God of peace is manifeſtly God the Father, who is diſtinguiſhed from Chriſt his Son: that brought again from the dead our Lord Jeſus; who died for the ſins of his people; was buried, and lay under the power of death for ſome time; but was raiſed from the dead by his Father, tho' not excluſive of himſelf, and the ſpirit of holineſs; in the ſame body, in which he ſuffered and died; as the firſt-fruits of his people, and as their Lord and Saviour, head and ſurety, for their juſtification, and as a pledge of their reſurrection. The Apoſtle addreſſes the God and Father of Chriſt in prayer, under this conſideration, to obſerve his power and ability to help in the greateſt diſtreſs, and in the moſt difficult and deſperate caſe; to encourage faith and hope in him, when things are at the worſt, and moſt diſcouraging; to comfort the ſaints under afflictions, in a view of their reſurrection; to engage them to regard a riſen Chriſt, and things above, and to expect life and immortality by him: that great ſhepherd of the ſheep; the people of God, whom the Father has choſen, and given to Chriſt; for whom he has laid down his life; and whom the Spirit calls by his grace, and ſanctifies; to whom Chriſt has a right, by his Father's gift, his own purchaſe, and the power of grace: theſe being partakers of his grace, are called ſheep, becauſe they are harmleſs and inoffenſive in their lives and converſations; and yet are expoſed to danger; but meek and patient under ſufferings; are weak and timorous of themſelves; are clean, being waſhed in the blood of Chriſt; are ſociable in their communion with one another; are profitable, tho' not to God, yet to men; are apt to go aſtray, and are liable to diſeaſes: they are alſo called ſheep, and are Chriſt's ſheep before converſion; ſee John x. 16. and Chriſt, he is the ſhepherd of them, who in all reſpects diſcharges the office of a ſhepherd to them, diligently and faithfully; ſee the note on John x. 11. here he is called, that great ſhepherd; being the man, God's fellow, equal to him, the great God and our Saviour; and having a flock which, tho' comparatively is a little one, is a flock of ſouls, of immortal ſouls, and is ſuch a flock as no other ſhepherd has; hence he is called the ſhepherd and biſhop of ſouls: and his abilities to feed them, are exceeding great; he has a perfect knowledge of them; all power to protect and defend them; a fullneſs of grace to ſupply them; and he takes a diligent care of them: and this great perſon ſo deſcribed was raiſed from the dead, through the blood of the everlaſting covenant; for the ſenſe is not, that God is the God of peace, through that blood, tho' it is true, that peace is made by it; nor that Chriſt becomes the ſhepherd of the ſheep by it, tho' he has with it purchaſed the flock of God; nor that the choſen people become his ſheep through it, tho' they are redeemed by it, and are delivered out of a pit wherein is no water, by the blood of this covenant; but that Chriſt was brought again from the dead through it; and it denotes the particular influence that it had upon his reſurrection, and the continued virtue of it ſince. The covenant ſpoken of is not the covenant of works made with Adam, as the federal head of his natural ſeed; there was no mediator or ſhepherd of the ſheep that had any concern therein; there was no blood in that covenant; nor was it an everlaſting one: nor the covenant of circumciſion given to Abraham; tho' poſſibly there may be ſome reference to it; or this may be oppoſed to that, ſince the blood of circumciſion is often called by the Jews, דם ברית, the blood of the covenant [d]: nor the covenant on mount Sinai, tho' there may be an alluſion to it; ſince the blood which was then ſhed, and ſprinkled on the people, is called the blood of the covenant, Exod. xxiv. 8. but that was not an everlaſting covenant, that has waxed old, and vaniſhed away; but the covenant of grace is meant, before called the new and better covenant, of which Chriſt is the ſurety and mediator; ſee ch. vii. 22. and viii. 6. This is an everlaſting one; it commenced from everlaſting, as appears from the everlaſting love of God, which is the riſe and foundation of it; from the counſels of God of old, which iſſued in it; from Chriſt's being ſet up from everlaſting, as the mediator of it; from the promiſes of it which were made before the world began; and from the ſpiritual bleſſings of grace in it, which were given to God's elect in Chriſt before the foundation of it: moreover, it will endure for ever; nor will it be ſucceeded by any other covenant: and the blood of Chriſt may be called the blood of it, becauſe the ſhedding of it is a principal article in it; by it the covenant is ratified and confirmed; and all the bleſſings of it come through it, as redemption, peace, pardon, juſtification, and even admiſſion into heaven itſelf; and Chriſt, through it, was brought again from the dead, becauſe by it he fulfilled his covenant-engagements, ſatisfied divine juſtice, and aboliſhed ſin, yea, death itſelf.

Ver. 21. Make you perfect in every good work to do his will, &c.] The Alexandrian copy reads, in every good work and word; as in 2 Theſſ. ii. 17. every good work is to be done: a good work is what is done in obedience to the command of God, and in faith, and from a principle of love, in the name and ſtrength of Chriſt, and with a view to the glory of God; and every ſuch work ſhould be diligently attended to; ſuch as concern God, and are of a moral nature, or of poſitive inſtitution; and ſuch as concern each other, whether as men or chriſtians: and the will of God is the rule of every good work, both as to matter and manner; whatever is not agreeable to the revealed will of God, let it have ever ſuch a ſhew of religion and holineſs in it, it is not a good work; continuance in the performance of good works, and the perfection of them are things to be deſired of God; it requires grace to perform good works, and more grace to abound in them, and to keep men from being weary of well-doing; and tho' the beſt of works are imperfect, yet perfection in them is deſirable, and it is God alone that can make the ſaints perfect in any ſenſe; ſee 1 Pet. v. 10. The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions render it, ſtrengthen you, or confirm you; ſaints need to be ſtrengthened with ſpiritual ſtrength, to perform good works; for they are weak and feeble, and unable of themſelves, to do any thing ſpiritually good; without Chriſt they can do nothing, but through him ſtrengthening them, they can do all things; and they have need to be confirmed in them, that they are the will of God, and that it is their duty to regard them. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, fit you: men are naturally unfit for good works; in order to do them aright, it is neceſſary that they ſhould have knowledge of the will of God; that they be regenerated and created in Chriſt; that they be ſanctified and cleanſed, and ſo meet for the maſter's uſe; that they have the Spirit of God, and ſtrength from Chriſt; and that they be believers in him: nor is there always a fitneſs in ſaints themſelves, or a readineſs to good works, only when God gives both will and power to do them; wherefore ſuch a petition as this is very proper and pertinent; another follows, or the ſame carried on, and more largely expreſſed; tho' it rather ſeems to be a diſtinct one, and that in order to the former: working in you that which is well-pleaſing in his ſight through Jeſus Chriſt; the good work of grace being neceſſary to the performance of good works; nor can any man do a good work well, unleſs he has the good work of grace wrought in him: grace is a work not of man, but of God; it is an internal work, ſomething in a man's heart, and not any thing without him, or done by him; and it is a gradual and progreſſive work; it is carried on by degrees, and is not yet perfect, tho' it will be. God is continually working in his people, carrying on his work, and will at length perform it; ſee the note on Phil. i. 6. and this is well-pleaſing in his ſight; it is in his ſight; it is obvious to his view, when it is not to others, nor to themſelves, being the hidden man of the heart; and it is very agreeable to him; it makes men like unto him; hereby they become a ſuitable habitation for him, and are put into a capacity of ſerving him; to ſuch he gives more grace, and on that grace he entails glory: and all this is through Jeſus Chriſt; all the grace neceſſary for the beginning and carrying on, and finiſhing of the good work of grace, and for the performance of every good work, comes through the hands of Chriſt, in whom all fulneſs of it dwells; and through the blood and interceſſion of Chriſt, by virtue of which it is communicated; and all become acceptable to God thro' him, as the perſons of the Lord's people, ſo the grace that is wrought in them, and the works that are done by them: to whom be glory for ever and ever, Amen; either to God the Father of Chriſt, and the Father of mercies, and God of ſalvation; and as he is the God of peace, and the bringer of Chriſt from the dead; the appointer, provider, and giver of the great ſhepherd; the author and finiſher of all good in his people: or to Jeſus Chriſt, the great ſhepherd of the ſheep, through whom all grace and good things come; to him does this doxology of right belong; he has a glory both as God, and as mediator; and the glory of both is to be given to him: the glory of his deity, by aſſerting it; by attributing all divine perfections and works unto him; by worſhipping of him, and by aſcribing the efficacy of his mediatorial actions to it: and the glory of ſalvation and redemption is to be given to him, who alone has obtained it; by diſcarding all other ſaviours; by truſting alone in him; by looking to him alone for peace, pardon, juſtification, ſanctification, and eternal life: and this glory ſhould be aſcribed continually, for ever and ever, as it will be by angels and ſaints to all eternity. The word Amen, is added, to ſhew that the Apoſtle aſſented to it, and wiſhed it might be, and that he firmly believed it, and ſo aſſerted that it would be; for it is expreſſive of aſſent, aſſeveration, and prayer.

Ver. 22. And I beſeech you brethren, &c.] The Apoſtle cloſes his epiſtle to the Hebrews in a very tender and affectionate manner, calling them brethren, as he often does; and ſpeaking to them, not in an authoritative way, nor by way of advice, but by intreaty: the reaſon may be, becauſe he was the Apoſtle of the Gentiles; and becauſe the Jews were not ſo well pleaſed with him, on account of his preaching down the ceremonies of the law; tho' ſuch language is uſed by him in other epiſtles; he became all things to all, that he might gain ſome. The ſubject matter of his intreaty is, that they would ſuffer the word of exhortation; either from one another, as to prayer, to attendance on the word and ordinances, to a regard to their lives and converſations, and to a cloſe adherence to the Goſpel, and the profeſſion of it; or from their miniſters, their guides, and governors, whoſe buſineſs it was to exhort them to the ſeveral duties of religion; or rather from himſelf; and it deſigns either the particular exhortation in ch. xii. 5. or the continued exhortation to various duties in this chapter; or any, and every one throughout the epiſtle: and this ſhews that the children of God are ſometimes heavy and ſluggiſh, and need ſtirring up; and that there are ſome things often in exhortations and reproofs which are not ſo agreeable to the fleſh, and yet ought to be taken kindly, and patiently endured: the word may be rendred, conſolation, or ſolace, as it is by the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions; and may refer to the whole of this epiſtle, which is of a conſolatory nature: this may ſuggeſt that theſe Hebrews were under afflictions, and needed comfort; and yet through unbelief might be tempted to refuſe the comfort adminiſtred to them; which is too often the caſe with God's people: for I have written a letter unto you in few words; or, I have ſent, or, wrote to you in brief; meaning either the exhortatory part of the epiſtle, which lay in few words, and chiefly in this chapter; or the whole of the epiſtle, which was but ſhort in compariſon of the length he might have carried it, and as the ſubject matter of it might ſeem to require; it treating on the great doctrines of the Goſpel, and myſteries of grace; things of the greateſt moment and importance, and which might have been largely inſiſted on; but he had contracted things, and had wrote much in a little; and this he makes a reaſon, why they ſhould ſuffer or bear with the exhortation given, ſince it was not preſſed with a multitude of words, tiring out their patience.

Ver. 23. Know ye that our brother Timothy is ſet at liberty, &c.] This is the ſame perſon to whom the Apoſtle Paul wrote two epiſtles, and whom he often calls his ſon, tho' ſometimes his brother, as here, Col. i. 1. 1 Theſſ. iii. 2. of him he ſays, that he was ſet at liberty, or diſmiſſed; either by the Apoſtle, by whom he was ſent into ſome parts, upon ſome buſineſs; or rather was looſed from his bonds, having been a priſoner for the ſake of Chriſt and the Goſpel; and it may be, a fellow-priſoner with the Apoſtle, at Rome, as Ariſtarchus and others were; and this very great and uſeful perſon being known, very likely, to the Hebrews, ſince his mother was a Jeweſs, and he himſelf was well reported of by the brethren at Lyſtra and Iconium, Acts xvi. 1, 2. it was a piece of good news to them to hear of his releaſe: with whom if he come ſhortly, I will ſee you; by which it ſeems that Timothy was now abſent from the Apoſtle, but that he expected him to come in a ſhort time; when, if he ſhould, they would both come together, and viſit the Hebrews; which looks as if the Apoſtle was at liberty himſelf, or at leaſt had ſome hopes of his deliverance from priſon; but whether he ever had his liberty after this, and ſaw the Hebrews any more, cannot be ſaid; the contrary ſeems moſt probable.

Ver. 24. Salute all them that have the rule over you, &c.] The paſtors and officers of the church of the Hebrews; the ſame with thoſe in ver. 7, 17. and all the ſaints; the ſeveral members of the church, who were ſet apart to holineſs by God; whoſe ſins were expiated by Chriſt; to whom Chriſt was made ſanctification; and who were internally ſanctified by the Spirit of God, and lived holy lives and converſations; to theſe the Apoſtle wiſhed all proſperity, inward and outward, ſpiritual and temporal; and he uſes the word all in both clauſes; and including every officer and member, expreſſes his univerſal love to them, whether high or low, rich or poor, greater or leſſer believers: they of Italy ſalute you; that is, the brethren, as the Vulgate Latin verſion reads; the Italian brethren; ſuch as were at Puteoli, and other places, in that country; ſee Acts xxviii. 13, 14. Italy is a famous, and well known country in Europe; a very fruitful and delightful one; of which, Rome, where the Apoſtle very likely now was, is the chief city: it has been called by different names, as Saturnia, from Saturn; and Auſonia, Ænotria, and Heſperia Magna; and it had its name Italy, ſome ſay, from Italus, the ſon of Penelope and Telegonus; others, from Italus, a king of the Arcadians, or, as ſome ſay, the Sicilians; but, according to Timæus and Varro [n], it was ſo called from the multitude of oxen in it, which in the old Greek language were called ιταλοι, Italoi, to which comes near in ſound the Latin word vituli, uſed for calves; and Italy is frequently, by Jewiſh writers [o], called איטליא של יון, Italy of Greece; and formerly it was inhabited by Greeks, and was called Great Greece [p]: it is bounded on the eaſt with the Adriatic ſea; and on the weſt by the river Var, with the Alps, which ſeparate France from Italy; and on the ſouth with the Tyrrhene, or Tuſcan ſea, called the lower, and on the north, partly with the Alps, which are on the borders of Germany, and partly with the Adriatic ſea, called the higher. There were chriſtians in this country before the Apoſtle Paul came to Rome, both at Rome, and other places, as before obſerved. It is ſaid [q], that Barnabas was firſt at Rome, and planted the church there; that he went round Lombardy, and lived at Milain; that in the firſt century, Apollinaris preached at Ravenna, and Hermagoras at Aquileia; and there were chriſtian churches in the ſecond century, not only at Rome, but in many other cities and places; and ſo likewiſe in the third century, as at Verona, Spoletum, Beneventum, &c. and in the fourth century, there were great numbers of churches in this country; as at Verona, and Capua, in Calabria, Campania, and Apulia; and which might be traced in following centuries.

Ver. 25. Grace be with you all, Amen.] Which is the Apoſtle's uſual ſalutation in all his epiſtles, 2 Theſſ. iii. 17, 18. in which he wiſhes renewed diſcoveries of the love and favour of God; freſh communications of grace from Chriſt; an abundant ſupply of the ſpirit of grace; an increaſe of internal grace and external gifts; and a continuance of the Goſpel of the grace of God. Of Amen, ſee the note on ver. 21.

The ſubſcription of this epiſtle is, written to the Hebrews from Italy by Timothy; in the Alexandrian copy it is, written to the Hebrews from Rome; which is very probable, ſince the Italian brethren ſend their ſalutations in it; and the words, by Timothy, are left out; nor is it likely that it ſhould, ſince it is clear, from ver. 23. that he was abſent from the Apoſtle; and if he had ſent it by him, what need was there to inform them that he was ſet at liberty?

AN
EXPOSITION, &c.

The General Epiſtle of JAMES.

THIS Epiſtle is called General, becauſe not written to any particular perſon, as the epiſtles to Timothy, Titus, and Philemon are; nor to any particular churches, as the epiſtles to the Romans, Corinthians, &c. but to the believing Jews in general, wherever they were. The author of it is James; and whereas there were two of this name, who were the Apoſtles of Chriſt; ſome have thought it was written by one, and ſome by another: ſome think it was written by James the ſon of Zebedee, and brother of John, which is favoured by the Syriac verſion, which to this epiſtle, and the following, premiſes theſe words; "the three epiſtles of the three "Apoſtles, before whoſe eyes our Lord transfigured himſelf, that is, James, and Peter, and "John." Now, that James, who was preſent at the transfiguration of Chriſt, was James the ſon of Zebedee: but neither the time, nor occaſion, nor matter of this epiſtle, ſeem to agree with him, for he was put to death by Herod, about the year 44, Acts xii. 1, 2. whereas this epiſtle was written, as ſome think, about the year 60, or as others, 63; and it ſeems pretty manifeſt, that it muſt be written after the Goſpel had been ſpread in the Gentile world, and was received by the Jews, who were ſcattered abroad in it; and after many hypocrites had crept into the churches, and many falſe teachers, and vain boaſters, and bad livers, had ariſen among them: it ſeems therefore more agreeable, to aſcribe this epiſtle to James, the ſon of Alpheus, ſometimes called the brother of our Lord, and who was preſent at the aſſembly at Jeruſalem, when the neceſſity of the Gentiles circumciſion was debated, Acts xv. and is the ſame, whom Euſebius[a] calls James the Juſt, and Oblias; and who ſeems to have reſided at Jeruſalem, and to have been the biſhop, or overſeer of that church there; and therefore in character writes this epiſtle to the Jews, in the ſeveral parts of the world: nor need there be any doubt of the authentickneſs of it. Euſebius indeed ſays[b], that it had been accounted ſpurious by ſome, and that not many of the ancient writers had made mention of it: but he himſelf ſays, that it was publickly read in moſt churches; and certain it is, that ſome very early writers have reſpect unto it. Irenæus[c] manifeſtly refers to it, and ſo does Tertullian[d]; and it is expreſly mentioned by Origen[e] among the canonical books of ſcripture. The objections againſt it are of no weight, which are taken from the ſeeming diſagreement between the Apoſtle Paul, and the writer of this epiſtle, concerning the doctrine of juſtification; and from his calling the law, the perfect law of liberty, and inſiſting ſo much on the doctrine of works; all which will be ſeen to be agreeable to the other parts of ſcripture, and eaſily reconciled with them; nor is there any thing in it unworthy of an Apoſtle and an inſpired writer. The occaſion of it ſeems to be partly the troubles and perſecutions which attended the ſaints for the ſake of Chriſt and the Goſpel; and the deſign of it is to encourage them to patience under them, and to wait and hope for the ſpeedy coming of Chriſt; and partly the evil practices of ſome that boaſted of their faith and knowledge, tho' they lived very diſſolute lives: and the view of the Apoſtle is to ſhew, that faith, without the fruits of righteouſneſs, is not genuine; and he very largely in it exhorts to ſeveral duties very becoming chriſtians, and inveighs againſt ſeveral vices, which were ſcandalous to them.

CHAP.

CHAP. I.

IN this chapter, after the inſcription and ſalutation, the Apoſtle inſtructs the ſaints he writes to, how to behave under afflictions, and in every ſtate of life; teaches them not to impute their ſins to God, but to themſelves; directs them in hearing the word, and cautions againſt ſelf-deception in religion. The inſcription and ſalutation are in ver. 1. in which the author of the Epiſtle is deſcribed by his name and office; and the perſons it is written to, by the tribes of Iſrael they belonged to, and by the condition in which they were ſcattered about in the world, to whom the Apoſtle wiſhes all grace. And as they were in an afflicted ſtate, he begins with an exhortation to rejoice in their afflictions; becauſe hereby faith was tried, and that produced patience, and patience being perfect, is the way to be compleat, and want nothing, ver. 2, 3, 4. but if any wanted wiſdom, how to behave under ſuch exerciſes, he adviſes to apply to God for it, from whom it may be expected, ſince he is the giver of it, and gives it to all, and that liberally, and does not upbraid with the former conduct, ver. 5. but then ſuch ſhould aſk in faith, or otherwiſe it can't be thought they ſhould receive, and beſides would juſtly deſerve the characters of fluctuating and unſtable perſons, ver. 6, 7, 8. And the exhortations the Apoſtle had given, he obſerves, ſuited all ſorts of perſons, poor and rich; the one who is exalted amidſt his poverty, and the other who is mean, and frail, and mortal, amidſt all his riches; which is illuſtrated by the flower of the graſs falling off and periſhing, ver. 9, 10, 11. And upon the whole, he concludes the bleſſedneſs of the man that endures affliction patiently, ſince a crown of life is promiſed him, and he will receive it, ver. 12. and from external temptations or afflictions, the Apoſtle proceeds to internal ones, temptations to ſin; and denies them to be of God, and imputes them to the luſts of men, and gives a very accurate account of the beginning, progreſs, and finiſhing of ſin by man; and obſerves, that to place ſin to the account of God, and not man, is a very great error, ver. 13, 14, 15, 16. which he proves from the pure and holy nature of God; and from the good and perfect gifts, which all, and only come from him; and inſtances in regeneration, which is of his will, and by his word, and is the beginning and ſpring of all good in man, ver. 17, 18. And having mentioned the word, as a means of that grace, he gives ſome rules about hearing it; that it ſhould be heard with eagerneſs, and received with meekneſs; and whatſoever is contrary thereunto ſhould be avoided; as a forwardneſs to be teachers of it; wrath and anger at the doctrines of it, which do not work the righteouſneſs of God; and all impurity and naughtineſs of the mind, which muſt render it inattentive to it; and the rather all this ſhould be regarded, ſince the word is the engrafted word, and able to ſave the ſouls of men, ver. 19, 20, 21. and particular care ſhould be had, that what is heard is put in practice, or otherwiſe it will be a ſelf-deception; and ſuch will be like a man that beholds his face in a glaſs, goes away, and forgets what ſort of a man he is; whereas, if a man looks into the glaſs of the Goſpel, hears the word attentively, remembers what he hears, and continues in it, he finds many bleſſed advantages in ſo doing, ver. 22, 23, 24, 25. and then the Apoſtle diſtinguiſhes between a vain religion, and a pure one; a vain religion is only a ſeeming one, and may be known to be ſo by a man's having no guard upon his tongue; wherefore if he thinks himſelf religious, he is miſtaken, and his heart deceived, ver. 26. but pure and undefiled religion, which is ſo in the ſight of God, ſhows itſelf in a holy life and converſation in general, and particularly in viſiting and aſſiſting widows and orphans in diſtreſs, ver. 27.

Ver. 1. James a ſervant of God, &c.] That is, of God the Father; not by creation only, as every man is; nor merely by calling grace, as is every regenerate perſon; but by office, as a preacher of the Goſpel, being one that ſerved God in the Goſpel of his Son, and was an Apoſtle of Chriſt; nor is this any ſufficient objection to his being one, ſince others of the Apoſtles ſo ſtile themſelves: and of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; the Ethiopic verſion reads this in connexion with the former clauſe, without the copulative and, James the ſervant of God, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and ſo ſome conſider the copulative as explanative of who is meant by God, even the Lord Jeſus Chriſt: but it ſeems beſt to underſtand them as diſtinct; and that this Apoſtle was not only the ſervant of God the Father, but of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, and that in the ſame ſenſe, referring to his office as an Apoſtle of Chriſt, and miniſter of the word: to the twelve tribes which are ſcattered abroad; by whom are meant believing Jews, who were of the ſeveral tribes of Iſrael, and which were in number twelve, according to the number and names of the twelve patriarchs, the ſons of Jacob; and theſe were not the chriſtian Jews, who were ſcattered abroad upon the perſecution raiſed at the death of Stephen, Acts viii. 1, 4. and xi. 19. but they were the poſterity of thoſe who had been diſperſed in former captivities, by the Aſſyrians and others, and who remained in the ſeveral countries, whither they were carried, and never returned. The Jews ſay [f], that the ten tribes will never return, and that they will have no part nor portion in the world to come; but theſe the Goſpel met with in their diſperſion, and by it they were effectually called and converted, and are the ſame that Peter writes to, 1 Pet. i. 1, 2. and 2 Pet. i. 1. and iii. 1. And thus we read of an hundred and forty and four thouſand ſealed of all the tribes of Iſrael, Rev. vii. 4. and to theſe the Apoſtle here ſends greeting; that is, his chriſtian ſalutation, wiſhing them all happineſs and proſperity, in ſoul and body, for time and eternity; and it includes all that grace, mercy, and peace, mentioned in the uſual forms of ſalutation by the other Apoſtles. The ſame form is uſed in Acts xv. 23. and ſince it was James that gave the advice there, which the reſt of the Apoſtles and elders came into, it is highly probable that the epiſtles ſent to the Gentiles were dictated by him; and the likeneſs of the form of ſalutation may confirm his being the writer of this Epiſtle.

Ver. 2. My brethren, &c.] Not only according to the fleſh, he being a Jew as they were; but in a ſpiritual ſenſe, they being born again of the ſame grace, belonging to the ſame family and houſhold of faith, and having the ſame father, and being all the children of God, by faith in Chriſt Jeſus: count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; not the temptations of ſatan, or temptations to ſin; for theſe cannot be matter of joy, but grief; theſe are fiery darts, and give a great deal of uneaſineſs and trouble; but afflictions and perſecutions for the ſake of the Goſpel, which are ſo called here and elſewhere, becauſe they are trials of the faith of God's people, and of other graces of the Spirit of God. God by theſe tempts his people, as he did Abraham, when he called him to ſacrifice his ſon; he thereby tried his faith, fear, love, and obedience; ſo by afflictions, God tries the graces of his people; not that he might know them, for he is not ignorant of them, but that they might be made manifeſt to others; and theſe are divers: many are the afflictions of the righteous; through much tribulation they muſt enter the kingdom; it is a great fight of afflictions which they endure, as theſe believers did; their trials came from different quarters; they were perſecuted by their countrymen the Jews, and were diſtreſſed by the Gentiles, among whom they lived; and their indignities and reproaches were many; and their ſufferings of different ſorts, as confiſcation of goods, impriſonment of body, baniſhment, ſcourgings, and death in various ſhapes: and theſe they fall into; not by chance, nor altogether at an unawares, or unexpectedly; but they fell into them thro' the wickedneſs and malice of their enemies, and did not bring them upon themſelves thro' any crime or enormity they were guilty of: and when this was their caſe, the Apoſtle exhorts them to count it all joy, or matter of joy, of exceeding great joy, even of the greateſt joy; not that theſe afflictions were joyous in themſelves, but in their circumſtances, effects, and conſequences; as they tried, and exerciſed, and improved the graces of the Spirit, and worked for their good, ſpiritual and eternal, and produced in them the peaceable fruit of righteouſneſs; and as they were attended with the preſence and Spirit of God, and of glory; and as they made for, and iſſued in the glory of God; and becauſe of that great reward in heaven which would follow them; ſee Matt. v. 11, 12. 1 Pet. iv. 14. The Jews have a ſaying [g], "whoever rejoices in afflictions that come "upon him, brings ſalvation to the world."

Ver. 3. Knowing this, &c.] By experience; as every one that is trained up in the ſchool of affliction does: the Apoſtle appeals to the ſaints, to whom he writes, for the truth of what he was about to ſay; and which he gives as a reaſon why they ſhould rejoice in afflictions, becauſe it is a known fact, that the trying of your faith worketh patience: two things afflictions do when ſanctified; one is, they try faith, the truth of it, and make it appear to be true, genuine, and precious, like gold tried in the fire; ſee 1 Pet. i. 6, 7. and the other is, that they produce patience: ſaints being inured to afflictions, become by degrees more patient under them; whence it is good for a man to bear the yoke in his youth: this phraſe may be underſtood, both of faith, which being tried by afflictions, produces patience; for where the one is in exerciſe, the other is alſo, and both are neceſſary under afflictive providences; and alſo of afflictions, which try faith, and being ſanctified by the Spirit of God, work patience, which is a fruit of the Spirit; for otherwiſe the effect of them is impatience; and this agrees with the Apoſtle Paul in Rom. v. 3, 4.

Ver. 4. But let patience have her perfect work, &c.] Or effect; or be brought unto perfection; which may denote both the ſincerity and continuance of it unto the end, with conſtancy: patience may be ſaid to be perfect, when it appears to be real and ſincere, and not diſſembled; for as there may be a feigned faith, a diſſembled love, and an hypocritical hope, ſo likewiſe a mere ſhew of patience: and certain it is, that as there is a patience which is commendable, there is one that is not, 1 Pet. ii. 20. And this phraſe may alſo deſign the conſtant exerciſe of this grace to the end; for he that endures, or is patient, and continues ſo unto the end, ſhall be ſaved, and enjoy that perfection of glory and happineſs, expreſſed in the next clauſe: that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing; which cannot be underſtood of the ſaints in this preſent life; only as they are in Chriſt, and in a comparative ſenſe; or as perfection may denote ſincerity, and uprightneſs; or of a perfection of parts, but not of degrees; for the ſaints are very imperfect in themſelves, and are very far from being compleat in ſoul, body, and ſpirit; and want many things, and are wanting in many things, both in the exerciſe of grace, and in the diſcharge of duty; but when patience has had its perfect work, and has been tried to the uttermoſt, and is found right, and has held out to the end; then ſhall the ſaints be perfect in holineſs and happineſs, and be entire, whole, and compleat; as they will be in the reſurrection morn, both in ſoul and body, and will want no good thing, and will be free from every ſorrow, nor will they be deficient in any ſervice; and to this ſenſe agrees ver. 12.

Ver. 5. If any of you lack wiſdom, &c.] This ſhows, that the perfection before ſpoken of, is not to be underſtood as in this life, ſince the Apoſtle immediately ſuppoſes lack of wiſdom in them; for this is not ſaid in a form of doubting, whether they wanted it or not, but rather as ſuppoſing, and taking it for granted that they did; and in the firſt, and primary ſenſe of the words, it intends wiſdom to behave aright under temptations or afflictions. Saints often want wiſdom to conſider God as the author of them, and not look upon them as matters of chance, or impute them merely to ſecond cauſes; but to regard them as coming from the hand of God, and as his hand upon them, as Job did; who does not aſcribe his calamities to the thieving Chaldeans and Sabeans, to the boiſterous wind, and to the malice of ſatan, but to God: they want wiſdom to obſerve the ſovereignty of God in them, and bow unto it, and be ſtill, and know that he is God, who does all things well and wiſely; and likewiſe to ſee and know that all are in love, and in very faithfulneſs, and for good; as well as to ſee his name, to hear his rod, and him that has appointed it, his voice in it, his mind and meaning, and what he deſigns by it; as likewiſe to learn the uſeful leſſons under it, and particularly to take the croſs well, to bear it patiently, and even to count it all joy, and reckon it to be right, neceſſary, and uſeful: it requires much wiſdom to learn all this, and act up to it. Moreover, this may be applied to all other caſes, in which wiſdom is wanted; men want wiſdom to conduct in the common affairs of life, and eſpecially the people of God; for the children of the world are wiſer in their generation, for themſelves and poſterity, and in the management of worldly affairs, than the children of light; and alſo to obſerve the providences of God, and the footſteps of providence, and to follow them; and likewiſe to make a right uſe of providences, and behave ſuitably under them, and not be lifted up too much in proſperity, nor be caſt down, and too much diſtreſſed in adverſity; but to conſider, that the one is ſet againſt the other, and both work together for good. Saints have need of wiſdom in things ſpiritual; they want more grace, which is the trueſt wiſdom, and a larger knowledge of the Goſpel, which is the wiſdom of God, the hidden wiſdom of God; and they lack wiſdom to know how to walk towards them that are without, and towards them that are within, ſo as becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt: and as this is more or leſs the caſe of every one, let him aſk of God wiſdom; of God the Father, who is the only wiſe God, who has abounded in creation, in providence, and above all, in redemption and grace, in all wiſdom and prudence; and of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, who is the wiſdom of God, and has all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge in him; and of the Spirit of God, who is a ſpirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of Chriſt, and all divine things: that giveth to all men liberally; God is the giver of all good things, in nature, providence, and grace; every good and perfect gift comes from him, and therefore he, and he only, ſhould be applied unto: and he gives to all men the bounties of his providence; and to all that aſk, and call upon him in ſincerity, the riches of his grace; even to Jews and Gentiles, high and low, rich and poor, greater or leſſer ſinners; all which he gives liberally, readily, and at once, freely, and chearfully, and largely, and abundantly; not grudgingly, ſparingly, and with a ſtrait hand, but with an open one, and in a very extenſive manner. And upbraideth not; with former ſins and tranſgreſſions, with former miſcarriages and miſconduct; or with former kindneſſes, ſuggeſting that he had given largely already, and his favours had been deſpiſed or abuſed; or he had been treated with ingratitude and neglect; in which manner ſometimes men put off thoſe that apply unto them, but ſo does not God; wherefore every word here uſed is encouraging to go to God for wiſdom: yea, it follows, and it ſhall be given him; God has ſaid it, Chriſt has promiſed it, and the Apoſtle might, with certainty, ſay it after them, and all experience confirms the truth of it; ſee Matt. vii. 7, 8. John xiv. 13, 14. and 16, 23.

Ver. 6. But let him aſk in faith, &c.] Not only in the faith of the divine being, that God is; but in the faith of the promiſes he has made; and in the faith of his power and faithfulneſs to perform them; and in the faith of this, that whatever is aſked, according to the will of God, and is for his glory, and his peoples good, ſhall be given. Nothing wavering; about the thing aſked for, whether it is right or no to aſk for it; for that ſhould be ſettled before it is aſked for; nor about the power of God to do it; nor about his will, in things he has declared he will do; nor about his faithfulneſs to his promiſes; nor at all queſtioning but what is proper, ſuitable, and convenient will be given in God's own time and way. For he that wavereth, is like a wave of the ſea, driven with the wind and toſſed; he is troubled, reſtleſs, unquiet and impatient; and he is fickle, inconſtant, unſtable, and unſettled; and is eaſily carried away with every wind of doctrine, temptation, and luſt.

Ver. 7. For let not that man think, &c.] Imagine, conclude, or pleaſe himſelf with ſuch thoughts: that he ſhall receive any thing from the Lord; wiſdom, or any thing elſe, he is ſeeking after; for wanting faith, he has nothing to receive with; faith is the grace, which receives the Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, and all grace from him; which receives a juſtifying righteouſneſs, pardon of ſin, adoption of children, and even the everlaſting inheritance, at leaſt, the right unto it; wherefore thoſe who have not faith, as the wavering man, cannot receive any thing.

Ver. 8. A double-minded man, &c.] A man of two ſouls, or of a double heart, that ſpeaks and aſks with an heart, and an heart, as in Pſ. xii. 2. who halts between two opinions, and is at an uncertainty what to do or ſay, and is undetermined what to aſk for; or who is not ſincere and upright in his requeſts, who aſks for one thing, and means another, and aſks amiſs, and with an ill deſign; does not call upon God in truth, and in the ſincerity of his ſoul; draws nigh to him with his mouth, and honours him with his lips, but his heart is far from him. Such an one, is unſtable in all his ways; he is confuſed in his mind; reſtleſs in his thoughts; unſettled in his deſigns and intentions; inconſtant in his petitions; uncertain in his notions and opinion of things; and very variable in his actions, and eſpecially in matters of religion; he is always changing, and never at a point, but at a continual uncertainty, both in a way of thinking and doing: he never continues long either in an opinion, or in a practice, but is ever ſhifting and moving.

Ver. 9. Let the brother of low degree, &c.] By the brother is meant, not one in a natural, but in a ſpiritual relation; one of Chriſt's brethren, and who is of that family that is named of him; of the houſhold of faith, and is in church communion: and whereas he is ſaid to be of low degree, or humble, this regards not the affection of his mind, or his conduct and deportment, he being meek and lowly, and clothed with humility, as every brother is, or ought to be; but his outward ſtate and condition, being, as to the things of this world, poor, and mean in his outward circumſtances, and ſo humbled and afflicted. This appears from the rich man, who, in the next verſe, is oppoſed unto him, and diſtinguiſhed from him; ſee Pſ. lxii. 9. ſuch an one is adviſed to rejoice in that he is exalted; or to glory in his exaltation; in that high eſtate, to which he is advanced; for a perſon may be very low and mean, as to his worldly circumſtances, and yet be very high, and greatly exalted in a ſpiritual ſenſe: and this heighth of honour and grandeur, of which he may boaſt and glory, amidſt his outward poverty, lies in his high birth, and deſcent, being born from above, and of God, and belonging to his family; in being an adopted ſon of God, and ſo an heir of God, and a joint-heir with Chriſt, and of the heavenly inheritance and kingdom; in the preſent riches of grace he is poſſeſſed of, as juſtifying, pardoning, and ſanctifying grace; and in the high titles he bears, as beſides the new name, the name better than that of ſons and daughters of the greateſt potentate, even that of a ſon of the Lord God almighty, his being a king, and a prieſt unto God, and for whom a kingdom, crown, and throne are prepared; and alſo in the company he daily keeps, and is admitted to, as of God, and Chriſt, and the holy angels: and this height of honour have all the ſaints, be they ever ſo poor in this world, who can vie with the greateſt of princes for ſublimity and grandeur.

Ver. 10. But the rich, in that he is made low, &c.] That is, the rich brother; for there were rich men in the churches in thoſe times, and which James often takes notice of in this epiſtle. Such an one ſhould rejoice or glory in his lowneſs, or low eſtate; in the conſideration of the low eſtate, out of which he was raiſed, by the good providence of God, and was not owing to any merit of his; and in the low eſtate into which he may be at preſent reduced, thro' the violence of perſecution, being ſtripped of all his riches for Chriſt's ſake, of which he might make his boaſt, and count it his greateſt glory; or in that low eſtate he may quickly expect he ſhall be brought into, either in the above manner, or by ſome calamity or another, and at leaſt by death, which will put him upon a level with others: or this may have reſpect to the temper of his mind, which he has, thro' the grace of God, and the ſtation he is in, in the church of God, being a brother, and no more than a brother, and upon an equal foot with the meaneſt member in it; and which yet is matter of rejoicing, that he is one, and that he is ſo bleſſed with the grace of humility, as not to lift up himſelf above others, not to mind high things, but to condeſcend to men of low eſtate; and ſuch a deportment the Apoſtle exhorts rich ſaints unto, from the conſideration of the inſtability and inconſtancy of worldly riches. Becauſe, as the flower of the graſs he ſhall paſs away; ſhortly, and ſuddenly; either he himſelf by death, or his riches at death, or before, and therefore are not to be gloried in; nor ſhould the poſſeſſors of them be proud and haughty, and elate themſelves with them, but ſhould behave humbly and modeſtly to their fellow-creatures and chriſtians, as knowing that in a ſhort time they will all be upon a par, or in an equal ſtate; ſee Job xiv. 2. Pſ. xc. 5, 6. and cii. 11. and ciii. 15, 16. The metaphor here uſed is enlarged upon in the following verſe, for the further illuſtration of the fickleneſs, periſhing, and tranſitory nature of earthly enjoyments.

Ver. 11. For the ſun is no ſooner riſen with a burning heat, &c.] As it is about the middle of the day, when it ſhines in its full ſtrength, and its heat is very great and ſcorching, eſpecially in the ſummer-ſeaſon, and in hot climates: but it withereth the graſs; ſtrikes it with heat, cauſes it to ſhrivel, and dries it up: and the flower thereof falleth; drops off from it to the ground: and the grace of the faſhion of it periſheth; its form and colour, its glory and beauty, which were pleaſant to the eye, are loſt, and no more to be recovered. This ſhows, that earthly riches, like the flower of the field, have an outward ſhow, and glory in them, which attract the mind, and fix an attention to them for a while; they are gay and glittering, and look lovely, are pleaſant to behold, and deſireable to enjoy; but when the ſun of perſecution, or any other outward calamity ariſes, they are quickly deſtroyed, and are no more. So alſo ſhall the rich man fade away in his ways; riches are uncertain things now, they often make themſelves wings and flee away; they are things that are not, that are not ſolid and ſubſtantial; they are a vain ſhew; they ſometimes fade away in a man's life-time, before he dies; and he fades away, and comes to decay, amidſt all the ways and means, deſigns and ſchemes, he forms and purſues, and all the actions and buſineſs he does; and if not, when he fades away, and dies amidſt all his riches, his glory does not deſcend after him, but falls off from him, as the flower of the field, before the heat of the ſun.

Ver. 12. Bleſſed is the man that endureth temptation, &c.] Or affliction, which is deſigned by temptation, as in ver. 2. and the man that endures it, is he that ſo bears it, and bears up under it, as not to be offended at it, and ſtumble in the ways of Chriſt, and fall away from the truth, and a profeſſion of it, as temporary believers in a time of temptation do; but manfully and bravely ſtands up under it, and does not ſink under the weight of it, or faint on account of it; and endures afflictions in ſuch manner as not to murmur and repine at them, but is quiet and ſtill, and bears them patiently, and conſtantly, and ſo endures to the end. Such expect afflictions, and when they come, they are not moved by them, but notwithſtanding them, continue in the ways and work of the Lord; and ſuch are happy perſons; they are happy now, and ſhall be hereafter. Saints are happy under afflictions, and even on account of them, for they are tokens of God's love to them, and evidences of their Sonſhip; and eſpecially they are happy under them, when they enjoy the preſence of God in them, when they are inſtructive to them, and are ſanctified, when they learn from them the uſeful leſſons of faith, patience, humility, and reſignation to the will of God, and are made more partakers of his holineſs; and they will be happy hereafter, as follows. The Jews have a ſaying [h] much like this, "bleſſed is the man, שהוא עומד בנסיונו, "who ſtands in his temptation, for there is no crea-"ture whom the holy bleſſed God does not tempt." For when he is tried; by the fire of afflictions, as gold is tried in the fire; when God hereby has tried what is in his heart, and the truth of grace in him, as faith, love, patience, &c. and has purged away his droſs and tin, and has refined and purified him, as gold and ſilver are refined and purified in the furnace, or fining pot: and when being thus tried and proved, and found genuine, and comes forth as gold, after this ſtate of temptation and affliction is over, he ſhall receive the crown of life; eternal happineſs, called a crown, becauſe of the glory of it, which will be both upon the bodies and ſouls of believers to all eternity; and as ſuitable to their character, they being kings, and having a kingdom and thrones prepared for them; and in alluſion to the crown that was given to the conquerors in the Olympic games: and it is called a crown of life; becauſe it is for life; which an earthly crown is not always; and becauſe it lies in eternal life, and is an everlaſting crown; it is a crown of glory that fadeth not away, an incorruptible one; and differs from the corruptible crown given to the victors in the above-mentioned games, which were made of fading herbs, and leaves of trees: and now the man that bears up under afflictions, and holds out unto the end, ſhall have this crown put upon him, and he ſhall receive it; not as merited by him, by his works or ſufferings, for neither of them are worthy to be compared or mentioned with this crown of life and glory; but as the free gift of God, as it will be given him by the righteous judge, as a reward of grace, and not of debt: which the Lord hath promiſed to them that love him; either the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as in Matt. v. 10, 12. and x. 22. or elſe God the Father; the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, God; and the Alexandrian copy leaves out the word Lord, which may be ſupplied by the word God; ſee ch. ii. 5. and this promiſe he made before the world was, who cannot lye, nor deceive, and who is able to perform, and is faithful, and will never ſuffer his faithfulneſs to fail; ſo that this happineſs is certain, and may be depended upon: beſides, the promiſe of this crown of life is in Chriſt, where all the promiſes are yea and amen; yea, the crown itſelf is in his hands, where it lies ſafe and ſecure for them that love him; either the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, his perſon, his people, his truths, and ordinances, and his glorious appearing, 2 Tim. iv. 8. or God the Father; not that their love is the cauſe of this crown of life, or eternal life, for then it would not be the free gift of God, as it is ſaid to be; nor of the promiſe of it, for that was made before the world was, and when they had no love unto him; but this phraſe is deſcriptive of the perſons to whom God manifeſts his love now, admits to near communion and fellowſhip with himſelf, makes all things, even their afflictions, to work for their good, and whom he will cauſe to inherit ſubſtance, and will fill their treaſures.

[h] Shemot Rabba, §. 31. fol. 133. 3.

Ver. 13. Let no man ſay when he is tempted, &c.] Here the Apoſtle uſes the word tempted, in another ſenſe than he did before. Before he ſpeaks of temptations, as matter of joy and boaſting, here of temptations, which are criminal, and iſſue in ſhame and death; the temptations he before makes mention of, being patiently endured, denominate men happy, but here ſuch are deſigned, which are to be deprecated, and watched againſt; before he treats of temptations, which were the means of trying and exerciſing grace, and of purging away the droſs of ſin and corruption, but here of temptations to ſin, and which are in themſelves ſinful; before he diſcourſes of temptations in which God was concerned, but here of temptations which he removes from him, and denies of him, as being unworthy of him: wherefore when any man is tempted to ſin, whether when under adverſity, or in proſperity, let him not ſay, I am tempted of God; for God is holy, and without iniquity; nor does he delight in ſin, but hates and abhors it; nor can he commit it, it being contrary to his nature, and the perfections of it; whereas no one can tempt another to ſin, unleſs he is ſinful himſelf, and delights in ſin, and in thoſe that commit it, nor without committing it himſelf; and yet ſinful men are apt to charge God with their ſins, and temptations to them, in imitation of their firſt parent, Adam, when fallen, Gen. iii. 12. who, to excuſe himſelf, lays the blame upon the woman, and ultimately upon God, who gave her to him; and ſuggeſts, that if it had not been for the woman, he ſhould not have eat of the forbidden fruit, nor ſhould he have had any temptation to it, had not God given him the woman to be with him; and therefore it was his fault: and in this ſad manner do his ſons and daughters reaſon, who, when thro' affliction, they murmur againſt God, diſtruſt his providence, or forſake his ways, ſay, if he had not laid his hand upon them, or ſuffered ſuch afflictions to befal them, they had not been guilty of ſuch ſin; he himſelf is the occaſion of them: but let no man talk at this wicked rate, for God cannot be tempted with evil; or evils. He was tempted by the Iſraelites at Maſſah and Meribah, from which thoſe places had their names, who by their murmuring, diſtruſt and unbelief, proved and tried his patience and his power; and ſo he may be, and has been tempted by others in a like way; he may be tempted by evil men, and with evil things, but he can't be tempted to evil, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; he is proof againſt all ſuch temptations; he cannot be tempted by any thing in himſelf, who is pure and holy, or by any creature, or thing without him, to do any ſinful action: neither tempteth he any man; that is to ſin; he tempted Abraham, to try his faith, love, and obedience to him; he tempted the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, to try them and humble them, and prove what was in their hearts; and he tempted Job, and tried his faith and patience; and ſo he tempts and tries all his righteous ones, by afflictions, more or leſs; but he never tempts or ſolicits them to ſin; temptations to ſin come from another quarter, as follows.

Ver. 14. But every man is tempted, &c.] To ſin, and he falls in with the temptation, and by it, when he is drawn away of his own luſt and enticed; the metaphor is taken either from fiſhes, who are enticed by the bait, and drawn out by the hook; or from a laſcivious woman, who meeting with a young man, entices him, and draws him away after her to commit iniquity with her: by luſt is meant, the principle of corrupt nature, which has its reſidence in the heart of man; is natural and hereditary to him, and therefore is called his own; he is conceived and ſhapen in it; he brings it into the world with him, and it continues in him, and is called his own heart's luſt, Rom. i. 24. Now this meeting with ſome bait, which entices and draws it out, or with ſome external object, which promiſes pleaſure or profit, a man is allured, and enſnared, and drawn away by it, and ſo the temptation begins: thus, for inſtance, covetouſneſs was the predominant luſt in Judas; this meeting with an external object, or objects, which promiſed him profit, he is at once enticed and drawn away to betray his Lord and maſter for the ſake of it: ſo ſin often promiſes pleaſure, tho' it is but an imaginary, and a ſhort-lived one; which takes with a man's own luſt, and corruption within him, and ſo he is allured and drawn aſide; and to this, and not to God, ſhould he attribute temptation to ſin.

Ver. 15. Then when luſt hath conceived, &c.] A propoſal of pleaſure or profit being made, agreeable to luſt, or the principle of corrupt nature, ſinful man is pleaſed with it; and inſtead of reſiſting and rejecting the motion made, he admits of it, and receives it, and cheriſhes it in his mind; he dallies and plays with it; he dwells upon it in his thoughts, and hides it under his tongue, and in his heart, as a ſweet morſel, and forſakes it not, but contrives ways and means how to bring it about; and this is luſt's conceiving. The figure is uſed in Pſ. vii. 14. on which Kimchi, a Jewiſh commentator, has this note; "he (the pſalmiſt) compares the thoughts of the "heart, להריון, to a conception, and when they go "out in word, this is travail, and in work or act, "this is bringing forth." And ſo it follows here, it bringeth forth ſin; into act, not only by conſenting to it, but by performing it: and ſin when it is finiſhed; being ſolicited, is agreed to, and actually committed: bringeth forth death; as the firſt ſin of man brought death into the world, brought a ſpiritual death, or moral death upon man, ſubjected him to a corporal death, and made him liable to an eternal one; ſo every ſin is deſerving of death, death is the juſt wages of it; yea, even the motions of ſin work in men to bring forth fruit unto death. Something like theſe ſeveral gradual ſteps, in which ſin proceeds, is obſerved by the Jews, and expreſſed in much the like language, in allegorizing the caſe of Lot, and his two daughters[i]: "the concupiſcent ſoul (or luſt) "ſtirs up the evil figment, and imagines by it, and it "cleaves to every evil imagination, שמתעברת, "until it conceives a little, and produces in the "heart of man the evil thought, and cleaves to it; "and as yet it is in his heart, and is not finiſhed to do "it, until this deſire or luſt ſtirs up the ſtrength of "the body, firſt to cleave to the evil figment, and "then, תשלום הרעה, ſin is finiſhed, as it is ſaid, "Gen. xix. 36."

[i] Midraſh Haneelam in Zohar in Gen. fol. 67. 4.

Ver. 16. Do not err, my beloved brethren.] For to make God the author of ſin, or to charge him with being concerned in temptation to ſin, is a very great error, a fundamental one, which ſtrikes at the nature, and being of God, and at the perfection of his holineſs: it is a denying of him, and is one of thoſe damnable errors and hereſies, which bring upon men ſwift deſtruction; and therefore to be guarded againſt, rejected, and abhorred by all that profeſs any regard unto him, his name and glory.

Ver. 17. Every good gift and every perfect gift, &c.] Whether of nature, providence, or grace, and eſpecially the latter; ſpiritual gifts given along with Chriſt, or ſpiritual bleſſings in him; every ſuch gift is, as the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, the beſt gift; better than thoſe which only relate to the preſent life: and is perfect; ſuch as the gifts of righteouſneſs, remiſſion of ſins, adoption, regeneration, and eternal life. The Jews ſay [k], that the good things of this world are not truly good, in compariſon of the good things of the world to come, and are not, גמור טוב, a perfect good. And every ſuch an one is from above; is not from a man's ſelf, from the creature, or from below, but from heaven, and from God who dwells there: and cometh down from the father of lights; or author of lights; of all corporal light, as the ſun, moon, and ſtars; of all natural, rational, and moral light, in angels and men; of all ſpiritual light, or the light of grace in regenerate perſons; and of eternal light, the light of glory in the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect: with whom is no variableneſs nor ſhadow of turning; as there is in that great luminary, the ſun in the firmament, which has its parallaxes, eclipſes, and turnings, and caſts its ſhadow; it riſes and ſets, appears and diſappears every day; and it comes out of one tropic, and enters into another at certain ſeaſons of the year: but with God, who is light it ſelf, and in him is no darkneſs at all, there is no change, nor any thing like it; he is unchangeable in his nature, perfections, purpoſes, promiſes, and gifts; wherefore he being holy, cannot turn to that which is evil; nor can he, who is the fountain of light, be the cauſe of darkneſs, or admit of any in him; and ſince every good and perfect gift comes from him, evil cannot proceed from him, nor can he tempt any to it.

Ver. 18. Of his own will begat he us, &c.] The Apoſtle inſtances in one of thoſe good and perfect gifts, regeneration; and he pitches upon a very proper and pertinent one, ſince this is the firſt gift of grace, God beſtows upon his people openly, and in their own perſons; and is what involves other gifts, and prepares and makes meet for the gift of eternal life; and therefore may well be reckoned a good one: and it is alſo a perfect one; it is done at once; there are no degrees in it, as in ſanctification; a man is born again, at once, and is born a perfect new man in all his parts; no one is more regenerated than another, or the ſame perſon more regenerated at one time than at another: and this comes from above; it is called, a being born from above, in John iii. 3. as the words there may be rendered; and it comes from God the Father, even the Father of our Lord Jeſus, as well as of all lights, 1 Pet. i. 3. and who in it produces light, in darkneſs, and whoſe gifts of grace beſtowed along with it, are without repentance. And ſince this comes from him, he cannot be the author of evil, or tempt unto it. This is a ſettled and certain point, that all the good that is in men, and is done by them, comes from God; and all the evil that is in them, and done by them, is of themſelves. This act of begetting here aſcribed to God, is what is elſewhere called a begetting again, that is, regeneration; it is an implantation of new principles of light and life, grace and holineſs, in men; a quickening of them, when dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; a forming of Chriſt in their ſouls; and a making them partakers of the divine nature; and this is God's act, and not man's. Earthly parents cannot beget in this ſenſe; nor miniſters of the word, not cauſally, but only inſtrumentally, as they are inſtruments and means, which God makes uſe of; neither the miniſtry of the word, nor the ordinance of baptiſm, can of themſelves regenerate any; nor can a man beget himſelf, as not in nature, ſo not in grace: the nature of the thing ſhows it, and the impotent caſe of men proves it: this is God's act, and his only; ſee John i. 13. and the impulſive or moving cauſe of it is, his own will. God does not regenerate, or beget men by neceſſity of nature, but of his own free choice; Chriſt, the Son of God, is begotten of him by neceſſity of nature, and not as the effect of his will; he is the brightneſs of his glory neceſſarily, as the beams and rays of light are neceſſarily emitted by the ſun; but ſo it is not in regeneration: nor does God regenerate men thro' any conſideration of their will, works, and merits; nor have theſe any influence at all upon it; but he begets of his own free grace and favour, and of his rich and abundant mercy, and of his ſovereign will and pleaſure, according to his counſels and purpoſes of old. And the means he makes uſe of, or with which he does it, is with the word of truth; not Chriſt, who is the Word, and truth it ſelf; tho' regeneration is ſometimes aſcribed to him; and this act of begetting, is done by the Father, thro' the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead; but the Goſpel, which is the word of truth, and truth it ſelf, and contains nothing but truth; and by this ſouls are begotten and born again; ſee Eph. i. 13. 1 Pet. i. 23. and hence miniſters of it are accounted ſpiritual fathers. Faith, and every other grace in regeneration, and even the Spirit himſelf, the regenerator, come this way: and the end is, that we ſhould be a kind of firſt-fruits of his creatures; either of his new creatures, and ſo it has reſpect to ſuch, as James, and others; who received the firſt-fruits of the Spirit, who firſt hoped and truſted in Chriſt, and were openly in him, and converted to him before others; or of his creatures, of mankind in general, who, with the Jews, are uſually called creatures; ſee the note on Mark xvi. 15. and deſigns thoſe who are redeemed from among men, and are the firſt-fruits to God, and to the Lamb, as their regeneration makes appear: and this ſhows that ſuch as are begotten again, or regenerated, are ſeparated and diſtinguiſhed from others, as the firſt-fruits be; and that they are preferred unto, and are more excellent than the reſt of mankind, being made ſo by the grace of God; and that they are by regenerating grace devoted to the ſervice of God, and are formed for his praiſe and glory.

Ver. 19. Wherefore my beloved brethren, &c.] Since the Goſpel, the word of truth, is the means and inſtrument which God makes uſe of in regeneration, and in forming people for himſelf: let every man be ſwift to hear; not any thing; not idle and unprofitable talk, or filthy and corrupt communication; but wholeſome advice, good inſtructions, and the gracious experiences of the ſaints, and above all, the word of God; to the hearing of which men ſhould fly, as doves to their windows; ſhould make haſte, and be early in their attendance on it, as well as conſtant; and receive it with all readineſs, and with a ſort of greedineſs of mind, that their ſouls may be profited, and God may be glorified: the phraſe is Jewiſh; things eaſy and ſmooth; a man is מהיר לשמען, ſwift to hear them[l]: ſlow to ſpeak; againſt what is heard, without thoroughly weighing and conſidering what is ſaid; and this may regard ſilence under hearing the word, and is alſo a rule to be obſerved in private converſation: or the ſenſe may be, be content to be hearers of the word, and not forward to be preachers of it; and if called to that work, think before you ſpeak, meditate on the word, and ſtudy to be approved to God and men. Silence is not only highly commended by the Pythagoreans, among whom it was enjoined their diſciples five years[m]; but alſo by the Jews: they ſay, nothing is better for the body, than ſilence; that if a word is worth one ſhekel, ſilence is worth two, or worth a precious ſtone; that it is the ſpice of ſpeech, and the chief of all ſpices; that it is the hedge of wiſdom; hence it is the advice of Shammai; ſay little, and do much[n]: and they cry up, as a very excellent precept, be ſilent, and hear; and, as containing more than perſons are aware of[o]: ſlow to wrath; in hearing; when admonitions and reproofs are given, ſin is expoſed, and vice corrected, and the diſtinguiſhing doctrines of grace are preached; which are apt to fill natural men with wrath, and which muſt greatly hinder the uſefulneſs of the word; ſee Luk. iv. 28. This is omitted in the Ethiopic verſion.

Ver. 20. For the wrath of man worketh not the righteouſneſs of God.] This is ſo far from engaging perſons to do that, which is right and acceptable, in the ſight of God, that it puts them upon doing that, which is evil. The Alexandrian copy reads, with the wrath of men do not work the righteouſneſs of God; do not attend upon the word and ordinances of God, with a wrathful ſpirit. Compare, with this, 1 Tim. ii. 8.

Ver. 21. Wherefore lay apart all filthineſs, &c.] All manner of filthineſs, both of fleſh and ſpirit; all pride, vanity, wrath, malice, and evil ſpeaking, under hearing the word: the alluſion ſeems to be to a boiling pot, which caſts up ſcum and filth, which muſt be taken off: and ſuch is the ſpirit of wrathful men; it throws up the filth of haughtineſs and pride, of anger, wrath, and wickedneſs, which muſt be taken off, and laid aſide; or the word will not be heard to any profit or advantage: and ſuperfluity of naughtineſs, or malice; the abundance and overflow of it, which ariſes from ſuch an evil heart, where wrath prevails, and governs: ſee 1 Pet. ii. 1. There ſeems to be an alluſion, to the removing of the ſuperfluous foreſkin of the fleſh, in circumciſion, typical of the foreſkin of the heart, ſpoken of in Jer. iv. 4. which, the Targum, in that place, calls, רשע לבבכון the wickedneſs, or naughtineſs of your hearts to be removed: and receive with meekneſs the engrafted word; which becomes ſo, when it is received; when it is put into the heart, by the Spirit of God, and is mixed with faith by them, that hear it; ſo that it is, as it were, incorporated into them, and becomes natural to them, which before was not; and taking deep root in them, brings forth much fruit: and where it comes with power, it reduces every high thought into the obedience of Chriſt, and makes men meek and humble; and only ſuch receive the truth in the love of it; and to ſuch is the Goſpel preached, Iſa. lxi. 1. and none, but ſuch, hear it, with profit and edification: which is able to ſave your ſouls; even your whole perſons, both ſoul and body: but the ſoul is only mentioned, as being the more excellent part of man: this muſt not be underſtood of the word, as if it was the author or cauſe of ſalvation, but as an inſtrument; it being a declaration of ſalvation by Chriſt, or what ſhews unto men, the way of ſalvation by him; and is the power of God unto ſalvation to them, when it is attended with the energy of the Spirit, and the efficacy of divine grace. See 2 Tim. iii. 15.

Ver. 22. But be ye doers of the word, &c.] And they are ſuch, who ſpiritually underſtand it; gladly receive it; and from the heart obey it, and make a ſincere and ingenuous profeſſion of it; and who ſubmit to the ordinances it directs to, and keep them, as they have been delivered; and live, and walk, becoming their profeſſion of it. The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read, be ye doers of the law; and ſo one of Stephens's copies, as in Rom. ii. 13. and not hearers only; tho' the word ſhould be heard ſwiftly and readily, and received with meekneſs; yet it ſhould not be barely heard, and aſſented to; but what is heard, ſhould be put in practice; and eſpecially men ſhould not depend upon their hearing, as if that would ſave them: this is deceiving your own ſelves; ſuch as reſt upon the outward hearing of the word, will be ſadly deceived, and will find themſelves miſerably miſtaken, another day; ſee Luk. xiii. 25, 26. Arguments taken from hence, are like the ſophiſms, paralogiſms, and falſe reaſonings of ſophiſters, which carry a fair ſhew, and enſnare and deceive.

Ver. 23. But if any man be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, &c.] The Arabic verſion, here again, reads, a hearer of the law, and ſo ſome copies; not hearing, but practice, is the main thing; not theory, but action: hence, ſays R. Simeon, not the word, or the ſearching into it, and the explanation of it, is the root, or principal thing, אלא המעשה, but the work[o]: and if a man is only a preacher, or a hearer, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glaſs; or, the face of his generation; the face, with which he was born; his true, genuine, native face; in diſtinction from any counterfeit one, or from the face of his mind: it means his own corporeal face. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, the lineaments of his face.

Ver. 24. For he beholdeth himſelf, and goes away, &c.] He takes a ſlight glance of himſelf, and departs: and ſtraightway forgetteth what manner of man he was; he forgets, either his ſpots, blemiſhes, and imperfections; or his comelineſs and beauty; the features of his face, be they comely or not: ſo, a bare hearer of the word, who is not concerned to practiſe what he hears, whilſt he is hearing, he obſerves ſome things amiſs in himſelf, and ſome excellencies in Chriſt; but, when the diſcourſe is over, he goes his way, and thinks no more of either.

Ver. 25. But whoſo looketh into the perfect law of liberty, &c.] By which, is meant, not the moral law, but the Goſpel; for only of that, is the Apoſtle ſpeaking in the context: this is no other, than the word of truth, with which God begets men of his own will; and is the engrafted word, which is able to ſave, and, of which, men ſhould be doers, as well as hearers, ver. 18, 21, 22. and, this is compared to a glaſs, by the Apoſtle, Paul, 2 Cor. iii. 18. and the word, here uſed, for looking into it, is the ſame word, the Apoſtle Peter uſes of the angels, who deſired to look into the myſteries of the Goſpel, 1 Pet. i. 12. all which ſerve to ſtrengthen this ſenſe: now the Goſpel is called a law; not that it is a law, ſtrictly ſpeaking, conſiſting of precepts, and eſtabliſhed, and enforced by ſanctions and penalties; for it is a declaration of righteouſneſs and ſalvation by Chriſt; a publication of peace and pardon by him; and a free promiſe of eternal life, thro' him; but as it is an inſtruction, or doctrine: the law with the Jews, is called תורה, becauſe it is teaching, and inſtructive; and every thing, that is ſo, is, by them called, by this name: hence, we find the doctrine of the Meſſiah, which is no other than the Goſpel, is in the Old Teſtament called the law of the Lord, and his law, Iſa. ii. 2. and xlii. 4. and in the New Teſtament, it is called the law, or doctrine of faith, Rom. iii. 27. and this doctrine is perfect, as in Pſal. xix. 7. it being a perfect plan of truths, containing in it all truth, as it is in Jeſus, even all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge; and becauſe it is a revelation of things perfect; of the perfect righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and of perfect juſtification by it, and of free and full pardon of ſins through him, and of compleat ſalvation by him; and becauſe it directs to Chriſt, in whom perfection is: and it is a law or doctrine of liberty; του της ελευθηριας, that which is of liberty; which has liberty for its ſubject, which treats of it, even of the liberty, wherewith Chriſt makes his people free: the Goſpel proclaims this liberty, to captive ſouls; and is the word of truth, which makes them free, or is the means of freeing them, from the ſlavery of ſin, from the captivity of Satan, and from the bondage of the law; and is what gives ſouls freedom and boldneſs, at the throne of grace; and is that which leads them into the liberty of grace here, and gives them a view and hope of the glorious liberty of the children of God hereafter. This doctrine is as a glaſs to look into; in which is beheld the glory of Chriſt's perſon and office, and grace; and tho' by the law is the knowledge of ſin, yet a man never ſo fully and clearly diſcovers the ſin that dwells in him, and the ſwarms of corruption which are in his heart, as when the light of the glorious Goſpel ſhines into him, and when in it he beholds the beauty and glory of Jeſus Chriſt; ſee Iſa. vi. 5. and looking into this glaſs, or into this doctrine, is by faith, and with the eyes of the underſtanding, opened and enlightened by the Spirit of God; and the word here uſed, ſignifies a looking wiſhly and intently, with great care and thought, and not in a ſlight and ſuperficial manner; and ſuch a looking is deſigned, as is attended with effect; ſuch an one, as transforms into the ſame image, that is beheld, from glory to glory; and happy is the man, that ſo looks into it. And continueth therein; is not moved away from the hope of the Goſpel, nor carried about with divers and ſtrange doctrines; but is eſtabliſhed in the faith, ſtands faſt in it, and abides by it; or continues looking into this glaſs, and to Chriſt, the author and finiſher of faith, who is beheld in it; and keeps his eye upon it, and the object held forth in it; and conſtantly attends the miniſtration of it: he being not a forgetful hearer; but takes heed to the things he hears, and ſees, leſt he ſhould let them ſlip; and, being conſcious of the weakneſs of his memory, implores the divine Spirit to be his remembrancer, and bring to his mind, with freſh power and light, what he has heard: but a doer of the work; of the work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope, and of every work and ordinance, the Goſpel miniſtry points unto; doing, and being ſubject to all in faith, from a principle of love, and with a view to the glory of God, and Chriſt. This man ſhall be bleſſed in his deed; or doing, and whilſt he is doing; not that he is bleſſed, for what he does, but in what he does; ſee Pſal. xix. 11. he having, in hearing the word, and looking into it, and in ſubmitting to every ordinance of the Goſpel, the preſence of God, the diſcoveries of his love, communion with Chriſt, and communication of grace from him by the Spirit; ſo that wiſdom's ways become ways of pleaſantneſs, and all her paths are peace; ſee Pſal. lxv. 4. and lxxxiv. 4, 5. moreover, in all, ſuch a man does, he is proſperous and ſucceſsful; in all he does, he proſpers: and ſo he is bleſſed in his deed, by God, whoſe bleſſing makes rich, both in ſpirituals and temporals: there ſeems to be an alluſion to the bleſſed man in Pſal. i. 1, 3.

Ver. 26. If any man among you ſeem to be religious, &c.] By his preaching, or praying, and hearing, and other external duties of religion, he is conſtant in the obſervance of; and who, upon the account of theſe things, thinks himſelf to be a religious man, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic Verſions render it; or is thought to be ſo by others: and bridleth not his tongue; but boaſts of his works, and ſpeaks ill of his brethren; backbites them, and hurts their names and characters, by private inſinuations, and publick charges without any foundation; who takes no care of what he ſays, but gives his tongue a liberty of ſpeaking any thing, to the injury of others, and the diſhonour of God, and his ways: there ſeems to be an alluſion to Pſal. xxxix. 1. But deceiveth his own heart; with his ſhew of religion, and external performances; on which he builds his hopes of ſalvation; of which he is confident; and ſo gives himſelf to a looſe way of talking, what he pleaſes: this man's religion is vain; uſeleſs, and unprofitable to himſelf, and others; all his preaching, praying, hearing, and attendance on the ordinances will be of no avail to him; and he, notwithſtanding theſe, by his evil tongue, brings a ſcandal and reproach, upon the ways of God, and doctrines of Chriſt.

Ver. 27. Pure religion and undefiled, &c.] That which is ſincere and genuine, and free from adulteration and hypocriſy: before God and the Father; or in the ſight of God, the Father of Chriſt, and all his people; that which is approved of by him, who is the ſearcher of hearts, and the trier of the reins of men, is this: not that the Apoſtle is giving a full definition of true religion; only he mentions ſome of the effects of it, by which it is known, and without which it cannot be true and genuine; and they are theſe: to viſit the fatherleſs and widows in their affliction; and not only to ſee them, and ſpeak a word of comfort to them, but to communicate to them, and ſupply their wants, as they may require, and according to the ability God has given: where there is true religion in the heart, there is love to God; and where there is love to God, there is love to the ſaints; and this will ſhew itſelf to them, in times of affliction and diſtreſs; and where this is wanting, religion itſelf is not pure and undefiled: and to keep himſelf unſpotted from the world; from the men of the world, who defile by their evil communications; and from the vices of the world, as the Arabic verſion renders it, which are of a defiling nature; and, where religion is in its power and purity, and the Goſpel of the grace of God comes with efficacy; it teaches to ſeparate from the reſt of the world, and to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle diſſuades from a reſpect of perſons, on account of outward circumſtances; ſhews that the law is to be fulfilled, and that mercy is to be exerciſed, as well as juſtice done; and expoſes the folly of ſuch who boaſt of faith without works: he diſſuades the ſaints from all partiality to the rich and poor, from their relation to one another, as brethren, and from their common faith, of which Chriſt, the Lord of glory, is the object, ver. 1. and ſuppoſes an inſtance of it, either in a court of judicature, or a religious aſſembly, ver. 2, 3. and then makes an appeal unto them, and expoſtulates with them about it, ver. 4. and makes uſe of an argument againſt it, taken from the divine conduct, and an inſtance of his grace in the choice of perſons to eternal life, ver. 5. a conduct very different from ſome perſons here blamed, ver. 6. and other arguments follow, diſſuading from a reſpect of perſons, taken from the characters of rich men, as oppreſſors of the poor, litigious and quarrelſome with their neighbours, and blaſphemers of the name of God, ver. 7. and from the law of God, which requires the love of the neighbour, and which to fulfil is to do well, ver. 8. and from the breach of it, by having reſpect to perſons, whereby its penalty is incurred, ver. 9. for which a reaſon is given; becauſe whoever offends in one point of the law, is guilty of the whole, ver. 10. as is a clear caſe, ſince the ſame law-giver that forbids one ſin, forbids another; ſo that he that is guilty of either of them is a tranſgreſſor of the law, ver. 11. wherefore it is right both to ſpeak and act according to it, ſince men will be judged by it, ver. 12. and he will have no mercy ſhown him that has ſhown none to the poor, but merciful ones will eſcape damnation, ver. 13. and then the apoſtle argues from the unprofitableneſs of faith itſelf without works, ver. 14. and which he exemplifies in the caſe of a poor brother or ſiſter who are wiſhed well, but nothing given them; which good words, without deeds, are of no profit, ver. 15, 16. ſo in like manner, faith without works is a dead faith, ver. 17. nor indeed can it be made out that a man has faith, if he has not works, ver. 18. at leaſt ſuch a faith as has juſtification and ſalvation connected with it; his faith, at moſt, is no better than that of the devils who are damned, ver. 19. and that ſuch a faith is a dead faith, ver. 20. and that true faith is attended with, and evidenced by works, the Apoſtle proves by two inſtances; the one is that of Abraham, whoſe faith appeared to be genuine, and he to be a juſtified perſon, by the works he did; particularly by offering up his ſon Iſaac; in which way his faith operated, and ſhewed itſelf to be ſincere and hearty; and the ſcripture was fulfilled that Abraham was a believer, and had righteouſneſs imputed to him, and was a friend of God, and a juſtified perſon, ver. 21, 22, 23, 24. and the other inſtance is that of Rahab, whoſe faith was alſo ſhown by her works, and ſo a juſtified perſon, by receiving the ſpies with peace, and diſmiſſing them with ſafety, ver. 25. and then the Apoſtle explains what he means, by ſaying more than once, that faith without works is dead; which he illuſtrates by the ſimile of a man's body being dead, without the ſpirit or ſoul in it, ver. 26.

Ver. 1. My brethren, &c.] As the Apoſtle is about to diſſuade from the evil of having reſpect to perſons; this is a very fit introduction to it, and carries in it an argument why it ſhould not obtain; ſince the ſaints are all brethren, they are children of the ſame father, belong to the ſame family, and are all one, in Chriſt Jeſus, whether high or low, rich or poor: have not the faith of our Lord Jeſus, the Lord of glory with reſpect of perſons; that is, ſuch as have, and hold, and profeſs the faith of Chriſt, ought not along with it to uſe reſpect of perſons, or to make ſuch a diſtinction among the ſaints, as to prefer the rich to the contempt of the poor; and in this exhortation many things are contained, which are ſo many arguments why ſuch a practice ſhould not be encouraged; for faith, whether as a doctrine, or as a grace, is alike precious, and common to all; and is the faith of Chriſt, which, as a doctrine, is delivered by him to all the ſaints, and as a grace, he is both the author and object of it; and is the faith of their common Lord and Saviour, and who is the Lord of glory, or the glorious Lord; and the poor, as well as the rich, are eſpouſed by him, as their Lord and huſband; and are redeemed by him, and are equally under his government and protection, and members of his body: the Syriac verſion reads, have not the faith of the glory of our Lord Jeſus, &c. meaning either the glory which Chriſt is poſſeſſed of, whether as the Son of God, in the perfections of his nature, or as man and mediator, being now crowned with glory and honour, and which is ſeen, and known by faith; or elſe that glory which Chriſt has in his hands, to beſtow upon his people, and to which they are called, and will appear in, when he ſhall appear, and about which their faith is now employed: and ſince this glory equally belongs to them all, no difference ſhould be made on account of outward circumſtances, ſo as to treat any believer with neglect and contempt.

Ver. 2. For if there come unto your aſſembly, &c.] The place of religious worſhip, where ſaints are aſſembled together for that purpoſe; tho' ſome think a civil court of judicature is intended, and to which the context ſeems to incline; ſee ver. 6. a man with a gold ring; on his finger, which ſhews him to be a man of dignity and wealth; ſo thoſe of the ſenatorian and equeſtrian orders, among the Romans, were diſtinguiſhed from the common people by wearing gold rings; tho' in time the uſe of them became promiſcuous[q]; the ancients uſed to wear but one[r], as here but one is mentioned; and only freemen, not ſervants, might wear it: however, by this circumſtance, the Apoſtle deſcribes a rich man; adding, in goodly apparel; gay clothing, bright, ſhining garments, gliſtering with gold and ſilver, very rich and coſtly, as well as whole, neat, and clean: and there come in alſo a poor man in vile raiment; mean and deſpicable, filthy and ragged: in the courts of judicature with the Jews, two men who were at law with one another, might not have different apparel on whilſt they were in court, and their cauſe was trying: their law runs thus[s]; “ two adverſaries (at law with each other) if “ one of them is clothed with precious garments, “ (בגדים יקרים, goodly apparel,) and the other is “ clothed with בגדים בזויין, vile raiment, (the “ judge) ſays to the honourable perſon, either “ clothe him as thou art, whilſt thou contendeſt “ with him, or be clothed as he is, that ye may “ be alike,” or on an equal foot.

Ver. 3. and ye have reſpect to him that wears the gay clothing, &c.] Take notice of him, and ſhew favour to him, to the neglect and contempt of the other. This is an inſtance of reſpect of perſons condemned and diſſuaded from: and ſay unto him, ſit thou here in a good place; the beſt place; whether it be in a religious aſſembly, or in a civil court of judicature: and ſay to the poor, ſtand thou there; or in a lower and meaner place: or ſit thou here under my footſtool; this alſo was contrary to the Jewiſh canons[t], that one ſhould ſit, and another ſtand, whilſt their cauſe was trying; the law runs thus: “ one ſhall not ſit, and another ſtand, but both “ ſhall ſtand; but if the Sanhedrim, or court, pleaſe “ to let them ſit, they ſit; but one does not ſit “ above, and the other below; but one by the ſide “ of the other.”

Ver. 4. Are ye not then partial in your ſelves, &c.] That is, guilty of ſuch partiality as muſt appear to your ſelves, and your own conſciences muſt accuſe you of; or don't ye diſtinguiſh, or make a difference among your ſelves, by ſuch a conduct, towards the rich and the poor: and are become judges of evil thoughts; or, are diſtinguiſhers by evil thoughts; that is, make a diſtinction between the rich and the poor, by an evil way of thinking, that one is better than the other, and to be preferred before him.

Ver. 5. Hearken my beloved brethren, &c.] As to a matter of importance, and worthy of attention and regard; being an inſtance of the divine conduct towards the poor, and carries in it a ſtrong argument againſt reſpect of perſons: hath not God choſen the poor of this world? this interrogative is equal to a ſtrong affirmative; and the ſenſe is, that God has choſen the poor of this world; and which is to be underſtood, not of the choice of them to an office, either in church or ſtate; tho' ſometimes this has been the caſe, as the inſtances of David, and the Apoſtles of Chriſt, ſhow; nor merely to the Goſpel, and the outward means of grace, tho' the poor have the goſpel preached unto them; nor of effectual vocation, tho' this is true; but of eternal election, which is the act of God the Father, and paſſed before the foundation of the world; and is an act of ſovereign grace, and is irreſpective of faith, holineſs, and good works; and is the ſource of all grace, and remains immutable and irrevocable: now the objects of this are, the poor of this world; that is, who are poor with reſpect to the things of this world, but not with reſpect to the things of another world; for they are choſen to be heirs of a kingdom, and ſhall enjoy it; tho' theſe are not all choſen by God, nor are they the only perſons that are choſen; there are ſome poor men that are not choſen, and are miſerable here and hereafter; and there are ſome rich men that are choſen; but for the moſt part, or generally ſpeaking, they are not many mighty, nor noble, but the poorer ſort, which God has made choice of to partake both of grace and glory. It may be, the Apoſtle has ſome peculiar reſpect to the poor among the Gentiles, whom God had choſen; it was uſual with the Jews to call the Gentiles the world, and they were Jews the Apoſtle now writes to, and who were ſcattered abroad among the Gentiles; and therefore he might very aptly call them, this world, among whom they lived; and ſuggeſt to them, that God had choſen ſome of the Gentiles, as well as of the Jews, and even ſome of the poorer ſort of them; and it was uſual with the Jews to diſtinguiſh between עניי ישראל, the poor of Iſrael, and עניי עולם, the poor of the world, or עניי אומות העולם, the poor of the nations of the world[u]: the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, leave out the word this, and ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions, which makes the phraſe more agreeable to the Jewiſh way of ſpeaking. The Gentiles in common, were deſpicable with the Jews, and eſpecially the poor of them; and yet God choſe theſe: rich in faith; not that they were ſo, or were conſidered as ſuch, when choſen, and ſo were choſen becauſe of their faith; for then alſo they were, or were conſidered as heirs of the kingdom, which would be monſtrouſly abſurd; and yet there is as much reaſon, from the text, for the one, as for the other; but the ſenſe is, that they were choſen to be rich in faith; and ſo the Syriac verſion ſupplies in the next clauſe, that they might be heirs; which if it had been placed before this clauſe alſo, would have been right; election to grace is ſignified in the one, and election to glory, in the other: men are choſen, not becauſe they do believe, or ſhall believe, but that they might believe; and which faith they have in conſequence of election; and which when they have, they are rich: faith is a rich precious grace it ſelf; it is a part of the riches of grace, and is more worth than thouſands of gold and ſilver; and it is the means of receiving and enjoying much riches, as Chriſt the pearl of great price himſelf, and all ſpiritual bleſſings along with him; ſuch as the rich robe of his righteouſneſs, full pardon of ſin, which is according to the riches of his grace, and adoption, which makes men heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt, and even the eternal inheritance itſelf, both the promiſe of it, and a right unto it; all which are ſaid to be received by faith; and therefore believers, how poor ſoever they may be, as to this world's goods, are truly rich men: and heirs of the kingdom; of glory, which is prepared for all the choſen ones, from the foundation of the world; and is freely given to them by their Father, and to which they are called in effectual vocation; and hence they are made kings and prieſts unto God, and have crowns and thrones provided for them: the Alexandrian copy reads, heirs of the promiſe which he hath promiſed to them that love him; that is, which God has promiſed them, as the Vulgate Latin, and Syriac verſions read; not that their love to God is the cauſe of this kingdom, or of their choice to it, or of the promiſe of it to them; all which, flow from the love of God to them; but this is deſcriptive of the perſons, who ſhall enjoy it, and may expect to enjoy it, as in ch. i. 12.

Ver. 6. But ye have deſpiſed the poor, &c.] Or diſhonoured, and reproached them, by ſhewing reſpect of perſons, in preferring the rich to them, and in diſtinguiſhing them in ſuch a manner, as was to their contempt and injury; which is a reproaching not only of them, but their maker; and is in effect ſaying, that God has done either a weak or a wrong thing, in chuſing them to be rich in faith, and heirs of a kingdom, it being directly contrary to his conduct: do not rich men oppreſs you, and draw you before the judgment ſeats? which may be underſtood either of rich men that were unbelievers; and theſe either the heathen magiſtrates, who ruled over them in a tyrannical way, and with rigour, and often ſummoned them before them, and perſecuted them with violence; or their own countrymen, the Jews, who ſtirred up the chief men of the Gentiles againſt them, and drew them to their judgment-ſeats, as they drew Paul to the judgment-ſeat of Gallio, Acts xiii. 50. and xviii. 12. or elſe of rich profeſſors of religion, who aſſumed a deſpotic power over the poor brethren of the church, and loved to have the pre-eminence over them, as Diotrephes did, and ſet up tribunals in the churches, and tried and condemned them in an arbitrary way; or elſe upon civil accounts had them before heathen magiſtrates, and went to law with them in their courts, before unbelievers, which is a practice condemned in 1 Cor. vi. 1. and ſeeing now rich men uſed them ſo ill, the Apoſtle mentions this as an argument to diſſuade them from reſpect of perſons; ſeeing they had but little reaſon to ſhew ſo much regard unto them, who had treated them in ſo evil a manner: this is not to be underſtood of all rich men; nor is the Apoſtle's deſign to deſtroy that natural and civil order there is among men, by reaſon of their different ſtations, offices, and circumſtances; it being highly proper that honour ſhould be given to whom honour is due, but not to the diſhonour of another.

[u] T. Bab. Gittin, fol. 30. 1. & Bava Bathra, fol. 10. 2.

Ver. 7. Do they not blaſpheme that worthy name, &c.] Of Chriſt, or chriſtians: by the which ye are called? and which, as before, may deſign either unbelieving rich men, whether among Jews, or Gentiles, who blaſphemed and curſed the name of Chriſt, and compelled others to do ſo likewiſe; or ſuch who profeſſed the chriſtian religion, who by their ſupercilious and diſdainful treatment of their poor brethren, and by their dragging of them to the tribunals of the heathens, and diſtreſſing them with vexatious law-ſuits there, cauſed the name of Chriſt, after which they were called chriſtians, to be blaſphemed and evil ſpoken of, among the Gentiles.

Ver. 8. If ye fulfil the royal law, &c.] Which is the law of love to men, without diſtinction of rich and poor, high and low, bond and free; and is ſo called, becauſe it is the law of the King of Kings; hence the Syriac verſion renders it, the law of God, it is the law of Chriſt, who is King of ſaints; and becauſe it is a principal law, the chief of laws; as love to God is the ſum of the firſt and great commandment in the law, and may be called the king of laws; ſo love to the neighbour, is the ſecond and next unto it, and may very well bear the name of the queen of laws, and ſo has royalty in it; and indeed this laſt is ſaid to be the fulfilling of the law, Rom. xiii. 8, 9, 10. Gal. v. 14. and it is alſo ſubmitted to, and obeyed by ſuch who are made kings and prieſts to God; and that in a royal manner, with a princely ſpirit, willingly, and with all readineſs: the ſame word in the Hebrew language נדיבים, ſignifies, princes, and, to be willing. The Jews frequently aſcribe royalty to the law, and often ſpeak of כתר תורה, the crown of the law[w]; and they ſuppoſe the Iſraelites had crowns upon their heads, when the law was given them on mount Sinai, in which were engraven the name of God, and which they were ſtripped of, when they made the golden calf[x]: now this royal law is fulfilled, when it is regarded without reſpect of perſons, according to the ſcripture, in Lev. xix. 18. thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf; and which is to be underſtood of every nation, without diſtinction of Jews and Gentiles, and of perſons of every ſtate and condition, rich and poor, without any difference: and when this law is ſo obſerved, it is commendable: ye do well; that which is right, and which is a man's duty to do; this when done from right principles, and to a right end, is a good work, and is doing a good work well.

Ver. 9. But if ye have reſpect to perſons ye commit ſin, &c.] This is not doing well, but is a tranſgreſſion of the law, as every ſin is; hence it follows, and are convinced of the law as tranſgreſſors; which carries on a formal proceſs againſt ſuch perſons; it accuſes them of ſin, and charges them with it; it proves it upon them, and convicts them of it; it pronounces them guilty, and curſes them for it; and paſſes the ſentence of condemnation and death upon them; wherefore care ſhould be taken not to commit this ſin, and ſo fall under the convictions and reproofs of the law.

Ver. 10. For whoſoever ſhall keep the whole law, &c.] Or the greateſt part of it, excepting only in one point, as follows: Adam, in a ſtate of innocence, was able to keep the whole law, but by ſin he loſt that power, nor can any of his poſterity now keep it perfectly; they are all tranſgreſſors of it, and liable to its penalty; unregenerate men are unſubjected to it, and have an averſion to it, and deſpiſe it, and caſt it behind their backs; regenerate perſons, who love it, and delight in it, after the inner man, do not keep it perfectly; the ſeveral parts of the law may be indeed kept by a believer, and that ſincerely, but not to a perfect degree, for in many things they all offend; Chriſt only has perfectly kept it, and is the fulfilling end of it for righteouſneſs; men of a phariſaical diſpoſition may fancy they have kept it wholly, as the young man in the Goſpel, and Saul, before his converſion; but this is but a fancy, and a ſad miſtake: the caſe in the text is only a ſuppoſed one, and as it is here put, implies imperfection; for it follows, and yet offend in one point; ſin, which is a tranſgreſſion of the law, is an offence, to God the Father, who is of purer eyes than to behold it; to Jeſus Chriſt, who loves righteouſneſs, and hates iniquity; and to the bleſſed Spirit, who is grieved and vexed by it; and to the juſtice of God, which being injured by it, demands ſatisfaction; and to the law of God, which accuſes, convinces, reproves, and condemns for it. The word uſed ſignifies, to fall, and deſigns more than ſtumbling, even an open breach and violation of the law; and which being made, by any, in a ſingle inſtance, he is guilty of all: this ſeems to agree with ſome common ſayings of the Jews, that he that is ſuſpected in one thing, is ſuſpected in the whole law[y]; and he that keeps this or the other command, keeps the whole law; and he that breaks this, or the other command, breaks the whole law; as whether it reſpects the ſabbath, or adultery, or that command, thou ſhalt not covet, or any other[z]: and this muſt be underſtood, not of every particular command in the law, as if he that is guilty of murder, is in that inſtance alſo guilty of adultery; or he that is guilty of adultery, is in that inſtance guilty of murder; but the ſenſe is, that he is guilty of the breach of the whole law, tho' not of the whole of the law; as he that breaks any one condition of a covenant, which may conſiſt of many, tho' he does not violate every condition, yet breaks the whole covenant; ſo he that tranſgreſſes in any one point of the law, breaks the whole, commits ſin, and is deſerving of death, and is treated by the law as a tranſgreſſor of it, let it be in what inſtance it will. But it does not follow from hence, that all ſins are equal, as the Stoicks ſay[a]; for there are greater and leſſer ſins, John xix. 11. tho' not ſome venial, and others mortal, for the wages of every ſin is death; nor that the puniſhment of ſin will be alike, as all ſins were puniſhable alike by Draco's laws, but not by the law of God, Matt. xi. 22, 24. but this may be fairly concluded from hence, that there can be no juſtification in the ſight of God, by an imperfect obedience to the law, or by a partial righteouſneſs: the law requires perfect obedience, and in failure of that, tho' but in one point, curſes and condemns; and likewiſe it may be inferred from hence, that a man is not at liberty to obey and neglect what commandments of the law he pleaſes, but ſhould have reſpect to them all; which ſeems greatly the deſign of the Apoſtle, as appears by what follows.

[y] T. Bab. Erubin, fol. 69. 1.

Ver. 11. For he that ſaid do not commit adultery, &c.] That ſame lawgiver, who is but one, and is God, that gave out the ſeventh command, and forbids adultery, ſaid alſo, do not kill; delivered the ſixth command, which forbids murder. Now if thou commit no adultery; do not break the ſeventh command; yet if thou kill, break the ſixth command, thou art become a tranſgreſſor of the law; not of that particular precept of the law, the ſeventh command, for the contrary is ſuppoſed before, but of the ſixth only; and yet by ſo doing, a man becomes a violator of the whole law; for the law is but one, tho' it conſiſts of various precepts; and the breach of one precept, as well as of another, is the breach of the law; and beſides, there is but one lawgiver, who has enjoined one command, as well as another, and whoſe legiſlative power and authority is deſpiſed and trampled upon by the violation of one command, as of another. This is the Apoſtle's argument, and way of reaſoning, proving the above aſſertion, that he that breaks the law in one particular inſtance, is guilty of the breach of the whole law.

Ver. 12. So ſpeak ye, and ſo do, &c.] Both words and actions ſhould be taken care of; it becomes men to obſerve what they ſay, and what they do; for both ſinful words and works are tranſgreſſions of the law, and will be brought to judgment; every idle word, as well as every evil work, both open and ſecret, men muſt give an account of in the day of judgment: wherefore it is incumbent on them, ſo to behave, as they that ſhall be judged by the law of liberty; ſee the note on ch. i. 25. with which compare Rom. ii. 12, 16. Heathens will be judged by the law of nature, Jews by the law of Moſes, and thoſe who live under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, according to the Goſpel of Chriſt.

Ver. 13. For he ſhall have judgment without mercy, &c.] Strict juſtice, and no mercy ſhewn him: that hath ſhewed no mercy; to the poor brethren, and diſtreſſed members of Chriſt, but has ſhown reſpect of perſons to the hurt of the poor, and has deſpiſed and oppreſſed them, inſtead of relieving and comforting them; ſo the rich man that neglected Lazarus at his gates, is refuſed a drop of water to cool his tongue; and the ſervant that cruelly inſiſted on his fellow-ſervant's paying him all he owed, juſtly incurred the diſpleaſure of his Lord, and was by him delivered to the tormentors; and that ſervant that beats his fellow-ſervants, will be cut aſunder, and have his portion with hypocrites; and ſuch who have ſeen any of the brethren of Chriſt hungry, thirſty, naked, ſick, and in priſon, and have ſhewed no regard for them, will hear, go ye curſed into everlaſting fire: and mercy rejoiceth againſt judgment; that is, merciful men, who have ſhewn mercy to the poor ſaints, will not be afraid of the awful judgment, but rather rejoice or glory, as the word ſignifies, in the view of it, ſince they will obtain mercy at that day, and hear, come ye bleſſed of my Father, &c. Matt. xxv. 34, 35, 36. ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, he only ſhall glory in the day of judgment, who hath ſhewed mercy; the Alexandrian copy reads in the imperative, let mercy glory, &c. and the Syriac verſion, be ye exalted by mercy over judgment.

Ver. 14. What doth it profit, my brethren, &c.] The Apoſtle having finiſhed his diſcourſe on reſpect of perſons, and the arguments he uſed to diſſuade from it, by an eaſy tranſition, paſſes to treat upon faith and works, ſhewing, that faith without works, particularly without works of mercy, is of no profit and advantage: though a man ſay he hath faith, and have not works? it is clear, that the Apoſtle is not ſpeaking of true faith, for that, in perſons capable of performing them, is not without works; it is an operative grace, it works by love and kindneſs, both to Chriſt, and to his members; but of a profeſſion of faith, a mere hiſtorical one, by which a man, at moſt, aſſents to the truth of things, as even devils do, ver. 19. and only ſays he has faith, but has it not; as Simon Magus, who ſaid he believed, but did not. Can faith ſave him? ſuch a faith as this, a faith without works, an hiſtorical one, a mere profeſſion of faith, which lies only in words, and has no deeds, to ſhew the truth and genuineneſs of it. True faith indeed has no cauſal influence on ſalvation, or has any virtue and efficacy in itſelf to ſave; Chriſt, the object of faith, is the only cauſe and author of ſalvation; faith is only that grace which receives a juſtifying righteouſneſs, the pardon of ſin, adoption, and a right to the heavenly inheritance; but it does not juſtify, nor pardon, nor adopt, nor give the right to the inheritance, but lays hold on, and claims theſe, by virtue of the gift of grace; and it has ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation inſeparably connected with it; but as for the other faith, a man may have it, and be in the gall of bitterneſs, and bond of iniquity; he may have all faith in that ſenſe, and be nothing; it is no other than the devils themſelves have; and ſo he may have it, and be damned.

Ver. 15. If a brother or ſiſter, &c.] A chriſtian man or woman, a fellow-member of a church of Chriſt; for this relation is to be underſtood in a ſpiritual ſenſe, tho' it does not exclude ſuch who are in this relation in a natural ſenſe: be naked; or clothed in rags, or in very mean and ſordid apparel, ſuch as will neither keep them warm, nor clean and decent; for they muſt not be ſuppoſed to be entirely naked, but to be in a very uncomfortable and indecent garb: and deſtitute of daily food; have not food ſufficient for the day; or aught to ſupport nature with, and yield them proper refreſhment and nouriſhment.

[a] Zeno & Chryſippus apud Laert. Vit. Zeno, p. 510.

Ver. 16. And one of you ſay unto them, &c.] That is, one of the ſame faith, and in the ſame communion, and church-fellowſhip. Depart in peace; wiſhing them all proſperity and happineſs, inward and outward: be ye warmed and filled; clothed and fed; ſignifying, that they wiſhed them all the accomodations of life: notwithſtanding ye give them not thoſe things which are needful for the body; neither cloaths to wear, nor food to eat; nothing to warm their bodies, or fill their bellies: what doth it profit? the Ethiopic verſion reads, what doth it profit them? either the poor brother, or ſiſter, to whom theſe good words are given, and nothing elſe; for theſe will neither warm them, nor fill them; or the perſons themſelves, that ſay theſe things to them: and the Apoſtle, by this inſtance, ſhows, that as that charity which lies only in words, and in tongue, and not in deed, and in truth, is unprofitable, and good for nothing, even to them that profeſs it; ſo that faith, which a man ſays he has, and yet is without works, is alike unprofitable unto him.

Ver. 17. Even ſo faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone.] It is like a lifeleſs carcaſs, a body without a ſoul, ver. 26. for as works, without faith, are dead works, ſo faith, without works, is a dead faith, and not like the lively hope and faith of regenerated perſons: and indeed, ſuch who have no other faith than this, are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; not that works are the life of faith, or that the life of faith lies in, and flows from works; but, as Dr. Ames obſerves[b], good works are ſecond acts, neceſſarily flowing from the life of faith; to which may be added, and by theſe faith appears to be living, lively and active, or ſuch who perform them, appear to be true and living believers.

Ver. 18. Yea, a man may ſay, thou haſt faith, and I have works, &c.] That is, a true believer in Chriſt may very juſtly call upon a vain boaſter of his faith, who has no works, to give proof and evidence of it, and addreſs him after this manner; you ſay, you have faith, be it ſo that you have; I have works, you ſee I have, I ſay nothing about my faith at preſent; now, ſhew me thy faith without thy works, if thou canſt; ſee what ways, means, and methods thou canſt make uſe of, to make it appear to me, or any other, that you have the faith you talk of: the words are a ſort of ſarcaſm and jeer upon the man, and yet very juſt, calling upon him to do that which is impoſſible to be done, and thereby expoſing his vain boaſt; for faith is an inward principle in the heart; an hidden thing, and can't be ſeen and known but by external acts; and where it is right, it is operative, and ſhows itſelf by works, which is not practicable in thoſe who have none: and I will ſhow thee my faith by my works; there may be indeed an appearance of good works, where there is no faith, as in the heathens, in the Scribes and Phariſees, and in the Papiſts, and others; and on the other hand, there may be the principle of faith implanted, where there is not an opportunity of ſhewing it by a ſeries of good works, or a courſe of godly living, as in elect infants dying in infancy, and in thoſe who are converted in their laſt moments, as the thief upon the croſs; wherefore works are not infallible proofs and evidences of faith, yet they are the beſt we are capable of giving of it to men, or they of receiving. In ſhort, tho' works may deceive, and do not infallibly prove the truth of faith, yet it is certain, that where they are not, but perſons live in a continued courſe of ſinning, there cannot be true faith.

Ver. 19. Thou believeſt that there is one God, &c.] Theſe words are a continuation of the addreſs of the man that has works, to him that boaſts of his faith without them, obſerving to him, that one, and a main article of his faith is, that there is one God; which is to be underſtood in the chriſtian ſenſe, ſince both the perſon ſpeaking, and the perſon ſpoken to, were ſuch as profeſſed themſelves chriſtians; ſo that to believe there is one God, is not merely to give into this article, in oppoſition to the polytheiſm of the Gentiles, or barely to confeſs the God of Iſrael, as believed on by the Jews, but to believe that there are three perſons, Father, Son, and Spirit, and that theſe three are the one God; wherefore this article of faith includes every thing relating to God; as to God the Father, his being and perfections, ſo to Chriſt, as God, and the Son of God, and the Meſſiah, &c. and to the Holy Spirit; and to believe all this is right: thou doeſt well; for that there is but one God, is to be proved by the light of nature, and from the works of creation and providence, and has been owned by the wiſeſt of the heathens themſelves; and is eſtabliſhed, by divine revelation, in the books both of the Old and of the New Teſtament; what has been received by the Jews, and is well known by chriſtians to whom it is ſet in the cleareſt light, and who are aſſured of the truth of it: but then the devils alſo believe; the Arabic verſion reads, the devils likewiſe ſo believe; they believe the ſame truth; they know and believe there is but one God, and not many; and they know that the God of Iſrael is he; and that the Father, Son, and Spirit, are the one God; they know and believe him to be the moſt high God, whoſe ſervants the miniſters of the Goſpel are; and they know and believe that Jeſus is the holy one of God, the Son of God, and the Meſſiah, Acts xvi. 17. and xix. 15. Luke iv. 34. 41. And tremble; at the wrath of God, which they now feel, and at the thought of future torments, which they expect, Mark v. 7. Matt. viii. 29. and which is more than ſome men do; and yet theſe ſhall not be ſaved, their damnation is certain and inevitable, 2 Pet. ii. 4. Jude 6. wherefore, it follows, that a bare hiſtorical faith will not profit, and cannot ſave any; a man may have all faith of this kind, and be damned; and therefore it is not to be boaſted of, nor truſted to.

Ver. 20. But wilt thou know, O vain man, &c.] Theſe are the words of the Apoſtle reaſſuming the argument, that faith without works is dead, uſeleſs, and unprofitable; and the man that boaſts of his faith, and has no works to ſhew it, he calls a vain man, an empty one; ſounding braſs, and a tinkling cymbal; empty veſſels make the greateſt ſound; ſuch are proud boaſters, vainly puft up by their fleſhly mind; but are empy of the true knowledge of God, and of the faith of Chriſt, and of the grace of the ſpirit: the Syriac verſion renders it, O weak, or feeble man, as he muſt needs be, whoſe faith is dead, and boaſts of ſuch a lifeleſs thing; and the Ethiopic verſion renders it, O fooliſh man, for ſuch an one betrays his ignorance in ſpiritual things, whatever conceit he has of his knowledge and underſtanding: the character ſeems levelled againſt the Gnoſticks, who were ſwelled with a vain opinion of their knowledge, to whom the Apoſtle addreſſes himſelf thus.

[b] Medulla Theolog. l. 2. c. 7. §. 35.

The phraſe, vain man, is a proper interpretation of the word ריקא, Raca, or Reka, uſed in Matt. v. 22. ſee the note there; which tho' not to be ſaid to a man in an angry way, yet may be applied to men of ſuch a character as here deſcribed; who were empty of ſolid good, and yet boaſted of their knowledge. Wilt thou know? doſt thou require proofs, that faith, without works, is dead? as in ver. 17. and that true faith has alway works accompanying it, and is ſhewn and known by it? then take the following inſtances.

Ver. 21. Was not Abraham our father juſtified by works, &c.] Not as the cauſes of his juſtification, that is denied, Rom. iv. 2. but as effects of it, ſhewing the truth of his faith, and the reality of his juſtification: he had both faith and works, and the former were known by the latter; and even the faith which he had expreſſed years ago, was manifeſted, demonſtrated, and confirmed to be true and genuine, by the inſtance of his obedience to God, here produced; by which it appeared he was a true believer, a juſtified perſon, approved of God, and loved by him. Now if this was the caſe of Abraham, the father of the Jewiſh nation, yea the father of the faithful, of all that believe, he is, and muſt be a vain man, that talks of faith without works; and his faith muſt be a dead one, and he be very unlike the father of them that believe: the good work inſtanced in, is the offering up of Iſaac; when he had offered Iſaac his ſon upon the altar; for when he was bid to take his ſon, his only and beloved ſon, Iſaac, and offer him up on one of the mountains, that ſhould be ſhown him, he made haſte to do it; he provided every thing for it; he clave the wood, and carried it with him, and fire in his hand; he built an altar, laid the wood on it, bound his ſon, laid the wood on the altar, and his ſon on the wood, and ſtretched out his hand, with his knife in it, to ſlay him; ſo that it was all one with reſpect to his intention and will, as if he had actually offered him, and was a full trial and proof of his obedience to God. This was not the only act of obedience, or good work, which he performed; but this being a very eminent one, the Apoſtle inſtances in it, as a very conſiderable evidence of his faith in God, and love to him; and which ſhewed him to be a juſtified perſon, as he was long before he performed this action, even before Iſaac was born; ſee Gen. xv. 6. and therefore it can never be the Apoſtle's meaning, that he was juſtified before God by this, or any other good work or works, as cauſe or cauſes of it; but only that he was declared to be ſo; or, in other words, that his faith was attended with good works, and evidenced by them.

Ver. 22. Seeſt thou how faith wrought with his works, &c.] Not to juſtify him before God; for neither faith nor works are ever ſaid in ſcripture to juſtify any man; but his faith being of the right kind, a faith which works by love, it put him upon doing this work, and many others; for this was done in faith, Heb. xi. 17, 18, 19. as all good works are, which are properly ſuch; and where there is true faith, it will influence and engage a man to do good works, as it did Abraham. And by works was faith made perfect? not with an abſolute perfection; for tho' Abraham's faith was very great, yet there were things lacking in it, and he had his fits and times of unbelief; and had he lived till now, his faith, in this ſenſe, would not have been perfect; and he would have had reaſon to have uſed the Apoſtle's petition, Luke xvii. 5. much leſs would it have been made thus perfect by works; but the ſenſe is, that hereby his faith was declared to be ſincere, unfeigned, true, and genuine; juſt as love is ſaid to be perfected, 1 John iv. 17.

Ver. 23. And the ſcripture was fulfilled, &c.] Gen. xv. 6. which ſpeaks of Abraham's faith, and the imputation of it to him for righteouſneſs; for the above action of Abraham, in offering up his ſon, was a clear proof of the truth of his faith, there commended: by this it was made known, what a ſtrong faith he had in God, and what reaſon there was to believe that he was a juſtified perſon. Abraham believed God, and it was imputed to him for righteouſneſs; ſee the note on Rom. iv. 3. which ſhows both that Abraham was juſtified before he wrought this work, and therefore that could not be the cauſe or matter of his juſtification, but only an effect and evidence of it; and that his juſtification was by faith, or that object which his faith regarded, and had to do with, was his juſtifying righteouſneſs: and he was called the friend of God, 2 Chron. xx. 7. Iſ. xli. 8. he was loved by God with an everlaſting love, who ſhewed acts of friendſhip to him; called him by his grace, and bleſſed him with ſpiritual bleſſings, and increaſed him with the increaſe of God; favoured him with near communion with him, honoured him with high characters, and diſtinguiſhed him by peculiar marks of his favour, and reckoned his enemies and friends as his own, Gen. xii. 3. and Abraham, on the other hand, loved God, and ſhewed himſelf friendly to him; truſted in him, and believed every word of his; readily complied with his will, and not only yielded a chearful obedience to his commands, but enjoined his children after him to obſerve them: this was a name which Abraham was well known by among the Eaſtern nations; hence he is called by the Mahometans, חליל אללה, Khalil Allah, the friend of God; and Mahomet ſays himſelf[d], "God "took Abraham for his friend."

Ver. 24. Ye ſee then how that by works a man is juſtified, &c.] Not as cauſes procuring his juſtification, but as effects declaring it; for the beſt works are imperfect, and cannot be a righteouſneſs juſtifying in the ſight of God, and are unprofitable in this reſpect; for when they are performed in the beſt manner, they are no other than what it is a man's duty to perform, and therefore can't juſtify from ſin he has committed: and beſides, juſtification in this ſenſe would fruſtrate the grace of God, make void the death of Chriſt, and encourage boaſting in men. Good works don't go before juſtification as cauſes or conditions, but follow it as fruits and effects: and not by faith only; or as without works, or a mere hiſtorical faith, which being without works is dead, of which the Apoſtle is ſpeaking; and therefore can bear no teſtimony to a man's juſtification; hence it appears, that the Apoſtle James does not contradict the Apoſtle Paul in Rom. iii. 28. ſince they ſpeak not of the ſame ſort of faith; the one ſpeaks of a mere profeſſion of faith, a dead and lifeleſs one; the other of a true faith, which has Chriſt, and his righteouſneſs, for its object, and works by love, and produces peace, joy, and comfort in the ſoul. Moreover, the Apoſtle Paul ſpeaks of juſtification before God; and James ſpeaks of it as it is known by its fruits unto men; the one ſpeaks of a juſtification of their perſons, in the ſight of God; the other of the juſtification and approbation of their cauſe, their conduct, and their faith before men, and the vindication tion of them from all charges and calumnies of hypocriſy, and the like; the one ſpeaks of good works as cauſes, which he denies to have any place as ſuch in juſtification; and the other ſpeaks of them as effects flowing from faith, and ſhewing the truth of it, and ſo of juſtification by it; the one had to do with legaliſts and ſelf-juſticiaries, who ſought righteouſneſs not by faith, but by the works of the law, whom he oppoſed; and the other had to do with libertines, who cried up faith and knowledge, but had no regard to a religious life and converſation; and theſe things conſidered, will tend to reconcile the two Apoſtles about this buſineſs.

Ver. 25. Likewiſe was not Rahab the harlot, &c.] See the note on Heb. xi. 31. juſtified by works; this woman was an inſtance of the grace of God in calling the chief of ſinners, and was a true believer; and what ſhe did, ſhe did in faith, Heb. xi. 31. and her faith was ſhown by her works to be true and genuine; and it was manifeſt that ſhe was a juſtified perſon. This inſtance is produced with the other, to ſhow, that where-ever there is true faith, whether in Jew or Gentile, in man or woman, in greater or leſſer believers, or in ſuch who have been greater or leſſer ſinners, there will be good works; and therefore that perſon is a vain man that talks and boaſts of his faith, and depends upon it, and ſlights and rejects good works as unneceſſary to be done. When ſhe had received the meſſengers; the ſpies that Joſhua ſent, into her houſe, with peace and ſafety: and had ſent them out another way; than they came in, even thro' the window upon the town-wall, Joſh. ii. 1, 15.

Ver. 26. For as the body without the ſpirit is dead, &c.] This ſimile is made uſe of to illuſtrate what the Apoſtle had aſſerted in ver. 17, 20. that as a body, when the ſpirit or ſoul is departed from it, or the breath is gone out of it, is dead, and without motion, and uſeleſs; which the Jews [d] expreſs in like manner, פגר גוף בלא רוח, the body without the ſpirit, or breath, is a carcaſs. So faith without works is dead alſo; a vain thing, uſeleſs and unprofitable, can neither juſtify, nor ſave, nor prove that a man is juſtified, or will be ſaved.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle cautions againſt cenſoriouſneſs, and reproving others with a magiſterial air; adviſes to bridle the tongue, and guard againſt the vices of it; and ſhews what true wiſdom is, and from whence it comes. He adviſes the ſaints not to arrogate too much to themſelves, and take upon them to be the cenſorious reprovers of others; which he diſſuades from, by the conſideration of the greater damnation ſuch ſhall receive, and by the frailty of all men, and a common proneneſs to offend by words; for he muſt be a very ſingular man indeed that does not offend by words, ver. 1, 2. wherefore he exhorts them to watch over their words, and bridle their tongues; which he illuſtrates by the methods uſed with horſes to keep them in ſubjection, and with ſhips, to turn them as occaſion ſerves, and the maſter pleaſes, ver. 3, 4. and tho' the tongue is a little member, and not comparable to a horſe, or ſhip, for its bulk; yet it boaſts of great things, has a world of iniquity in it, and much miſchief is done by it, being influenced by the powers of hell; therefore care, and all poſſible means ſhould be uſed to reſtrain it, ver. 5, 6. tho' it is not tameable by man, only by the Lord, when all ſorts of creatures are, even the moſt fierce and ſavage, and therefore are worſe than they, being an unruly evil, and full of deadly poiſon, ver. 7, 8. And what is the moſt monſtrous and ſhocking, bleſſing and curſing come out of the ſame mouth, are pronounced by the ſame tongue, which is uſed in bleſſing God, and curſing men made after his image, which by no means ought to be done, ver. 9, 10. and which is not to be paralleled in nature; no inſtance like it can be given, no fountain ſending forth, in the ſame place, water ſweet and bitter, ſalt and freſh, or any fig-tree bearing olives or vine, figs, ver. 11, 12. And becauſe all this evil ſprings from a vain opinion men have of their own wiſdom, the Apoſtle proceeds to give an account of true wiſdom; and obſerves, that that ſhows itſelf in good works, in a holy converſation, attended with meekneſs and humility, and not in envying, ſtrife, and lyes, ver. 13, 14. Such ſort of wiſdom is not from heaven, but of the earth; it is not rational; it is no better than that of brutes; yea, no other than that of devils, ſince where the above ſins prevail, it is a hell on earth, there is nothing but confuſion, and every thing that is vile and wicked, ver. 15, 16. but, on the other hand, true wiſdom is of an heavenly original, of a pure, peaceable, gentle, and tractable nature, and is full of good fruits or works, in its effects, particularly mercy, and is clear of partiality and hypocriſy, ver. 17. and as one of its fruits is righteouſneſs, that is ſown in peace by the peace-maker, and produces it, ver. 18.

Ver. 1. My brethren, be not many maſters, &c.] The Apoſtle having diſpatched the ſubject of faith and good works, which conſtitute the pure and undefiled religion mentioned in ch. i. 27. which gave riſe to this diſcourſe, he proceeds to conſider the evidence of a religious man, ſuggeſted in ver. 26. who is one that bridles the tongue; and enters into an account of the uſe and abuſe of the tongue; and which is introduced by this exhortation; and which ſeems to be oppoſed to an affectation among the Jews, to whom James writes, of being called Rabbi, Rabbi, or Mori, Mori, maſter, maſter, condemned by Chriſt, Matt. xxiii. 8, 10. The words may be rendered, be not many teachers; or be not fond, and forward, and ambitious of being preachers of the word, but rather chuſe to be hearers of it, agreeable to the advice in ch. i. 19. be ſwift to hear, ſlow to ſpeak; not but that the office of a teacher is a good work, and a very deſirable one; and ſpiritual gifts, qualifying for it, are to be coveted with a view to the glory of God, and the good of ſouls; and to have many teachers is a bleſſing to the churches of Chriſt; and a large number of them is often not only proper, but abſolutely neceſſary: but then this office ſhould not be entred upon without ſuitable gifts, a divine miſſion, and a regular call by a church; and when entred into, ſhould not be performed in a magiſterial way, as lords over God's heritage, and as claiming a dominion over the faith of men, but as helpers of their joy, peace, and comfort; nor according to the commandments of men, but according to the oracles of God. Or it may be, this exhortation may have reſpect to cenſorious perſons, rigid and ſevere reprovers of others, who take upon them, in a haughty manner to charge and rebuke others for their faults; reproof for ſin ought to be given; ſin ſhould not be ſuffered upon the brethren; to reprove is not blameworthy, but commendable, when it is done in a right manner, with a good ſpirit, and to a good end: in caſe of private offences, it ſhould be privately given, and for publick ones, men ſhould be rebuked before all; but then this ought to be done in a gentle manner, and in a ſpirit of meekneſs; and when it is a clear caſe, and plain matter of fact, and which ought not to be exaggerated and aggravated; mole-hills are not to be made mountains of, or a man be made an offender for a word, or a matter of human frailty; and reproof ſhould be given by perſons not guilty of the ſame, or worſe crimes themſelves, and always with a good end; not to ſkreen and cover their own vices, or to be thought more holy and religious than others, or to ſatisfy a revengeful ſpirit, but for the glory of God, and the reſtoring of the perſon that has ſinned. Knowing that we ſhall receive the greater condemnation; ſhould men enter into the office of teaching others without a call, or perform it negligently, or live not according to the doctrine they teach others, ſuch would be judged out of their own mouths, and by their own words, and their condemnation would be aggravated; and ſhould men judge raſh judgment, they themſelves will be judged at a higher tribunal; and ſhould they be too cenſorious, and bear too hard on others, they will have judgment without mercy.

[d] Ohel Moed, fol. 15. 1.

Ver. 2. For in many things we offend all, &c.] Or we all offend, ſlip and fall; no man lives without ſin; in many, in moſt, if not in all things, a good man himſelf does, he ſins; and this extends to the moſt ſolemn ſervices, and beſt works of a good man; there is ſin in his holy things, imperfections in all his performances; his righteouſneſſes are as filthy rags; hence no man can be juſtified by his works before God, nor is any man perfect in this life, ſo as to be without ſin in himſelf: the Apoſtle includes himſelf in this account, and that not out of modeſty merely, or in a complaiſant way, but as matter of fact, and what he found in himſelf, and obſerved in the conduct of his life: and now this is given as a reaſon, why perſons ſhould not be over-forward of teaching others, ſince in many inſtances in common ſpeech and converſation, men are apt to offend, and much more in a work which requires a multitude of words; or why men ſhould be careful how they charge, cenſure, and reprove others, in a raſh, furious, and unchriſtian manner; ſince they themſelves are in the body, and may be tempted, and are attended with many infirmities, ſlips, and falls in common life. If any man offend not in word; from ſlips and falls in general, the Apoſtle proceeds to the ſlips of the tongue, and to the uſe and abuſe of that member; and his ſenſe is, that if a man has ſo much guard upon himſelf, and ſuch a command over his tongue, and ſo much wiſdom to uſe it, as to give no offence by it, to his fellow-creatures, and fellow-chriſtians. The ſame is a perfect man; not that he is perfect in himſelf, and without ſin, that is denied before; unleſs this is conſidered as a mere hypotheſis, and by way of conceſſion; that could there be found out a man that never, for inſtance, offends in word in any one part of life, that man may be allowed, and be ſet down to be a perfect man; but no ſuch man is to be found, and therefore none perfect: but rather the ſenſe is, that he who in common is ſo careful of his ſpeech, as not to offend his brethren, may be looked upon as a ſincere, and truly religious man; ſee ch. i. 26. or he may be accounted a wiſe and prudent man, ſuch an one as in ver. 13. he is not a babe in underſtanding, a child in conduct, but a grown man; at full age; a perfect man; in which ſenſe the word is uſed in 1 Cor. ii. 6. Heb. v. 14. And able alſo to bridle the whole body; either to govern the whole body, the church, to teach a ſociety of chriſtians, and to feed them with knowledge, and with underſtanding; or rather, as he appears, to be able to bridle that member of the body, the tongue, ſo likewiſe to be able, thro' the grace of God, to keep under the whole body, that ſin ſhall not reign in it, or the luſts of it be in common obeyed.

Ver. 3. Behold we put bits in the horſes mouths, &c.] By this, and the following ſimile, the Apoſtle not only expreſſes the ſmallneſs of that member of the body, which is like the bit in the horſe's mouth, and the helm of a ſhip, but the good uſe of it, and the great influence it has over the whole body. Horſes are without underſtanding, and need direction in what path to go, and are ſtrong, and would be unruly, and ungovernable, unleſs bits and bridles were put into their mouths: that they may obey us; and go in the way we would have them: and we turn about the whole body; of the horſe, this way, and that way, as is thought beſt, by the help of the bit and bridle; and of ſuch uſe is the tongue to the natural body, that being bridled itſelf, bridles, directs, and governs the whole body; and its influence on bodies, and ſocieties of men, and chriſtians, is like that of the bit, in the horſe's mouth; who, like horſes, would be unruly and ungovernable, were it not for the force of language, the power of words, and ſtrength of argument.

Ver. 4. Behold alſo the ſhips, which tho' they be ſo great, &c.] Of ſo large a bulk, of ſuch a prodigious ſize, and are ſuch unwieldy veſſels: and are driven of fierce winds; with great vehemence, rapidity, and ſwiftneſs: yet are they turned about with a very ſmall helm, whitherſoever the governour liſteth; the helm, or tiller of a ſhip, is a beam or piece of timber faſtened into the rudder, and ſo coming forward into the ſteerage, where he that ſtands at helm, ſteers the ſhip [e], who is here called the governour; or he that directs, as the word may be rendered; that is, that ſteers; the word for helm, is tranſlated rudder in Acts xxvii. 40. and the helm or tiller is ſometimes, tho' improperly, called the rudder itſelf [f]; and this is very ſmall, in compariſon of the bulk of the ſhip that is guided by it. [g] Ariſtotle calls it, ϖηδαλιον μικρον, a ſmall helm, as the Apoſtle here does, and accounts for it, how large ſhips ſhould be moved and ſteered by it. And ſo, tho' the tongue is to the reſt of the body, as a ſmall helm to a large ſhip, yet, like that, it has great influence over the whole body, to check it, when it is carrying away with the force of its appetites, and paſſions; and ſo churches, ſocietes, and bodies of chriſtians, which are large and numerous, and are like ſhips upon the ocean, toſſed to and fro with tempeſts, driven by ſatan's temptations, and the world's perſecution, and ready to be carried away with the wind of falſe doctrine, yet are influenced and directed aright by thoſe that are at the helm, the faithful miniſters of the word, who ſay to them, this is the way, walk in it.

Ver. 5. Even ſo the tongue is a little member, &c.] Like the bit in the horſe's mouth, or like the helm of a ſhip. And boaſteth great things; and does them; for this word may be taken in a good ſenſe: a bridled and ſanctified tongue, that is influenced by the grace of God, and directed by the Spirit of God, as it ſpeaks great and good things, it has great power, weight, and influence: the tongue of the juſt is as choice ſilver, and the lips of the righteous feed many, Prov. x. 20, 21. the Goſpel, as preached by Chriſt's faithful miniſters, who are the churches tongue, when it comes not in word only, but in power, is the power of God unto ſalvation: faith comes by hearing it, and hearing, by this word; by it ſouls are convinced, converted, and comforted, enlightened, quickened, and ſanctified. Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth; what vaſt quantities of wood, large foreſts, ſtately buildings, and populous towns, and cities, are at once ſeized on by a little fire, a few ſparks, and in a ſhort time, burnt down, and utterly deſtroyed. One of the proverbs of Ben Syra, is, "burning fire kindles "great heaps;" ſuggeſting, that an evil tongue does great miſchief, as did the tongue of Doeg the Edomite, as the Gloſs upon it obſerves: from hence the Apoſtle paſſes to conſider the abuſe or vices of the tongue.

Ver. 6. And the tongue is a fire, &c.] It is like to fire, very uſeful in its place, to warm, and comfort; ſo is the tongue in chriſtian converſation, and in the miniſtry of the word; the hearts of God's children burn within them, whilſt they are talking together, and whilſt the ſcriptures of truth are opening to them; but as fire ſhould be carefully watched, and kept, ſo ſhould men take heed to their ways, that they ſin not with their tongue, and keep their tongue from evil, and their lips from ſpeaking guile; for as fire kindles and riſes up into a flame, ſo unchaſte, angry, and paſſionate words, ſtir up the flame of luſt, anger, envy, and revenge; and as fire is of a ſpreading nature, ſo are lies, ſcandal, and evil reports vented by the tongue; and as fire devours all that comes in its way, ſuch are the words of an evil tongue; and therefore are called devouring words, Pſ. lii. 4. they devour the good names of men, and corrupt their good manners, and deſtroy thoſe who make uſe of them; and what wood is to fire, and coals to burning coals, that are whiſperers, talebearers, backbiters, and contentious perſons to ſtriſe, Prov. xxvi. 20, 21. a world of iniquity; that is, as the world is full of things, and full of ſin, for it lies in wickedneſs, ſo is the tongue, full of iniquity; there's a world of it in it; it abounds with it; it can't well be ſaid how much ſin is in it, and done, or occaſioned by it; as blaſphemy againſt God, Father, Son, and Spirit; curſing of men, imprecations on themſelves, their ſouls and bodies, and on others, with a multitude of prophane and dreadful oaths; obſcene, filthy and unchaſte words; angry, wrathful, and paſſionate ones; lyes, flatteries, reproaches, backbitings, whiſperings, tale-bearings, &c. And the Jews ſay, that he that uſes an evil tongue multiplies tranſgreſſion, and that it is equal to idolatry, adultery, and murder [h], and the cauſe of all ſin; and which they expreſs by way of fable, in this manner [i]: "when Adam ſinned, God laid hold "on him, and ſlit his tongue into two parts, and "ſaid unto him, the wickedneſs which is, or ſhall "be in the world, thou haſt begun with an evil "tongue; wherefore I'll make all that come into "the world, know, that thy tongue is the cauſe of all "this." The Syriac verſion renders this clauſe thus, and the world of iniquity is as wood; or the branch of a tree; the tongue is fire, and a wicked world is fuel to it. So is the tongue amongſt our members, that it defileth the whole body; the body politic, a whole nation, filling it with contention, ſtriſe, diviſion, and confuſion; and the eccleſiaſtical body, the church, by ſowing diſcord, fomenting animoſities, making parties, and ſpreading errors and hereſies, whereby the temple of God is defiled; and the natural body, and the ſeveral members of it, even the whole perſon of a man, ſoul and body, bringing upon him a blot of infamy and reproach, never to be wiped off; as for inſtance, the vice of that tongue lying, does; and oftentimes thro' the tongue, the actions done in the body, which ſeem good, are quite ſpoiled: and ſetteth on fire the courſe of nature; or wheel of nature; the natural body, as before, in which there is a continual rotation or circulation of the blood, by which it is ſupported; this is the wheel broken at the ciſtern at death, in Eccl. xii. 6. or the courſe of a man's life and actions, yea, of all generations, and the viciſſitudes and changes which have happened in them, on which the tongue has a great influence; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, and ſets on fire the ſeries of our genealogies, or of our generations, which run like wheels: or it may intend the frame of nature, the whole fabrick of the univerſe, and the general conflagration of it, which will be owing to the tongue; or becauſe mens tongues are againſt the Lord, to provoke the eyes of his glory, becauſe of the hard ſpeeches which ungodly ſinners have ſpoken againſt Chriſt, and his people, of which they will be convinced, by flames of fire about them: and it is ſet on fire of hell; that is, by the devil; for as heaven ſometimes is put for God, who dwells in heaven, Matt. xxi. 25. Luke xv. 18. ſo hell is put for the devil, whoſe habitation it is; ſee Matt. xvi. 18. and the ſenſe is, that the tongue is influenced, inſtigated, and ſtirred up by ſatan, to ſpeak many evil things; and it will be hereafter ſet on fire in hell, as the tongue of the rich man in Luke xvi. 24. To which purpoſe are thoſe words of the Talmud [k]; "whoever uſes an evil tongue, "the holy bleſſed God ſays to hell, I concerning "him above, and thou concerning him below, "will judge him, as it is ſaid, Pſ. cxx. 3, 4. "what ſhall be done to thee, thou falſe tongue? ſharp "arrows of the mighty, with coals of juniper; there "is no arrow but the tongue, according to Jer. "ix. 8. and there's no mighty one but God, Iſ. "xlii. 13. coals of juniper, היינו גיהנם, theſe are "hell."

Ver. 7. For every kind of beaſts, and of birds, &c.] Or the nature of them, as it is in the Greek text; however fierce as beaſts of prey are, or ſhy as the fowls of the air be: and of ſerpents and things in the ſea; the fiſhes there: is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind, or by human nature; by the wit and induſtry of man; by the various ways, means and methods, deviſed by man. So Pliny [l] relates, that elephants, lions and tygers among beaſts, and the eagle among birds, and crocodiles, aſps and other ſerpents, and fiſhes of the ſea have been tamed: tho' ſome think, this is only to be underſtood of their being maſtered and ſubdued, by one means, or another; or of their being deſpoiled of their power, or of their poiſon: and the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render it, ſubjected to human nature.

Ver. 8. But the tongue can no man tame, &c.] Either his own, or others; not his own, for the man, that has the greateſt guard upon himſelf, his words and actions; yet, what through pride or paſſion, or one luſt or another in his heart, at one time or another, bolts out vain, idle, angry and ſinful words: and he, that does not, may be ſet down for a perfect man indeed: nor can he tame, or reſtrain, ſtrain the tongues of others, from detraction, calumnies, backbitings and whiſperings; who ſay, their lips are their own, and who is Lord over us? no man can, by his own power and ſtrength, tame, or ſubdue his tongue, or reſtrain it from evils, it is habituated to, be it lying, curſing, ſwearing, or what elſe: God, by his Spirit, power and grace, can, and often does, change the note of the curſer, ſwearer, liar, and blaſphemer; but no man can do this, tho' he can tame beaſts, birds, ſerpents, and fiſhes; which ſhews the tongue to be worſe, than any thing to be found, in the whole compaſs of nature: it is an unruly evil; an evil it is, for it is a world of iniquity; and an unruly one, being more ſo, than the horſe and mule, which are without underſtanding, who are kept in and governed, and turned any way, by the bit and bridle: but tho', in nature, the tongue is fenced by a double fence of the lips and teeth, this is not ſufficient to reſtrain it; it breaks all bounds, and is not to be kept in by nature, art, or argument: nothing, but the grace of God, can, in any meaſure govern it, or lay an embargo on it: full of deadly poiſon; which, privately, ſecretly and gradually, deſtroys the characters, credit and reputation of men; and is of fatal conſequence in families, neighbourhoods, churches and ſtates.

Ver. 9. Therewith bleſs we God, even the Father, &c.] Of Jeſus Chriſt, and of ſpirits, and of mercies: this is the inſtrument, that is uſed in bleſſing God daily, for every meal that is eaten; and in joining with the ſaints, tho' only verbally and outwardly, in bleſſing God for all ſpiritual bleſſings in Chriſt, both in prayer, and in ſinging pſalms: and therewith curſe we men; make imprecations, and wiſh evils upon them: which are made after the ſimilitude of God; as man was originally, Gen. i. 26, 27. and tho' ſin has greatly defaced it, yet, there are ſtill ſome remains of it: and now, what an abſurd and monſtrous thing is this, that one and the ſame inſtrument ſhould be uſed in bleſſing God, the father of all creatures, and in curſing his children, his offspring, as all men are by creation, and bear ſome reſemblance to him.

Ver. 10. Out of the ſame mouth proceedeth bleſſing and curſing, &c.] Which is not only a contradiction, but unnatural, as well as wicked and ſinful: my brethren, theſe things ought not ſo to be; in any, and much leſs in profeſſors of religion: ſuch things are unbecoming men, are a ſcandal upon human nature, and exceeding unworthy of the Chriſtian name; ſee Pſal. l. 16, 19, 20.

Ver. 11. Doth a fountain ſend forth, at the ſame place, &c.] Or hole; for at divers places, and at different times, as Pliny[m] obſerves, it may ſend forth ſweet water and bitter: and it is reported[n], there is a lake with the Troglodítæ, a people in Ethiopia, which becomes thrice a day bitter, and then as often ſweet; but then it does not yield ſweet water and bitter, at the ſame time: this ſimile is uſed to ſhew, how unnatural it is, that bleſſing and curſing ſhould proceed out of the ſame mouth.

Ver. 12. Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive-berries? &c.] Every tree bears fruit, according to its kind; a fig-tree produces figs, and an olive-tree, olive-berries; a fig-tree does not produce olive-berries, or an olive-tree, figs; and neither of them both: either a vine, figs? or fig-trees, grapes; or either of them, figs and grapes: ſo can no fountain both yield ſalt water and freſh. The Alexandrian copy reads, neither can the ſalt water yield ſweet water; that is, the ſea can't yield ſweet or freſh water: the Syriac verſion renders it, neither can ſalt water be made ſweet: but naturaliſts ſay, it may be made ſweet, by being ſtrained through ſand: the deſign of theſe ſimilies is to obſerve, how abſurd a thing it is, that a man ſhould both bleſs and curſe with his tongue.

Ver. 13. Who is a wiſe man.] Meaning, not in things natural and civil, or merely moral, but in things ſpiritual: and he is a wiſe man, who is both wiſe to do good, and wiſe unto ſalvation; who has learned to know his own ignorance, folly and ſtupidity; for the firſt leſſon, in the ſchool of ſpiritual wiſdom, is for a man to know, that he is a fool: and he is a wiſe man, who conſiders his latter end, thinks of a future ſtate, and what will become of him in another world; and who builds his faith and hope of eternal ſalvation, on the ſure and only foundation, the rock Chriſt Jeſus; and who takes up a profeſſion of religion, upon principles of grace, and with views to the glory of God, and, upon mature deliberation, reckoning the coſt, and what he muſt expect to meet with; and which he holds faſt, without wavering, and yet does not depend upon it; and who walks, circumſpectly, and with wiſdom, towards them, that are without; and who obſerves both providences and promiſes, for the encouragement of his faith; and keeps looking to the mark for the prize, preferring heavenly things to earthly ones. And endued with knowledge amongſt you? as he is, who is endued with the knowledge of himſelf; of the impurity of his nature, and the plague of his heart; and of his impotency and inability to do any thing that is ſpiritually good of himſelf; and of the imperfection and inſufficiency of his righteouſneſs to juſtify him before God; and of his loſt ſtate and condition by nature, how deſerving of the wrath of God, and obnoxious to the curſes of the law; and how miſerable he muſt be, without the grace of God, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt: and who is alſo endued with the knowledge of Chriſt, ſo as to ſee a fulneſs, ſuitableneſs and ability in him, as a Saviour; ſo as to love him, approve of him, as ſuch, and truſt in him; which knowledge is always practical, and ſoul-humbling; and the leaſt degree of it ſaving; and tho' it is imperfect, it is growing, and will, at laſt, come to perfection: now ſuch a man is a Gnoſtick, in the beſt ſenſe; for this queſtion is put with a view to the Gnoſticks of thoſe times, who valued themſelves upon their knowledge, and deſpiſed practical religion and godlineſs: hence it follows, let him ſhew out of a good converſation his works, with meekneſs of wiſdom; ſuch an one ought to perform good works, and he will perform them; and it is right in him to ſhew them forth, that they may be a means of others glorifying God upon the ſight of them; and that they may be evidences of the truth of faith in themſelves to others; and that they may be for the imitation of others; and that they may put to ſilence, and ſtop the mouths of falſe accuſers, and adorn the Goſpel, and recommend religion: and theſe ſhould be ſhewn forth out of a good converſation; not in a ſingle act or two, but in a ſeries and courſe of living; which may be ſaid to be good, when it is ordered aright, according to the word of God, and is honeſt among the Gentiles, and upright and holy; and is as becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt, and is worthy of the vocation of God to grace and glory; and when it is influenced by the grace of God; and the works ſhown out of it, and in it, are done in faith, from love, in the ſtrength of Chriſt, and are directed to the glory of God: and all this ſhould be with meekneſs of wiſdom; in a wiſe and humble manner, without truſting to, and depending upon ſuch works for juſtification and ſalvation; and without glorying in them, and boaſting of them; acknowledging the deficiency and imperfection of them, and his own weakneſs in the performance of them; and aſcribing them to the power and grace of God, by the aſſiſtance of which they are performed.

[n] Iſidor. Hiſpal. Originum, l. 13. c. 13. p 115.

Ver. 14. But if ye have bitter envying and ſtrife in your hearts, &c.] Tho' theſe may not be expreſſed by words, or actions: envy at the happineſs of others, whether at the external bleſſings of providence, as riches and honours, or at the internal endowments of their minds, as their wiſdom and knowledge, their parts and abilities, is a root of bitterneſs in the heart, which bears wormwood and gall, and produces bitter effects, in the perſons in whom it is; it embitters their minds againſt their neighbours and friends; it is rottenneſs in their bones, and ſlays and deſtroys thoſe who are ſo ſilly as to be governed by it; and alſo in the perſons the objects of it; for who can ſtand before it? and ſtrife in the mind, or an intention to ſtrive and quarrel with others, who are the objects of envy, is very ſinful, and of pernicious conſequence: and if theſe be fomented and cheriſhed in the minds and breaſts of men, tho' they may not outwardly ſhow themſelves, yet glory not; let not ſuch boaſt of their being Gnoſticks, wiſe men, and endued with knowledge; they are far from deſerving ſuch a character; and ſuch boaſting is contrary to truth, yea, is lying againſt it, as follows: and lye not againſt the truth; for, for a man to aſſert himſelf to be a wiſe and knowing man, and yet cheriſhes bitterneſs in his heart, and quarrelling and contention in his mind, ariſing from envy, at the equal or ſuperior knowledge of others, he lyes both againſt the truth of God's word, and his own conſcience, which condemn ſuch things as ignorance, folly, and madneſs.

Ver. 15. This wiſdom deſcendeth not from above, &c.] If it muſt be called wiſdom, as it ought not; an envious, quarrelſome, and contentious ſpirit does not deſerve ſuch a name; yet if any will call it ſo, or can think that a man of ſuch a diſpoſition is a man poſſeſſed of wiſdom; it is ſuch wiſdom as does not come from above, from heaven, from the father of lights, from Chriſt, in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, and from the ſpirit of wiſdom and revelation: what the Jews ſay [o] of the wiſdom of Egypt, may be ſaid of this, that it is חכמה תתאה, wiſdom from below, or inferior wiſdom, as it follows: but is earthly, ſenſual, and deviliſh; it is earthly, or of the earth, and ſprings from thence; and it is only converſant about earthly things, and is only ſuitable to earthly minds: it is ſenſual, or natural; what a natural man, one deſtitute of the Spirit of God, and without the knowledge of the things of the Spirit, may have; it is what is acquired by the mere ſtrength of nature, and only relates to natural things; and is only agreeable to corrupt nature, or to a natural and unregenerate man: yea, it is deviliſh, or ſuch as the devil himſelf has; and which comes from him, and being uſed, ſerves only his kingdom and intereſt.

Ver. 16. For where envying and ſtrife is, &c.] Where theſe are cheriſhed in the heart, and eſpecially where they break out into action, in families, neighbourhoods, ſtates, or churches: there is confuſion and every evil work; theſe occaſion diſturbances, raiſe uneaſineſs, make diſquietude, and cauſe tumults whenever they appear; and put perſons upon doing every thing that is wicked, to gratify ſuch inſatiable luſts.

Ver. 17. But the wiſdom that is from above, &c.] Which has God for its author; which is infuſed into the ſoul by the Spirit of God; and leads into the knowledge of things that are above, of heavenly things; and which only is true wiſdom and knowledge; and thoſe who are poſſeſſed of it, are the only true Gnoſticks; for which, ſee the note on ver. 13. namely, the grace of God: this wiſdom is firſt pure; it is pure in itſelf, it is free from every thing that is earthly, carnal, or ſenſual, or deviliſh; it produces purity of heart, of life, and converſation; and is the means of keeping perſons pure and chaſte, and free from impure luſts, luſts of uncleanneſs, pride, envy, wrath, &c. which prevail in carnal and unregenerate men: and then peaceable; it inclines and engages thoſe who have it, to live in peace with the ſaints, and even with all men; with thoſe of their own houſhold, with their neighbours, yea, with their enemies: it is alſo gentle; or makes men gentle, moderate, and humane, ſo as that they bear, and forbear; they bear with the infirmities of the weak; readily forgive injuries done them; do not rigidly exact what is their due, but recede from their juſt right, for the ſake of peace and love; and do not bear hard upon others for their failings, but cover them with the mantle of love: and it is eaſy to be entreated; or thoſe who have it, readily yield to the ſuperior judgments and ſtronger reaſonings of others; and are eaſily induced to hope and believe all things, and entertain a good opinion of men, and their conduct; and are far from being proud, arrogant, obſtinate, and over-bearing: full of mercy and good fruits; of compaſſion and beneficence to the poor; feeding the hungry, cloathing the naked, viſiting the widows and fatherleſs in their affliction; and doing all other good works, and duties, both with reſpect to God and man, as fruits of grace, and of the Spirit: without partiality; to one another; or making a difference between them; ſhewing no reſpect to perſons; beſtowing upon the poor and indigent, without any diſtinction: and without hypocriſy; either with reſpect to God, or man; not making ſhow of that which they have not, or do not intend.

Ver. 18. And the fruit of righteouſneſs, &c.] Which is either eternal life, which is the fruit of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and ſhall be enjoyed by all thoſe who are juſtified by it; and who, in conſequence of it, through the grace of God, live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly; ſee Rom. vi. 22. or elſe what is enjoyed in this life, as the fruit and effect of a righteous and holy converſation, which is peace of conſcience; and may be truly called, the peaceable fruit of righteouſneſs; ſee Iſ. xxxii. 17. is ſown in peace of them that make peace; that is, either ſuch as are poſſeſſed of that wiſdom which is peaceable, and makes them ſo; that peace which they make, purſue after, exerciſe, and maintain, is a ſeed which being ſown by them, will, in the iſſue, be followed with eternal happineſs and felicity; ſee Matt. v. 9. or ſuch who live a godly life and converſation, and are filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs, and among the reſt, with this of making and preſerving peace among men, ſhall enjoy, as what will ſpring up from ſuch good ſeed ſown, much conſcience-peace, and ſpiritual pleaſure of mind: righteouſneſs and peace promiſe a large and comfortable harveſt both here and hereafter.

[o] Zohar in Gen. fol. 119. 2.

CHAP. IV.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle gives the true cauſe of contentions and ſtrifes; and cautions againſt intemperance, covetouſneſs, pride, detraction, and vain confidence. Having in the latter part of the preceding chapter, inveighed againſt ſtrife and contention, he here ſhows from whence they ſpring, from a covetous deſire of riches and honour; and which yet are not obtained, becauſe they did not aſk theſe things of God with ſubmiſſion to his will; or they aſked with a wrong view, namely, to gratify their luſts, ver. 1, 2, 3. and he diſſuades from ſuch unlawful deſires, partly becauſe they were no other than adultery; and partly becauſe indulging them, was declaring themſelves enemies of God, ver. 4. and he deters from pride, under the name of envy, proud men being generally envious; from the ſenſe of the ſcripture, which ſays, not in vain, that the ſpirit luſts unto it; and from the conſequence of it, ſuch as are proud being reſiſted by the Lord, when he gives more grace to humble ones, ver. 5, 6. hence follow ſeveral exhortations, and various duties relating to humility; as to ſubmit to God, and reſiſt the devil, encouraged thereunto by this motive, he will flee, ver. 7. to draw nigh to God in a way of religious worſhip, who will draw nigh in a way of grace to his people; to purity of action, and of heart, or to that which is outward and inward, ver. 8. to be humbled, mourn, and weep, inſtead of joy and laughter, ver. 9. to lie low before the Lord, who will raiſe ſuch up, ver. 10. and not to ſpeak evil of any one, ſince this is judging a brother; nay, a ſpeaking evil of the law, and a judging of that; which is to invade the prerogative of God, the law-giver, who is able to ſave, and to deſtroy; and therefore one man ſhould not take upon him to judge another, ver. 11, 12. and as another inſtance of great neglect of God, and his providence, and diſreſpect unto it, the Apoſtle takes notice of a common practice among men, and even profeſſors of religion, who reſolve to go to ſuch a place, and continue ſo long, and there make merchandize, and promiſe themſelves ſucceſs; not conſidering what frail, ſhort-lived creatures they are, and how much all depends upon the will of God; and which they ſhould conſider, ſubmit to, and be determined by, ver. 13, 14, 15. and he reproves them for their boaſtings and joy in them, as evil, ver. 16. and obſerves, that it is not enough to know what is right and good, unleſs it is done; and that ſuch knowledge is but an aggravation of the evil of ſin committed, ver. 17.

Ver. 1. From whence come wars and fightings among you? &c.] Which are to be underſtood, not of public and national wars, ſuch as might be between the Jews and other nations at this time; for the Apoſtle is not writing to the Jews in Judea, as a nation, or body politic, but to the twelve tribes ſcattered abroad, and to ſuch of them as were chriſtians; nor were chriſtians in general as yet increaſed, and become ſuch large bodies, or were whole nations become chriſtians, and much leſs at war one againſt another, which has been the caſe ſince; and which, when it is, generally ſpeaking ariſes from a luſt after an increaſe of power; from the pride and ambitious views of men, and their envy at the happineſs of other princes and ſtates: nor do theſe deſign theological debates and diſputes, or contentions about religious principles; but rather law-ſuits, commenced before heathen magiſtrates, by the rich, to the oppreſſion of the poor; ſee ch. ii. 6. tho' it ſeems beſt of all to interpret them, of thoſe ſtirs and buſtlings, ſtrifes, contentions, and quarrels, about honours and riches; endeavouring to get them by unlawful methods, at leaſt, at the expence of their own peace, and that of others: come they not hence, even of your luſts that war in your members? as pride, envy, covetouſneſs, ambition, &c. which, like ſo many ſoldiers, are ſtationed and quartered in the members of the body, and war againſt the ſoul; for in the believer, or converted man however, there is at it were two armies; a law in the members, warring againſt the law of the mind; the fleſh againſt the ſpirit, and the ſpirit againſt the fleſh; and from this inward war ariſe external ones; or at leaſt from the corruption of nature, which militates againſt all that is good, all qurarels and contentions, whether public or private, of a greater or leſſer nature, and conſequence, ſpring.

Ver. 2. Ye luſt and have not, &c.] The Apoſtle proceeds to ſhew the unſucceſsfulneſs of many in their deſires and purſuits after worldly things; ſome might be like the ſluggard, whoſe ſoul deſireth all good things, and yet he has nothing, Prov. xiii. 4. becauſe he does not make uſe of any means, even of ſuch as are proper and neceſſary, and ought to be uſed; ye kill and deſire to have, and cannot obtain; ſome, inſtead of kill, which ſeems not ſo agreeable, read envy; and then the ſenſe is, they envy at the good and happineſs of others, and covet after another's property, but can't enjoy it; all ſuch envy and covetouſneſs are fruitleſs, as well as ſinful: ye fight and war, yet ye have not; go to law one with another about each other's property; or rather, make a great ſtir and buſtle to get the things of the world; riſe early, and ſit up late; ſtrive who ſhould get moſt, and quarrel about what is gotten, and ſeek to get all advantages of one another; and yet ſtill have not, what at leaſt is deſired and ſtrove for: becauſe ye aſk not; of God, whoſe bleſſing only makes rich: inſtead of all this worldly ſtir and buſtle, and theſe ſtrivings and quarrellings with one another, it would be much more adviſeable, and in the iſſue, be found to turn to more account, to pray to God for a bleſſing on endeavours; and to aſk of him the good and neceſſary things of life, in ſubmiſſion to his will, and with thankfulneſs for what he has beſtowed.

Ver. 3. Ye aſk and receive not, &c.] Some there were that did aſk of God the bleſſings of his goodneſs and providence, and yet theſe were not beſtowed on them; the reaſon was, becauſe ye aſk amiſs; not in the faith of a divine promiſe; nor with thankfulneſs for paſt mercies; nor with ſubmiſſion to the will of God; nor with a right end, to do good to others, and to make uſe of what might be beſtowed, for the honour of God, and the intereſt of Chriſt; but that ye may conſume it upon your luſts; indulge to intemperance and luxury; as the man that had much goods laid up for many years, did, to the neglect of his own ſoul, Luke xii. 19. or the rich man, who ſpent all upon his back and his belly, and took no notice of Lazarus at his gate, Luke xvi. 19.

Ver. 4. Ye adulterers and adultereſſes, &c.] Not who were literally ſuch, but in a figurative and metaphorical ſenſe: as he is an adulterer that removes his affections from his own wife, and ſets them upon another woman; and ſhe is an adultereſs that loves not her huſband, but places her love upon another man; ſo ſuch men and women are adulterers and adultereſſes, who inſtead of loving God, whom they ought to love with all their hearts and ſouls, ſet their affections upon the world, and the things of it: the Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Ethiopic verſions leave out the word adultereſſes: theſe the Apoſtle addreſſes in the following manner; know ye not that the friendſhip of the world is enmity with God? that an immoderate love for the good things of the world, and a prevailing deſire after the evil things of it, and a delight in the company and converſation of the men of the world, and a conformity to, and compliance with the ſinful manners and cuſtoms of the world, are ſo many declarations of war with God, and acts of hoſtility upon him; and ſhew the enmity of the mind againſt him, and muſt be highly diſpleaſing to him, and reſented by him: whoſoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God; whoever is in league with the one, muſt be an enemy to the other; God and mammon cannot be loved and ſerved by the ſame perſons, at the ſame time; the one will be loved, and the other hated; the one will be attended to, and the other neglected: this may be known both from reaſon and from ſcripture, particularly from Matt. vi. 24.

Ver. 5. Do ye think that the ſcripture ſaith in vain, &c.] Some think that the Apoſtle refers to a particular paſſage of ſcripture in the Old Teſtament, and that he took it from Gen. vi. 3. as ſome; or from Exod. xx. 5. as others; or from Deut. vii. 2, 5. or from Job v. 2. or from Prov. xxi. 10. others think he had in view ſome text in the New Teſtament; either Rom. xii. 2. or Gal. v. 17. and ſome have imagined, that he refers to a paſſage in the Apocryphal book of Wiſdom, ch. i. 4. and others have been of opinion, that it is taken out of ſome book of ſcripture then extant, but now loſt, which by no means can be allowed of: the generality of interpreters, who ſuppoſe a particular text of ſcripture is referred to, fetch it from Numb. xi. 29. but it ſeems beſt of all to conclude, that the Apoſtle has no regard to any one particular paſſage of ſcripture, in which the following words are expreſly had, ſince no ſuch paſſage appears; but that his meaning is, the ſenſe of the ſcripture every where, where it ſpeaks of this matter, is to this purpoſe: nor does it ſay this, or any thing elſe in vain; whatever is written there, is to anſwer ſome end, as for learning, edification, and comfort, for doctrine, reproof, correction, and inſtruction in righteouſneſs; neither with reſpect to what is before ſuggeſted, that what is aſked in a right manner, and for a right end, ſhall be given; and that the love of the world, and the love of God, are things incompatible; nor with reſpect to what follows: the ſpirit that dwelleth in us luſteth to envy? that is, the depraved ſpirit of man, the ſpirit of an unregenerate man; that as it is prone to every luſt, and prompts to every ſin, the imagination of the thought of man's heart being evil, and that continually, ſo it inſtigates to envy the happineſs of others; ſee Gen. vi. 5. and viii. 21. or this may be put as a diſtinct queſtion from the other, does the ſpirit that dwelleth in us luſt to envy? that is, the Holy Spirit, who dwells in the hearts of his people, as in his temple: the Ethiopic verſion reads, the holy Spirit; and then the ſenſe is, does he luſt to envy? no; he luſts againſt the fleſh, and the works of it, and envy among the reſt; ſee Gal. v. 17, 21. but he does not luſt to it, or provoke to it, or put perſons upon it; nor does he, as the Arabic verſion renders it, deſire that we ſhould envy; he is a Spirit of grace; he beſtows grace and favours upon men; and is ſo far from envying, or putting others upon envying any benefit enjoyed by men, that he increaſes them, adds to them, and enlarges them, as follows.

Ver. 6. But he giveth more grace, &c.] The Arabic verſion adds, to us; the Ethiopic verſion, to you; and the Syriac verſion reads the whole thus, but our Lord gives more grace to us; or greater grace: than the world can give, whoſe friendſhip is courted by men; the leaſt meaſure of grace, of faith, and hope, and love, and of a ſpiritual knowledge of Chriſt, and intereſt in him, and of peace, joy, and comfort, is more worth than all the world, and every thing in it: or greater grace, more favours than the ſaints are able to aſk or think; ſo Solomon had more favours given him than he could think of aſking for: or greater grace, and larger meaſures of it, even of ſpiritual light and knowledge, under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, than under the former diſpenſation; or where God beſtows gifts qualifying for ſervice and uſefulneſs, and theſe are made uſe of and employed for ſuch purpoſes, he gives more: or this may refer to internal grace wrought by the Spirit of God, in the hearts of his people; more of which he may be ſaid give, when he cauſes it to abound, as to its acts and exerciſes; when faith grows exceedingly, hope revives, and is lively, and abounds through his power and influence, and love to God and Chriſt, and one another, abounds yet more and more; when there is a growth in every grace, and in the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus, ſo that this grace becomes a well of living waters, ſpringing up into eternal life, which at laſt will have its perfection in glory: wherefore he ſaith; either the Spirit that gives more grace, or the ſcripture, or God in the ſcripture, in Prov. iii. 34. God reſiſteth the proud; or ſcorns the ſcorners; he rejects them that truſt in themſelves that they are righteous, and deſpiſe others; that ſay, ſtand by thy ſelf, I am holier than thou; that are proud of themſelves, their enjoyments, their gifts, their external righteouſneſs, and holineſs, and are full, and rich, and increaſed with goods, and ſtand in need of nothing; theſe he oppoſes, he ſets himſelf againſt, he thruſts them away from him, he ſends them away empty, and ſcatters them in the imagination of their own hearts; and in the things in which they deal proudly, he is above them; he ſits in the heavens and laughs at them, and fruſtrates all their ſchemes: but he giveth grace unto the humble; who are ſenſible of their own vileneſs and meanneſs, and acknowledge it; who think the meaneſt of themſelves, and the beſt of others; and don't envy the gifts and graces of God beſtowed upon others, but rejoice at them; and aſcribe all they have, and are, to the free grace of God; and ingenuouſly confeſs the deficiency of their duties, and the inſufficiency of their righteouſneſs to juſtify them before God; and that when they have done all they can, or are aſſiſted to do, they are but unprofitable ſervants: now to theſe, God gives grace; he not only gives grace at firſt, to make them humble, but he gives them more grace, or increaſes what he gives: grace is God's gift; he gives all the grace that is in Chriſt, and all the bleſſings of grace that are in the covenant, and all the grace that is in the hearts of his people; as faith, hope, love, repentance, humility, patience, ſelf-denial, reſignation to his will, and every degree of ſpiritual knowledge; and grace is only his gift; men can't give it to themſelves, nor can the beſt of men give it to others; not godly parents to their children; nor miniſters to thoſe to whom they preach; no, nor the angels in heaven; nor is it to be obtained by the works of men: it is a free gift; it is given of the ſovereign will and good pleaſure of God, to whom, and when, and in what meaſure he pleaſes; to which he is not induced by any motives in men, for they have nothing in them to move him to it; and it is given by him abſolutely, without conditions, not ſuſpending it till the performance of them; and he gives it chearfully, and not grudgingly, largely, bountifully, and in great abundance.

Ver. 7. Submit yourſelves therefore to God, &c.] To the will of God, with reſpect to worldly things, and be content with ſuch things as are enjoyed, and be ſatisfied with the portion that is allotted; it is right and beſt for the people of God to leave themſelves with him, to chuſe their inheritance for them, ſince by all their anxious cares, their ſtriving and ſtruggling, their impatient deſires, wars and fightings, as they cannot add one cubit to their ſtature, ſo nothing to their worldly ſubſtance; and it becomes them to ſubmit to God in all afflictive diſpenſations of his providence, and be ſtill, and know that he is God; as well as to ſubmit to his way and method of ſalvation by Chriſt, and particularly to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, for juſtification; and to depend upon him for ſupplies of grace in the diſcharge of every duty, and the exerciſe of every grace: reſiſt the devil, and he will flee from you; ſatan is to be looked upon as an enemy, and to be oppoſed as ſuch, and to be watched and guarded againſt; the whole armour of God ſhould be taken and made uſe of, particularly the weapon of prayer, the ſword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, and the ſhield of faith; and alſo the grace of humility, than which nothing is more oppoſite to him: he is a proud ſpirit, and he endeavours to ſwell men with pride of themſelves; and when he has worked them up to ſuch a pitch, he is then maſter of them, and can manage them as he pleaſes; but a poor, humble believer, with whom God dwells, to whom he gives more grace, and who comes forth not in his own ſtrength, but in the ſtrength of the Lord God, as David againſt Goliah, and who owns his vileneſs and ſinfulneſs, and flies to the grace of God, and blood of Chriſt, ſatan knows not what to do with him, he is puzzled, baffled, and confounded; ſuch he leaves, from ſuch he flees; he don't like the power of prayer, nor the ſtrength of faith, nor the ſharpneſs of the two-edged ſword, the word of God, nor the humble believer's ſtaff, bag, ſcrip, and ſling.

Ver. 8. draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you, &c.] This muſt be underſtood conſiſtently with the perfection of God's immenſity and omnipreſence: the ſaints draw nigh to God, when they preſent their bodies, in his ſanctuary; when they tread in his courts, and attend his ordinances; where they always find it good for them to draw nigh unto him; and bleſſed is the man that approaches to him in faith and fear: they draw nigh to him when they come to the throne of his grace, for grace and mercy to help them; when they draw near to him in prayer, with true hearts, and lift them up with their hands to God; when in the exerciſe of faith and hope they enter within the vail, and come up even to hs ſeat, and lay hold on him as their covenant God and Father; and he draws nigh to them by granting them his gracious preſence, by communicating his love to them, by applying the bleſſings of his grace, by helping them in times of need and diſtreſs, and by protecting them from their enemies; the contrary to which is expreſſed by ſtanding afar off from them. Now this is not to be underſtood, as if men could firſt draw nigh to God, before he draws nigh to them; for as God firſt loves, ſo he firſt moves; he takes the firſt ſtep, and in converſion, turns and draws men to himſelf; tho' this does not reſpect firſt converſion, but after acts in conſequence of it; nor is it to be conſidered as a condition of the grace and favour of God, in drawing nigh to his people, but is expreſſive of what is their duty, and an encouragement to it: cleanſe your hands ye ſinners, and purify your hearts, ye double minded; the perſons addreſſed, are not the prophane men of the world, but ſinners in Zion, formal profeſſors, hypocritical perſons; who ſpeak with a double tongue to men, and who draw nigh to God with their mouths, but not with their hearts; who halt between two opinions, and are unſtable in all their ways: cleanſing of their hands and hearts, denotes the purity of outward converſation, and of the inward affections; and ſuppoſes impurity both of fleſh and ſpirit, that the body and all its members, the ſoul and all its powers and faculties are unclean; and yet not that men have a power to cleanſe themſelves, either from the filth of an external converſation, or from inward pollution of the heart; tho' a man attempts the one, he fails in it; and who can ſay he has done the other? Job ix. 30, 31. Prov. xx. 9. This is not to be done by ceremonial ablutions, moral ſervices, or evangelical ordinances; this is God's work only, as appears from his promiſes to cleanſe his people from their ſins, by ſprinkling clean water upon them; from the end of Chriſt's ſhedding his blood, and the efficacy of it; and from the prayers of the ſaints, that God would waſh them thoroughly from their iniquity, and cleanſe them from their ſin, and create clean hearts in them: and yet ſuch exhortations are not in vain; ſince they may be uſeful to convince men of their pollution, who are pure in their own eyes, as theſe hypocritical, nominal profeſſors, might be; and to bring them to a ſenſe of their inability to cleanſe themſelves, and of the neceſſity of being cleanſed elſewhere; and to lead them to enquire after the proper means of cleanſing, and ſo to the fountain of Chriſt's blood, which only cleanſes from all ſin.

Ver. 9. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep, &c.] Not in a bare external way; not by afflicting the body with faſtings and ſcourgings, by renting of garments, and clothing with ſackcloth, and putting aſhes on the head, and other ſuch outward methods of humiliation; but afflicting the ſoul is meant, an inward mourning and weeping over the plague of the heart, the impurity of nature, and the various ſins of life; after a godly ſort, and becauſe contrary to a God of infinite love and grace; in an evangelic way, looking to Jeſus, and being affected with the pardoning grace and love of God in Chriſt. Let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heavineſs; meaning their carnal joy, on account of their friendſhip with the world, and their enjoyment of the things of it, ſince they conſumed them on their luſts, and which betrayed enmity to God.

Ver. 10. Humble your ſelves in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Which is done, when men, before the Lord, and from their hearts, and in the ſincerity of their ſouls, acknowledge their meanneſs and unworthineſs, their vileneſs, ſinfulneſs, and wretchedneſs, and implore the grace and mercy of God in Chriſt, as did Abraham, Jacob, Job, Iſaiah, Paul, and the publican; and when they walk humbly with God,

God, acknowledging they can do nothing without him; owning their dependence on his grace, and aſcribing all they have, and are, unto it: and he ſhall lift you up; this is God's uſual way to lift up the meek, and exalt thoſe that humble themſelves; he lifts them from the dunghill, to ſet them among princes; he gives them a place, and a name in his houſe, better than ſons and daughters; he adorns them with his grace; he clothes them with the righteouſneſs of his Son; he grants them nearneſs to himſelf; and at laſt will introduce them into his kingdom and glory.

Ver. 11. Speak not evil one of another, brethren, &c.] The Apoſtle here returns to his former ſubject concerning the vices of the tongue, he had been upon in the preceding chapter, ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. and here mentions one, which profeſſors of religion were too much guilty of, and that is, ſpeaking evil one of another; which is done either by raiſing falſe reports, and bringing falſe charges; or by aggravating failings and infirmities; or by leſſening and depreciating characters, and endeavouring to bring into diſcredit and diſeſteem among men: this is a very great evil, and what the men of the world do, and from them it is expected; but for the ſaints to ſpeak evil one of another, to ſit and ſpeak againſt a brother, and ſlander an own mother's ſon is barbarous and unnatural. He that ſpeaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, ſpeaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law; he that tale-bears and backbites his brother, his fellow-member, and detracts from his good name and character, and takes upon him to judge his heart, and his ſtate, as well as to condemn his actions, he ſpeaks evil of the law; and judges and condemns that, as if that forbid a thing that was lawful, even tale-bearing and detraction, Lev. xix. 16. or by ſpeaking evil of him for a good thing he does, he blames and condemns the law, as tho' it commanded a thing that was evil; and by paſſing ſentence upon his brother, he takes upon him the province of the law, which is to accuſe, charge, convince, pronounce guilty, and condemn: but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law; as is a duty, and would beſt become: but a judge; and ſo ſuch a perſon not only infringes the right of the law, but aſſumes the place of the judge and lawgiver himſelf; whereas, as follows,

Ver. 12. There is one law-giver, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and others, and the Syriac, Ethiopic, and Vulgate Latin verſions, add, and judge. Who is the one only Lord God, Iſ. xxxiii. 22. This is a character that may be applied to God the Father, who gave the law to the people of Iſrael, both the judicial and ceremonial law, and alſo the moral law; from his right hand went a fiery law, and to him belongs the giving of it; and alſo to the Son of God, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is king of ſaints, and law-giver in his houſe; who has given out commandments to be obſerved, and laws of diſcipline for the right ordering of his houſe, and kingdom, to be regarded; and particularly the new commandment of love, which is eminently called the law of Chriſt; and which is moſt apparently broke, by detraction and ſpeaking evil one of another: now there may be inferior and ſubordinate law-givers, as Judah is ſaid to be God's law-giver, and Moſes is ſaid to command the Jews a law; yet there is but one ſupreme, univerſal, and perfect law-giver, who is God; and tho' there may be many law-givers in things political, whoſe legiſlative power is to be obeyed, both for the Lord's ſake, and for conſcience ſake; yet in things religious, and relating to conſcience, God is the only law-giver, who is to be hearkened unto: who is able to ſave, and to deſtroy; this is true of God the Father, who is able to ſave, and does ſave by his Son Jeſus Chriſt, and even perſons that have broken the law he has given, and are liable to the curſe and condemnation of it; and he is able to ſave them according to that law, in perfect conſiſtence with it, and with his juſtice and holineſs, ſince Chriſt, by whom he ſaves, was made under it, and has fulfilled it; and that Chriſt is mighty to ſave, able to ſave to the uttermoſt, is certain from the ſcripture, and all experience; and God, the law-giver, is able to deſtroy both body and ſoul in hell, for the tranſgreſſions of his law; and even Chriſt the Lamb is alſo the lion of the tribe of Judah, who will break his enemies in pieces, as a potter's veſſel, and puniſh the contemners of his Goſpel with everlaſting deſtruction, from his preſence and glory: in a word, God, the law-giver, is ſovereign, and can deſtroy, or ſave, whom he pleaſes; he is able to ſave the brother that is ſpoken againſt, and to deſtoy him that ſpeaks againſt him: who art thou that judgeſt another? another man's ſervant, as in Rom. xiv. 4. or thy neighbour, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read; or the neighbour, as the Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin verſion; that is, any brother, friend, or neighbour, in the manner as before obſerved in the preceding verſe.

Ver. 13. Go to now, ye that ſay, &c.] The Apoſtle paſſes from expoſing the ſin of detraction, and raſh judgment, to inveigh againſt thoſe of preſumption and ſelf-confidence; and the phraſe, go to now, is a note of tranſition, as well as of attention, and contains the form of a ſolemn and grave addreſs to perſons, who either think within themſelves, or vocally expreſs the following words, or the like unto them: to-day, or to-morrow, we will go into ſuch a city; in ſuch a country, a place of great trade and merchandize; as Tyre then was in Phœnicia, Theſſalonica in Macedonia, Epheſus in Aſia, and others: ſome render this as an imperative, or as an exhortation, let us go, which does not alter the ſenſe. And continue there a year, and buy and ſell, and get gain; as is cuſtomary for merchants to do; nor does the Apoſtle deſign by this to condemn merchandize, and the lawful practice of buying and ſelling, and getting gain; but that men ſhould not reſolve upon thoſe things without conſulting God, and attending to his will, and ſubjecting themſelves to it; and without conſidering the uncertainty and frailty of human life; as well as ſhould not promiſe and aſſure themſelves of ſucceſs, of getting gain and riches, as if thoſe things were in their own power, and had no dependence upon the providence and bleſſing of God.

Ver. 14. Whereas ye know not what ſhall be on the morrow, &c.] Whether there would be a morrow, for them or no, whether they ſhould live till to-morrow; and if they ſhould, they knew not what a morrow would bring forth, or what things would happen, which might prevent their intended journey and ſucceſs: no man can ſecure a day, an hour, a moment, and much leſs a year of continuance in this life; nor can he foreſee what will befal him to-day or to-morrow; therefore it is great ſtupidity to determine on this, and the other, without the leave of God, in whom he lives, moves, and has his being; and by whoſe providence all events are governed and directed; ſee Prov. xxvii. 1. for what is your life? of what kind and nature is it? what aſſurance can be had of the continuance of it? by what may it be expreſſed? or to what may it be compared? it is even a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and then vaniſheth away; which riſes out of the earth, or water, and expires almoſt as ſoon as it exiſts; at leaſt, continues but a very ſhort time, and is very weak and fleeting, and carried about here and there, and ſoon returns from whence it came: the alluſion is to the breath of man, which is in his noſtrils, and who is not to be accounted of, or depended on.

Ver. 15. For that ye ought to ſay, &c.] Inſtead of ſaying we will go to ſuch and ſuch a place, and do this, and that, and the other thing, it ſhould be ſaid, if the Lord will, and we ſhall live, and do this and that; the laſt and is left out in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions; and the paſſage rendered thus, if the Lord will, and we ſhall live, we will do this: ſo that here are two conditions of doing any thing; the one is, if it ſhould be agreeable to the determining will and purpoſe of God, by which every thing in the world comes to paſs, and into which the wills of men ſhould be reſolved, and reſigned; and the other is, if we ſhould live, ſince life is ſo very uncertain and precarious: and the ſenſe is, not that this exact form of words ſhould be always uſed, but what is equivalent to them, or at leaſt, that there ſhould be always a ſenſe of theſe things upon the mind; and there ſhould be a view to them in all reſolutions, deſigns, and engagements: and ſince the words are ſo ſhort and comprehenſive, it might be proper for chriſtians to uſe themſelves to ſuch a way of ſpeaking, upon all occaſions; we find it uſed by the Apoſtle Paul, frequently, as in Acts xviii. 2. 1 Cor. iv. 19. Rom. i. 10. Heb. vi. 3. and even by Jews, Heathens, and Turks. It is a ſaying of Ben Syra, the Jew [p], “ let a man never “ ſay he will do any thing, before he ſays, “ אם גזר השם, if God will.” So Cyrus, king of Perſia, when under pretence of hunting, he deſigned an expedition into Armenia, upon which an hare ſtarted, and was catched by an eagle, ſaid to his friends, this will be a good or proſperous hunting to us, ην Θεος θελη, if God will [q]. And very remarkable are the words of Socrates to Alcibiades, enquiring of him how he ought to ſpeak; ſays Socrates, εαν Θεος εθελη, if God will [r]; and ſays he, in another place [s], “ but I will do this, and come “ unto thee to-morrow, if God will.” And it is reported of the Turks [t], that they ſubmit every thing to the divine will; as the ſucceſs of war, or a journey, or any thing, even of the leaſt moment, they deſire to be done; and never promiſe themſelves, or others, any thing, but under this condition, In Shallah, if God will.

Ver. 16. But now ye rejoice in your boaſtings, &c.] Of to-morrow, and of the continuance of life, and of going to ſuch a place, and abiding there for ſuch a time, and of trading and trafficking with great ſucceſs, to the obtaining of much gain and riches; ſee Prov. xxvii. 1. all ſuch rejoicing is evil; wicked and atheiſtical, as expreſſing a neglect of and independence on providence; arrogating and aſcribing too much to themſelves, their power and will, as if they had their lives and fortunes in their own hands, and at their own diſpoſe, when all depend upon the will of God. The Syriac verſion renders it, all ſuch rejoicing is from evil; from an evil heart, and from the evil one, ſatan.

Ver. 17. Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, &c.] This may regard not only the laſt particular of referring all things to the will of God, the ſovereign diſpoſer of life, and all events, which ſome might have the knowledge of in theory, tho' they did not practiſe according to it; but all the good things the Apoſtle had exhorted to, and the contrary to which he had dehorted from, in this Epiſtle; and ſuggeſts, that a Gnoſtick, or one that knows the will of God, in the ſeveral branches of it, revealed in his word, and doth it not, to him it is ſin: it is a greater ſin; it is an aggravated one; it is criminal in him that is ignorant of what is good, and does that which is evil, nor ſhall he eſcape puniſhment; but it is much more wicked in a man, that knows what is right and good, and ought to be done, and does it not, but that which is evil, and his condemnation will be greater; ſee Luke xii. 47, 48. The omiſſion of a known duty, as well as the commiſſion of a known ſin, is criminal.

CHAP. V.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle reproves the vices of rich men, and denounces the judgments of God upon them; exhorts the ſaints to patience under ſufferings; dehorts them from vain and prophane ſwearing, and preſſes to various duties and branches of religious worſhip, private and publick, and to the performance of ſeveral good offices of love to one another. He repreſents the miſeries of wicked rich men as juſt at hand, ver. 1. becauſe they made no uſe of their riches, either for themſelves, or others, and becauſe of the truſt they put in them, heaping them up againſt a time to come, ver. 2, 3. and becauſe of their injuſtice in detaining the hire of labourers from them, ver. 4. and becauſe of their wantonneſs and luxury, ver. 5. and becauſe of their cruelty to the innocent, ver. 6. and ſuch who ſuffer at their hands, are exhorted to exerciſe patience, from the inſtance of the huſbandman waiting patiently for the fruit of the earth, and the rain to produce it; and from the conſideration of the coming of Chriſt, the judge, being near at hand, ver. 7, 8, 9. and from the example of the prophets of the Lord, who ſuffered much, and were patient, and ſo happy; and particularly from the inſtance of Job, his patience, the end of the Lord in his afflictions, and his pity and compaſſion towards him, ver. 10, 11. But of all things the Apoſtle intreats them, that they would take care of prophane ſwearing, and all vain oaths, ſince theſe bring into condemnation, ver. 12. and from hence he paſſes to various exerciſes of religion; the afflicted he adviſes to prayer; and thoſe in comfortable circumſtances of body and mind, to ſinging of pſalms, ver. 13. and ſuch that are ſick, to ſend for the elders of the church to pray over them, and anoint them with oil in the name of the Lord, whereby not only the ſick man would be delivered from his ſickneſs, the Lord raiſing him up, but even his ſins would be declared to be forgiven, ver. 14, 15. And not only it became the elders to pray for ſick perſons, but alſo the ſaints in general, one for another, and to acknowledge their faults to each other, ſince the fervent prayer of every righteous man is of great avail with God, ver. 16. of which an inſtance is given in Elias, whoſe prayer, tho' a man ſubject to like paſſions as other men, againſt, and for rain, was very ſucceſsful, ver. 17, 18. And chriſtians ſhould not only be concerned for the health of each other's bodies, but alſo for the good of their ſouls; wherefore, whenever it is obſerved, that any are ſtraying from the path of truth, methods ſhould be taken to reſtore them, and turn them from the error of their ways; and whoever is the happy inſtrument of ſuch a reſtoration, is the means of ſaving a ſoul from death, and hiding a multitude of ſins, ver. 19, 20.

Ver. 1. Go to now, ye rich men, &c.] All rich men are not here deſigned; there are ſome rich men, who are good men, and make a good uſe of their riches, and do not abuſe them, as theſe here are repreſented; and yet wicked rich men, or thoſe that were the openly prophane, are not here intended neither; for the Apoſtle only writes to ſuch who were within the church, and not without, who were profeſſors of religion; and ſuch rich men are addreſſed here, who, notwithſtanding their profeſſion, were not rich towards God, but laid up treaſure for themſelves, and truſted in their riches, and boaſted of the multitude of their wealth; and did not truſt in God, and make uſe of their ſubſtance to his glory, and the good of his intereſt, as they ſhould have done: weep and howl for your miſeries that ſhall come upon you; meaning, not temporal calamities, that ſhould come upon them, at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, in which the rich greatly ſuffered by the robbers among themſelves, as well as by the Roman ſoldiers; for the Apoſtle is not writing to the Jews in Judea, and at Jeruſalem; but to the chriſtians of the twelve tribes ſcattered in the ſeveral parts of the world, and who were not diſtreſſed by that calamity; but eternal miſeries, or the torments of hell are intended, which unleſs they repented of their ſins, would ſhortly, ſuddenly, and unavoidably come upon them, when their preſent joy and laughter would be turned into howling and weeping.

Ver. 2. Your riches are corrupted, &c.] Either thro' diſuſe of them; and ſo the phraſe is expreſſive of their tenaciouſneſs, with-holding that from themſelves and others, which is meet, and which is keeping riches for the owners thereof, to their hurt; or theſe are corrupted, and are corruptible things, fading and periſhing, and will ſtand in no ſtead in the day of wrath, and therefore it is great weakneſs to put any truſt and confidence in them: and your garments are moth eaten; being neither wore by themſelves, nor put upon the backs of others, as they ſhould, but laid up in ward-robes, or in cheſts and coffers, and ſo became the repaſt of moths, and now good for nothing.

Ver. 3. Your gold and ſilver is cankered, &c.] Or grown ruſty like iron, by lying long without uſe; this is not eaſily and quickly done, but in length of time gold and ſilver will change and contract a ruſtineſs; and ſo this conveys the ſame idea, of hoarding up riches, and laying up money, without making uſe of it in trade, for the ſupport of the poor, and without diſtributing it to their neceſſities: and the ruſt of them ſhall be a witneſs againſt you; at the day of judgment; which will be a proof that they have not been employed to ſuch ſervices, and for ſuch uſefulneſs, for which they were deſigned and given. And ſhall eat your fleſh as it were fire; that is, a remembrance of this, a ſenſe of it impreſſed upon them, ſhall be like fire in their bones; ſhall diſtreſs their minds, gnaw their conſciences, and be in them the worm that never dies, and the fire that ſhall never be quenched: ye have heaped treaſure together for the laſt days; either for many years, as the fool in the Goſpel, for the times of old age, the laſt days of men, for fear they ſhould then want; or for the laſt days of the world, or of time, as if they thought they ſhould live for ever: the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, ye have treaſured up wrath for yourſelves in the laſt days; inſtead of riches, as they imagined; and that by their covetouſneſs and wickedneſs, by a wicked diſuſe of their riches, and an unrighteous detention of them; but this ſupplement ſeems to be taken from Rom. ii. 5. though the ſenſe is confirmed by ſome copies which connect the phraſe, as it were fire, in the preceding clauſe with this, ye have treaſured up as it were fire; and the Syriac verſion renders it, ye have treaſured up fire; the fire of divine wrath; this is the fruit of treaſuring up riches in an ill way, and without making a proper uſe of them.

Ver. 4. Behold the hire of the labourers, which have reaped down your fields, &c.] The wages agreed for by the day, with the labourers in their fields, particularly their reapers; which one inſtance ſerves for many others; and is the rather mentioned, becauſe reaping is a laborious work, and thoſe who are employed in it, have nothing to live upon, but their hand labour; and eſpecially becauſe they are made uſe of in cutting down the corn, when it is fully ripe, and in great plenty; wherefore, to detain their juſt wages from them, argues great inhumanity and wickedneſs; and yet this was what was done by rich men: which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; unto God for vengeance, as the blood of Abel did; and ſhows that ſuch an evil, however privately and fraudulently it may be done, will be made public, and is a crying one: and the cries of them which have reaped, are entred into the ears of the Lord of ſabaoth; that is, the Lord of hoſts; of angels, and of men; of the hoſt of heaven, and of the inhabitants of the earth; of Jews and Gentiles, and of rich and poor; and who has power to vindicate the cauſe of the latter, againſt their rich oppreſſors, and will do it; his ears are open to their cries, he takes notice of them, and regards them, and will take vengeance on thoſe that injure them. The reference is to Deut. xxiv. 15.

Ver. 5. Ye have lived in pleaſure on the earth, &c.] This is ſaid of other rich men; for all that is here ſaid, is not to be underſtood of the ſame individuals, but ſome things of one, and ſome of another; ſome made no uſe of their riches, either for themſelves, or others; ſome did make uſe of them, and employed the poor, and then would not give them their wages; and others lived a voluptuous and luxurious life, indulged themſelves in carnal luſts and pleaſures, and gratified the ſenſes by eating, drinking, gaming, &c. and ſo were dead whilſt they lived. The phraſe ſuggeſts, that their pleaſures were but ſhort-lived, but for a ſeaſon, even whilſt they were on earth; and that hereafter they would not live in pleaſure: and been wanton; thro' the abundance and plenty of good things, their delicious way of living, and the ſwing of pleaſures which they took; the alluſion is to fatted beaſts, which being in good paſtures, grow fat and wanton: ye have nouriſhed your hearts as in a day of ſlaughter; when beaſts were ſlain for ſome extraordinary entertainment, or for the ſolemn feſtivals and ſacrifices of the Jews, when they lived more deliciouſly than at other times; and then the ſenſe is, that theſe rich men fared ſumptuouſly every day; every day was a feſtival with them; they indulged themſelves in intemperance; they eat and drank, not merely what was neceſſary, and ſatisfying, and chearing to nature, but to exceſs, and gorged, and filled themſelves in an extravagant manner: the Syriac verſion, inſtead of hearts, reads bodies; and one copy reads, your fleſh; and the laſt phraſe may be rendered, as it is in the ſame verſion, as unto, or for the day of ſlaughter; and ſo the Arabic verſion, ye have nouriſhed your hearts, as fattened for the day of ſlaughter; like beaſts that are fattened in order to be killed, ſo were they preparing and fitting up by their ſins for deſtruction.

Ver. 6. Ye have condemned and killed the juſt, &c.] Meaning not Chriſt, the juſt one, as ſome have thought; whom the Jewiſh Sanhedrim condemned as guilty of death, and got the ſentence paſſed upon him, and him to be crucified by Pontius Pilate, on the day of ſlaughter, at the time of the paſſover, as ſome connect the laſt clauſe of the preceding verſe with this; ſince the Apoſtle is not writing to the Jeruſalem Jews, nor to unbelievers, but to profeſſors of religion; tho' he might ſay, they did it, becauſe their nation did it: but rather this is to be underſtood of the poor ſaints, who were juſt, thro' the imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs to them, and lived ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly, and were harmleſs and inoffenſive in their converſation; who were evil ſpoken of, cenſured, and judged, and condemned in a raſh and uncharitable manner by their brethren; or were drawn to the judgment-ſeats by the rich, who obtained a judicial proceſs againſt them, and procured a ſentence of condemnation to paſs upon them unrighteouſly; and who killed them, by taking away their good names from them, and by withholding from them their ſupplies of life, the fruit of their own labour, whereby their lives were imbittered and made miſerable: and he doth not reſiſt you; it being neither in his power, nor in his inclination; but takes it patiently, quietly ſubmits, and makes no oppoſition: or God does not reſiſt you, as yet; he will do it ſhortly.

Ver. 7. Be patient therefore brethren, &c.] The Apoſtle here addreſſes himſelf to the poor who were oppreſſed by the rich men, and theſe he calls brethren, of whom he was not aſhamed; when he does not beſtow this title upon the rich, tho' profeſſors of the ſame religion; theſe poor brethren he adviſes to be patient under their ſufferings, to bear them with patience, unto the coming of the Lord; not to deſtroy Jeruſalem, but either at death, or at the laſt judgment; when he will take vengeance on their oppreſſors, and deliver them from all their troubles, and put them into the poſſeſſion of that kingdom, and glory, to which they are called; wherefore, in the mean while, he would have them be quiet and eaſy, not murmur againſt God, nor ſeek to take vengeance on men, but leave it to God, to whom it belongs, who will judge his people: behold the huſbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth; ripe fruit, which ariſes from the ſeed he ſows in the earth; and which may be called precious, becauſe uſeful both to man and beaſt; ſee Deut. xxxiii. 14, 15, 16. and between this, and the ſowing of the ſeed, is a conſiderable time, during which the huſbandman waits; and this may be an inſtruction in the preſent caſe: and hath patience for it until he receive the early and latter rain; the Jews had ſeldom rains any more than twice a year; the early, or former rain, was quickly after the feaſt of tabernacles[u], in the month Marcheſvan, or October, when the ſeed was ſown in the earth; and if it did not rain, they prayed for it, on the third or ſeventh day of the month[w]; and the latter rain was in Niſan, or March[x], juſt before harveſt; and to this diſtinction the paſſage refers.

Ver. 8. Be ye alſo patient, &c.] As well as the huſbandman, and like him; and wait for the rains and dews of divine grace to fall, and make fruitful, and for the ripe fruit of eternal life; and in the mean while chearfully and patiently bear all injuries, and oppreſſions: ſtabliſh your hearts; tho' the ſtate of the ſaints is ſtable, they being fixed in the everlaſting love of God, in the covenant of grace, in the hands of Chriſt, and on the rock of ages; yet their hearts are very unſtable, and ſo are their frames, and the exerciſe of grace in them, and need ſtabliſhing, which is God's work; which is often done by the means of the word and ordinances; and theſe the ſaints ſhould make uſe of, for the ſtabliſhing of their hearts: the ſenſe may be, take heart, be of good chear, don't be diſmayed, or faint, or ſink under your preſſures, but be of good courage, pluck up your ſpirits, lift up your heads: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh; when he will render tribulation to them that trouble them, free them from all their ſorrows and afflictions, and enter them into the joy of their Lord; which will be either at death, which was not very far off, or at the laſt day, which was drawing nearer and nearer, and which with God was near; with whom a thouſand years, are as one day.

Ver. 9. Grudge not one againſt another, brethren, &c.] On account of any happineſs, temporal or ſpiritual, which another enjoys; don't inwardly repine at it; or ſecretly ſigh and groan in an envious manner, at it, tho' nothing may be ſaid, as the word uſed ſignifies; much leſs complain of, accuſe and condemn one another, or meditate and ſeek revenge: leſt ye be condemned; hereafter, at the bar of Chriſt, by the judge of the whole earth, who is privy to the ſecret murmurings and grumblings, and the envious ſighs and groans of men; ſee Matt. vii. 1. behold the judge ſtandeth before the door; there is another that judgeth, who is the Lord, and he is at hand; he is juſt at the door; a little while and he will come, and not tarry; which may refer not to Chriſt's coming to deſtroy Jeruſalem, but to his ſecond coming to judgment, which will be quickly; for the Goſpel times are the laſt times; there will be no other age; at the end of this, Chriſt will come.

Ver. 10. Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have ſpoken in the name of the Lord, &c.] Men who have been highly honoured of God, with a gift of propheſying, or foretelling things to come; to whom God revealed his ſecrets, doing nothing without accquainting them with it; and who were ſent forth by him, and propheſied in his name, what were made known unto them; and yet, tho' theſe were his favourites, they ſuffered much; as cruel mockings, ſcourgings, impriſonment, famine, nakedneſs, and death in various ſhapes; ſome being ſtoned, others ſawn aſunder, and others killed by the ſword; all which they endured with incredible patience. And therefore the Apoſtle propoſes them to be taken, for an example of ſuffering affliction, and of patience; their afflictions were many and great, and yet they were very patient under them; and thro' faith and patience they went thro' them, and now inherit the promiſes; and ſo are a very proper example and pattern for New Teſtament ſaints to follow and copy after.

Ver. 11. Behold, we count them happy which endure, &c.] Affliction, with courage, conſtancy, and patience, and hold out to the end; for ſuch ſhall be ſaved; theirs is the kingdom of heaven; they are happy now, and will be ſo hereafter: the Spirit of God, and of glory, now reſts upon them; and it is an honour done them, that they are counted worthy to ſuffer for Chriſt; and they'll be glorified with him to all eternity; the conſideration of which may ſerve to encourage and increaſe patience. Ye have heard of the patience of Job; from the account which is given of him, and his patience, in the book that bears his name; how he behaved under every trial, which came, one upon the back of another; as the plundering of his ſubſtance, the loſs of his children, and of the health of his body; and yet in all this Job ſinned not, nor murmured againſt God, nor charged him fooliſhly, and was a mirrour of patience; and tho' he afterwards let fall ſome expreſſions of impatience, yet he was humbled for them, and brought to repentance: this ſhows, that as the Apoſtle James, ſo the Jews, to whom he writes, believed that there had been really ſuch a man as Job; and that the book which bears his name, is an authentic piece of holy ſcripture, and contains a narrative of matters of fact; or otherwiſe this reference to him would have been impertinent. How long Job endured the chaſtenings of the Lord, cannot be ſaid. The Jews[y] ſay, they continued on him twelve months, which they gather from Job vii. 3. And have ſeen the end of the Lord; that is, the happy end, or exitus, out of all his troubles; which the Lord gave to him, as the Oriental verſions add; for he gave him twice as much as he had before, and bleſſed his latter end more than his beginning, Job xlii. 10, 12. Some underſtand this of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, both of his great patience in ſufferings, in which he is an example to his people, and they would do well to look to, and conſider him; and of the end of his ſufferings, his glorious reſurrection from the dead, and ſeſſion at the right hand of God, where he is crowned with glory and honour; but the former ſenſe is beſt: that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy; as to Job, ſo to all his people; his paternal relation to them, engages his pity towards them; nor does he willingly afflict them; and when he does, he ſympathizes with them; he is afflicted with them, and in his pity redeems them; his bowels move towards them, and he earneſtly remembers them, and works deliverance for them, in his own time and way; and therefore it becomes them to be patient.

Ver. 12. But above all things, my brethren, ſwear not, &c.] As impatience ſhould not ſhew itſelf in ſecret ſighs, groans, murmurings, and repinings, ſo more eſpecially it ſhould not break forth in raſh oaths, or in profane ſwearing; for of ſuch ſort of ſwearing, and of ſuch oaths, is the Apoſtle to be underſtood; otherwiſe an oath is very lawful, when taken in the fear and name of God, and made by the living God, and is uſed for the confirmation of any thing of moment, and in order to put an end to ſtrife; God himſelf, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and angels, and good men, are in ſcripture ſometimes repreſented as ſwearing: and that the Apoſtle is ſo to be underſtood, appears from the form of ſwearing prohibited, neither by the heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath; of the like kind; ſuch as are forbidden, and cautioned, and reaſoned againſt by our Lord, in Matt. v. 34, 35, 36. to which the Apoſtle manifeſtly refers; ſee the note there. But let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay; that is, whenever there is an occaſion for affirming, or denying any thing, let it be done nakedly, ſimply, and abſolutely, without any form of oath annexed to it; for whatever addition of that kind is made, comes from evil, and tends to it, and is evil: leſt ye fall into condemnation; by the Lord; for either falſe, or raſh, or prophane ſwearing; for he will not ſuffer it to go unpuniſhed; ſee Exod. xx. 7. Some copies read, leſt ye fall into hypocriſy; or diſſimulation, and get into a habit and cuſtom of lying and deceiving, as common ſwearers do; and ſo reads the Arabic verſion.

Ver. 13. Is any among you afflicted? &c.] As the people of God generally are; they are commonly a poor, and an afflicted people; at leaſt there are many among them that are ſo, and many are their afflictions: thoſe whom Chriſt loves, as he did Lazarus, are not free from ſickneſſes and diſeaſes; and theſe are rather ſigns of love, than arguments againſt it; and when this is the caſe of any of the ſaints, what is to be done? let him pray; to God that can ſave him; in the name of Chriſt; under the influence of the Spirit; believing in the word of promiſe. Times of afflictions are proper times for prayer; there is then more eſpecially need of it; and God ſometimes lays his afflicting hand upon his people, when they have been negligent of their duty, and he has not heard of them for ſome time, in order to bring them near to him, to ſeek his face, pay him a viſit, and pour out a prayer before him; ſee Pſ. l. 15. Is any merry? in good heart and ſpirit, in a good frame of mind, as well as in proſperous circumſtances, in ſoul, body and eſtate: let him ſing pſalms; let him not only be inwardly joyful, as he ſhould be in proſperity, and be thankful to God for his many mercies, temporal and ſpiritual, he enjoys; but let him expreſs it vocally, and melodiouſly, by ſinging pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs: not that theſe are the only perſons that are to ſing pſalms, or this the only time, any more than that afflicted perſons are the only ones that are to pray, or the time of affliction the only time of prayer; but as affliction more eſpecially calls for prayer, ſo ſpiritual joy, and rejoicing in proſperous ſeaſons, for ſinging of pſalms: weeping, and ſinging of pſalms, were thought, by the Jews, inconſiſtent. Kimchi, on the title of the third pſalm, obſerves, that their Rabbins ſay, that when David went up the aſcent of the mount of Olives, he wept; and if he wept, why is this called a pſalm? and if a pſalm, למה בכה, why did he weep?

Ver. 14. Is any ſick among you? &c.] Which is often the caſe; the bodies of the ſaints, as well as others, are liable to a variety of diſeaſes; they are ſick, and ſometimes nigh unto death, as Epaphroditus was: and then, let him call for the elders of the church; in alluſion to the elders of the congregation of Iſrael, Lev. iv. 15. By theſe may be meant, either the elder members of the church, men of gravity and ſoundneſs in the faith, perſons of long ſtanding and experience; who have the gift and grace of prayer, and are not only capable of performing that duty, but of giving a word of counſel and advice to the ſick. It was a kind of proverbial ſaying of Ariſtophanes the Grammarian; "the works of young men, the counſels of middle "aged perſons, and ευχαι γεροντων, the prayers of "ancient men[z];" or rather officers of churches are meant, particularly paſtors, who are ſo called in ſcripture; theſe ſhould be ſent for in times of ſickneſs, ſickneſs, as well as phyſicians; and rather than they, ſince their prayers may be the means of healing both ſoul and body: ſo in former times, the prophets of God were ſent to in times of ſickneſs, for advice and aſſiſtance. It is a ſaying of R. Phinehas ben Chama[a], that "whoever has a "ſick perſon in his houſe, let him go to a wiſe "man, and he will ſeek mercy for him." And it follows here, and let them pray over him; or for him, for the recovery of his health: anointing him with oil, in the name of the Lord; which ſome think was only done in a common, medicinal way, oil being uſed much in the eaſtern countries for moſt diſorders; and ſo theſe elders uſed ordinary medicine, as well as prayer: or rather this refers to an extraordinary gift, which ſome elders had of healing diſeaſes, as ſometimes by touching, and by laying on of hands, or by expreſſing ſome words, and ſo by anointing with oil; ſee Mark vi. 13. which extraordinary gifts being now ceaſed, the rite or ceremony of anointing with oil, ceaſes in courſe: however, this paſſage gives no countenance to the extreme unction of the Papiſts; that of theirs being attended with many cuſtoms and ceremonies, which are not here made mention of; that being uſed, as is pretended, for the healing of the ſouls of men, whereas this was uſed for corporal healing; that is only performed when life is deſpaired of, and perſons are juſt going out of the world; whereas this was made uſe of to reſtore men to health, and that they might continue longer in it, as follows.

Ver. 15. And the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, &c.] That is, the prayer of the elders, being put up in faith by them, and in which the ſick perſon joins by faith; ſuch a prayer is a means of bringing down from God a bleſſing on the ſick man, and of reſtoring him to his former health: and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up; from his bed of ſickneſs, on which he is laid, and bring him forth to praiſe his name, and to fear and glorify him. And if he have committed ſins; not that it is a queſtion whether he has or no, for no man lives without ſin, nor the commiſſion of it; but the ſenſe is, if he has been guilty of any ſins, which God in particular has taken notice of, and on account of which he has laid his chaſtizing hand upon him, in order to bring him to a ſenſe of them, and to acknowledge them; which is ſometimes the caſe, tho' not always, at the ſame time that his bodily health is reſtored: they ſhall be forgiven him; he ſhall have a diſcovery, and an application of pardoning grace to him: and indeed the removing the ſickneſs or diſeaſe, may be called the forgiveneſs of his ſins, which is ſometimes the ſenſe of this phraſe in ſcripture, as in 1 Kings viii. 34, 36, 50.

Ver. 16. Confeſs your faults one to another, &c.] Which muſt be underſtood of ſins committed againſt one another; which ſhould be acknowledged, and repentance for them declared, in order to mutual forgiveneſs and reconciliation; and this is neceſſary at all times, and eſpecially on beds of affliction, and when death and eternity ſeem near approaching: wherefore this makes nothing for auricular confeſſion, uſed by the Papiſts; which is of all ſins, whereas this is only of ſuch, by which men offend one another; that is made to prieſts, but this is made by the ſaints to one another, by the offending party to him that is offended, for reconciliation, whereby a good end is anſwered; whereas there is none by the other, and very often bad conſequences follow. And pray for one another, that ye may be healed; both corporally and ſpiritually: the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. Not any man's prayer; not the prayer of a prophane ſinner, for God heareth not ſinners; nor of hypocrites and formal profeſſors; but of the righteous man, who is juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and has the truth of grace in him, and lives ſoberly and righteouſly; for a righteous man often deſigns a good man, a gracious man, one that is ſincere and upright, as Job, Joſeph of Arimathea, and others; tho' not without ſin, as the perſon inſtanced in the following verſe ſhows; Elias, who was a man of like paſſions, but a juſt man, and his prayer was prevalent: and not any prayer of a righteous man is of avail, but that which is effectual fervent; that has power, and energy, and life in it; which is with the ſpirit, and with the underſtanding, with the heart, even with a true heart, and in faith; and which is put up with fervency, and not in a cold, lukewarm, lifeleſs, formal and cuſtomary way: it is but one word in the original text; and the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, daily; that prayer which is conſtant and continual, and without ceaſing, and is importunate; this prevails and ſucceeds, as the parable of the widow, and the unjuſt judge ſhows. Some tranſlate the word inſpired; the Spirit of God breathes into men the breath of ſpiritual life, and they live, and being quickened by him, they breathe; and prayer is the breath of the ſpiritual man, and is no other than the reverberation of the Spirit of God in him; and ſuch prayer cannot fail of ſucceſs: it may be rendered inwrought; true prayer is not what is written in a book, but what is wrought in the heart, by the Spirit of God; who is the enditer of prayer, who impreſſes the minds of his people with a ſenſe of their wants, and fills their mouths with arguments, and puts ſtrength into them to plead with God, and makes interceſſion for them according to the will of God; and ſuch prayer is always heard, and regarded by him: this has great power with God, whatever is aſked, believing, is received; God can deny nothing prayed for in this manner; it has great power with Chriſt, as Jacob had over the angel, when he wreſtled with him; and as the woman of Canaan, when ſhe importuned him, on account of her daughter, and would have no denial: ſuch prayer has often been of much avail againſt ſatan, who has been diſpoſſeſſed by it; even the moſt ſtubborn kind of devils have been diſlodged by faſting and prayer: it has often been the means of preſerving kingdoms and nations, when invaded by enemies, as the inſtances of Jehoſhaphat and Hezekiah ſhew; and of removing judgments from a people, as was often done, thro' the prayers of Moſes, as when fire, and fiery ſerpents were ſent among them; and of bringing down bleſſings, as rain from heaven by Elijah; and of delivering particular perſons from trouble, as Peter was delivered from priſon, thro' the inceſſant prayer of the church for him: and this power, and efficacy, and prevalence of prayer, does not ariſe from any intrinſic worth and merit in it, but from the grace of the Spirit, who influences, and endites it, directs to it, and aſſiſts in it; and from the powerful mediation, precious blood, and efficacious ſacrifice of Chriſt; and from the promiſe of God and Chriſt, who have engaged, that whatever is aſked according to the will of God, and in the name of Chriſt, ſhall be done. The Jews have had formerly a great notion of prayer: the power of prayer, they ſay[b], is ſtrong; and extol it above all other ſervices: they ſay [c], it is better than good works, or than offerings and ſacrifices; and particularly, the prayer of righteous men: ſays R. Eliezer [d], "to what is, תפלתן של צדיקים, the "prayer of righteous men like? it is like a ſhovel: "the ſenſe is, that as the ſhovel turns the corn on "the floor, from one place to another, ſo prayer "turns the holy bleſſed God from wrath to "mercy."

[b] Zohar in Exod. fol. 100. 1.

Ver. 17. Elias was a man ſubject to like paſſions as we are, &c.] The Apoſtle gives an inſtance of earneſt and fervent prayer, and of the efficacy of it in Elias; who is the ſame with the prophet Elijah, or Elijah the Tiſhbite; who, by the Septuagint in Mal. iv. 5. is called Elias, as here, and elſewhere, in the New Teſtament: of him James ſays, that he was a man, contrary to the notion of ſome of the Jewiſh writers, who affirm, that Elijah was not born of a father and mother, but was an angel, who was clothed with the four elements of the world [e]; but he was not only born, but born in ſin, as others are, and was by nature no better than others; and he himſelf confeſſes, that he was no better than his fathers, 1 Kings xix. 4. And the Apoſtle further obſerves, concerning him, that he was ſubject to like paſſions as we are; both in body and ſoul; he was ſubject to hunger and wearineſs, and was fed by ravens, and by the widow of Sarepta, and by an angel; and he was ſubject to reproach, affliction, and perſecution, being charged by Ahab, as a troubler of Iſrael, and perſecuted by Jezabel, who ſought his life; he was a mortal man, and liable to death, and requeſted to die, and muſt have died, had it not been for the wonderful power of God, which tranſlated him, that he ſhould not ſee death; and he was not free from ſinful paſſions, as impatience, fear, and unbelief, 1 Kings xvii. 20. and xix. 3, 4, 10, 18. And he prayed earneſtly; or prayed in prayer; an Hebraiſm: it is ſaid [f] of one, that, צלי צלותיה, he prayed his prayer; and of others, that, צלאן צלותין, they prayed prayers; tho' the phraſe here ſeems to deſign ſomething more than bare praying; a praying, not merely externally, or formally, and with the lip only, but with the ſpirit, and with the underſtanding, and with the heart engaged in it, with inwrought prayer. The prophet prayed with much earneſtneſs, with great vehemence and intenſeneſs of ſpirit, as this Hebraiſm denotes; his prayer was fervent, and it was conſtant, and importunate, and was continued, till he had an anſwer: he may be thought to have prayed each of the ſeven times, he ſent his ſervant to look out for a ſign of rain, 1 Kings xviii. 43. he firſt prayed, that it might not rain; this is not recorded in expreſs words, but may be gathered from 1 Kings xvii. 1. where he ſays, as the Lord God of Iſrael liveth, before whom I ſtand, there ſhall not be dew, nor rain, theſe years, but according to my word; ſo the paſſage is underſtood by the Jewiſh interpreters: the phraſe, before whom I ſtand, is paraphraſed by one of them [g] thus; before whom I am uſed to ſtand, בתפילה, in prayer; and it is a common ſaying with the Jews, there is no ſtanding ever mentioned, but prayer is intended; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 5. And the other phraſe, according to my word, is, by another [h], interpreted to this ſenſe, that the rain ſhould not deſcend naturally, according to the cuſtom of the world, but it ſhould deſcend when Elijah, ויתפלל עליו, prayed for it; and ſo it was: and it rained not on the earth; on the land of Iſrael, which is only meant; it rained in other parts of the world, for the drought in thoſe times was not univerſal: and this was, by the ſpace of three years and ſix months; which exactly agrees with the words of Chriſt, Luke iv. 25. and this was in judgment upon the land of Iſrael, for the idolatry it was filled with in the times of Ahab: and this inſtance of prayer is mentioned, not with a view that it ſhould be imitated; for we are not to pray for judgments, unleſs we have a divine order for it, as Elijah had; but to ſhew the efficacy of prayer made according to the will of God.

Ver. 18. And he prayed again, &c.] 1 Kings xviii. 42, 43. Here alſo is no expreſs mention of his prayer, but it may be concluded from his geſtures; and ſo the Jewiſh interpreters underſtand theſe words, Elijah went up to the top of Carmel, להתפלל, to pray, and he caſt himſelf down upon the earth, להתפלל על הגשמים, to pray for rain; and he put his face between his knees, ויתפלל, and prayed, and ſaid to his ſervant, go up now, look toward the ſea; and this he ſaid while he was, בתפילתו, in his prayer [i]: and the effect of this his prayer was, and the heaven gave rain; ſee 1 Kings xviii. 45. And the earth brought forth her fruit; which for the years paſt it had not; hence there was a ſore famine in the land, 1 Kings xviii. 2. Now the Apoſtle choſe to inſtance in ſuch a caſe, becauſe it was a common thing for the Jews to aſk for rain: we often read of ſuch a doctor, that he prayed for rain, and it came; and of another, that he aſked for the rains, and they deſcended [k]: and his view is to obſerve, that the weakneſs and infirmities of the ſaints ought not to diſcourage them from prayer; and that they ſhould be earneſt and fervent in it, as was Elias, a man of like paſſions with themſelves.

Ver. 19. Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, &c.] Either from Chriſt, who is the truth, by departing from him, forſaking his ways, worſhip, and ordinances; or from the ſcriptures of truth, not ſpeaking according to them, and embracing notions that are contrary unto them; or from the Goſpel, the word of truth, from the doctrine of faith, and from uprightneſs of life and converſation, after having made a profeſſion of chriſtianity; for this is to be underſtood of one who has embraced the chriſtian religion, become a member of a church, and has walked in the path of truth and holineſs, but now fallen into error, either in principle, or in practice, or both: and one convert him; or turn him from his error, to truth again; for this deſigns not firſt converſion, or the turning of a ſinner from darkneſs to light, from the power of ſatan to God, and from the evil of a man's heart and ways, and from a dependence on his own righteouſneſs, to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to look to him for righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation, which is wholly and entirely God's work, and not man's; but converſion after backſlidings; for a reſtoration from a fallen condition is ſometimes ſo called, Pſ. li. 12, 13. Luke xxii. 32. and which one brother may be an inſtrument of to another, by ſhowing him, and ſetting before him, the evil of his errors, whether in principle or practice; and by inſtructing him in the doctrines of the Goſpel, and in the duties of religion; and by reproving him in meekneſs, and according to the rules of Chriſt; which means are ſometimes bleſſed for the gaining of ſuch; and which may be called converſion: and alſo, this is ſometimes done by praying for him; and which ſeems chiefly to be intended here; for from praying for the healing of the diſeaſes of the body, the Apoſtle proceeds to encourage the ſaints to pray for one another, for the healing of the diſeaſes of the mind; and ſuggeſts, that if prayer avails to the one, it may to the other; and which is the moſt deſireable, and the greateſt bleſſing, as follows.

Ver. 20. Let him know, &c.] And obſerve it for his encouragement: that he which converteth a ſinner from the error of his way; who is the inſtrument of reſtoring a backſliding profeſſor, for ſuch an one is meant by a ſinner, and not a prophane perſon; or of turning a poor bewildered believer, who is got out of the way of truth and holineſs, into the right way again; or of convincing him of the error of his way, whether it be in point of doctrine, or of duty; and ſo of bringing him to the fold of Chriſt again, from whence he has ſtrayed: ſhall ſave a ſoul from death; not efficiently, but inſtrumentally, as in 1 Tim. iv. 16. for otherwiſe Chriſt is the only ſaviour; and he will be the means of ſaving a ſoul, which is of more worth than a world; and that from death, the ſecond death, which lies in the ſeparation of the ſoul from God, and in a ſenſe of his wrath; which apoſtacy threatens with, and leads unto, if grace prevents not. The Alexandrian copy, and others, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, his ſoul; but the common reading is more emphatical; the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, his own ſoul; and the Ethiopic verſion himſelf, as reſpecting him that is the inſtrument of the converſion of the other, and not the perſon converted: and ſhall hide a multitude of ſins; either his own, as the ſame verſions read; and then the ſenſe is, he ſhall be bleſſed with a diſcovery and application of the forgiveneſs of all his ſins, tho' they have been many and great; or rather the ſins of the perſon converted. Sin is only covered by the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and thereby it is ſo covered, as not to be ſeen by the eye of vindictive juſtice, and in ſuch manner, as that the perſons of thoſe who are covered therewith, are all fair, without fault, and unreproveable in the ſight of God; and tho' their ſins are many, even a multitude, they are blotted out as a thick cloud, and are abundantly pardoned; yea, all their ſins are covered, be they ever ſo many, for God forgives all treſpaſſes, for Chriſt's ſake; and the blood of Chriſt cleanſes from all ſin, and his righteouſneſs juſtifies from all: and whoever is an inſtrument of bringing a backſlider to a ſenſe of the evil of his ways, and to true repentance for the ſame; as he, upon ſuch repentance, has his iniquities cauſed to paſs from him, or, in other words, to be covered, as from the ſight of God, ſo from his own; he may be ſaid to be the inſtrument of this alſo.

AN
EXPOSITION, &c.

The Firſt Epiſtle General of PETER.

THAT Simon, called Peter, an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, was the writer of this Epiſtle, is not queſtioned by any; nor was the genuineneſs and authentickneſs of it ever made a doubt of. Euſebius ſays[a], that it had been confeſſed by all, and received without controverſy; and that the ancients, without any ſcruple, had made uſe of it in their writings. It is called his general or catholic Epiſtle, becauſe it was not written to any particular perſon, or to any particular church, but in general, to a number of chriſtians diſperſed in ſeveral places. The time when this Epiſtle was written, is not certain; ſome place it in the year of Chriſt 44 or 45, and ſo make it to be the moſt ancient of all the Epiſtles, and which is the more commonly received opinion: but Dr. Lightfoot[b] places it in the year 65, becauſe in it the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the end of all things being at hand, and of the fiery trial juſt coming on them, and of judgment beginning at the houſe of God, ch. iv. 7, 12, 17. all which he applies to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; tho' others fix it to 61, in the ſeventh year of Nero[c]. The place from whence it ſeems to be written was Babylon, ch. v. 13. which is to be underſtood not figuratively, either of Rome or Jeruſalem, but properly of Babylon, the metropolis of Chaldea, or Aſſyria. The perſons to whom it is written were Jews, at leaſt chiefly; for there might be ſome Gentiles among them, who may be taken notice of in ſome parts of the Epiſtle; but the principal part were Jews, as appears from their being called the ſtrangers of the diſperſion, or, as James calls them, the twelve tribes ſcattered abroad; from the mention of the tradition of their fathers; from their having their converſation honeſt among the Gentiles, and their paſt life among them; from urging ſubjection to the civil magiſtrates among the heathens, and the right uſe of their chriſtian liberty as to the ceremonies of the law; and from the near deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which could only affect them; and from the uſe made of the writings of the Old Teſtament, and the authority of the prophets; ſee ch. i. 1, 18. and ii. 12. and iv. 3. and ii. 13, 16. and iv. 7, 12, 17. as well as from the ſecond Epiſtle, which was written to the ſame; ſee ch. i. 19. and ii. 1. and iii. 1, 2, 15. in which he ſeems to refer to the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, written by Paul, as to theſe. And beſides, Peter was the miniſter of the circumciſion, or of the circumciſed Jews, as Paul was of the Gentiles; and even thoſe paſſages in this Epiſtle, which ſeem moſt likely to concern the Gentiles, may be underſtood of the Jews, as which ſpeak of their ignorance, idolatry, and having not been a people, ch. i. 14. and iv. 3. and ii. 10. which were true of them before converſion, and as living among Gentiles. The occaſion of writing it was this; Peter meeting with Sylvanus, a faithful brother, and who had been a companion of the Apoſtle Paul, he takes this opportunity of ſending a letter by him to the converted Jews, diſperſed among the Gentile countries, where he, with Paul, and others, travelled: the deſign of which is to teſtify of the true doctrine of grace, in which they were agreed; ſee ch. v. 12. And accordingly in it he does treat of the doctrine of electing grace, of redeeming grace, of regenerating and ſanctifying grace, and of perſevering grace; and exhorts believers to the exerciſe of grace, of faith, hope, and love, and to the diſcharge of ſuch duties becoming their ſeveral ſtations, whereby they might evidence to others the truth of grace in themſelves, and adorn the doctrine of the grace of God, and recommend it to others: and particularly he exhorts them patiently to bear all afflictions and perſecutions they ſhould meet with, for their profeſſion of the true grace of God, in which he encourages them to ſtand ſtedfaſt: and this is the general ſcope and deſign of the Epiſtle.

CHAP. I.

IN this chapter, after the inſcription and ſalutation, the Apoſtle gives thanks to God for various bleſſings of grace beſtowed, or to be beſtowed upon the perſons he writes to; and then, with the beſt of arguments and motives, urges them to the performance of ſeveral duties of religion. In the inſcription, the perſon who is the writer of the epiſtle is deſcribed, both by his name, and by his office; and alſo the perſons to whom it is ſent, by their outward condition, ſtrangers diſperſed thro' ſeveral countries particularly mentioned, and by their ſpiritual eſtate, elect men; the ſource and ſpring of which election is, the foreknowledge of God the Father; the means, the ſanctification of the Spirit; and the end, obedience, and ſprinkling of the blood of Chriſt; and to theſe the Apoſtle wiſhes a multiplication of grace and peace, ver. 1, 2. and then he gives thanks to God for the regeneration of them; the efficient cauſe of which, is God the Father; the moving cauſe, his abundant mercy; the means, the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead; the end, a lively hope of a glorious inheritance, ver. 3, 4. and next follows a deſcription of regenerate ones; they are ſuch who are kept by the power of God through faith, unto ſalvation; who rejoice in hope of that ſalvation, tho' now for a little while are ſorrowful, by reaſon of afflictions, which are for the trial of their faith; they are believers in Chriſt, lovers of him, and rejoice in him, and ſhall at laſt receive the end of their faith, the ſalvation of their ſouls, ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. the excellency of which ſalvation is ſet forth from the concern the prophets had in it, the ſcrutiny they made into it, and the revelation of it made to them; from the concern the Apoſtles had in it, and their report of it, and from the deſire of angels to look into it, ver. 10, 11, 12. upon which the Apoſtle exhorts to the exerciſe of various graces and duties, to attention of mind, to ſobriety, to a conſtant hope of eternal glory, and to holineſs of life and converſation, ver. 13, 14. the arguments engaging to which, are taken from the nature of God, who had called them by his grace, ver. 15, 16. from their concern with him, as a father, and a judge; from their ſtate and condition, as ſojourners in this world, and from their redemption by the blood of Chriſt from a vain converſation, ver. 17, 18, 19. and of Chriſt the redeemer of them, many things are ſaid; as that he was ordained before the foundation of the world, to be the redeemer; was manifeſted in human nature in theſe laſt days, for the ſake of ſuch that believe; was raiſed from the dead, and glorified, that there might be a ſufficient foundation for the exerciſe of faith and hope in God, ver. 20, 21. and next, the Apoſtle exhorts to brotherly love, in purity, and with fervency; from the conſideration of the internal purification of them by the Spirit, through obedience to the truth; and from their regeneration, the cauſe of which was not corruptible, but incorruptible ſeed; and the means, the living and abiding word of God, ver. 22, 23. which is illuſtrated by a paſſage out of Iſ. xl. 6, 7, 8. ſetting forth the frailty and mortality of men, and the tranſitorineſs of all outward enjoyments; to which is oppoſed, the duration of the everlaſting Goſpel, the means of regeneration, ver. 24, 25.

Ver. 1. Peter an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] The writer of this epiſtle deſcribes himſelf firſt by his name, Peter, the ſame with Cephas, which ſignifies a rock, or ſtone; a name given him by Chriſt at his firſt converſion, and which reſpected his after firmneſs, ſolidity, reſolution, and conſtancy; for his former name was Simeon, or Simon, as ſometimes called; ſee Matt. iv. 18. John i. 42. and he further deſcribes himſelf by his office, as an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt; being one of the twelve Apoſtles, and the firſt of that number; who ſaw Chriſt in the fleſh, was converſant with him, had his call and commiſſion immediately from him, and was qualified by him to preach the Goſpel; and was ſent out firſt into Judea, and then into all the world to publiſh it, with a power of working miracles to confirm it; and this his character he makes mention of, in order to give the greater weight and authority to his epiſtle; and it is to be obſerved, that he does not ſtile himſelf, as his pretended ſucceſſor does, the head of the church, and Chriſt's vicar on earth; nor does he call himſelf the prince of the Apoſtles, but only an Apoſtle, as he was upon an equal foot with the reſt. The perſons he writes to are, the ſtrangers ſcattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia, and Bithynia; theſe Jews here intended, are called ſtrangers; not in a metaphorical ſenſe, either becauſe they were, as the wicked are, eſtranged from the womb, and alienated from the life of God, as all unconverted men are, and as they were before converſion; for now they were no more ſtrangers, in this ſenſe: or becauſe of their unſettled ſtate and condition in this life; having no continuing city, and ſeeking one to come, an heavenly country; and living as pilgrims and ſtrangers, in which reſpect they are indeed ſo ſtiled, ch. ii. 11. but in a civil ſenſe, and not as the Gentiles were, aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers to the covenants of promiſe, for theſe were Jews; but on account of their not being in their own land, and in a foreign country, and therefore ſaid to be ſcattered, or the ſtrangers of the diſperſion; either on account of the perſecution at the death of Stephen, when multitudes of the converted Jews were ſcattered abroad, not only throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, but as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch; ſee Acts viii. 1, 4. and xi. 19. and ſo it may be afterwards, throughout the places here mentioned; or elſe theſe were ſome remains of the ten tribes carried captive by Salmanaſſer, and of the two tribes, by Nebuchadnezzar; or rather the diſperſion of the Greeks, mentioned in John vii. 35. under the Macedonians, by Ptolomy Lagus: how ever, there were Jews of Pontus, who inhabited that place, and of ſuch we read in Acts ii. 9. who came to worſhip, at the feaſt of Pentecoſt, ſome of which were converted to the chriſtian faith, and being mentioned firſt, has occaſioned this epiſtle to be called, both by Tertullian [a], and Cyprian [b], the epiſtle to the Pontians. Perhaps theſe Jews converted on the day of Pentecoſt, on their return hither, laid the firſt foundation of a Goſpel-church ſtate in this country: it is a tradition of the ancients, mentioned by Euſebius [c], that Peter himſelf preached here, and ſo, very likely, formed the chriſtians he found, and thoſe that were converted by him, into

Goſpel churches; and it appears by a letter of Dionyſius, biſhop of Corinth[d], that there were churches in Pontus, in the ſecond century, particularly at Amaſtris, the biſhop of which was one Palma, whom he commends, and Focas is ſaid to be biſhop of Syncope, in the ſame age; and in the third century, Gregory, and Athenodorus, diſciples of Origen, were biſhops in this country[e]; the former was a very famous man, called Gregory Thaumaturgus, the wonder-worker, and was biſhop of Neocæſarea: in the fourth century, there was a church in the ſame place, of which, Longinus was biſhop, as appears from the Nicene church, at which he and other biſhops in Pontus were preſent; and in this age, in the times of Diocleſian, many in this country endured moſt ſhocking ſufferings, related by Euſebius[f]; and in the ſame century, Helladius is ſaid to govern the churches of Pontus; and in the fifth century, we read of churches in Pontus, reformed by Chryſoſtom; in this age Theodorus was biſhop of Heraclea, and Themiſtius of Amaſtris, both in this province, and both theſe biſhops were in the Chalcedon council; and in the ſixth century, there were churches in Pontus, whoſe biſhops were in the fifth ſynod held at Rome and Conſtantinople; and ſo there were in the ſeventh and eighth centuries[g]. Galatia, next mentioned, is that part of the leſſer Aſia, called Gallo Græcia, in which were ſeveral churches, to whom the Apoſtle Paul wrote his epiſtle, called the epiſtle to the Galatians; ſee the notes on Acts xvi. 6. and on Gal. i. 2. Cappadocia, according to Ptolomey[h], was bounded on the weſt by Galatia, on the ſouth by Cilicia, on the eaſt by Armenia the great, on the north by part of the Euxine Pontus; it had many famous cities in it, as Solinus[i] ſays; as Archelais, Neocæſarea, Melita, and Mazaca. The Jews oftentimes talk[k] of going from Cappadocia to Lud, or Lydda; ſo that according to them, it ſeems to be near to that place, or at leaſt, that there was a place near Lydda, ſo called; of this ſee more in the note on Acts ii. 9. From this country alſo there were Jews at Jeruſalem on the day of Pentecoſt, ſome of whom were converted; and here likewiſe the Apoſtle Peter is ſaid to preach, as before obſerved of Pontus, and who probably founded a church or churches here, in the firſt century; and in the ſecond century, according to Tertullian[l], there were believers in Chriſt dwelling in this country; and in the third century, Euſebius[m] makes mention of Neon, biſhop of Larandis, and Celſus, biſhop of Iconium, both in Cappadocia; there was alſo Phedimus of Amaſea, in the ſame country, in this age, and at Ceſarea in Cappadocia, ſeveral martyrs ſuffered under Decius; and in this century, Stephen, biſhop of Rome, threatned to excommunicate ſome biſhops in Cappadocia, becauſe they had re-baptized ſome that had been hereticks: in the fourth century there were churches in Cappadocia, of one of which, namely, at Saſimi, the famous Gregory Nazianzen was firſt biſhop, and afterwards of Nazianzum, as was alſo the famous Baſil of Cæſarea, in the ſame country; hither the perſecution under Diocleſian reached, and many had their thighs broken, as Euſebius relates[n]; from hence were ſent ſeveral biſhops, who aſſiſted at the council of Nice, under Conſtantine, and at another held at Jeruſalem: in the fifth century there were churches in Cappadocia, in ſeveral places, the names of whoſe biſhops are on record; as Firmus, Thalaſſius, Theodoſius, Daniel, Ariſtomachus, Patricius, and others: in the ſixth century there were many famous churches in this country, whoſe biſhops were in the fifth ſynod held at Rome and Conſtantinople; and in the ſeventh century, there were ſeveral of them in the ſixth ſynod of Conſtantinople; and in the eighth century, mention is made of biſhops of ſeveral churches in Cappadocia, in the ſecond Nicene ſynod; and even in the ninth century, there were chriſtians in theſe parts[o]. Aſia, here intends neither the leſſer nor the greater Aſia, but Aſia, properly ſo called; and which, according to Solinus[p], Lycia and Phrygia bounded on the eaſt, the Ægean ſhores on the weſt, the Egyptian ſea on the ſouth, and Paphlagonia on the north; the chief city in it was Epheſus, and ſo it is diſtinguiſhed from Phrygia, Galatia, Myſia, and Bithynia, in Acts xvi. 6, 7. as here from Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, and Bithynia, and from Pontus, and Cappadocia, in Acts ii. 9. tho' they were all in leſſer Aſia. Here alſo were Jews converted on the day of Pentecoſt; and here likewiſe Peter is ſaid to preach; and by him, and by the Apoſtle John, who alſo lived and died in this country, churches were planted; and churches there were here, even in the ſeventh century, as diſtinct from the other Aſia greater or leſs; for out of it biſhops were ſent to, and were preſent at, the ſixth council at Conſtantinople, whoſe names are recorded; yea, in the eighth century, there were churches and biſhops, one of which, perſuaded Leo to remove images from places of worſhip; and another was in the Nicene ſynod[q]. The laſt place mentioned is Bithynia, of which, ſee the note on Acts xvi. 7. And tho' the Apoſtle Paul, and his companions, were not ſuffered at a certain time to go into Bithynia, and preach the Goſpel there, yet it is certain that it was afterwards carried thither; and as Peter is ſaid to preach in Pontus, Aſia, and Cappadocia, ſo likewiſe in Bithynia; here, according to the Roman martyrology, Luke the evangeliſt died; and according to tradition, Prochorus, one of the ſeven deacons, in Acts vi. 5. was biſhop of Nicomedia, in this country; and Tychicus, of whom the Apoſtle Paul makes frequent mention, was biſhop of Chalcedon, another city in it; and who are both ſaid to be of the ſeventy diſciples; ſee the note on Luke x. 1. and it is certain, from the teſtimony of Pliny[r], an heathen writer, in a letter of his to Trajan the emperor, written about the year 104, that there were then great numbers of chriſtians in Bithynia; not only the cities, but the towns and villages were full of them; and in the third century, the perſecution under Diocleſian raged, particularly at Nicomedia, where Anthimus, the paſtor of the church in that place, had his head cut off, as Euſebius[s] relates; in the beginning of the fourth century, Nice, in Bithynia, became famous for the council held there under Conſtantine, againſt Arius; and in this century, biſhops from Bithynia aſſiſted at a ſynod held at Tyre, in Phenicia; and in the fifth century was held a ſynod at Chalcedon, a city in this country, againſt the Neſtorian hereſy; and the names of ſeveral biſhops of Chalcedon, Nicomedia, and Nice, who lived in this age, are on record; and in the ſixth century, there were biſhops from theſe ſeveral places, and others, who were preſent in the fifth ſynod at Conſtantinople; as there were alſo in the ſeventh century, at the ſixth ſynod held at the ſame place, whoſe names are particularly mentioned; and in the eighth century, biſhops from hence were in the Nicene ſynod; and even in the ninth century, there were ſome that bore the chriſtian name in Bithynia [s]. In theſe places however, it ſeems, dwelt many Jews, who were converted to Chriſt, to whom the Apoſtle inſcribes this epiſtle, and whom he further deſcribes in the following verſe.

Ver. 2. Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, &c.] Not to any office, as to that of biſhops or preſbyters; for tho' the Apoſtle writes to ſome of them under this character, ch. v. 1. yet not all; nor were they ſo called, as a nation, for they were perſons ſcattered about in ſeveral countries; nor as a church, for they are not wrote to as ſuch; nor does this character merely deſign their effectual vocation; tho' as that is a fruit, and evidence of election, it is ſometimes ſo ſtiled, and the ſaints called by grace, are ſaid to be choſen; ſee John xv. 19. 1 Cor. i. 26. but it intends the eternal election of thoſe perſons both to grace and glory; which the Apoſtle knew of, not by divine revelation, or any particular diſcovery made to him; but he concluded it in a judgment of charity, they being all under a profeſſion of faith in Chriſt; and he having reaſon to believe that the greater part of them were truly partakers of that faith which demonſtrated them to be the elect of God: the cauſe, ſpring, and ſource of their election was, the foreknowledge of God the Father; to whom election is commonly aſcribed, agreeable to the order of the divine perſons in the Trinity, and their diſtinct parts in the œconomy of ſalvation, tho' not to the excluſion of the Son and Spirit: and by this his foreknowledge is meant, not his eternal, univerſal, and infallible knowledge, and which is infinite, and reaches to all things and perſons, preſent, future, or poſſible; for this has for its objects perſons whom God never predeſtinated and choſe; tho' certain it is that he knows, and foreknows all whom he does predeſtinate and chuſe; nor does it intend the mere decree of election, or God's eternal purpoſe and reſolution to chuſe, but the ſpring and ſource of that act of his; and much leſs does it mean a bare preſcience of men, and choice of them, upon a foreſight of faith, holineſs, good works, and perſeverance therein; for theſe are all, when genuine, the fruits and effects of election, which are included in it, and ſecured and brought about by it; but the ſovereign grace, good-will, and pleaſure of God, or the everlaſting love of God the Father, which is the cauſe of, and has given birth to the act of election, is meant by foreknowledge, joined with affection, delight, and approbation; knowledge, and foreknowledge, as aſcribed to the divine being, often ſignify ſuch things; ſee Pſ. i. 6. 2 Tim. ii. 19. Rom. viii. 29, 30. and xi. 1, 2. and ſuch a knowledge God the Father had of the perſons of the elect from all eternity; and which is the ground and foundation of his chuſing them to grace and glory, and not any thing in them, or done by them, or any thing out of himſelf; no other reaſon can be given of it, than his own grace, his pure love, and ſovereign good-will and pleaſure: the means follow, through which they were choſen, through ſanctification of the ſpirit; as in 2 Theſſ. ii. 13. ſee the note there. The ends to which the ſaints are choſen, are, unto obedience and ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt; by obedience is meant, either the obedience of elect men to Chriſt; which lies in obeying the truth of the Goſpel; called the obedience of faith; and ſo is the ſame with the belief of the truth, which goes along in election with the ſanctification of the Spirit, in 2 Theſſ. ii. 13. and in ſubmiſſion to Goſpel ordinances, and doing all good works in the name, faith, and ſtrength of Chriſt; and which alſo are fruits and effects, and ſo not cauſes of divine predeſtination; ſee Eph. ii. 10. and alſo follow upon the ſanctification of the Spirit: or elſe the obedience of Chriſt is intended; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, unto the obedience of Jeſus Chriſt; which lay in his performing the precepts of the law, and bearing the penalty of it, death; and by which the choſen ſeed are juſtified, or made righteous in the ſight of God, and have a title to eternal life and glory, and are ſafe from wrath to come; and to the enjoyment of this grace, they are choſen of God the Father; and between theſe two, predeſtination and juſtification, there is a cloſe and inſeparable connexion; ſo that they that are intereſted in the one, are in the other; ſee Rom. viii. 30. the ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt, does not denote a ſmall quantity of it, for it was ſhed and poured out in great abundance; but is ſaid in alluſion to the ſprinkling of the blood of the paſſover-lamb, Exod. xii. 22, 23. or to the ſprinkling of the blood on the book of the covenant, and on the people at mount Sinai, Exod. xxiv. 8. or to other ſprinklings of blood in their legal ſacrifices: the application of the blood of Chriſt to the heart, by the Spirit of God, for cleanſing, pardon, and juſtification, is meant; which affords true, ſolid conſcience-peace and joy now, and entitles to eternal happineſs and glory; all which are ſecured by electing grace. The ſalutation of theſe perſons follows: grace unto you and peace be multiplied; which is much the ſame that is uſed by the Apoſtle Paul in all his epiſtles; ſee the note on Rom. i. 7. only Peter adds the word multiplied; which makes it more expreſs, and the ſenſe more clear: he means an enlarged view of intereſt in the love of God, an increaſe of grace out of the fullneſs of it in Chriſt, and of Goſpel light, and of the ſeveral gifts of the Spirit; and alſo of all proſperity outward and inward, of a conſcience-peace through the blood of Chriſt, which paſſeth all underſtanding, and a more eſtabliſhed and well-grounded hope of enjoying eternal peace hereafter. The phraſe is Jewiſh, and is uſed in their ſalutations in this form, שלמכון יסגי, let your peace be multiplied [t].

Ver. 3. Bleſſed be the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] The epiſtle begins here with thankſgiving to God, or an aſcription of bleſſing, praiſe, and glory to him; for this does not mean an invoking or conferring a bleſſing on him; neither of which can be, for there is not a greater than he to be invoked, nor can any thing be added to his bleſſedneſs: but God may be bleſſed by his creatures when they ſpeak well of him, and his wonderful works of creation, providence, and grace; when they aſcribe all their mercies, ſpiritual and temporal to him; give him the glory of them, and expreſs their thanks for them in heart, lip, and life; and ſuch a bleſſing of God for a ſpecial and ſpiritual favour, the grace of regeneration is intended here: by God is meant, not God eſſentially, but perſonally conſidered, even God the Father, as is clearly expreſſed: the words are rendred in the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, without the copulative and, thus, bleſſed be God the Father; and if that is retained, they may be rendred thus, bleſſed be God, even the Father; as in 2 Cor. i. 3. and ſo the latter be exegetical of the former; tho' both are true of Chriſt, in different ſenſes; God is the God of Chriſt, as Chriſt is man; and he is the Father of Chriſt, as Chriſt is God; for as man, he had no father, nor is he a ſon by office, but by nature; ſee the note on Eph. i. 3. which according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again; regeneration is the bleſſing thanks are given for; and if we are to be thankful to God, and bleſs his name, becauſe he hath made us creatures, and hath given us a natural being; much more ſhould we praiſe him for making us new creatures, and giving us a ſpiritual being. To be begotten again, and ſo to be born again, is oppoſed unto, and diſtinguiſhed from our firſt birth, when we were conceived, and ſhapen in ſin; and deſigns a birth, ſpiritual, holy, and heavenly; it is ſignified by a being quickned, or made alive; ſo as in a ſpiritual ſenſe, to ſee, and hear, and breathe after divine things, and to live a life of faith and holineſs; by Chriſt being formed in the heart; by a partaking of the divine nature, and by being made new men, or new creatures: God, and not man, is the efficient cauſe of this; which is ſometimes aſcribed to the Spirit, and ſometimes to the Son, and here to the Father; and it is not mens works, but his own good-will and pleaſure, his great love and free favour, his rich grace and abundant mercy, are the impulſive, or moving cauſe of it; and abundance of grace and mercy indeed, is diſplayed in the regeneration and converſion of ſinners: what they are regenerated to is, unto a lively hope; meaning either the grace of hope, which is implanted in regeneration, and not before; for then, and then only, is a good hope through grace given: and it may be ſaid to be lively, or living, inaſmuch as it is fixed, not on dead works, but on a living Chriſt, on his perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs; and is not the hope of a dead ſinner, of a lifeleſs hypocrite, and formal profeſſor, that has a name to live, and is dead, but of a living believer, one made truly alive by the Spirit of life, from Chriſt; and is, what is ſometimes, at leaſt, in lively exerciſe, and makes the heart of a believer chearful, briſk, and lively; and is what is laſting and durable, and will never be loſt, but will be held faſt unto the end: or elſe the thing hoped for, is intended, the hope laid up in heaven; the bleſſed hope regenerate ones are born unto, and are looking for, even eternal life and happineſs; and the Syriac verſion renders it, unto hope of life; that is, of eternal life; and ſo reads one of Stephens's copies. Saints are both begotten again to the grace of hope, and to the glory which that grace is waiting for: the means is, by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt from the dead; which may be connected either with the act of begetting again; for Chriſt's reſurrection is the virtual cauſe of regeneration, or regeneration is in virtue of Chriſt's reſurrection; had he not riſen from the dead, none would have been quickned, or made to live, or have been raiſed to newneſs of life: his reſurrection is the exemplar of regeneration; there is a likeneſs between them; as his reſurrection was a declaration of his ſonſhip, ſo regeneration is a manifeſtation of adoption; and as Chriſt's reſurrection was his firſt ſtep to glory, ſo is regeneration to eternal life; and both are wrought by the ſame almighty power: or the clauſe may be connected with the foregoing, unto a lively hope; for the reſurrection of Chriſt is what is the means of, and lays a ſolid foundation of hope, both of the ſaints reſurrection from the dead, of which Chriſt is the meritorious cauſe, pledge, and pattern, and of eternal glory and happineſs, ſince he roſe for our juſtification, with which glorification is inſeparably connected.

Ver. 4. To an inheritance incorruptible, &c.] This is a further explanation of the lively hope, or hope laid up in heaven, which regenerate ones are begotten to: tis an inheritance; a large eſtate, and rich poſſeſſion, they are born heirs apparent to; what is not to be got by induſtry, or obtained by the works of the law; for they that are of the law are not heirs; but what is the pure bequeſt and free gift of God, as a father to his children; for an inheritance is proper and peculiar to children, nor does it belong to any but them; and it comes to them through the death of the teſtator, Chriſt, and of it the Holy Spirit is the pledge and earneſt: and here it is ſaid to be incorruptible; it is free from corruption in itſelf; nor can it be corrupted by others, by moth, or ruſt, or other things, as gold, ſilver, and garments may, which are a part of earthly inheritances; nor can it be enjoyed by corrupt perſons, either corrupted with ſin, or clothed with frailty and mortality; wherefore, in order to inherit it, corruption muſt put on incorruption, in every ſenſe; other epithets and commendations of it follow: and undefiled; it is in its own nature pure and holy, and free from any defilement of ſin; nor are there any of thoſe impurities in it which Jews and Mahometans dream of in their vainly expected earthly paradiſe; nor will it be poſſeſſed by any but undefiled perſons, ſuch as are made ſo through the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt: and that fadeth not away; as do this world, and the glory of it, and all inheritances and poſſeſſions in it; here is no continuing city, but there is one to come; in this inheritance are durable riches, everlaſting habitations, an houſe eternal in the heavens, glories in it that will never wither and die, and pleaſures which will never end, and which will be enjoyed without decreaſe or loathing: reſerved in heaven for you; the Alexandrian copy reads, for us; and the Ethiopic verſion renders it, for us and you; for all the ſaints; for all who are the elect, according to the foreknowledge of God, and who are begotten again to a lively hope; for theſe this inheritance is prepared, laid up, and ſecured in the hands of Chriſt their feoffee, who has it in truſt for them, and with whom they are coheirs; and it is ſafe for them in heaven; out of the reach of men and devils: this ſerves both to commend the inheritance, to ſet forth the excellency of it, lying in ſuch a place as heaven; for the ſituation of an inheritance adds oftentimes to the valuableneſs of it; and alſo the ſafety and ſecurity of it; it is ſafe, being in heaven, and more ſo as it is in Chriſt's hands there. The Jews are wont to call the future ſtate, an inheritance of the land of the living: they ſay [u], "this is called, נחלה, an inheritance; and add, "but in this world a man has no inheritance, nor "continuance;" ſo they interpret that phraſe, by the God of thy father, in Gen. xlix. 25. thus [w]; "this is אחסנא, the inheritance of the ſuperior "place, which is called heaven;" and ſometimes they ſtile it, אחסנתא עלאה, the ſuperior inheritance, or, the inheritance above [x]; all which agrees with Peter's language.

[w] Zohar in Gen. fol. 131. 2.

Ver. 5. Who are kept by the power of God, &c.] This is a deſcription of the perſons for whom the inheritance is reſerved in heaven; they are not only choſen to ſalvation, and begotten again to an inheritance, but they are preſerved unto it; their happineſs is very great; their inheritance is ſafe in heaven for them, and they are kept below, amidſt a thouſand ſnares and difficulties, till they ſafely arrive to the poſſeſſion of that: they are kept, not in and by themſelves, the way of man is not in himſelf; nor in the hands of angels, for no ſuch truſt does God put in them; but in the hands of Jeſus Chriſt, where they are ſafe, and out of which none can pluck them; on him, as a foundation, and in him, as a ſtrong hold; they are kept in the love of God, and on his heart, from whence they can never be ſeparated, and in the covenant of grace, out of which they'll never be put; and in a ſtate of juſtification, and ſhall never enter into condemnation; and in the family of God, for being ſons, they are no more ſervants; and in a ſtate of grace and holineſs, in the fear of God, and faith of Chriſt, and love to both; and in the path of truth, from whence they can never finally and totally fall: for tho' they are not kept from the being of ſin, and the workings of it, and ſlips and falls into it, yet from being deſtroyed by it; and tho' not from ſatan, and his temptations, yet from being overcome by them; and tho' not entirely from unbelief, doubts, and fears, yet from final unbelief; for Chriſt prays for them, that their faith fail not; and from a final and total falling away from grace into ſin: and they are kept thus, not by their own power and might, or that of any mere creature, but by the power of God; meaning, not the Goſpel, nor the Spirit of God, but the perfection of his power; by which they are kept, as with a guard, or in a garriſon, as the word here uſed ſignifies; not only angels encamp about them, and ſalvation is for walls and bulwarks, all around them; but God himſelf in the perfection of his power, is a wall of fire to them; he is round about them from henceforth and for ever; their place of defence is the munition of rocks; his name is a ſtrong tower, where they run and are ſafe: tis added, through faith; ſome verſions read it, and by faith, as the Syriac and Ethiopic; by that faith which is of the operation of God, of which Chriſt is the author and finiſher, and ſhall never fail, it being ſupported by the ſame power the ſaints are kept; through faith, in the power and faithfulneſs of God; through faith looking to Chriſt, leaning on him, and living upon him; by faith getting the victory over the world, and every other enemy, and being more than conquerors, through Chriſt. That to which the ſaints are kept is, unto ſalvation; ſalvation is already obtained for them, by the obedience and ſufferings of Chriſt, and is applied to them in converſion, by the Spirit of Chriſt; but the full enjoyment of it, which is here intended, is reſerved for them in heaven; and to this they are kept, being heirs of it, and ſhall certainly poſſeſs it: and which is ready to be revealed in the laſt time; it is ready, being a kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world, and a ſalvation obtained by the blood of Chriſt, and a manſion of glory made fit for them, through the preſence and interceſſion of their redeemer: and it is ready to be revealed; in a ſhort time it will be made manifeſt; at preſent it is much out of ſight; eye has not ſeen, nor ear heard the full glories of it; ſaints themſelves as yet don't know what they ſhall be, and have: but in the laſt time, when Chriſt ſhall come a ſecond time to judge the world, he'll raiſe the dead bodies of his ſaints; and then this ſalvation ſhall be fully manifeſted to them; and they ſhall enjoy it both in ſoul and body to all eternity.

Ver. 6. Wherein ye greatly rejoice, &c.] The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, in which ye ſhall rejoice; and ſo the Syriac verſion, adding, for ever; and refer theſe words to the laſt time, or times ſpoken of in the preceding verſe; when the ſaints will greatly rejoice, being in full poſſeſſion of eternal ſalvation; in diſtinction from the preſent time, in which they are in heavineſs; but it is better to read the words in the preſent tenſe, and as expreſſive of the ſaints in this life, who are bleſſed with that fruit of the Spirit, joy, and have always reaſon to rejoice, and greatly rejoice. The connexion is with the whole that goes before; and the ſenſe is this, that regenerated perſons rejoice, in that they are the elect of God, according to his everlaſting love towards them, and free grace, and good will; in their regeneration, which is an evidence of their election of God; in the abundant mercy of God diſplayed in their regeneration; and in that lively hope of eternal life which is the effect of it; and in the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead, which ſecures their juſtification of life, and their reſurrection from the dead; and in the inheritance they are born heirs unto; and in their preſervation to it by the power of God through faith; and in that compleat ſalvation which is ready for them, and in a ſhort time will be revealed, to which they are kept: tho' now for a ſeaſon (if need be) ye are in heavineſs, through manifold temptations. This ſeems to be a contraſt, but is no real contradiction; for the character of the ſaints in this world is, that they are, as ſorrowful, yet always rejoicing, 2 Cor. vi. 10. rejoicing even in their tribulations and temptations; yea, for them, and on account of them, in ſome reſpects, which in others make them ſorrowful, and heavy, or heavy with ſorrow: the cauſe of this heavineſs is not only indwelling corruptions, the hidings of God's face, and the temptations of ſatan, but afflictions and perſecutions, which are here meant by, manifold temptations; for not the temptations of ſatan, or to ſin, are here intended, but the temptations with which God tempts and tries his people: ſo he ſometimes does, by calling them to hard ſervice, to do things difficult and diſagreeable to fleſh and blood, in which way he tempted Abraham; and by laying afflictions, or ſuffering afflictions to come upon them, by which he tried Job; and by permitting wicked men to reproach and perſecute them, and to injure them in their characters, perſons, and properties; and which was the caſe of the primitive chriſtians, and has been more or leſs the caſe of the ſaints ever ſince: now ſuch exerciſes are called, from the quality of them, temptations, or trials; becauſe they try the hearts, principles, and graces of them that believe, and particularly their faith hereafter mentioned; and from the quantity of them, they are ſaid to be, various; they are of different ſorts; as reproach, impriſonment, loſs of goods, and death itſelf in divers ſhapes; and are more or leſs at different times and ages; and are exerciſed on various perſons: and are ſometimes very heavy, and grievous to be born, and cauſe great heavineſs and ſorrow of heart; and yet there are things, and circumſtances, and which are here hinted at, that greatly mitigate the heavineſs occaſioned by them; as, that theſe afflictions, and the heavineſs that comes by them, are but little, and light, in compariſon of the eternal weight of glory; tho' they are great tribulations in themſelves, through and out of which the people of God come to the kingdom; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, tho' at this time קליל ye are a little made ſorrowful; and then it is only now, for the preſent time, and but for a ſhort time; for a little ſeaſon, even for a moment, comparatively ſpeaking; and alſo, if need be, which the Syriac verſion omits, tho' by all means to be retained: afflictive diſpenſations, in whatſoever form, are neceſſary, by the will of God, who has appointed them, and therefore muſt be, and ought to be, quietly ſubmitted to, and patiently born, on that conſideration; and are alſo neceſſary, on account of Chriſt the head, to whom there muſt be a conformity of his members; and likewiſe on their own account; for the humbling of their ſouls; for the weaning of them from the things of this world; for the reſtraining, ſubduing, and keeping under the corruptions of their nature; and for the trial of grace: and tis only if, and when there is a neceſſity for them, that they are in heavineſs by them; otherwiſe God does not delight to afflict and grieve the children of men, and much leſs his own; ſee Lam. iii. 33. ſo the Jews ſay[y], that הוצרך, there was a neceſſity, of God's tempting Abraham as he did, to humble and purify him.

Ver. 7. That the trial of your faith, &c.] This is the principal end which God has in afflictive providences, to try the faith of his people; ſo the faith of Abraham, Job, Habakkuk, and others, have been tried: being much more precious than of gold that periſheth; the grace of faith is much more precious than gold; ſince that periſheth by uſing, but faith does not; and ſince it is ſo valuable as not to be obtained by it; and ſince thoſe that have it, tho' poor in this world, are rich, and heirs of a kingdom: but the trying of it is abundantly more precious than gold; for not only as gold being tried in the fire is purged from its droſs, and is proved to be genuine, and ſhines the brighter, ſo faith being tried in the fire of afflictions, is purged from unbelief; and the believer is purged from his droſs and tin, and his iniquity is purged, and the fruit of all is to take away ſin; and he is tried and proved to be a true believer, and his faith ſhines the more illuſtriouſly, as in the above inſtances; yea, the very trying of it has an influence on other graces, for great uſefulneſs; for the trying of faith works patience, and that, experience, and that, hope: tho' it be tried with fire; either tho' gold be tried with fire, and ſo is greatly refined, yet it is more precious than that; or tho' faith be tried with the fire of afflictions, yet it is precious, and more precious than gold: and it is tried for this purpoſe, that it might be found unto praiſe and honour and glory, at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt; who is now in the higheſt heavens, and out of ſight, but will appear a ſecond time without ſin unto ſalvation, and every eye ſhall ſee him; and when the believer will be found in him, and his faith be found unto praiſe by him, he'll have praiſe of him himſelf; it will be ſaid unto him, well done good and faithful ſervant; his faith will be praiſed for its ſteadineſs and conſtancy, notwithſtanding all perſecutions and tribulations; and his good works, the fruits of faith, will be taken notice of by him with commendation; he'll be honoured, by being placed on the right hand of Chriſt, and by being ſet down with him in his throne, and having a crown of righteouſneſs given to him; and he'll be glorified both in ſoul and body; his body will be made like to Chriſt's glorious body, and his ſoul will have a glory revealed in it; and in his whole perſon he ſhall appear, when Chriſt does, with him in glory.

Ver. 8. Whom having not ſeen ye love, &c.] That is, Jeſus Chriſt, whom they had never ſeen with their bodily eyes, being Jews, who dwelt not in Judea, when Chriſt was upon earth, but were ſcattered about in ſeveral parts of the Gentile world; and yet Chriſt being made known to them, through the preaching of the Goſpel, they received and embraced him, and their affections were ſtrongly ſet upon him: they loved him becauſe of his excellencies and perfections, becauſe of the lovelineſs of his perſon, and becauſe he firſt loved them; they loved him becauſe of the fullneſs of grace that was in him, becauſe of what he had done for them, and was unto them, and becauſe of the offices he ſuſtained on their account, and the relations he ſtood in to them; they loved him above all creatures and things, and all of him, and that belong unto him, his people, truths, ordinances, ways, and worſhip; they loved him with all their hearts, and in the ſincerity of their ſouls, tho' they had never ſeen his face in the fleſh; whereas ſight often begets and increaſes love: their love was not carnal, but ſpiritual; it was a fruit of the Spirit of God in their ſouls; was accompanied with faith in Chriſt, and proceeded upon the report the Goſpel made of him: in whom tho' now ye ſee him not, yet believing; the Arabic verſion adds, in him; that is, in Chriſt, who was then received up into heaven, and muſt be retained there until the time of the reſtitution of all things; and therefore not now to be beheld with corporeal ſight: and yet theſe regenerate ones, and lovers of Chriſt, believed in him; ſee John xx. 29. not with a notional, hiſtorical, and temporary faith, believing not merely what he ſaid, or did, or does, or will do; but looking on him, and to him, for life and ſalvation; going out of themſelves to him, embracing of him, leaning upon him as their ſaviour and redeemer; venturing their ſouls upon him, committing their all unto him, expecting all from him, both grace and glory: and ſo rejoice with joy unſpeakable and full of glory; with a joy in believing on him, which is better experienced than expreſſed; a joy that not only ſtrangers intermeddle not with, know nothing of, which entirely paſſes their underſtanding, but is ſuch as ſaints themſelves can't ſpeak out, or give a full and diſtinct account of; they want words to expreſs it, and convey proper ideas of it to others: and it is a joy that is glorious; there is a rejoicing that is evil, and ſcandalous; but this is honourable, and of which none need be aſhamed; it is ſolid and ſubſtantial, and the matter of it always abiding, when the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment; it is a joy on account of the glory of God, which the believer lives in the hope and faith of; and it is a beginning, a preſage, and pledge of it; it is a glory begun here; it is the firſt-fruits, and a part alſo of it; and by it ſaints may know a little what heaven itſelf will be.

Ver. 9. Receiving the end of your faith, even the ſalvation of your ſouls.] Which is a juſt and ſufficient ground of joy, and rejoicing. Salvation intends ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation; that which God appointed his people to from all eternity, which is obtained by Chriſt, applied by the Spirit, and will be fully enjoyed in heaven: this is the ſalvation of ſouls; which are of more worth than a world; and the redemption of which is precious, and requires a great price, and for which a great price is paid, as in ver. 18, 19. It is rightly ſupplied in our verſion by your, as in the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions; though the Vulgate Latin verſion only reads, the ſalvation of ſouls; and which is to be underſtood, not to the excluſion of bodies, for God has deſigned the ſalvation of them; and Chriſt has procured the redemption of them; and theſe will be preſerved unto the coming of Chriſt, being united to him; and will be raiſed by him, and with their ſouls enjoy everlaſting happineſs with him; tho' in the preſent ſtate of things, ſalvation rather takes place in the ſoul than in the body, which is expoſed to various labours, afflictions, and diſeaſes; but the chief deſign of the phraſe is, to diſtinguiſh this ſalvation from a corporal and temporal one: and ſo the Jews uſe the phraſe, תשועת הנפש, the ſalvation of the ſoul[y], in oppoſition to, and diſtinction from a mere bodily one; and it intends a ſalvation from ſin, ſatan, the law, and its curſes; from hell, the ſecond death, and wrath to come, and every ſpiritual enemy: which is the end of faith; or, as the Syriac verſion renders it, פורענא, the reward of faith; not that faith is the cauſe of ſalvation, or meritorious of it; for that itſelf is the gift of God, and is rather a part of ſalvation, and at moſt, but the means of perceiving an intereſt in it, and of enjoying the comfort of it; and is what will iſſue in it, and in the full enjoyment of it; when faith will both have its end and ſcope, and be at an end, being exchanged for fruition; juſt as a reward is given at the end of a man's labours; hence it's called, אחרית, the end, Prov. xxiii. 18. and even now ſalvation is the end of faith, in like ſenſe as Chriſt is the end of the law: as the law has its full accompliſhment, and all its ends anſwered in Chriſt, ſo faith has its end, and all it looks for, deſires, and wants; in ſalvation by Chriſt: and which is now receiving; for the ſaints not only ſhall receive, and enjoy the full poſſeſſion of it hereafter, but they have it now; it is not only appointed to them, and wrought out for them, but is brought near, ſet before them, and applied to them, and put into the hands of faith by the Spirit of God; they have it in faith and hope, by which they are already ſaved; and in Chriſt their head and repreſentative, in whom they are ſet down in heavenly places; and beſides, they have the beginning, firſt fruits, earneſt, and pledge of it in their own hearts, as well as a right unto, and a meetneſs for the perfect poſſeſſion of it hereafter; all which is matter of joy unſpeakable, and full of glory.

[y] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 22. 1.

Ver. 10. Of which ſalvation the prophets have enquired, &c.] They greatly deſired the coming of the ſaviour, and to ſee him; they longed after the ſalvation to be accompliſhed by him, and expreſſed their wiſhes for him, and that; and enquired into the nature of it, and gave an account thereof, according to the meaſure of light and knowledge communicated to them; they ponited out Chriſt as a redeemer of his people, and his ſalvation as ſpiritual and eternal: and ſearched diligently; in the uſe of means; by prayer and ſupplication; by reading the prophecies that went before; by obſerving the types, ſhadows, and ſacrifices of the law; and by waiting upon the Lord for the inſpiration of his Spirit. This laſt clauſe is omitted in the Syriac verſion, but rightly retained in all others: who propheſied of the grace; that ſhould come unto you; Jews, and alſo the Gentiles. They propheſied both of Chriſt, who is the unſpeakable gift of God's free grace, who is full of grace, and by whom it comes; and alſo of the ſeveral bleſſings of grace thro' Chriſt, as of redeeming grace from ſin, ſatan, death, and the grave; of juſtifying grace, thro' his righteouſneſs, he being the Lord our righteouſneſs, in whom all the ſeed of Iſrael ſhall be juſtified, and glory; for tho' his righteouſneſs is revealed without the law, yet it is witneſſed to by law and prophets; of pardoning grace, as with God, and as a bleſſing of the new covenant, and as received thro' faith in Chriſt, to which give all the prophets witneſs; of adopting grace, both to Jews and Gentiles, ſignifying, that where they were not called the people of God, they ſhould be called the ſons of God; of regenerating and ſanctifying grace, in giving a new heart and ſpirit, in ſprinkling with clean water, in writing the laws of God in the inward parts, and pouring out the Spirit in a plenteous manner on all ſorts of men; of perſevering grace, intimating that they that fear the Lord ſhall not depart from him, and that his loving kindneſs ſhall never depart from them; and of eternal life and glory, as God's free gift, which is that everlaſting ſalvation, they ſay, Iſrael ſhall be ſaved in the Lord with.

Ver. 11. Searching what, or what manner of time, &c.] The prophets made a very diligent enquiry into the exact time when Chriſt ſhould come to work out the ſalvation of his people; to whom it was made known that his coming ſhould be before the ſceptre, or tribe of Judah, and all civil government in it ceaſed; and before the ſecond temple was deſtroyed, into which the Meſſiah, the meſſenger of the covenant, was to come, as the Lord and proprietor of it; and that it ſhould be ſeventy weeks, or 490 years, from a date given in Dan. ix. 24, 25, 26. as it was revealed to the prophet Daniel; who particularly enquired, and diligently ſearched into this matter, and was eminently a man of deſires this way, as he is ſtiled, Dan. ix. 23. and they not only ſearched into the exact time, but into the manner and quality of the time when the ſaviour ſhould come; and foretold that it would be, with reſpect to the nations of the world, a time of profound peace; with reſpect to the Jews, that it would be a time of great blindneſs, ignorance, unbelief, and hardneſs of heart; that ſuch would be that generation, or age, for wickedneſs and barbarity, as could not be declared and expreſſed; and that few would believe the report of the Goſpel; and that the Meſſiah would be rejected of men, and be wounded, bruiſed, and put to death; and with reſpect to the Gentiles, that the Goſpel would be preached to them, and that they ſhould ſeek to Chriſt, be gathered to him, and hope and truſt in him; and that the followers of the Meſſiah ſhould be perſecuted, and greatly diſtreſſed, and yet comforted and ſuſtained; and this ſhould be the face of the times, and the ſtate of things, when the ſalvation ſhould be revealed: and all this, and much more, the Spirit of Chriſt in them did ſignify; or make manifeſt; from whence it appears, that Chriſt then exiſted, as he did before there were any prophets, and even from everlaſting, being the eternal God; and that the Spirit is from him, as well as from the Father; and as here, ſo he is often, by the Jews[a], called, רוחא משיחא, the Spirit of the Meſſiah, or Chriſt; and that the Spirit is truly God, ſince he could declare before hand the exact time of Chriſt's coming, and the quality of the age in which he came, as well as bear a previous teſtimony to his ſufferings and glory; as alſo, that he was in the prophets, and they were inſpired by him, and ſpake as he moved and directed them: when it teſtified before hand the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the glory that ſhould follow. The ſufferings of Chriſt, are what the Jews call [b], חבלי של משיח, the ſorrows of the Meſſiah. Theſe are particularly teſtified of in Pſ. xxii. and lxix. Iſ. liii. and Dan. ix. 26. and Zech. xii. 10. The glory, or glories, as it may be rendered, deſign his reſurrection from the dead, his aſcenſion to heaven, his ſeſſion at the right hand of God, and having all power, authority, and judgment committed to him; and which are eminently and diſtinctly propheſied of in Pſ. xvi. 10. and lxviii. 18. and cx. 1. and Dan. vii. 13, 14.

[a] Zohar in Gen. fol. 19. 3. & paſſim.

Ver. 12. Unto whom it was revealed, &c.] The ſalvation they ſearched and enquired into, and the grace of it; the time of its being wrought out, and what ſort of times they would be when Chriſt ſhould come, both to the church, and to the world, among Jews and Gentiles; as alſo what cruel ſufferings the Meſſiah ſhould undergo, and what great glory ſhould be put upon him afterwards: that not unto themſelves, but unto us they did miniſter. The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, unto you; and ſo do ſome copies. Not that they were ignorant of the things they ſearched into, and were revealed unto them, and they propheſied of; as the Jews ſometimes ſay [c] of them, "that they "propheſied, and knew not what they propheſied "of;" tho' it is not to be ſuppoſed, that they had ſuch clear and diſtinct ideas of things, as ſaints have now under the Goſpel-diſpenſation; yet they knew much of the grace of the Goſpel, and had the comfort of it, and a view of intereſt in the great ſalvation, and ſaw the day of Chriſt afar off with pleaſure: nor that they did not miniſter, and were not uſeful to the ſaints of the age in which they lived; for their propheſies concerning Chriſt, and ſalvation by him, were particularly calculated for their ſpiritual refreſhment and comfort, and the ſupport of their faith and hope under afflictive circumſtances; but then they were not to have their accompliſhment in their times; for though they ſometimes ſpeak of them, becauſe of the certainty of them, as if they were already done, yet they knew they were not to be brought about until the laſt days; and therefore what was written by them, was written for our learning and inſtruction chiefly, and principally, on whom the ends of the world are come; and tho' they were both profitable to themſelves, and others that lived with them, yet they are more ſo to the ſaints under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, who are able to compare propheſies and facts together: even the things which are now reported unto you; as accompliſhed facts; ſuch as relate to the perſon and offices of Chriſt, and ſalvation wrought out by him; to his incarnation, obedience, ſufferings, death, reſurrection, aſcenſion into heaven, and ſeſſion at the right hand of God; of all which there is a true and faithful report made in the Goſpel: by them that have preached the Goſpel unto you; meaning himſelf, and the reſt of the Apoſtles, who had been called, and qualified, and ſent out by Chriſt to preach glad tidings, and publiſh peace, which they had done in the ſeveral parts of the world, both to Jew and Gentile: with the Holy Ghoſt ſent down from heaven; by Chriſt from the Father, particularly at the day of Pentecoſt, when the Apoſtles had an extraordinary and plentiful effuſion of the Spirit, qualifying them to preach the Goſpel to which they were called and ſent: and thus, as the great ſalvation is commended, from the concern that the prophets of old had in it, ſo from the preaching of it by the Apoſtles, who were influenced and guided by the ſame Spirit of Chriſt as they were, and in a far greater manner; and this ſalvation is ſtill more commended from the great regard the bleſſed angels have unto it: which things the angels deſire to look into. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, into whom; either into the Holy Spirit, and the things of the Spirit, which he teſtified in the prophets, and publiſhed by the Apoſtles; or rather into Chriſt, his perſon, offices, and grace, the alluſion being to the cherubim on the mercy-ſeat, a type of Chriſt, which looked to one another, and to the mercy-ſeat, Exod. xxv. 20. and was true of them in the days of Chriſt's fleſh, when they aſcended and deſcended on the ſon of man, John i. 51. and when he roſe from the dead, and went to heaven; for then was he ſeen and gazed on by angels, as he now is, 1 Tim. iii. 16. or into which things; ſo the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read; namely, the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the glories following; the great myſtery of redemption and ſalvation by Chriſt; the ſeveral doctrines of the Goſpel, in which the glory of the grace, wiſdom, righteouſneſs, truth, and power of God is diſplayed; things they are highly delighted with, take pleaſure in the contemplation of, and deſire to have a greater knowledge of, and acquaintance with: they ſung glory to God in the higheſt at the incarnation of Chriſt; they rejoice at the converſion of a ſinner; and diſdain not to be miniſtring ſpirits to the heirs of ſalvation; and learn of the church the manifold wiſdom of God; which may ſerve greatly to commend the excellency of Goſpel truths, and engage us in the ſtudy of them.

Ver. 13. Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, &c.] With the girdle of truth; ſee Eph. vi. 14. ſince angels deſire to look into the myſteries of grace, do you apply your minds, and diligently attend unto them, in oppoſition to all looſe and vagrant thoughts of the mind, about other things: give yourſelves up wholly to them, meditate upon them, employ yourſelves in them, and about them; ſeeing they are the ſtudy and enquiry of angels, and what the prophets have propheſied of, and ſearched into, and miniſtred, and the Apoſtles of Chriſt have preached; and beſides, are things which relate to the perſon, office, ſufferings, and glory of Chriſt, and the ſalvation of immortal ſouls. Tho' the phraſe is ſometimes uſed to denote preparation and readineſs, and to be in a fit poſition to do any thing, as the Iſraelites were at the eating of the firſt paſſover, to march at the leaſt notice out of Egypt; and ſo to go a journey, to run a race, to ſerve another, to wait on him, and for him, and alſo be prepared for battle; and is a metaphor taken from the cuſtom of the eaſtern nations, who uſed to wear long garments, which they gathered up cloſe to them, and girt about them, when they were about any of the above things, that they might be no hindrance to them, and that they might perform them with more expedition and diſpatch; and ſo may be expreſſive of the readineſs of believers, as pilgrims and travellers, for their journey towards the heavenly country, and to run the race ſet before them, and alſo to do every good work, according to the ſtation they are placed in, to ſerve their Lord and maſter Jeſus Chriſt in whatſoever he calls them to, and to wait for his coming; ſee Luke xii. 35, 36, 37. and alſo to fight his battles, battles, to quit themſelves like men, and be ſtrong in defence of his Goſpel, and againſt every enemy of his and theirs. Be ſober; which is not only oppoſed to intemperance in eating and drinking, which greatly diſqualifies for the above readineſs and attention; but alſo to a being inebriated with the cares of this life, which choak the word, and make it unfruitful, and lead men into temptation, and many fooliſh and hurtful luſts, and from the faith of Chriſt; and likewiſe to a being intoxicated with errors, and falſe doctrine, which lull men aſleep, and render them uncapable of ſerving Chriſt, and his church; and turn their heads from faith to fables, and are contrary to the words of truth and ſoberneſs; ſo that to be ſober, is not only to be moderate in eating and drinking, but to be diſengaged from the anxious cares of the world, and to be diſentangled, recovered, or awaked from the error of the wicked: and hope to the end; or perfectly, as the Greek word may be rendered, and as it is in the Syriac verſion, which joins it with the other phraſe, and renders it, be ye perfectly awaked. The Arabic verſion renders it, truſting with a perfect confidence; ſo that it deſigns either the nature of that lively hope, to which they were begotten again, and are here exhorted to exercise, it being perfect, ſincere, and without hypocriſy; not like the hope of the hypocrite, which ſhall periſh, and ſtand him in no ſtead, but an undiſſembled one; for as there is faith unfeigned, and love without diſſimulation, ſo hope without hypocriſy; and alſo the full aſſurance of it, for as there is a plerophory of faith, and love, and of underſtanding, ſo of hope; ſee Heb. vi. 11. or it intends the duration of this grace, and the exerciſe of it: it is a grace that does, and will remain, and it ought to be continually exerciſed, and the rejoicing of it to be kept firm, to the end; to the end of life, and until the ſaints come to the enjoyment of what they are hoping for; even for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt; and which may be rendered for the grace that is brought unto you, in, or by the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt: and the ſenſe may be, that there is grace that is now brought to light by the Goſpel, and that is brought home to the ſouls of God's people thro' it; as electing grace, redeeming grace, juſtifying grace, pardoning grace, adopting grace; and in ſhort, ſalvation, as all of grace; which Goſpel is the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt: it is a revelation that is made by him; and it is a revelation that is made of him; it is a revelation of the glory of his perſon, and offices; herein is his righteouſneſs revealed from faith to faith; and here the riches of his grace are made manifeſt, and laid to open view; life and immortality are brought to light by Chriſt in it; and the way to eternal life, glory, and ſalvation, as being by Chriſt, is pointed out by it; and all this grace that is brought, and ſet before the ſaints in the Goſpel, they ought to hope for, and comfortably believe their intereſt in; and continue thus hoping, believing, and truſting to the end of their days: or if our verſion, and which is that of others alſo, be retained, the meaning is, that eternal glory and happineſs, which is called grace, becauſe it is the free gift of God thro' Chriſt, to his children and flock, and is the finiſhing of the grace that is beſtowed on them, and wrought in them, and is future, is to be brought; is a glory that ſhall be revealed in them, and a ſalvation ready to be revealed to them; and which will be done, when Chriſt ſhall be revealed from heaven, when he ſhall appear a ſecond time, and in glory; and is, and ought to be, the object of their hope, for it is laid up, and reſerved for them; and they have the earneſt of it in them, as well as the promiſe of it to them. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, inſtead of grace, read, joy; and is the ſame with eternal glory, the joy of the Lord prepared for them, and which they ſhall enter into.

Ver. 14. As obedient children, &c.] Or children of obedience. This may be connected either with what goes before, that ſeeing they were children of God, by adopting grace, and in regeneration brought to the obedience of faith, to whom the inheritance belonged, therefore they ought to continue hoping for it; or with what follows, that ſince they were manifeſtly the children of God by faith, in Chriſt Jeſus, being begotten again to a lively hope, they ought to be followers of him, and imitate him in holineſs and righteouſneſs, and ſhew themſelves to be obedient ones to his Goſpel and ordinances, as children ought to honour, and obey, and imitate their parents: not faſhioning yourſelves to the former luſts in your ignorance. The phraſe is much the ſame with that in Rom. xii. 2. be not conformed to this world; for to be conformed, or faſhioned, to the world, is to be faſhioned to the luſts of it; and to be faſhioned to the luſts of it, is to indulge them, to make proviſion for them, to obey them, to live and walk in them; which ſhould not be done by the children of God, and who profeſs themſelves to be obedient ones to the Goſpel, which teaches otherwiſe; and that becauſe they are luſts, fooliſh, hurtful, and deceitful ones, ungodly ones; the luſts of the devil, as well as of the world, and of the fleſh, and which war againſt the ſoul; and becauſe they are former ones, which they ſerved in a time of unregeneracy, and were now convinced and aſhamed of, and therefore ſhould no longer live to them; the time paſt of life being ſufficient to have walked in them: and becauſe they were luſts in ignorance, which they had indulged in a ſtate of ignorance; not of Gentiliſm, tho' this might be the caſe of ſome, but of Judaiſm; when they knew not God, eſpecially in Chriſt, and were ignorant of his righteouſneſs, and of the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, as committed againſt a law, that was holy, and ſpiritual; nor did they know Chriſt, and the way of ſalvation by him, but thought they ought to do many things contrary to his name; nor the work of the Spirit in regeneration, ſaying with Nicodemus, how can theſe things be? nor the true ſenſe of the ſcriptures, the ſacred oracles, that were committed to them; much leſs the Goſpel, which was hidden from them, and they were enemies to: but now it was otherwiſe with them; they were made light in the Lord, and had knowledge of all theſe things; and therefore as their light increaſed, and the grace of God bringing ſalvation, appeared unto them, and ſhone out on them, it became them to deny ungodlineſs, and wordly luſts, and not to walk as they had done before, ſince they had not ſo learned Chriſt.

Ver. 15. But as he which hath called you is holy, &c.] Which is a periphraſis of God the Father, who had called them, not merely in an external way, by the outward miniſtry of the word; but internally, powerfully, and efficaciouſly, by his Spirit and grace; and who had called them to holineſs of life and converſation, as well as in calling had implanted principles of holineſs in them, and therefore is ſaid to call them with an holy calling; and who himſelf is holy, naturally, perfectly, and originally, and in ſuch ſenſe as no creature is, angels or men; and is glorious in holineſs, and is the ſource and fountain of holineſs in others: therefore ſo be ye holy in all manner of converſation; which reſpects not internal holineſs, but ſuppoſes it; for that is God's work, and not the creature's act; tis the ſanctification of the Spirit, of which he is the author; this they were choſen unto from the beginning, and made partakers of in regeneration; but external holineſs, holineſs of life and converſation, in all the parts and branches of it, both with reſpect to God and men, in matters both of religion, and civil life: and to be holy in this ſenſe, is an imitating of God, a copying after him, tho' he is far from being equalled by a ſinful creature, or even by an angel in heaven; however, the arguments to it, taken from the nature of God, and of his effectual calling to grace and holineſs, are very ſtrong and powerful; for it is walking worthy of him, who has called us to his kingdom and glory; and walking worthy of that vocation wherein we are called; and a following of God, as dear and obedient children; and what is according to his will, and what he directs unto, and requires, as appears from what follows.

Ver. 16. Becauſe it is written, &c.] In Lev. xi. 44. and xix. 2. and xx. 7. be ye holy, for I am holy; an argument the Apoſtle knew muſt have weight with theſe perſons, who were chiefly Jews, ſcattered abroad among the Gentiles, and had a value for the ſcriptures of truth; and therefore, as the argument for holineſs of life, from the nature and perfections of God is ſtrong, it muſt receive additional ſtrength from this being the declared will of God, even their ſanctification, on this account; and tho' holineſs, equal to God, is never to be attained to by a creature, yet ſo far as it is capable of it, it is deſireable, becauſe agreeable both to the nature and will of God, by all ſuch who are truly his children, who love his name, adore his perfections, give thanks at the remembrance of his holineſs, fear his goodneſs, and obey his will.

Ver. 17. And if ye call on the Father, &c.] Of Chriſt, and of all the ſaints; or ſeeing ye do. This is a freſh argument, engaging to holineſs of life and converſation. Invocation of God, includes the whole worſhip of him, the performance of every outward duty, and the exerciſe of every inward grace, particularly it deſigns prayer; and whoever are concerned in one, or the other, God will be ſanctified by all them that draw nigh unto him: or the phraſe may here intend an aſſerting God to be their father, under the influence of the Spirit of adoption; and all ſuch that do claim ſo near a relation to God, ought to honour and obey him, and to be followers of him: whoever call God their Father, and themſelves his children, ought to be careful that they do not blaſpheme, or cauſe to be blaſphemed, that worthy name by which they are called: who without reſpect of perſons judgeth according to every man's work. This is another reaſon why men ſhould be holy, taken from the general judgment; for this God that is a Father, is alſo a judge. There is a judgment after death, which is ſure and certain, and reaches to all perſons and things; and though the Father judges no man, but has committed all judgment to the Son, yet he'll judge every one by that man Chriſt, whom he has ordained to be the judge of quick and dead: before his judgment ſeat all muſt ſtand, where they will be impartially, and without reſpect of perſons, tried; no account will be had of what nation and place they are, whether Jews or Gentiles, or of this, or the other country, unleſs to aggravate or leſſen their condemnation; for it will be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon, for Sodom and Gomorrha, than for ſuch who have been favoured with a Goſpel revelation, and believe it not; nor from what parents they have deſcended, for the ſoul that ſins, that ſhall die; nor of what age and ſex they are, ſmall and great ſhall ſtand before him; nor of what ſtate and condition, rich or poor, high or low, bond or free; or of what religious ſect and denomination, or whether they have conformed to ſome external things or not; no regard will be had to any outward appearance or profeſſion. The judge will not judge according to the ſight of the eyes, and outward view of things; for he looks on the heart, and knows the ſecret ſprings of all actions; and according thereunto will he judge and paſs the ſentence; and therefore what manner of perſons ought men to be, in all holy converſation and godlineſs. Hence it follows, paſs the time of your ſojourning here in fear; the people of God in this world are ſojourners, as all their fathers were; they are not natives of the place in which they are; tho' they are in the world, they are not of it; they were natives of it by their firſt birth, but by their ſecond, they are born again, from above, and ſo belong to another place; they are of another country, even an heavenly one; they are citizens of another city, a city which has foundations, whoſe builder and maker is God, their citizenſhip is in heaven; and there is their Father's houſe, which is not made with hands, and is eternal; and there lies their eſtate, their inheritance; and tho' they dwell here below, neither their ſettlement, nor their ſatisfaction are here; they reckon themſelves not at home whilſt they are on earth, and are ſtrangers in it, to the men of the world, and they to them; with whom they have not, or at leaſt ought not to have, any fellowſhip. It is indeed but for a time that they are ſojourners, not an eternity; which time is fixed, and is very ſhort, and will be quickly gone: it is but a little while, and Chriſt will come and take his home to his Father's houſe, where they ſhall be for ever with him; for 'tis only here on earth that they are pilgrims and ſtrangers: and whilſt they are ſo, they ſhould ſpend their time in fear; not of men, nor of devils, nor of death and judgment, hell and eternal damnation; for ſuch a fear is not conſiſtent with the love of God ſhed abroad in the heart, and is the effect of the law, and not encouraged by the Goſpel; is in natural men, yea in devils themſelves; but in the fear of God, and which ſprings from the grace of God, and is increaſed by it; is conſiſtent with the ſtrongeſt acts of faith, and with the greateſt expreſſions of ſpiritual joy; is oppoſite to pride and ſelf-confidence, and includes the whole worſhip of God, external and internal, and a religious converſation, in humility and lowlineſs of mind.

Ver. 18. Foraſmuch as ye know, &c.] From the ſcriptures of truth, by the teſtimony of the Spirit, by his work upon the ſoul, and by the application of the benefits of redemption, ſuch as juſtification, pardon, adoption, and ſanctification; ſee Job xix. 25. Gal. ii. 20. that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as ſilver and gold. The redemption of a ſoul, which is of more worth than a world, requires a greater price than gold and ſilver; and thoſe who have the largeſt ſhare thereof, can neither redeem their own ſouls with it, nor the ſouls of others. The ſoul is immortal and incorruptible, but theſe are corruptible things, which may be cankered, or wear away, and periſh by uſing; and therefore, ſeeing redemption is not obtained by any thing corruptible, nothing corrupt in principle, or practice, ſhould be indulged. The alluſion is to the redemption of the people of Iſrael, and of the firſtborn by ſhekels, Exod. xxx. 12, 13. Numb. iii. 46, 47, 48. Gold and ſilver do not mean pieces of gold and ſilver, but gold and ſilver coined; for only by ſuch could redemption of any thing be obtained[d]; but theſe are inſufficient for the redemption of the ſoul; which is a deliverance of it from the ſlavery of ſin, the bondage, curſe, and condemnation of the law, the captivity of ſatan, and from a ſtate of poverty, having been deep in debt, and ſold under ſin. It here follows, from your vain converſation received by tradition from your fathers; meaning not the corruption of nature, which is propagated from father to ſon by natural generation, and lies in the vanity of the mind, and is the ſpring and ſource of an evil converſation; tho' the ſaints, as they are redeemed from all ſin, ſo from this, that it ſhall not be their condemnation; nor Gentiliſm, which lay in vain philoſophy, in idolatry and ſuperſtition, and in an evil and wicked converſation, encouraged by the example of their anceſtors; but Judaiſm, and either regards the ceremonial law, which was delivered by Moſes to the Jewiſh fathers, and by them handed down to their poſterity; and which was vain, as uſed and abuſed by them, and was unprofitable, to obtain righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation by, and therefore was diſannulled by Chriſt, who has redeemed and delivered his people from this yoke of bondage; or rather the traditions of the elders, which our Lord inveighs againſt, Matt. xv. 3, &c. and the Apoſtle Paul was brought up in, and zealous of, before converſion, Gal. i. 14. as the Phariſees were. Theſe were the inventions and decrees of them they called, אבות, fathers, to whoſe Dogma's, and deciſions, they paid the utmoſt reſpect. Theſe made up their oral law, which the Jews ſay[e] Moſes received from Sinai, and delivered to Joſhua; and Joſhua to the elders; and the elders to the prophets; and the prophets to the men of the great ſynagogue, the laſt of which was Simeon the juſt; and from him it was delivered to another; and ſo from one to another to the times of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, and afterwards; and which conſiſted of many vain, uſeleſs, and unprofitable things; to walk according to which muſt be a vain converſation; and the ſaints now being redeemed by a greater price than that of ſilver and gold, and which is after mentioned, they ought not therefore to be the ſervants of men, no not of theſe fathers, but of God and Chriſt.

Ver. 19. But with the precious blood of Chriſt, &c.] Chriſt was propheſied of as a redeemer under the Old Teſtament, Iſ. lix. 20. and the Jews frequently aſcribe redemption to the word of the Lord God[f]; and which the Apoſtle here attributes to the blood of Chriſt; whoſe blood is the ſame with ours, only not tainted with ſin; the blood of an innocent perſon, and of one who is God, as well as man, and was freely ſhed in the room and ſtead of his people, and ſo a ſufficient price for their redemption: and it may truly be ſaid to be precious; as it is to God, to whom it is a ſweet-ſmelling ſacrifice, and with which he is well pleaſed; not that he takes delight in the mere effuſion of his blood, but as this is the ranſom-price, and the atonement of his choſen ones; and ſo it is to all them that believe, ſince by it they are juſtified; thro' it they have the forgiveneſs of their ſins; their peace and reconciliation with God is made by it; and by it they are ſanctified, and have boldneſs to enter into the holieſt of all: and this blood of Chriſt, by which they are redeemed, is as of a lamb without ſpot and blemiſh; Chriſt is comparable to a lamb, for the innocence of his nature, the meekneſs of his diſpoſition and deportment, and for his patience under ſufferings, and in death; and to the lambs of the daily ſacrifice, which were typical of the continual and conſtant virtue and efficacy of his ſacrifice to take away ſin; and particularly to the paſchal lamb, he being the true paſſover ſacrificed for us; and which, as alſo the lambs of the daily ſacrifice, and all others, were to be without ſpot and blemiſh; in which they prefigured Chriſt, who is without the ſtain of original, and the ſpot and blemiſh of actual ſin; and ſo was a very fit perſon to be a ſacrifice for ſin, and a redeemer of his people. The Jews have a notion, that the redemption of the Iſraelites out of Egypt, when a lamb without blemiſh was taken, and ſacrificed, and eat, had a reſpect to the future redemption by the Meſſiah; and which, they ſay[g], was to be in the ſame time of the year; that as they were redeemed in Niſan, the month in which the paſſover was kept, ſo they were to be redeemed in the ſame month: and indeed at that time, and in that month, was redemption obtained by the blood of Chriſt. Of the former, the Targumiſt in Hoſ. iii. 2. ſays, "I have redeemed them by my word, "on the fifteenth day of the month Niſan, and "have given ſilver ſhekels, the atonement of their "ſouls." It is obſervable, that the Hebrew word, דם, ſignifies both blood and money, or price; whether ſome reference may not be had to this here, ſince both are included here, may be conſidered.

Ver. 20. Who verily was fore-ordained, &c.] Or fore-known; that is, by God; and which intends, not barely his preſcience of Chriſt, of what he ſhould be, do, and ſuffer; but ſuch a previous knowledge of him, which is joined with love and affection to him; not merely as his own Son, and the expreſs image of his perſon, but as mediator; and whom he loved before the world was, and with a love of complacency and delight, and which will laſt for ever. It includes the choice of him as the head of the election, and the pre-ordination of his human nature, to the grace of union to his divine perſon, and the pre-appointment of him to various things. The Syriac verſion adds, to this; that is, to be the lamb for a ſacrifice, to be a propitiation for the ſins of his people, to be the ſaviour and redeemer of them by his precious blood. The alluſion is to the taking of the paſſover-lamb from the ſheep, or from the goats, and keeping it ſeparate, from the tenth to the fourteenth day of the month, before it was ſlain; ſo Chriſt, as man, was choſen out from among the people; and as Joſeph's antitype was ſeparated from his brethren, and that before the foundation of the world; for all God's decrees and appointments, relating either to Chriſt, or his people, are eternal; no new thoughts, counſels, and reſolutions, are taken up by him in time. The affair of redemption, by Chriſt, is no new thing; the ſcheme of it was drawn in eternity; the perſons to be redeemed were fixed on; the redeemer was appointed in the council and covenant of peace; and even the very Goſpel, which proclaims it, was ordained before the world, for our glory. A ſaviour was provided before ſin was committed, and the method of man's recovery was ſettled before his ruin took place; and which was done without any regard to the works and merits of men, but is wholly owing to the free and ſovereign reign grace of God, and to his everlaſting love, both to the redeemer, and the redeemed. The Jews [h] reckon the name of the Meſſiah among the ſeven things that were created before the world was; in proof of which they mention, Pſ. lxxii. 17. but was manifeſt in theſe laſt times for you; he was before, he exiſted from everlaſting; he lay in the boſom of his Father from all eternity; and was veiled and hid under the ſhadows of the ceremonial law, during the legal diſpenſation; but in the fulneſs of time was manifeſt in the fleſh, and more clearly revealed in the Goſpel, and to the ſouls of men; his manifeſtation in human nature is principally intended, and which was in the laſt times of the legal diſpenſation, at the end of the Jewiſh world or ſtate, when a new world, or the world to come, took place. 'Tis a rule with the Jews [i], that whenever the laſt days, or times, are mentioned, the times of the Meſſiah are deſigned: and this manifeſtation of Chriſt was for the ſake of ſome particular perſons, even for all God's elect, whether among Jews or Gentiles, and who are deſcribed in the following verſe. The Alexandrian copy reads, for us; and the Ethiopic verſion, for him.

Ver. 21. Who by him do believe in God, &c.] Chriſt, as God, is the object of faith; as mediator, he is the way to the Father, by which men come to him, believe in him, and lay hold upon him, as their covenant God and Father; and is alſo the author of that faith by which they believe in him; and all their encouragement to believe is taken from him; and ſuch who do come to God, by Chriſt, and ſtay themſelves upon him, truſting in him, may know, and comfortably conclude, that Chriſt who was fore-ordained from all eternity to be the redeemer of his people; was manifeſt in the fleſh for their ſakes, and to obtain eternal redemption for them, which he was ſent to do, by him that raiſed him up from the dead; mention being made of his blood, as the price of redemption, ver. 19. ſuppoſes that he died; and leſt it ſhould be thought that he was held by the pains of death, and under the power of it, which it was impoſſible he ſhould, conſidering the dignity of his perſon, as the Son of God, and the fulfillment of his engagements, as the ſurety of his people; his reſurrection from the dead is aſſerted, which was not only foretold by himſelf, but predicted by the prophets, and was punctually accompliſhed; and which, as here, is uſually aſcribed to God the Father, tho' not to the excluſion of Chriſt himſelf, who had power to lay down his life, and take it up again; and which is a very great encouragement to faith in God, both with reſpect to juſtification in his ſight, and acceptance with him, ſince Chriſt roſe again for our juſtification, and with regard to a future reſurrection: and gave him glory; by raiſing him from the dead, when his body became a glorious one, being raiſed, ſpiritual, powerful, and incorruptible; and by his aſcenſion to heaven, being received up in a cloud, attended by thouſands of angels, and triumphing over the powers of darkneſs; and by placing him at his own right hand, which is an honour never beſtowed on any mere creature; and by poſſeſſing him with the gifts of the Spirit for men, and giving him all power in heaven and in earth, and authority to exerciſe judgment on all, and a name above every name in this, or the world to come: that your faith and hope might be in God; which are graces that go together, and much reſemble and aſſiſt each other; they are both the gifts of God, and have him for their object, and meet in the ſame perſons; and are greatly encouraged by the reſurrection of Chriſt, and the glory he now enjoys, ſince becauſe he lives, thoſe that believe in him ſhall live alſo, and appear with him in glory.

Ver. 22. Seeing ye have purified your ſouls, &c.] The Apoſtle paſſes to another exhortation, namely, to brotherly love; the ground of which he makes to be, the purification of their ſouls; and which ſuppoſes that they had been impure; and indeed, their whole perſons, ſouls and bodies, were ſo by nature; even all the members of their bodies, and all the powers and faculties of their ſouls: it is internal purity, purity of the heart, that is here particularly reſpected; tho' not to the excluſion of outward purity, for where there is the former, there will be the latter; but there may be an external purity, where there is not the inward one: this the Apoſtle aſcribes to the ſaints themſelves, but not without the grace of God, the blood of Chriſt, and the operations of his Spirit; as appears by a following clauſe; but they are ſaid to purify themſelves, inaſmuch as having the grace of faith beſtowed on them, they were enabled, under the influences of the Spirit of God, to exerciſe it on the blood of Chriſt, which cleanſes from all ſin: in obeying the truth; of the Goſpel, by receiving, believing, and embracing it, in the love of it; which teaches outward purity, and is a means, in the hand of the Spirit, of inward purity, and of directing to the purifying blood of Jeſus, who ſanctifies and cleanſes by the word: through the Spirit; this clauſe is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, but is in the Arabic verſion, and ought to be retained; for, as Chriſt died to purify to himſelf a peculiar people, the Spirit of Chriſt does from him purify the heart, by faith, in his blood; by ſprinkling that on the conſcience, and by leading the faith of God's people to the fountain of it, to waſh in, for ſin, and for uncleanneſs; even both their conſciences and their converſation-garments, whereby they obtain inward and outward purity: unto unfeigned love of the brethren; which is the end of ſanctification, and an evidence of it; when the ſaints are loved as brethren, and becauſe ſuch; and with a love without diſſimulation, not in word and in tongue only, but in deed and in truth: this being the caſe, the exhortation follows: ſee that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: this is Chriſt's new commandment, and the evidence of regeneration; a diſtinguiſhing badge of chriſtianity, and without which all profeſſion of religion is a vain and empty thing: this ſhould be mutual and cordial; ſhould proceed from the heart, and from an heart ſprinkled from an evil conſcience; and ſhould be with warmth and fervency, and not with coldneſs and indifference; tho' the word here uſed, εκτενως, may not only deſign the intenſeneſs of it, but the extenſiveneſs of it alſo; as that it ſhould reach to all the ſaints, the poor as well as the rich, and the leſſer as well as the greater and more knowing believers; and likewiſe may denote the continuance of it; it ought to be continually exerciſed, and to laſt always; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, with a perpetual love.

Ver. 23. Being born again, &c.] As they were of God, according to his abundant mercy, by the reſurrection of Chriſt, to a lively hope of a glorious inheritance; as in ver. 3. and therefore ſeeing they were brethren in a ſpiritual relation, they ought to love as brethren; being children of the ſame Father, belonging to the ſame family and houſhold, having the ſame Spirit, and the ſame nature and diſpoſition, and being members one of another, and heirs of the ſame grace and glory; and not only ſo, but were taught of God their Father in regeneration, to love one another: it became them highly therefore, to exerciſe that grace, and particularly, ſince they were born, not of corruptible ſeed, but of incorruptible; referring not to ſeed caſt into the earth, which firſt corrupts and dies, and then is quickned, and riſes, and brings forth fruit; but to human ſeed, and which the Jews call טפה סרוחה, the filthy drop[k]; which is in itſelf corrupt, and is corrupted, and whereby the corruption of human nature is propagated; for whatſoever is born of the fleſh, is carnal and corrupt; and ſo the Apoſtle has reference to the firſt birth, or natural generation of men, in which they are polluted and depraved, and confirms what the evangeliſt ſays, John i. 13. that regenerate perſons are not born of blood; or become new creatures, and holy men, by their natural deſcent, or firſt birth, be it from whom it will; for all men are of one blood originally, and that is tainted with ſin; nor by the will of fallen creatures, of corruptible men, themſelves or others; but of water, and of the Spirit, of the grace of the Spirit of God, which is ſeed pure and incorruptible, having no mixture or taint of ſin, nor any degree of pollution in it, and which remains ſo; nor can it be corrupted by all the wickedneſs there is in man's heart; nor by all the pollutions of the world, or temptations of ſatan; and this ſeed is conveyed into the heart by the Spirit of God, in regeneration, and it contains all grace in it: by the word of God which liveth and abideth for ever; for the incorruptible ſeed, and the ever-living and abiding word, are two diſtinct things; tho' interpreters generally confound them: and by the word of God, is either meant, the eſſential word, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; who is concerned in regeneration as well as the Father and the Spirit; by whoſe reſurrection, and in conſequence of it, the elect of God are begotten again; and who, as the word, is able to build up all the ſanctified ones, and give them the inheritance they are born heirs unto: or the Goſpel, the word of truth, which is made uſe of as a means of begetting ſouls again; and the rather, ſince it ſeems to be ſo interpreted, ver. 25. the phraſes, which liveth and abideth for ever, may be either read in connexion only with God, and as deſcriptive of him, who is the living God, is from everlaſting to everlaſting, in diſtinction from idols; and here added to ſhew that he can give power and efficacy to his word, to regenerate and quicken, and will continue to preſerve it, and make it uſeful to all his ſaving purpoſes; ſo Jarchi explains the paſſage in Iſ. xl. 8. after referred to, the word of our God ſhall ſtand for ever; "because he lives and abides, "and it is in his power to confirm it; therefore it "follows, O Zion that bringeth good tidings, get "thee up into the high mountain; for becauſe he "lives for ever, this promiſe is publiſhed." Or elſe with the word of God, and is true both of Chriſt, and of the Goſpel. Chriſt is the word which lives; in him, as ſuch, is life; he has life in himſelf as God, as man, and as mediator; and is the author of life, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal; and abides for ever in his perſon, without any change; and in his offices, and grace, and righteouſneſs; he abides a prieſt continually, has an unchangeable prieſthood, and ever lives to make interceſſion, and of his kingdom there is no end: the ſame is ſaid of the Memra, or word of God, in the Chaldee paraphraſe on Hoſ. xi. 9. I am God, מימרי, my word abideth for ever; compare John xii. 34. The Goſpel alſo may be ſaid to live, in oppoſition to the law, which is the killing letter; and becauſe it points out the way of life and ſalvation to ſinners; and is a means of quickning dead ſinners, and of ingenerating that faith by which men live on Chriſt; and of revealing to them that righteouſneſs which is unto juſtification of life; and of ſupporting and maintaining ſpiritual life in them; and of reviving drooping ſaints; the Syriac verſion renders it, the living word of God: and it remains, and will abide; all its promiſes, bleſſings, doctrines, and ordinances are laſting; it will continue in the world until all the elect of God are gathered in, until the ſecond coming of Chriſt, and to the end of the world; notwithſtanding all the perſecutions of men, and cunning craft of falſe teachers, and all the ridicule and contempt it is treated with by mockers and ſcoffers; and will abide in the effects of it, in the hearts of the ſaints, to all eternity.

Ver. 24. For all fleſh is as graſs, &c.] All men, as born of corruptible ſeed, are frail, mortal, and periſhing; they ſpring up like graſs, and look beautiful for a while, but are very weak and tender, and in a little time they are cut down by death, and wither away; and whilſt they live, are, in a good meaſure, nothing but graſs in another form; the ſubſtance of their life is greatly by it; what is the fleſh they eat, but graſs turned into it? and this mortality is not only the caſe of wicked men, as the Jews[l] interpret the word, but of good men; even of the prophets, and preachers of the Goſpel; and yet the word of God ſpoken by them continues for ever: the paſſage referred to, is in Iſ. xl. 6, 7, 8. and all the glory of man as the flower of the graſs; all outward things which are in eſteem with men, and render them glorious to another, as riches, honour, wiſdom, ſtrength, external righteouſneſs, holineſs, and goodneſs; all which are fading and tranſitory, like the flower of the field; but the Goſpel continues, and reveals durable riches, and honour with Chriſt; and true wiſdom and ſtrength with him, and ſpiritual knowledge, in compariſon of which, all things are droſs and dung; and an everlaſting righteouſneſs, and true holineſs in him: ſome have thought, reſpect may be had to the legal diſpenſation, and to all the glory and ſtatelineſs and goodlineſs of the worſhip and ordinances of it, which were to endure but for a time, and are now removed; and the Goſpel diſpenſation has taken place of them, which will continue to the end of the world: the graſs withereth and the flower thereof fadeth away; and ſo fading are all the above things.

Ver. 25. But the word of the Lord endureth for ever, &c.] Tho' men die, and miniſters of the word too, and every thing in the world is uncertain, unſtable, fleeting, and paſſing away, and whatever change has been in the ordinances of divine ſervice; yet the word of the Lord, the Goſpel of Chriſt, is ſettled for ever, and will never paſs away: and this is the word which by the Goſpel is preached unto you; this is the Apoſtle's application of the paſſage in Iſaiah, ſhewing that the word of the Lord there, is the ſame with the Goſpel preached by him, and the other Apoſtles, at that preſent time; and is no other than that good tidings Zion is ſaid to bring; ſee Iſ. xl. 9. the ſelf-ſame Goſpel the prophet Iſaiah preached, the Apoſtles did, tho' with greater clearneſs, and more ſucceſs; ſee Rom. x. 8, 16.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter conſiſts of exhortations in general, to a holy life; and in particular, to obedience to ſuperiors. It begins with an exhortation to lay aſide various vices, which were unbecoming, regenerate perſons, ver. 1. and agreeable to their character, as new-born babes, to expreſs a deſire after the Goſpel, which is commended from its nature, being comparable to milk; and from its quality, being reaſonable, ſincere, and unmixed; and from the end and uſefulneſs of it, a ſpiritual growth; and the argument engaging to ſuch a deſire, is the experience they had of the grace of Chriſt in it, ver. 2, 3. whoſe excellency is declared, under the metaphor of a ſtone, ſaid to be living, to be choſen of God, and precious to him, tho' rejected by men; to whom the ſaints are encouraged to come, as lively ſtones built up, a ſpiritual houſe, for the exerciſe of the holy office of the prieſthood, by offering up ſpiritual ſacrifices acceptable to God thro' Chriſt, ver. 4, 5. and that Chriſt is ſuch a precious ſtone, is proved from Iſ. xxviii. 16. and not only to God, but to all them that believe; tho' to them that believe not, he is the ſtone of rejection, ſtumbling and offence; to ſtumble at which, and the doctrine of it, through diſobedience, they were of old appointed by God, ver. 6, 7, 8. but the character of the perſons the Apoſtle writes to, was very different, quite the reverſe; being choſen, and called, and manifeſtly the people of God, and ſharing in his grace and mercy, ver. 9, 10. and theſe he exhorts, ſuitable to their ſtate and condition, to abſtain from ſin, as an enemy to their ſouls, and to live an honeſt life and converſation among the Gentiles, that they, inſtead of ſpeaking evil of them, might, by beholding their good works, glorify God, ver. 11, 12. And particularly he exhorts them to obedience to civil magiſtrates, both ſuperior and inferior; partly from the author of them, they being of the Lord; and partly from the uſefulneſs of them to puniſh wicked men, and to encourage good men; and alſo from its being the will of God, by ſuch obedience to ſilence the cavils of fooliſh men, ver. 13, 14, 15. And whereas it might be objected, that they were made free by Chriſt, and therefore ſhould not be the ſervants of men; it is granted, that they were free; but then it is denied, that they ſhould uſe their liberty for a cloke of maliciouſneſs: and beſides, it ſhould be obſerved, that they were the ſervants of God, and therefore ought to do what he enjoined them; and, among other things, yield obedience to civil magiſtrates, ver. 16. And to this purpoſe are various exhortations in ver. 17. and another particular one is added, which is to ſervants, to be ſubject to their maſters, and fear them, whether they be good or bad, ver. 18. and then he comforts ſuch that had bad maſters, and encourages them to bear the injuries they received from them patiently; becauſe ſo to do was grateful to God, and acceptable in his ſight; and becauſe they were called unto it by him; and becauſe of the example Chriſt had left them in ſuffering for them, ver. 19, 20, 21. And this is further urged from the character of Chriſt, who was without ſin, and yet ſuffered, and from his conduct, who, when reviled, made no return, but left his cauſe with God, ver. 22, 23. which leads on the Apoſtle to take notice of the nature of Chriſt's ſufferings in his body on the croſs, and the ends of them, which were expiation of ſin, healing diſeaſes, and holineſs of life, as a conſequent thereof, ver. 24. previous to which is converſion, which is illuſtrated by the former ſtate and condition men are in, being as ſheep going aſtray; and by their preſent one, being returned to Chriſt, the ſhepherd and biſhop of ſouls, ver. 25.

Ver. 1. Wherefore laying aſide all malice, &c.] Since the perſons the Apoſtle writes to were born again, and therefore ought to love one another, he exhorts them to the diſuſe of ſuch vices as were diſagreeable to their character as regenerate men, and, contrary to brotherly love; he diſſuades them from them, and adviſes to lay them aſide, either as weights and burdens, which it was not fit for new-born babes to carry; ſee Heb. xii. 1. or rather as old worn-out clothes, as filthy rags, which ſhould be put off, laid by, and never uſed more, being what were very unſuitable to their character and profeſſion to wear: the metaphor is the ſame as in Eph. iv. 22. and Col. iii. 8, 9. and the firſt he mentions is malice; to live in which is a mark of an unregenerate man, and very unbecoming ſuch who are born again; and is not conſiſtent with the relation of brethren, and character of children, or new-born babes, who are without malice, and do not bear and retain it: all of this is to be laid aſide, towards all perſons whatever, and in every ſhape, and in every inſtance of it: and alſo all guile; fraud, or deceit, in words or actions; and which ſhould not be found, and appear in any form, in Iſraelites indeed, in brethren, in the children of God; who ought not to lye one to another, or defraud each other, nor expreſs that with their lips which they have not in their hearts; which babes are free from, and ſo ſhould babes in Chriſt: and hypocriſies; both to God and men: hypocriſy to God is, when perſons profeſs that which they have not, as love to God, faith in Chriſt, zeal for religion, fervent devotion, and ſincerity in the worſhip of God; and do all they do to be ſeen of men, and appear outwardly righteous, and yet are full of all manner of iniquity: hypocriſy to men is, pretence of friendſhip, loving in word and tongue only, ſpeaking peaceably with the mouth, but in heart laying wait; a ſin to be abhorred and deteſted by one that is born from above; and is contrary to that integrity, ſimplicity, and ſincerity of heart which become regenerate perſons, the children of God, and brethren one of another: and envies; at each others happineſs and proſperity, riches, honours, gifts temporal or ſpiritual; for ſuch are works of the fleſh, ſhew men to be carnal, are unbecoming regenerated perſons, and contrary to the exerciſe of chriſtian charity, or love, which envieth not the welfare of others, either reſpecting body, ſoul, or eſtate: and all evil ſpeakings; backbitings, whiſperings, detractions, hurting one another's characters by innuendo's, falſe charges, and evil ſurmiſes; which is not acting like men that are made new creatures, and are partakers of the divine nature, nor like brethren, or as Chriſt's little ones, and who are of God, begotten again to be a kind of firſt-fruits of his creatures.

Ver. 2. As new born babes, &c.] The Syriac verſion renders it, be ye ſimple as infants; and as if it was a diſtinct exhortation of itſelf, and from that which follows; tho' it ſeems rather to be deſcriptive of the perſons ſpoken to, and a character of them, under which the Apoſtle addreſſes them; which carries in it a reaſon ſtrengthening the exhortation aſter given: he takes it for granted that they were begotten again, according to the abundant mercy of God, and born of incorruptible ſeed, by the word of God, and that they were juſt, or lately born; and which is to be underſtood of them all in general, and not of younger converts among them, who might be called little children with reſpect to others who were young men, or fathers; but that comparatively ſpeaking, thoſe that had been of the longeſt ſtanding were but as it were newly born, it being at moſt but a few years ſince they were called by grace: and they were as babes, not on account of their want of knowledge, or unſkilfulneſs in the word of righteouſneſs; or of non-proficiency in the learning of divine truths, and their great dullneſs, backwardneſs, and imperfection; or becauſe of their incapacity in taking in, and digeſting the ſtrong meat and ſublimer doctrines of the Goſpel; or for their inſtability and ſimplicity, being eaſily deceived and beguiled; nor for their weakneſs in faith, not being able to walk alone, and their inſufficiency to defend, or provide for themſelves; but becauſe of their harmleſſneſs and innocence, meekneſs and humility; and for the ſincerity of their faith and love, obedience and profeſſion. The proſelytes to the Jews religion are often ſaid[m] to be כקטון שנולד דמי, as an infant juſt born, or a new-born babe; to which the alluſion may here be made: deſire the ſincere milk of the word; this is not a declaration that theſe new-born ſouls did do ſo, tho' that might be true, but an exhortation to them ſo to do, as it became them: by the ſincere milk of the word, is meant the Goſpel, even the whole of it, and not as elſewhere, the more plain and eaſy truths of it; which is compared to milk, for its purity in itſelf, for every word of God is pure; and for its purifying nature, as uſed by the Spirit of God; and for its ſweetneſs and agreeable taſte to a regenerate man; and becauſe eaſy of digeſtion to a ſpiritual one; and becauſe it is nutritive to him, by it he is nouriſhed up unto eternal life; and becauſe, as milk is of a cooling nature, ſo the Goſpel is a means, in the hand of the Spirit of God, of aſſwaging thoſe inflammations, and of allaying that wrath and fiery indignation raiſed in the conſcience of a ſinner, by the law; and becauſe, as milk, medicinally uſed, is a reſtorative in conſumptive diſorders, ſo the Goſpel is not only the means of helping a declining perſon, and who is waſted and conſumed by ſin, but even of quickning ſuch as are dead in ſin; it is the ſavour of life unto life. The Jewiſh writers ſpeak of חלב של תורה, the milk of the law[n], of which they generally interpret[o] the paſſage in Iſ. lv. 1. but it is much better applied to the Goſpel, which is the milk of the word, or rational milk; not that the Goſpel is a ſcheme, according to the carnal reaſon of men; it is contrary to that, and above ſound reaſon, tho' not repugnant to it; but it is what is calculated for faith, the ſpiritual reaſon of men, and for ſuch who have their ſpiritual ſenſes exerciſed, to diſcern between good and evil; it is a ſpiritual drink, and is made up of ſpiritual things, and ſuited to the ſpiritual man; it is milk, not in a natural, but in a myſtic and ſpiritual ſenſe: the Syriac verſion renders it, the word which is as milk, pure and ſpiritual: and it is ſincere; without mixture, unadulterated with the inventions and doctrines of men, Jews or hereticks: or without deceit; being neither deceitfully handled by the faithful miniſters of it, nor cauſing deceit, or deceiving thoſe that cordially receive it. Now, this it becomes regenerate perſons to deſire; and vehemently long after, as a new-born babe does after its mother's milk; for the Goſpel is that to one that is born again, as the breaſt is to a babe: deſire after it ſuppoſes knowledge of it; and where there is an experimental knowledge, there will be a value and eſteem for it, even above neceſſary food, and at times, an hungring and thirſting after it, an impatient longing for, and deſire of it; when ſuch ſouls will labour after it, and diligently obſerve and attend every opportunity of enjoying it, and think long ere the ſeaſons of meeting with it return; for it is ſuitable food for them, ſavoury food, ſuch as their ſouls love, and which indeed they cannot live without: now the end of this exhortation, and of ſuch a deſire, and of feeding on the words of faith and ſound doctrine, is, that ye may grow thereby; regenerate perſons are not at their full growth at once; they are firſt children, then young men, and then fathers in Chriſt; the Goſpel is appointed as a means of their ſpiritual growth, and by the bleſſing of God becomes ſo, and which they find to be ſo by good experience; and therefore this milk of the word is deſirable on this account, for the encreaſe of faith, and the furtherance of the joy of it; for their growth in grace, and in the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt, and in an experience of ſpiritual ſtrength from him, and unto him, as their head in all things; not merely in the leaves of a profeſſion, but in the fruits of grace, righteouſneſs, and holineſs. The Alexandrian copy, and ſeveral others, and alſo the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, add, unto ſalvation; that is, until they come to a perfect knowledge of Chriſt, and to be perfect men with him, being arrived to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fullneſs of Chriſt, and in the poſſeſſion of that ſalvation he has obtained for them.

Ver. 3. If ſo be ye have taſted that the Lord is gracious.] Reference is had to Pſ. xxxiv. 8. O taſte and ſee that the Lord is good; and the Syriac verſion here adds, if ye have ſeen: by the Lord, is meant, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as the following words ſhew, who is gracious, and amiable, and lovely in his perſon; who has a fullneſs of grace in him for his people; has diſplayed his grace towards them, in engaging for them as a ſurety, in aſſuming their nature, obeying, ſuffering, and dying in their ſtead; he is gracious in his word and promiſes, truths and ordinances, and in all his offices and relations; and regenerate perſons have taſted that he is ſo: an unregenerate man has no ſpiritual taſte; his taſte is vitiated by ſin, and not being changed, ſin is a ſweet morſel in his mouth, and he diſreliſhes every thing that is ſpiritual; but one that is born again, ſavours the things of the Spirit of God; ſin is exceeding ſinful to him, and Chriſt exceeding precious; he, and his fruit, his promiſes, and bleſſings of grace, his word and ordinances, are ſweet unto his taſte: and the taſte he has is not a mere ſuperficial one, ſuch as hypocrites may have of the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come; but ſuch a taſte of Chriſt, and of his grace, as by a true faith, to eat his fleſh, and drink his blood, and ſo have everlaſting life; ſuch have a ſaving and experimental knowledge of Chriſt, an application of him, and his ſaving benefits to them, a revelation of him in them, ſo that they find and feel that he dwells in them, and they in him; ſuch receive out of Chriſt's fullneſs, and grace for grace, and live by faith upon him, and receive nouriſhment from him; and of this the Apoſtle made no doubt concerning theſe perſons, but took it for granted that they had had ſuch taſtes of Chriſt, and therefore could not but deſire the Goſpel, which is a revelation of Chriſt, and ſets forth the glory of his perſon, and the riches of his grace: and whereas, ſuch as have truly taſted of his grace, cannot but deſire to have more, and freſh taſtes of it; where ſhould they have them, but in his word and ordinances? and therefore would they grow in grace, and know more of Chriſt, and taſte more of his goodneſs, it is their intereſt, as it is their ſpiritual nature, to deſire the Goſpel, in the purity and ſincerity of it.

[o] Jarchi, Aben Ezra & Kimchi in Iſ. lv. 1. Abarbinel, Maſhmia Jeſhua, fol. 26. 1.

Ver. 4. To whom coming, as unto a living ſtone, &c.] Chriſt here, as often elſewhere, is compared to a ſtone; and Peter, by the uſe of this metaphor, ſhews, that he is not the rock, but Chriſt is the rock on which the church is built, and he is the foundation-ſtone on which every believer is laid; and 'tis chiefly with reſpect to the uſefulneſs of a ſtone in building, that Chriſt is compared to one, who is the foundation and corner-ſtone, as well as for ſtrength and duration: and he is called a living one, becauſe he has life in himſelf, as God, as mediator, and as man; and communicates life to others, as natural life to all creatures, and ſpiritual and eternal life to his people, whoſe great priviledge it is to come to him: and by coming to him is meant, believing in him; and it does not deſign the firſt act of faith on Chriſt, or a ſoul's firſt coming to Chriſt, but an after and continued exerciſe of faith on him; and it ſuppoſes Chriſt to be come at, notwithſtanding he is in heaven, and ſaints on earth, for their faith and hope can enter into, and reach him within the vail, and notwithſtanding their many tranſgreſſions and backſlidings; it ſuppoſes life in them, or they could not come; and a ſenſe of their need of him, of his righteouſneſs to juſtify them, of his blood for pardon and cleanſing, of his fullneſs to ſupply their want, of food, reſt, peace, comfort, and ſalvation in him; and a perſuaſion of his ability and willingneſs to relieve them: and they are encouraged to come to him under the above conſiderations, as a ſtone, a foundation-ſtone; believing that he is laid as a foundation, and that he is the only foundation, and therefore they lay the whole ſtreſs of their ſalvation, and build all their hopes of happineſs on him; and as a living ſtone, deriving grace, life, and ſtrength from him; exerciſing faith on him for all the mercies, bleſſings, and comforts of a ſpiritual life, and looking to his mercy for eternal life. Diſallowed indeed of men; by the Jewiſh builders, high-prieſts, Scribes, and Phariſees, and the body and bulk of that nation; who rejected him as the Meſſiah, and ſtone of Iſrael, refuſed him as a foundation-ſtone, and left him out of the building; and layed another foundation, even their own works of righteouſneſs, on which ſandy foundation they built themſelves, and directed others to do ſo likewiſe; and ſet him at nought, as a living ſtone, would not come to him for life, but ſought it in the law, the killing letter, and among their dead works; but tho' Chriſt was thus diſallowed and diſeſteemed of by men, yet was highly valued and eſteemed by God: but choſen of God, and precious; his human nature was choſen from among, and above all other individuals of mankind, to be united to the Son of God; as God-man and mediator, he was choſen to that high-office, to be the head of the church, and the ſaviour of the body; to be the foundation in the ſpiritual building, and to be the author and giver of ſpiritual and eternal life, to as many as were given him. Moreover, this phraſe denotes the ſuper-excellency of Chriſt, to angels and men, in the account of God; being the brightneſs of his glory, the expreſs image of his perſon, the Son of his love, in whom he was always well-pleaſed, and in whom he took infinite delight, conſidered both as his Son, and the ſurety of his people; and to whom he was precious, and by him highly honoured, made higher than the kings of the earth, than the angels in heaven, than the heavens themſelves, being ſet down at God's right hand, and a name given him above every name in this world, or that to come; and who is precious to the ſaints too, more ſo than rubies, or any precious ſtones, or any thing or creature whatever; his perſon is precious, and ſo are his name, his blood, his righteouſneſs, his truths, his ordinances, and his people.

Ver. 5. Ye alſo as lively ſtones, &c.] Saints likewiſe are compared to ſtones; they lie in the ſame quarry, and are the ſame by nature as the reſt of mankind, till dug out and ſeparated from thence by the powerful and efficacious grace of God, when they are hewn, and made fit for the ſpiritual building; where both for their ornament, beauty, and ſtrength, which they receive from Chriſt, they are compared to ſtones, and are laſting and durable, and will never periſh, nor be removed out of the building: and becauſe of that life which they derive from him, and have in him, they are called lively, or living ſtones; the Spirit of life having entered into them, a principle of life being implanted in them, and coming to Chriſt, the living ſtone, they live upon him, and he lives in them; and his grace in them is a well of living water, ſpringing up into eternal life. It was uſual with poets and philoſophers to call ſtones, as they lie in the quarry, before they are taken out of it, living ones: ſo Virgil[p], deſcribing the ſeats of the nymphs, ſays, intus aquæ dulces vivoque ſedilia ſaxo, nympharum domus, &c. but here the Apoſtle calls ſuch living ſtones, who were taken out from among the reſt: the ſtones which Deucalion and Pyrrha caſt over their heads, after the flood, are called[q], ζωοθεντες λιθοι, quickened ſtones, they becoming men, as the fable ſays. Are built up a ſpiritual houſe; theſe living ſtones being laid, and cemented together, in a Goſpel church-ſtate, become the houſe of God in a ſpiritual ſenſe, in diſtinction from the material houſe of the tabernacle, and temple of old, to which the alluſion is; and which is built up an habitation for God, by the Spirit, and is made up of ſpiritual men; ſuch as have the Spirit of God, and ſavour the things of the Spirit, and worſhip God in ſpirit and in truth; among whom ſpiritual ſervices are performed, as prayer, praiſe, preaching, and hearing the word, and adminiſtring ordinances. Some read theſe words in the imperative, as an exhortation, be ye built up as lively ſtones; and be ye ſpiritual temples and holy prieſts, as the Syriac verſion. A ſynagogue with the Jews is called, בית רוחני, a ſpiritual houſe[r]; and ſo is the third temple, which the Jews expect in the times of the Meſſiah; of which one of their writers[s] thus ſays: "it "is known from the ancient wiſe men, that the "future redemption with which ſhall be the third, "רוחני, ſpiritual ſanctuary, is the work of God,

“ and will not be as the former redemptions: I will “ fill this houſe with glory; this is, רוחני, a ſpiritual one, for even the walls ſhall be, רוחניים, “ ſpiritual —— for even all this houſe ſhall be ſpiritual; for that which was then built, which is “ the ſecond, ſhall be turned into another, a ſpiritual one:” and which has been already done, and is what the Apoſtle means here, the church, under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, or the Goſpel church-ſtate, in oppoſition to the worldly ſanctuary, and carnal worſhip of the Jews. An holy prieſthood; in alluſion to the prieſts under the law, who were ſet apart, and ſanctified for that office; but now under the Goſpel, all the ſaints are prieſts unto God, and are all appointed and directed to offer up ſpiritual ſacrifices; their whole ſelves, ſouls, and bodies, as a holy, living, and acceptable ſacrifice; their prayers, and praiſes, and all good works done in faith, and from love, and to the glory of God; particularly acts of kindneſs and beneficence to poor ſaints; theſe are called ſpiritual, in diſtinction from legal ſacrifices, and becauſe offered in a ſpiritual manner, under the influence, and by the aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God, and with their ſpirits. So the Jews ſpeak of ſpiritual ſacrifices, as diſtinct from material ones: “ the intellectual ſacrifice, they ſay [t], “ is before the material ſacrifices, both in time and “ excellency.——Cain brought an offering to the “ Lord of the fruit of the earth, and behold the “ intellectual attention did not agree with it, which “ is, הקרבן רוחני, the ſpiritual ſacrifice.” Now ſuch are acceptable to God by Jeſus Chriſt; through whom they are offered up; for ’tis thro’ him the ſaints have acceſs to God, preſent themſelves to him, and their ſervices; and both perſons and ſervices are only accepted in Chriſt, and for his ſake, and in virtue of his ſacrifice, which is always of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to God.

Ver. 6. Wherefore alſo it is contained in the ſcripture, &c.] Iſ. xxviii. 16. This is produced as a proof of the excellency of Chriſt, as compared to a ſtone; and of his uſefulneſs in the ſpiritual building; and of his being choſen of God, and precious, tho’ rejected by men; and of the happineſs, comfort, and ſafety of thoſe that believe in him. That this prophecy belongs to the Meſſiah, is the ſenſe of ſome of the Jewiſh writers: the Targum on it applies it to a mighty king; it does not mention the king Meſſiah, as Galatinus [u] cites it; but Jarchi expreſly names him, and interprets it of him: behold I lay in Sion a chief corner-ſtone, elect precious; Chriſt is here called a chief corner-ſtone, as in Eph. ii. 20. becauſe he not only adorns and ſtrengthens the building, but unites the parts, and keeps them together, even all the ſaints, Jews or Gentiles, in all ages and places, whether in heaven or earth; and he, as ſuch, is choſen of God for that purpoſe, and is precious both to God and man, on that account; and is a ſtone, not of mens laying, but of God’s laying in his council, covenant, promiſes, and prophecies, in the miſſion of him into this world, and in the Goſpel-miniſtry; the place where he is laid is in Sion, the Goſpel church, of which he is both the foundation and corner-ſtone: and this account is introduced with a behold, it being ſomething very wonderful, and worthy of attention: to which is added, he that believeth on him ſhall not be confounded; or aſhamed; of the foundation and corner-ſtone Chriſt, nor of his faith in him; and he ſhall not be confounded by men or devils, neither in this world, nor in that to come; he ſhall have confidence before Chriſt, and not be aſhamed at his coming; he ſhall be ſafe now, being laid on this ſtone; nor ſhall he be removed from it, or intimidated by any enemy, ſo as to flee from it; nor ſhall he make haſte, as it is in Iſ. xxviii. 16. to lay another foundation; and he ſhall be found upon this hereafter; ſo that his perſon and ſtate will be ſafe, tho’ many of his works may be burnt up.

Ver. 7. Unto you therefore which believe, &c.] And ſuch are not all they that can ſay their creed, or give their aſſent to the articles of it; nor all that believe a divine revelation, and that the ſcriptures are the word of God, and give credit to all that is contained in the ſacred oracles; or who believe the whole Goſpel, and all the truths of it; as that there is one God; that there are three perſons in the Godhead, Father, Son, and Spirit; that Chriſt is the Son of God, and truly God; that he is the mediator between God and man; that he is the Meſſiah, is become incarnate, has obeyed, ſuffered, and died for men, and is the ſaviour of them; that he roſe again, aſcended to heaven, is ſet down at the right hand of God, intercedes for his people, and will come a ſecond time to judge the world in righteouſneſs; together with all other truths which ariſe from, depend upon, and are connected with theſe; nor all that ſay they believe, or profeſs to do ſo; but ſuch who have ſeen themſelves loſt and undone by ſin, their need of a ſaviour, and Chriſt as the only one; who have ſeen the Son, the beauty of his perſon, the fullneſs of his grace, and the neceſſity and ſuitableneſs of ſalvation by him; who have beheld him as able to ſave them, as every way proper for them, and deſirable by them, for faith is a ſight of Chriſt; who alſo come to him under the drawings of efficacious grace, as periſhing ſinners, encouraged by his invitations and declarations, and venture on him; who likewiſe lay hold upon him, as their ſaviour, and will have no other; give up themſelves to him, and commit their all into his hands; who rely and ſtay themſelves upon him, truſt him with all they have, and for all they want, expecting grace and glory from him; who live upon him, and walk on in him, go on believing in him, till they receive the end of their faith, the ſalvation of their ſouls. Now to theſe, in proof of what is aſſerted in the above paſſage out of Iſaiah, Chriſt is precious; he is ſo in all his names and titles, as Immanuel, God with us, and that cluſter of them in Iſ. ix. 6. and particularly his name Jeſus, a ſaviour, which is as ointment poured forth, and draws the love of believers to him; and ſo he is in both his natures, divine and human; the perfections of deity in him, his being in the form of God, and equal to him, the brightneſs of his Father’s glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, render him very amiable in the view of believers; who rightly conclude from hence, that all he has done, and does, muſt anſwer the purpoſes for which they are deſigned; and his having a perfect human nature, like to theirs, excepting ſin, in which he wrought ſalvation for them on earth, and is now glorified in heaven, makes him a delightful object to them: he is alſo precious to them in all his offices; in his prieſtly office, his blood is precious, as it muſt needs be, ſince by it they are purchaſed and redeemed; they are juſtified and ſanctified by it; thro’ it they have the forgiveneſs of ſin, and boldneſs to enter into the holieſt of all: his righteouſneſs is precious to them, it being the beſt robe, the wedding-garment, fine linnen, clean and white, every way ſuitable to them, and anſwerable to the demands of the law; is pure, perfect, and everlaſting; that by which they are juſtified from all things, and which will anſwer for them in a time to come, and intitles them to eternal life. His ſacrifice is precious, of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to them, as well as to God; by which their ſins are fully expiated, put, and taken away; full ſatisfaction being made for them, and they themſelves thereby perfected for ever.

2 And ſo he is in his prophetic office. His word is precious, and all the truths of the Goſpel, which are comparable to gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones; the promiſes of it are exceeding great and precious, being ſuited to the caſes of all believers: and he is alſo precious in his kingly office; his commands are not grievous; his yoke is eaſy, and burden light; believers love his commandments above gold, yea, above fine gold, and eſteem his precepts concerning all things, to be right, and delight in his ways and ordinances: moreover, he is precious to them in all his relations, as he is the head of eminence and influence, their kind and loving huſband, their everlaſting father, their affectionate brother, and faithful friend; his whole perſon, in every view, is precious to them that believe; the church of Chriſt, the members of his body, the ſons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, in theſe is all the delight of ſaints; every thing that is in Chriſt, that is of him, or belongs to him, is precious to ſuch ſouls: ſome read the words, to you therefore that believe, he is honour; as the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions; and ſo the word is rendred in Rom. xiii. 7. he is both an honour to them, that they are related to him; and he is honoured by them, by believing in him, and obeying him; and he is the cauſe of all their true honour, both in this and the other world. The Syriac verſion renders it, to you therefore is this honour given; namely, that ſuch a ſtone is laid, and that they were built upon it, and ſhould not be confounded, or aſhamed, either here or hereafter; connecting the words with the preceding. The Septuagint uſe the word the Apoſtle here does, in Iſ. xi. 10. where it is propheſied of the Meſſiah, that his reſt ſhall be glorious; they render it τιμη, honour, or precious. The Jewiſh writers have adopted the word טימי, into their language, and uſe it for profit, and gain [w]; in which ſenſe it is applicable to Chriſt, who is gain to believers, both in life and in death; they being bleſſed with all ſpiritual bleſſings in him, and he being all in all to them: and alſo they uſe it, as denoting the intrinſic price and value of any thing [x], and which is a right ſenſe of the word; and to believers the price of wiſdom, or Chriſt is far above rubies, and all the things that can be deſired; to them he is precious as a ſtone, as a foundation and corner-ſtone, and more precious than the moſt precious ſtones or things in nature; this he is to them that believe: next follows, in this and the other verſe, the account of what he is to them that believe not; but unto them which be diſobedient; who are unperſuadable, unbelieving, and are children of diſobedience; who neither obey God and his righteous law, nor Chriſt and his Goſpel: the ſtone which the builders diſallowed, the ſame is made the head of the corner; reference is manifeſtly had to Pſ. cxviii. 22. which is a paſſage that clearly belongs to the Meſſiah, and which is ſuggeſted by Chriſt himſelf, in Matt. xxi. 42. ſee the note there; and is by our Apoſtle, in Acts iv. 11, 12. applied unto him: by the builders are meant, the rulers of the Jews, both civil end eccleſiaſtical, and eſpecially the latter, the ſcribes, phariſees, and chief-prieſts; who ſet up for builders of the church of God, but were miſerable ones; they built themſelves, and taught others to build, on the obſervance of the ceremonial law, and the traditions of the elders; on their carnal privileges, and moral righteouſneſs; and theſe diſallowed of Chriſt in the building, rejected him as the Meſſiah, refuſed him as the Saviour and redeemer, and ſet him at naught, had him in the utmoſt deriſion, and reckoned him as a worm, and no man; but to their great mortification, he is not only laid and retained as the foundation and corner-ſtone, but made the head of the building, and is exalted at God's right hand above angels and men; he is the head of the body, the church; he is higher than the kings of the earth, and angels are ſubject to him.

Ver. 8. And a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence, &c.] The Apoſtle alludes to Iſ. viii. 14. and which is a prophecy of the Meſſiah; ſee the note on Rom. ix. 33. and had its accompliſhment in the unelieving and diſobedient Jews; who ſtumbled at his birth and parentage; at the manner of his birth, being born of a virgin; at the meanneſs of his parents, his ſuppoſed father being a carpenter, and his mother, Mary, a poor woman, when they expected the Meſſiah would have ſprung from ſome rich and noble family; and at the place of his birth, which they imagined was Galilee, from his education and converſation there; they ſtumbled alſo at his education, and could not conceive how he ſhould know letters, and from whence he ſhould have his wiſdom, having never been trained up in any of their ſchools and academies, or at the feet of any of their doctors and Rabbins; but, on the other hand, was brought up and employed in the trade of a carpenter; they ſtumbled at his outward meanneſs and poverty, when they expected the Meſſiah would be a rich, powerful, and glorious monarch; and ſo at the obſcurity of his kingdom, which was not of this world, and came not with obſervation, when they dreamt of an earthly and temporal one, which ſhould be ſet up in great ſplendor and glory; and they ſtumbled likewiſe at the company he kept, and the audience that attended him, being the poorer ſort of the people, and the more illiterate, and alſo ſuch who had been very prophane and wicked, as publicans and harlots; moreover, they ſtumbled at his miniſtry, at the doctrine he preached, particularly at the doctrine of his divinity, and of ſpiritual communion with him, by eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood, and at the doctrines of diſtinguiſhing grace; and ſo at his miracles by which he confirmed his miſſion and miniſtry, ſome of theſe being wrought on the ſabbath-day, and others they imputed to diabolical influence and aſſiſtance: in a word, they ſtumbled at his death, having imbibed a notion that Chriſt abideth for ever, and eſpecially at the manner of it, the death of the croſs; wherefore the preaching of Chriſt crucified, always was, and ſtill is, a ſtumbling-block unto them: even to them which ſtumble at the word; either the eſſential Word, Chriſt Jeſus, as before; or rather at the doctrine of the Goſpel, at that part of it which reſpects a Trinity of perſons in the Godhead; becauſe their carnal reaſon could not comprehend it, and they refuſed to ſubmit to revelation, and to receive the witneſs of God, which is greater than that of men; and at that part of it, which regards the deity of Chriſt, and that for this reaſon, becauſe he was a man, and in order to enervate the efficacy of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, and fearing too much honour ſhould be given to him; and alſo at that part of the word which concerns the diſtinguiſhing grace of God, as eternal perſonal election, particular redemption, and efficacious grace in converſion; againſt which the carnal mind of man is continually cavilling and replying, and in ſo doing, againſt God himſelf, charging him with cruelty, injuſtice, and inſincerity; and particularly at that part of the word which holds forth the doctrine of free juſtification, by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; this was the grand ſtumbling-block of the Jews, who ſought for righteouſneſs, not by faith, but, as it were, by the works of the law, being ignorant of the righteouſneſs of God, and of the ſpirituality of the law, and of themſelves, and their own righteouſneſs, of which they had an overweaning opinion: being diſobedient; to the Goſpel revelation, and unwilling to ſubmit their carnal reaſon to it; this is the ſource and cauſe of their ſtumbling at Chriſt and his Goſpel: it is worth while to compare this with the Chaldee paraphraſe of Iſ. viii. 14. which paſſage is here referred to; and the paraphraſe of it runs thus; "if ye obey not, his word ſhall be among you for revenge, and for a ſtone ſmiting, and for a rock of offence to both houſes of the princes of Iſrael, and for deſtruction and offence to thoſe who are divided upon the houſe of Judah, &c. whereunto alſo they were appointed; both to ſtumble at the word of the Goſpel, and at Chriſt, the ſum and ſubſtance of it, he being ſet in the counſel and purpoſe of God, as for the riſing of ſome, ſo, for the ſtumbling and falling of others; and alſo to that diſobedience and infidelity which was the cauſe of their ſtumbling; for as there are ſome whom God has appointed and fore-ordained to believe in Chriſt, and on whom he has determined to beſtow true faith in him, and who have it as a pure gift, in conſequence of ſuch appointment; ſo there are others, whom he has determined to leave in that diſobedience and infidelity, into which the fall brought and concluded them, through which they ſtumble at Chriſt, and his word, and in conſequence thereof, juſtly periſh; but this is not the caſe of all; there are ſome who are the objects of diſtinguiſhing grace and favour, and who are deſcribed in the following verſe.

Ver. 9. But ye are a choſen generation, &c.] Or kindred; the phraſe is to be ſeen in the Septuagint, on Iſ. xliii. 20. to which, and the following verſe, the Apoſtle refers here, and in another part of this text. The alluſion is throughout to the people of Iſrael in general, who, in an external way, were all that is here ſaid; but was only true in a ſpiritual ſenſe, of ſuch as were choſen and called among the Jews: and who were a generation or kindred; being regenerate, or through abundant mercy begotten, and of an incorruptible ſeed born again; and were a-kin to God, he being their Father, and they his children by adopting grace, and which was made manifeſt by their new birth; and alſo a-kin to Chriſt, he being their head, huſband, father, and brother, and they his members, ſpouſe, children, and brethren; and to the ſaints, being of the ſame houſhold and family, in heaven and in earth; having the ſame father, lord, ſpirit, faith, baptiſm, and they all brethren: and they were a choſen generation or kindred; being famous, and in high eſteem with God, and accounted by him for a generation; he having choſen them above all kindred, tongue, people, and nation, and that from all eternity; and of his own ſovereign good-will and pleaſure; and not on account of their faith, holineſs, and good works; and to ſpecial benefits, to the relation and kindred they are in, to grace here, and glory hereafter; to regeneration and ſanctification, and to ſalvation and eternal life; juſt as Iſrael, as a nation, were choſen above all others, becauſe of the love of God to them, and for no other reaſon, to many external privileges and favours, which others did not enjoy: now the Apoſtle mentions this character firſt, becauſe God's eternal election is the ſource and ſpring of all ſpiritual bleſſings, which provides and ſecures them, and according to which, they are beſtowed, and with which, they are inſeparably connected: a royal prieſthood; referring to Exod. xix. 6. where the Iſraelites are called, a kingdom of prieſts; which the Chaldee paraphraſe renders, kings prieſts; ſee Rev. i. 6. a character which one of the Jewiſh commentators ſays[y], ſhall return to the Jews לעתיד לבא, in time to come; and well agrees with all the people of Chriſt, whether Jews or Gentiles, who are all of them kings, through their relation to Chriſt; and at the preſent time have a kingdom which cannot be moved, or taken away from them; being not only brought into the Goſpel diſpenſation, the kingdom of the Meſſiah, and having a right to all the privileges and immunities of it, but have alſo the kingdom of grace ſet up within them, or grace, as a reigning principle implanted in them; which lies not in any thing external, but in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, in inward peace, and ſpiritual joy; and they have the power of kings over ſin, ſatan, and the world; and the riches of kings, being poſſeſſed of the riches of grace now, and intitled to the riches of glory in another world; they live like kings, they wear royal apparel, the robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs; they ſit at the king's table, and feed on royal dainties; and are attended on as kings, angels being their life-guards and miniſtring-ſpirits to them; and hereafter they ſhall reign with Chriſt on earth, and that for the ſpace of a thouſand years, and after that, for ever; being raiſed up from a low eſtate, to inherit the crown of glory, to wear the crown of life and righteouſneſs, and poſſeſs the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world, of which they are now heirs: and they are prieſts, as well as kings; being made ſo by Chriſt, and through his prieſtly office; are anointed with the Holy Ghoſt, and ſanctified by his grace, and allowed to draw near to God, and offer up by Chriſt their ſpiritual ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe; and are enabled and aſſiſted to offer up the ſacrifice of a broken heart, and their bodies alſo, and even their lives, when called to it; the alluſion is to the kingdom and prieſthood, being formerly together, and which met in Chriſt, Zach. vi. 13. and in his people. The Jews were wont to call the prieſtly dignity and office, כתר כהנה, the crown of the prieſthood[z]: an holy nation; referring to the ſame place in Exod. xix. 6. where the Iſraelites are ſo called, being ſeparated by God from other nations, and legally and externally ſanctified by him; as all the true Iſrael of God are ſanctified, or ſet apart by God the Father, in eternal election, to real and perfect holineſs; and are ſanctified or cleanſed from ſin, by the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt; and are internally ſanctified by the Spirit of God; have principles of holineſs wrought in them, from whence they live holy lives and converſations: a peculiar people; as the Iſraelites are called a peculiar treaſure, Exod. xix. 5. to which the reference is: God's elect are a peculiar people, to whom he bears a peculiar love; they are choſen by him to be a ſpecial people above all others, and have peculiar bleſſings beſtowed on them, and peculiar care is taken of them; they are the Lord's סגלה, his treaſure, his jewels, his portion and inheritance, and therefore he will preſerve and ſave them; they are a people for acquiſition, purchaſe, and poſſeſſion, as the words may be rendred; whom God has obtained, procured, and purchaſed for himſelf, with the precious blood of his Son; hence the Syriac verſion renders them, כנישא פריקא, a redeemed company; the ſame with the church God has purchaſed with his blood, Acts xx. 28. and the purchaſed poſſeſſion, Eph. i. 14. and which are redeemed and purified to be, and appear to be, a peculiar people, zealous of good works, Tit. ii. 14. the end of all which grace being beſtowed upon them in election, redemption, and regeneration, is, that ye ſhould ſhow forth the praiſes of him; that is, God, who has choſen them into a ſpiritual kindred and relation, made them kings and prieſts, ſanctified them by his Spirit, and redeemed them by his Son, as a peculiar people; all which, laid them under obligation to ſhew forth with their lips, and in their lives and converſations, his virtues; we read, praiſes; and ſo the Syriac verſion; that is, the power, wiſdom, goodneſs, love, grace, and mercy of God, and the commendations of them, diſplayed in the above inſtances: the Apoſtle ſeems to have his eye on, Iſ. xliii. 21. where the Septuagint uſe the ſame word for praiſe, as here: next follows a periphraſis of God, and in it an argument, or reaſon for ſpeaking of his virtues, and ſhewing forth his praiſe: who hath called you out of darkneſs into his marvellous light; which is to be underſtood, not of an external call by the miniſtry of the word only; for many are called in this ſenſe, who are not choſen, redeemed, and ſanctified; but of an internal, ſpecial, powerful, holy, and heavenly calling, by the Spirit and grace of God: and this is, out of darkneſs; out of the darkneſs of the law, under the former diſpenſation, which was as night, in compariſon of the Goſpel-day; and out of that darkneſs which the Jews were particularly in, in and about the coming of Chriſt, being ignorant of the righteouſneſs of God, and the ſpirituality of the law; having loſt all right notions of the Meſſiah, and the true ſenſe of the ſcriptures, and were carried away with the traditions of the elders, and led by blind guides, the ſcribes and phariſees; out of this darkneſs, as well as what is common to men, in a ſtate of unregeneracy, having no ſight of themſelves, their ſin, and miſery, nor knowledge of divine things, of God in Chriſt, and of ſalvation by him, and of the work of the Spirit upon the heart, they were called, into his marvellous light; by which they ſaw the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, the inſufficiency of their righteouſneſs, their need of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; and aſtoniſhing it was to them, that they who were born blind, and were brought up in darkneſs, and were darkneſs itſelf, ſhould be made light in the Lord; and the objects they ſaw were amazing to them; every thing in a ſpiritual way was marvellous in their eyes; eſpecially the ſun of righteouſneſs, the light of the world, and alſo the wonderful things out of the law, or doctrine of Chriſt, the Goſpel, and the ſurprizing love and grace of God, in the whole, and in the ſeveral parts of their ſalvation: it was with them, as if a child, from the moment of its birth, was ſhut up in a dungeon, where there was not the leaſt crevice to let in the leaſt degree of light, and ſhould continue there till at years of maturity, and then be brought out at once, at noon-day, the ſun ſhining in its full ſtrength and glory, when that particularly, and all objects about him, muſt ſtrike him with wonder and ſurprize. The Syriac verſion renders it, his moſt excellent light; the Apoſtle ſeems to refer to the form of praiſe and thankſgiving uſed by the Jews, at the time of the paſſover; who ſay [a], "we "are bound to confeſs, to praiſe, to glorify, &c. "him who hath done for our fathers, and for us, "all theſe wonders; he hath brought us out of "bondage to liberty; from ſorrow to joy, and "from mourning to a good day, ומאפילה לאור גדול, "and out of darkneſs into great light; and from ſub"jection unto redemption." This was alſo part of their morning-prayer [b]; "I confeſs before thee, "O my God, and the God of my fathers, that "thou haſt brought me out of darkneſs into light." And it is to be obſerved, that the third Sephira, or number, in the Jewiſh Cabaliſtic tree, which anſwers to the third perſon in the Trinity, among other names, is called, marvellous light [c].

[z] Pirke Abot, c. 4 §. 13. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 78. 3.

Ver. 10. Which in time were not a people, &c.] A Lo-ammi being put upon them; ſee Hoſ. i. 9, 10. and ii. 23. to which the Apoſtle here refers: God's elect, whether among Jews or Gentiles, were, from eternity, his choſen people, and his covenant-people; and as ſuch, were given to Chriſt, and they became his people, and his care and charge; and he ſaved them by his obedience, ſufferings, and death, and redeemed them to himſelf, a peculiar people: but then, before converſion, they are not a people formed by God for himſelf, and his praiſe; nor Chriſt's willing people, either to be ſaved by him, or to ſerve him; nor are they, nor can they be truly known by themſelves, or others, to be the people of God: the Syriac verſion gives the true ſenſe of the phraſe, by rendring it, theſe who before were not חשבין reckoned or accounted a people; that is, by others: but are now the people of God; being regenerated, called, and ſanctified, they are avouched by God to be his people; they have the witneſs of the Spirit to their ſpirits, that they are the people of God; they can then claim their relation to God, and are known, acknowledged, and called the people of God, by others: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy; being called formerly, Lo-ruhamah, Hoſ. i. 6. and ii. 23. which paſſages the Apoſtle has in view: before converſion there is mercy in God's heart towards his elect, and ſo there is in the covenant of grace, and which was ſhown in the proviſion of his Son, as a Saviour, in the miſſion of him, and redemption by him; but this is not manifeſted to them, until they are begotten again, according to abundant mercy, and then they obtain mercy; having in their regeneration an evident diſplay of the mercy of God towards them, and an application of his pardoning grace and mercy, through the blood of his Son, unto them.

Ver. 11. Dearly beloved, I beſeech you, &c.] The Apoſtle, from characters of the ſaints, and which expreſs their bleſſings and privileges, with great beauty, propriety, and pertinency, paſſes to exhortations to duties; he addreſſes the ſaints under this affectionate appellation, dearly beloved, to expreſs his great love to them, and to ſhew that what he was about to exhort them to, ſprung from ſincere and hearty affection for them, and was with a view to their real good; nor does he in an authoritative way command, as he might have done, as an Apoſtle, but, as a friend, he entreats and beſeeches them: as ſtrangers and pilgrims; not in a literal ſenſe, tho' they were in a foreign country, in a ſtrange land, and ſojourners there, but in a ſpiritual and myſtical ſenſe; they were ſtrangers, not to God and Chriſt, and to the Spirit, to themſelves, to the ſaints, and to all that is good, as they had formerly been, but to the world, the men of it, and the things in it; and therefore it became them to ſeparate from it, and not conform to it; to abſtain from all appearance of evil, to have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, but to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts: and they were pilgrims; whoſe habit is Chriſt and his righteouſneſs; whoſe food is Chriſt and his fullneſs; whoſe ſtaff is Chriſt and the promiſes; whoſe guide is the bleſſed Spirit; the place for which they are bound is heaven, the better country, where is their father's houſe, their friends, and their inheritance; this world not being their country, nor their reſting-place, it became them to have their converſation in heaven, and to abſtain from fleſhly luſts; which ſpring from the fleſh, and are concerned about fleſhly things, and are exerciſed in and by the members of the fleſh, or body; hence, in the Syriac verſion, they are called, the luſts of the body: theſe are to be abſtained from; not that the Apoſtle thought that they could be without them; for whilſt the ſaints are in the body, fleſh, or corrupt nature will be in them, and the luſts thereof; but then theſe are not to be indulged, or proviſion to be made for them, to fulfil them; they are not to be obeyed and ſerved, or lived unto, but to be denied and crucified, being unſuitable to the character of ſtrangers and pilgrims, and alſo becauſe of their hurtful and pernicious nature: which war againſt the ſoul; ſee Rom. vii. 23. James iv. 1. Cant. vi. 13. theſe are enemies to the ſpiritual peace, comfort, and welfare of the ſoul; and being of a man's houſhold, and in his heart, are the worſt enemies he has; and are to be treated as ſuch, to be ſhunned and avoided, watched and guarded againſt; for tho' they cannot deſtroy the ſouls of true believers, they may bring much leanneſs upon them, and greatly diſtreſs them, and ſpoil them of their inward joy, and ſpiritual pleaſure.

[c] Cabala Denudata, par. 2 p 8.

Ver. 12. Having your converſation honeſt among the Gentiles, &c.] To have the converſation honeſt, is to provide things honeſt in the ſight of men; to live and walk honeſtly before all; to do thoſe things which are right and honeſt in the ſight of God, and among men; to order the converſation aright, according to the law of God, which is a rule of walk and converſation, and as becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt; and which was the more, and rather to be attended to, becauſe theſe converted Jews were among the Gentiles, that knew not God; idolaters, and unbelievers, prophane ſinners, who were watching for their halting, and that they might take an advantage againſt them, and the Goſpel, and the religion they profeſſed, from their converſations: that whereas they ſpeak againſt you as evil doers; charging them with the groſſeſt immoralities, as the heathens did the chriſtians in the firſt ages; which appears evidently from the apologies of Tertullian, Juſtin Martyr, and others; tho' it ſeems that the Jewiſh converts are here intended, who were accuſed by the Gentiles of ſeditious principles and practices, and of acting contrary to the laws of civil government, refuſing to yield ſubjection to Gentile magiſtrates, and obedience to heathen maſters; and hence the Apoſtle, in ſome following verſes, enlarges on thoſe duties, and which he exhorts them to attend unto, that they might put to ſilence the ignorance of ſuch fooliſh accuſers: and that they may, by your good works which they ſhall behold, glorify God in the day of viſitation; or trial, or examination, as the Syriac verſion renders it; which may be underſtood either of human or divine viſitation; if of the former, then the ſenſe is, let the ſaints attend to all the duties of civil life, that when heathen magiſtrates come to viſit their ſeveral diſtricts, and enquire and examine into the conduct of men, and ſeeing and finding that the chriſtians behave well and orderly, inſtead of perſecuting them, they will bleſs God, that they are ſuch good ſubjects; if of divine viſitation, which ſeems moſt likely, this muſt either deſign a viſitation by way of judgment, or of mercy; for as the Jews ſay [a], there is פקידה, a viſitation, for good, and a viſitation for evil: God ſometimes viſits in a way of puniſhment for ſin, and ſometimes in a way of grace, for the good and welfare of men; and then the ſenſe is, that when wicked men take notice of, and obſerve the good works of the ſaints, their civil, honeſt, and orderly converſation, they ſhall glorify God on that account, who has enabled them to perform them; and acknowledge the goodneſs of them, and the wrong judgment they have paſſed upon them, and the ill meaſure they have meaſured out to them; and this will be, either when God viſits them in a way of wrath, as at the day of judgment, or at the time of ſome temporal calamity before, or when he viſits them in a way of mercy, calls them by his grace, and effectually works upon them by his Spirit: the ſame argument for the performance of good works, is uſed by Chriſt, in Matt. v. 16.

Ver. 13. Submit yourſelves to every ordinance of man, &c.] Or, to every human creation, or creature; not to all the ſons of men, as the Syriac verſion renders it; or to all the individuals of mankind; for there are ſome that are in ſuch ſtations and circumſtances, that they are not to be ſubmitted to, but to be ruled over, and governed: ſo, kings are not to ſubmit to their ſubjects, nor are parents to be ſubject to their children, nor huſbands to their wives, nor maſters to their ſervants, which would be prepoſterous; but ſubmiſſion is limited and reſtrained to perſons in ſuch a place and ſituation: the human creature, or creation, here, deſigns the Gentiles, who are elſewhere called the creature, the whole creation, every creature, and every creature under heaven, Rom. viii. 19, 20, 21, 22. Mark xvi. 15. Col. i. 23. and particularly heathen magiſtrates, ſtiled creation, or creature; not as men, for all men as ſuch, are creatures; but as magiſtrates being created, conſtituted, and appointed ſuch, and inſtalled into, and inveſted with ſuch an office: and human; not only becauſe they were men, and were taken out from among men that bore the office of magiſtrates, and governed over men, and were for the good and advantage of mankind, but becauſe they were created and placed in ſuch a ſtation by men; tho' government itſelf is of God, is a divine inſtitution, yet this and that particular form of government, is of man; and eſpecially the forms of government among the Gentiles, were human; and are here ſo called, in diſtinction from the form of government among the Jews, which was, a Theocracy, and was divine; wherefore the Jews, and ſo theſe converted ones, ſcrupled yielding obedience to heathen magiſtrates; on which account they were ſpoken againſt, as evil doers; hence the Apoſtle, in the firſt place, and as a principal part of their honeſt converſation among the Gentiles, exhorts them to ſubmiſſion to civil magiſtrates, tho' they were creatures of men; and to every one of them, tho' a Gentile, an unbeliever, and a wicked man: and this he urges, for the Lord's ſake; for the ſake of Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, becauſe of his command, who ordered to give to Cæſar the things that are Cæſar's; and in imitation of him, who paid tribute to whom tribute was due; and for the ſake of his honour and glory who was ill thought and ſpoken of by the Gentiles, becauſe of the diſregard of the converted Jews to their magiſtrates; and which ſerved to prejudice them againſt Chriſt and his Goſpel: the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, for God's ſake; becauſe civil government is of God; magiſtracy is of divine appointment; the powers that be, are ordained of God, tho' this or the other form is of man's preſcription: it is the command of God that magiſtrates ſhould be obeyed; and it makes for his glory, as well as for the good of men, when they are ſubmitted to in things that do not contradict the revealed will of God; for otherwiſe, not man, but God, is to be obeyed: whether it be to the king; to Cæſar, the Roman emperor; and the then reigning one, ſeems to be Nero, who tho' a wicked man, was to be ſubmitted to in things civil and lawful; and it holds good of any other king that has the ſupreme government of a nation: the Syriac verſion reads it in the plural number, to kings; and tho' the name of king was odious to the Romans, from the times of Tarquin, nor did they call their chief governor, or governors, by this name, yet other nations did; ſee John xix. 15. and ſubjection was to be yielded to him, as ſupreme; for the ſake, and in conſideration of his being in ſo high and exalted a ſtation, having the ſupreme power and government of the people in his hands. The Syriac verſion renders it, becauſe of their power; and the Arabic verſion, becauſe of his power; and the Ethiopic verſion, becauſe all things are his; the Roman emperors were abſolute monarchs; ſee Rom. xiii. 1.

[a] Zohar in Gen. fol. 93. 3.

Ver. 14. Or unto governors, &c.] Inferior magiſtrates, ſuch as were under the Roman emperor; as proconſuls, procurators, &c. ſuch as Pontius Pilate, Felix, and Feſtus, who had under the emperor the government of particular nations, provinces, and cities: as unto them that are ſent by him; either by the king, the Roman emperor, by whom they were ſent, from whom they received their commiſſion, and derived their authority, under whom they acted, and to whom they were accountable; or by God, by whom they are ordained, and whoſe miniſters they are, and for the ends hereafter mentioned; ſo that this contains an argument or reaſon, why they ſhould be ſubmitted to: for the puniſhment of evil doers; the breakers of the laws of God and men, on whom puniſhment is to be inflicted, by the civil magiſtrates, for the breach of them, by fines, ſcourgings, impriſonment, and death itſelf, according as the crimes are: and for the praiſe of them that do well; who behave according to the laws of God and nations, and are obedient to magiſtrates, and ſubject to every ordinance; theſe have praiſe of men, of magiſtrates, and are rewarded by them; by protecting their perſons, defending their properties, and preſerving them in the peaceable enjoyment of their eſtates and poſſeſſions; ſee Rom. xiii. 3.

Ver. 15. For ſo is the will of God, &c.] Which refers not ſo much to what goes before; tho' it is a truth, that it is the will of God that men ſhould be ſubject to magiſtrates, and that magiſtrates ſhould encourage virtue, and diſcourage vice, reward the obedient, and puniſh delinquents; but to what follows: that with well doing; by doing good works, and thoſe well; by living ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly; by having the converſation honeſt among the Gentiles, agreeable to the law of God, and as becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt; particularly, by living according to the laws of civil ſociety, ſo far as is conſiſtent with, and not contrary to the commands of God; and by being ſubject to every civil magiſtrate, and ordinance of man: ye may put to ſilence the ignorance of fooliſh men; or, as the Syriac verſion renders it, that ye may ſtop the mouths of thoſe fooliſh men who know not God; or, as the Ethiopic verſion has it, who know not theſe things; who are ignorant of God, of his righteouſneſs, of his law, his Goſpel, and ordinances. The Gentiles were very ignorant of theſe things, and very fooliſh in their imaginations about religious affairs; and from this their ignorance and folly, aroſe calumnies, reflections, and cenſures upon the people of God; they neither knew God, nor them, nor true religion, and reproached what they underſtood not, and for want of knowing it: now the Apoſtle ſignified, that it was the declared will of God, that his people ſhould ſo behave in civil life, that their enemies ſhould be entirely confounded, and ſilenced, and have nothing to ſay againſt them; the word ſignifies, to be muzzled, to have the mouth ſhut up, as with a bit or bridle; it is uſed in Matt. xxii. 12. 1 Cor. ix. 9.

Ver. 16. As free, &c.] Theſe converted Jews might value themſelves on their freedom, partly as the deſcendants of Abraham, and ſo, free born, and not to be brought into bondage to other people; and chiefly becauſe of their liberty which they had in and by Chriſt Jeſus. The Apoſtle allows that they were free men, that they were Chriſt's freemen, were free from ſin, its damning and domineering power, and from the curſes and condemnation of the law, and had freedom of acceſs to God, and a right to all the privileges and immunities of the houſe of God; but then they were not free to ſin, and to live in the contempt of the laws of God and men, to deſpiſe government, ſpeak evil of dignities, and break in upon the rules of civil ſociety: and not uſing your liberty as a cloak of maliciouſneſs; under a pretence of chriſtian liberty, to hurt the perſons, properties, and eſtates of men, without looking upon themſelves accountable for their conduct to their ſuperiors: ſome think the Apoſtle alludes to the ancient cuſtom of ſervants, who when they were made free, walked with a cap, or covering on their heads, in token of it: it follows, but as the ſervants of God; for they that are free, are the ſervants of God and Chriſt, and ſhew themſelves to be ſo, by ſubmitting to, and obeying thoſe that are under them, and ordained by them; and which is no ways inconſiſtent with, and contrary to their chriſtian liberty, which never was deſigned to thwart and ſubvert the principles of natural religion, laws of a moral nature, or the rules of civil government; ſome inſtances of which are next mentioned.

Ver. 17. Honour all men, &c.] To whom honour is due, according to the place, ſtation, and circumſtances in which they are, the gifts of providence and grace beſtowed on them, and the uſefulneſs they are of, whether they be Jews or Gen- tiles, rich or poor, believers or unbelievers: it is a ſaying of Ben Zoma[e], "who is to be honoured, or "is worthy of honour? מכבד את הבריות, he that "honoureth creatures;" meaning men in general, or the Gentiles particularly, who were ſometimes ſo called by the Jews; ſee the note on Mark xvi. 15. and may be meant by all men here: love the brotherhood; or your brethren, as the Syriac verſion renders it; the whole company of the brethren in Chriſt, who are born of God, are members of Chriſt, and of the ſame body, and have the ſame ſpirit, belong to the ſame family, and are of the houſhold of faith, let them be of whatſoever nation, or in whatſoever circumſtances of life. The Jews had not that good opinion of, nor that affection for the Gentiles, but were ready to treat them with indifference, neglect, and contempt; and not only thoſe that knew not God, but even believing Gentiles themſelves; and which is the reaſon of theſe exhortations, that they ſhould deſpiſe no man, but honour all; and eſpecially ſhould expreſs their love, both by words and deeds, to thoſe that were in the ſame ſpiritual relation with them, and that without any difference, on account of their being of another nation: fear God; not with a ſervile, but a filial fear, the new covenant grace of fear; which ſprings from the goodneſs of God, has that for its object, and is increaſed by the freſh inſtances and diſcoveries of it; and which ſhews itſelf in a reverential affection for God, a ſtrict regard to his worſhip and ordinances, and a carefulneſs of offending him. This is placed between what goes before, and follows after, to ſhew the influence it has on each of them; for where the fear of God is, there will be due reſpect ſhewn to all men, more or leſs, and an hearty and affectionate love to all the ſaints, as brethren, and a proper regard to thoſe that are ſet in high places of dignity and power: honour the king; Cæſar, the Roman emperor, tho' a wicked, perſecuting Nero, and ſo, any other king or governor; who, ſo far as he acts the part of a civil magiſtrate, preſerves the peace, the property, and liberty of his ſubjects, is a terror to evil works, and an encourager of good ones, and rules according to the laws of God, and civil ſociety, is deſerving of great honour and eſteem from men; and which is to be ſhewn by ſpeaking well of him, by a chearful ſubjection to him; by an obſervance of the laws, and by payment of tribute, and doing every thing to make him eaſy, and honourable in his government: advice much like this is given by Iſocrates[f]; fear God, "honour parents, revere friends, and obey the "laws."

Ver. 18. Servants be ſubject to your maſters, &c.] This was another notion of the Jews, that becauſe they were the ſeed of Abraham, they ought not to be the ſervants of any; and particularly ſuch as were believers in Chriſt, thought they ought not to ſerve unbelieving maſters, nor indeed believing ones, becauſe they were equally brethren in Chriſt with them; hence the Apoſtle Peter, here, as the Apoſtle Paul frequently elſewhere, inculcates this duty of ſervants to their maſters; ſee 1 Cor. vii. 20, 21. Eph. vi. 5. Col. iii. 22. 1 Tim. vi. 1, 2. Tit. ii. 9. the manner in which they are to be ſubject to them is, with all fear; with reverence to their perſons, ſtrict regard to their commands, faithfulneſs in any truſt repoſed in them, diligence in the diſcharge of their duty, and carefulneſs of offending them; and all this, not only to the good and gentle; thoſe that are good-natured, kind, beneficent, and merciful; that don't uſe them with rigour and ſeverity; are moderate in their demands of ſervice; require no more to be done than what is reaſonable; allow them ſufficient diet, give them good wages, and pay them duly: but alſo to the froward; the ill-natured, moroſe, and rigorous; who exact more labour than is requiſite; give hard words, and harder blows; with-hold ſufficiency of food from them, and keep back the hire of their labours.

Ver. 19. For this is thank-worthy, &c.] Or grace; this is a fruit and effect of grace, an inſtance of it, in which it ſhows itſelf: the Syriac verſion adds, with God; and ſo it is read in one of Beza's copies, and in the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others; that is, this is grateful to God, and acceptable with him; as in ver. 20. if a man for conſcience towards God; or, for a good conſcience, as the Syriac verſion reads it; for acting according to his conſcience, in matters of religion, in the things of God; for the knowledge of God, as the Arabic verſion renders it; for the knowledge of God in Chriſt; for the Goſpel of Chriſt, and a profeſſion of it: or, for God, as the Ethiopic verſion; for the cauſe of God and truth, and for the ſake of things appertaining to God, and that make for his glory: endure grief; what occaſions grief, as ſevere words, bitter reproaches, hard cenſures, and heavy blows; and that with patience, and without murmuring, and with reſignation to the will of God: ſuffering wrongfully; there being no juſt cauſe for an ill look, word, or blow to be given.

Ver. 20. For what glory is it if when ye be buffeted for your faults, &c.] Which ye have committed, and are guilty of, and are truly ſuch: ye ſhall take it patiently? to be ſilent, and not murmur, when beaten, within meaſure, for real faults, is no great honour, nor does it deſerve any praiſe; it is the leaſt that can be done: but if when ye do well; either in their maſter's ſervice, or rather, in the buſineſs of religion, and the things of God; as when what they do is according to the will of God, and from love to him, and in faith, and in the name and ſtrength of Chriſt, and to the glory of God; without all which there is no well doing: and ſuffer for it; reproach and perſecution, by words or blows, in perſon or property: ye take it patiently; without grieving and repining, or anſwering again, and making any returns: this is acceptable with God; is agreeable to his will, and grateful in his ſight, what he is well pleaſed with, is reckoned grace with him; and tho' it is his own grace, and of his own beſtowing, he will reward it with glory.

Ver. 21. For even hereunto were ye called, &c.] Both to well doing, of which none but thoſe who are called with an holy and effectual calling, are capable; and which they are fitted for, and are under obligation to perform, and to ſuffer for ſo doing, which they muſt always expect, and to patience in ſuffering for it, which highly becomes them. This being then one end of the ſaints effectual vocation, is made uſe of as an argument to engage them to the exerciſe of the grace of patience in ſuffering for well doing; and another follows: becauſe Chriſt alſo ſuffered for us; in our room and ſtead, to fulfil the law, ſatisfy the juſtice of God, and make reconciliation for ſin; and not only for our good, or merely as a martyr, to confirm the truth of his doctrine, or barely as an example to us, tho' this alſo is true: the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, read, for you; for you ſervants, as well as others, and therefore ſhould chearfully and patiently ſuffer for the ſake of Chriſt, and his Goſpel; and the rather, becauſe he ſuffered, leaving us, or you, as the ſame copies, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, an example that ye ſhould follow his ſteps: Chriſt is an example to his people in the exerciſe of grace, as of faith, love, zeal, meekneſs, and humility; and in the diſcharge of duty, in his regard to the commands of the moral law, and poſitive inſtitutions of religion; in his conſtancy in prayer; in frequent attendance on public worſhip; in his ſubmiſſion to the ordinance of baptiſm, and his celebration of the ſupper; and likewiſe in his ſufferings; and in his meekneſs, patience, courage, and reſignation to the will of God, which is what is here intended, and in which his people are to follow and imitate him.

[e] Pirke Abot, c. 4. §. 1.

[f] Paræn. ad Demon. Orat. 1.

Ver. 22. Who did no ſin, &c.] He was in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh; he looked like a ſinful man, being born of a ſinful woman, and keeping company with ſinful men, being himſelf a man of ſorrows, greatly afflicted, and at laſt put to death. He was traduced as a ſinner, by his enemies, and had all the ſins of his people on him, which he bore, and made ſatisfaction for, and were the reaſon of his ſufferings; but he had no ſin in his nature, nor did he commit any in his life: neither was guile found in his mouth; tho' it was diligently ſought for, by the Scribes and Phariſees; there was no deceit in his lips, no falſhood in his doctrine, any more than there was immorality in his converſation; he was an Iſraelite indeed on all accounts, and in the fulleſt ſenſe of that phraſe; reference is had to Iſ. liii. 9. and this is obſerved, partly to ſhow, that Chriſt ſuffered not for himſelf, or for any ſins of his own, but for the ſins of others, for which he was very fit, ſince he had none of his own; and partly as an argument for patience in ſuffering; for ſince Chriſt ſuffered, who had no ſin, nor did any, nor could any be found in him, charged upon him, and proved againſt him; and which ſufferings of his he bore with patience; then how much muſt it become ſinful men to bear their ſufferings patiently, tho' they may not be criminal with reſpect to the things for which they ſuffer, but yet are ſo in other things, whereas Chriſt was not criminal, nor blame-worthy in any thing?

Ver. 23. Who when he was reviled, reviled not again, &c.] When he was reproached as a glutton, a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and ſinners, all the reply he made was, that wiſdom is juſtified of her children; and when he was charged with caſting out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of devils, he defended himſelf, not with bad language, but with ſtrong reaſonings; and when he was ſaid to be a Samaritan, and had a devil, his only anſwer was, that he had not, that he honoured his Father, and they diſhonoured him; and when he was reviled on the croſs, by thoſe that paſſed by, by the chief-prieſts, and ſcribes, and the thieves that were crucified with him, he made no return, he opened not his mouth, and much leſs in a recriminating way. When he ſuffered he threatened not; when he endured buffetings, and ſcourgings in his body, when the officers in the palace of the high-prieſts ſpit in his face, buffeted him, and ſmote him with the palms of their hands, and bid him propheſy who ſmote him, all which were very provoking; yet he ſaid not one word to them, much leſs threatened them with what he would do to them for ſuch uſage another day, when he would let them know, with vengeance, who it was that ſmote him; no, he took all patiently from them, and from Pilate, and the Roman ſoldiers, when ſcourged by them; he gave his back to the ſmiters, and his cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; and when he ſuffered crucifixion, and was put to ſuch diſtreſſing pains and agonies, he did not threaten his crucifiers with a future judgment, when he would take vengeance, and execute his wrath upon them, but prays to his Father for the forgiveneſs of their ſins: and, as it follows, but committed himſelf to him that judgeth righteouſly; he commended his ſpirit, or ſoul, to God his Father, and committed his cauſe to him, to vindicate it in what way he ſhould think fit, who he knew was the judge of all the earth, that would do right; and ſo the Syriac verſion ſupplies it with ריניה, his judgment; which he left with God, the righteous judge, to whom vengeance belongs; and which is an example, and an inſtruction to the ſaints to do ſo likewiſe; not to render railing for railing, or to ſeek revenge, but to leave their cauſe with their God, who will, in his own time, avenge the wrongs and injuries done them. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, contrary to all the Greek copies, and other verſions, but delivered himſelf to him that judgeth unjuſtly; the ſenſe of which is, that Chriſt delivered himſelf into the hands of Pilate, who unjuſtly condemned him to death; but is neither the reading, nor ſenſe of the text.

Ver. 24. Who his own ſelf bare our ſins, &c.] As was typified by the high-prieſt, bearing the ſins of the holy things of the people of Iſrael, when he went into the moſt holy place, and by the ſcape-goat bearing the iniquities of all the people unto a land not inhabited, and as was foretold by the prophet Iſaiah. The Apoſtle here explains the nature and end of Chriſt's ſufferings, which were to make atonement for ſins, and which was done by bearing them. What Chriſt bore were ſins, even all ſorts of ſin, original and actual, and every act of ſin of his people; and all that is in ſin, all that belongs to it, ariſes from it, and is the demerit of it, as both filth, guilt, and puniſhment; and a multitude of ſins did he bear, even all the iniquities of all the elect; and a prodigious load and weight it was; and than which nothing could be more nauſeous and diſagreeable to him, who loves righteouſneſs, and hates iniquity: and theſe ſins he bore were not his own, nor the ſins of angels, but of men; and not of all men, yet of many, even as many as were ordained to eternal life, for whom Chriſt gave his life a ranſom, whom he juſtifies and brings to glory; our ſins, not the ſins of the Jews only, for Peter was a Jew, and ſo were thoſe to whom he writes, but of the Gentiles alſo, even the ſins of all his people, for them he ſaves from their ſins, being ſtricken for them. His bearing them was in this manner: he becoming the ſurety and ſubſtitute of his people, their ſins were laid upon him by his Father, that is, they were imputed to him, they were reckoned as his, and placed to his account; and Chriſt voluntarily took them upon himſelf; he took them to himſelf, as one may take the debt of another, and make himſelf anſwerable for it; or as a man takes up a burden, and lays it on his ſhoulders; ſo Chriſt took up our ſins, and carried them up, as the word here uſed ſignifies, alluding to the prieſts carrying up the ſacrifice to the altar, and referring to the lifting up of Chriſt upon the croſs; whither he carried the ſins of his people, and bore them, and did not ſink under the weight of them, being the mighty God, and the man of God's right hand, made ſtrong for himſelf; and ſo made entire ſatisfaction for them, by enduring the wrath of God, the curſe of the law, and all that puniſhment which was due unto them; and thereby bore them away, both from his people, and out of the ſight of God, and his vindictive juſtice; and removed them as far as the eaſt is from the weſt, and made a full end of them; and this he himſelf did, and not another, nor by another, or with the help of another; not by the means of a goat, as the high-prieſt, but by himſelf; though he was aſſiſted in bearing his croſs, yet he had no help in bearing our ſins; angels could not help him; his Father ſtood at a diſtance from him; there was none to help; his own arm brought ſalvation to him; but his own ſelf, who knew no ſin, nor did any, he by himſelf purged away our ſins, and made reconciliation for them, by bearing them: and which he did in his own body, and not another's; in that body which his Father prepared for him, and which he took of the virgin, and was free from ſin; tho' not to the excluſion of his ſoul, which alſo was made an offering for ſin, and in which he endured great pains and ſorrows for ſin: and all this on the tree; the accurſed tree, the croſs; which is expreſſive, both of the ſhame and pain of his ſufferings and death. The end of which was, that we being dead to ſin; to our ſins, as the Alexandrian copy, and the Ethiopic verſion read; as all the elect are, thro' bearing their ſins, and ſuffering death for them, ſo as that ſin ſhall not be imputed to them; it is as though it never was; it is dead to them, and they to that, as to its damning power and influence; ſo as that they are entirely diſcharged from it, and can never come into condemnation on account of it, and can never be hurt, ſo as to be deſtroyed by it; nor by by death, either corporal or eternal, ſince the ſting of death, which is ſin, is taken away, and the ſtrength of ſin, which is the law, is dead to them, and they to that: in ſhort, through the death of Chriſt they are ſo dead to ſin, that it is not only finiſhed, made an end of, and put away, but the body of it is deſtroyed, that it ſhould not be ſerved; which is an end ſubordinate to the former, and expreſſed in the next clauſe: ſhould live unto righteouſneſs; live, and not die the ſecond death, and live by faith on the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, for juſtification of life, and ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent evil world; which the grace of God teaches, and the love of Chriſt in bearing ſin conſtrains to, and the redemption by his precious blood, lays under an obligation to do; for thoſe whoſe ſins Chriſt has bore, are not their own, but being bought with the price of his blood, they are bound to live to him who has a property in them, and a right to claim all obedience from them: by whoſe ſtripes ye were healed; the paſſage referr'd to is in Iſ. liii. 5. which is a prophecy of the Meſſiah, as is acknowledged by the Jews [g], who ſay [h], "this is "the king Meſſiah, who was in the generation of "the ungodly, as it is ſaid, Iſ. liii. 5. and with his "ſtripes we are healed; and for this cauſe God ſaved "him, that he might ſave Iſrael, and rejoice with "them in the reſurrection of the dead." Sin is a diſeaſe, a natural and hereditary one, an epidemical diſtemper, that reaches to all men, and to all the powers and faculties of their ſouls, and members of their bodies; and which is nauſeous and loathſome, and in itſelf mortal and incurable; nor can it be healed by any creature, or any thing that a creature can do. Chriſt is the only phyſician, and his blood the balm and ſovereign medicine; this cleanſes from all ſin; thro' it is the remiſſion of ſin, which is meant by healing; for healing of diſeaſes, and forgiving iniquities, is one and the ſame thing; ſee Pſ. ciii. 3. Iſ. xxxiii. 24. Pſ. xli. 4. on which latter text a learned Jew [i] has this note, "this interpreters explain, לשון סליחה, as expreſ- "ſive of forgiveneſs;" and the Jews ſay, there is no healing of diſeaſes, but it ſignifies forgiveneſs [k]: it is an uncommon way of healing by the ſtripes of another. Some think the Apoſtle alludes to the ſtripes which ſervants receive from their maſters, to whom he was now ſpeaking; and in order to encourage them to bear them patiently, obſerves, that Chriſt himſelf ſuffered ſtripes, and that they had healing for their diſeaſes and wounds, by means of his ſtripes, or through his being wounded and bruiſed for them.

Ver. 25. For ye were as ſheep going aſtray, &c.] This is a proof of their being healed, namely, their converſion; in which an application of the blood of Chriſt, and pardon, and ſo healing by it, was made to their ſouls. The Apoſtle has ſtill in view the prophecy of Iſaiah, ch. liii. 6. God's elect are ſheep before converſion; not that they have the agreeable properties of ſheep, as to be meek, harmleſs, innocent, clean, and profitable, for they are the reverſe of all this; nor can ſome things be ſaid of them before converſion, as may be after, as that they hear Chriſt's voice, and follow him; nor are they ſo called, becauſe unprejudiced againſt, and prediſpoſed unto the Goſpel, for the contrary is true of them; but they are ſo in electing grace, and were ſo conſidered in the Father's gift of them to Chriſt, and when made his care and charge, and hence they are called the ſheep of his hand; and when Chriſt laid down his life, and roſe again, which he did for the ſheep, and as the great ſhepherd of them; and when called by grace, for their being ſheep, and Chriſt's own ſheep by the Father's gift, and his own purchaſe, is the reaſon why he looks them up, calls them by name, and returns them: but then they are not yet of his fold; they are loſt ſheep, loſt in Adam, and by his fall, and by their own actual tranſgreſſions; they are as ſheep going aſtray from the ſhepherd, and from the flock, going out of the right way, and in their own ways; and are, like ſheep, ſtupid and inſenſible of their danger; and as they, never return of themſelves, until they are ſought for, and brought back: hence it follows, but are now returned; not returned themſelves, but were returned by powerful and efficacious grace: ſaints are paſſive, and not active in firſt converſion; they are turned, not by the power of their own free-will, but by the power of God's free grace; they are returned under the illuminations and quickenings of the bleſſed Spirit, and thro' the efficacious drawings of the Father's love, unto Chriſt: unto the ſhepherd and biſhop of your ſouls; by whom Chriſt is meant, who bears the office of a ſhepherd, and fully performs it by feeding his ſheep, providing a good fold and paſture for them; by gathering the lambs in his arms, and gently leading thoſe that are with young; by healing their diſeaſes, and preſerving them from beaſts of prey; hence he is called the good, the great and chief ſhepherd: and he is the biſhop or overſeer of the ſouls of his people, tho' not to the excluſion of their bodies: he has took the overſight of them willingly, and looks well to his flock, inſpects into their caſes, and often viſits them, and never forſakes them; nor will he leave them till they receive the end of their faith, the ſalvation of their ſouls, which he has undertook and effected by his obedience, ſufferings, and death. Philo the Jew[l] obſerves, that "to be a ſhepherd is ſo good "a work, that it is not only a title given to kings "and wiſe men, and ſouls perfectly purified, but "to God the governour of all —— who, as a "ſhepherd and king, leads according to juſtice "and law, ſetting over them his right Logos, the "firſt-begotten Son, who has taken the care of this "holy flock, as does the deputy of a great king."

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle inſtructs wives how to behave towards their huſbands, and huſbands how to behave towards their wives; and then exhorts to various things common to all chriſtians, and particularly to ſuffer patiently for righteouſneſs ſake; to which he encourages them from the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the benefits reſulting from them, on which he enlarges to the end of the chapter. He begins with the duty of wives to their huſbands, even unbelieving ones, which is ſubjection to them, urged from the profitable effect of it; ſince hereby they might be won over to the chriſtian religion, without the uſe of the word, as a means, by their converſation, which is explained of chaſtity and fear, ver. 1, 2. And he proceeds to give ſome advice about their apparel, that they ſhould have a greater regard to internal ornaments, particularly meekneſs and quietneſs of ſpirit, which is highly eſteemed of by God, rather than to outward adorning; and which he enforces by the examples of godly women in former times, who were ſo adorned, and were ſubject to their huſbands, particularly Sarah, the wife of Abraham, ver. 3, 4, 5, 6. And next the Apoſtle directs huſbands how to conduct towards their wives, to dwell with them, and honour them, becauſe veſſels, and weaker veſſels, and alſo heirs of the ſame grace of life; and beſides, to uſe them ill would be an hindrance of their praying together, ver. 7. And then follow various exhortations to unity of judgment, compaſſion, brotherly love, pity, courteouſneſs, and patience under the reproaches and revilings of men, which is the way to inherit a bleſſing they are called unto, ver. 8, 9. and that theſe are incumbent on the ſaints, and that they ſhall be bleſſed, who are helped to regard them, is proved by ſome paſſages out of Pſ. xxxiv. 12—16. which paſſages are cited, ver. 10, 11, 12. And in order to encourage to the exerciſe of the above things, the Apoſtle ſuggeſts, that they that ſo behaved ſhould not be hurt by any; and if they did ſuffer for righteouſneſs ſake from wicked men, yet ſtill they would be happy; nor ſhould this deter them from making a publick confeſſion of their faith; to which ſhould be added a good conſcience and converſation, to the ſhame and confuſion of them that ſpoke evil of them, and accuſed them, ver. 13, 14, 15, 16. And though they were diſtreſſed and injured by men, they ſhould not be caſt down, nor murmur, ſince it was the will of God it ſhould be ſo; and ſince it was better to ſuffer for doing well, than for doing ill; and eſpecially the example of Chriſt ſhould animate to patience, ſince he, an innocent perſon, ſuffered for the ſins of unjuſt men, to reconcile them to God; and he is now glorified and happy, and ſo will his people be, ver. 17, 18. And having made mention of his being quickened by the Spirit, the Apoſtle takes occaſion from hence of obſerving, that by the ſame Spirit Chriſt preached in the times of Noab to diſobedient perſons, whoſe ſpirits were now in hell; and he takes notice of the long-ſuffering of God in that diſpenſation towards them, and of the goodneſs of God in ſaving Noah, and his family, in the ark, which was a figure of baptiſm; of which ſome account is given what it is, and is not, and which ſaves by the reſurrection of Chriſt, ver. 19, 20, 21. who is deſcribed by his aſcenſion to heaven, ſeſſion at the right hand of God, and dominion over angels, authorities, and powers, ver. 22.

Ver. 1. Likewiſe ye wives, be in ſubjection to your own huſbands, &c.] As well as ſubjects to princes, and ſervants to maſters; tho' not with the ſame ſort of ſubjection, but what is ſuitable to the relation they ſtand in to their huſbands; ſee the notes on Eph. v. 22. Col. iii. 18. that if any obey not the word; any huſband who is an unbeliever, has no love for the Goſpel, and gives no credit to it, but deſpiſes, diſbelieves, and rejects it, the word of truth, of faith, of righteouſneſs, reconciliation, and ſalvation. The Apoſtle, tho' he includes all wives, and exhorts them in general to ſubjection to their own huſbands, yet has a particular regard to ſuch as had unbelieving huſbands, and who, on that account, were ſcrupulous of living with them, and of being in ſubjection to them; and therefore, as the Apoſtle Paul alſo did, he adviſes them to abide with them, and behave well to them, uſing much the ſame argument as he does in 1 Cor. vii. 10, 13, 16. they alſo may without the word be won by the converſation of the wives; for tho' the ordinary way and means of converſion is the word, faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word; yet, it may be ſometimes done without it; or however by the agreeable converſation of profeſſors, and ſo of religious wives, the hearts of ſuch as were averſe to chriſtianity, and the Goſpel, as unbelieving huſbands, may be ſo ſoftened, and wrought upon, as to entertain a better opinion of it, and in proceſs of time be inclined to hear and attend it; the conſequence of which may prove their converſion, which is a gaining, or winning of ſouls; and which, as it is for their good, is for the glory of Chriſt; for as every ſoul that is delivered from the power of darkneſs, and is tranſlated into the kingdom of Chriſt, is a loſs to ſatan, 'tis a gain to Chriſt, and to his church. The Syriac verſion, inſtead of, without the word, reads, without labour; as if the winning of unbelieving huſbands was eaſily obtained by the converſation of their wives.

Ver. 2. While they behold your chaſte converſation, &c.] Chearful ſubjection, ſtrong affection, and inviolable attachment to them, and ſtrict regard to the honour of the marriage-ſtate, and to the preſerving of the bed undefiled with luſts and adulteries: coupled with fear; with reverence of their huſbands, giving them due honour, and ſhewing all proper reſpect; or with the fear of God, which being before their eyes, and upon their hearts, engages them to ſuch an agreeable converſation.

Ver. 3. Whoſe adorning, let it not be that outward adorning, &c.] Or that only and principally; let not that be ſolely or chiefly attended to, nor anxiouſly ſought after, nor ever in order to allure and enſnare others, or to fill with pride and vanity; nor ſhould it be indecent and luxurious, immodeſt and immoderate, and unſuitable to the age, character, and ſtation of perſons; otherwiſe cloathing is both convenient and neceſſary; and a decent garb, neat and modeſt apparel, and what is ſuitable to the years, rank, and quality of perſons, is very commendable: nor are we to ſuppoſe that the Apoſtle forbids the uſe of what follows, but only when uſed in a luxurious and extravagant manner, and to feed pride and vanity, and encourage laſciviouſneſs and wantonneſs: of plaiting the hair; folding it up in curls, tying it up in knots, and putting it into the form of horns and towers, made by their criſping pins, with their cauls and round tires, like the moon, as was the cuſtom of thoſe times, and ſtill is. There were women among the Jews, whoſe buſineſs it was to plait womens hair; Mary Magdalene is thought to have her name from thence, and that to be her buſineſs. The Jews often ſpeak of one Miriam or Mary, by whom they ſeem to mean the mother of our Lord, who, they ſay[m], was, מגדלא שיער נשייא, a plaiter of womens hair; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 56. And of wearing of gold; or golden things; golden ornaments, as bracelets, chains, and rings, or pieces of gold ſtuck in the plaitings and folds of the hair. The Jewiſh women uſed to wear a crown of gold on their head, in the form of the city of Jeruſalem, called a golden city[n], and which they wore, after its deſtruction, in memory of it; but with thoſe they might not go out on a ſabbath-day. R. Akibah, it is ſaid[o], made a golden city for his wife, and the wife of Rabban Gamaliel envied her, for it ſeems this was reckoned a grand dreſs. Not that the ſenſe is, that every thing of this kind is forbidden, but when uſed to exceſs and extravagance; otherwiſe the daughters of Abraham and Sarah were decked with ear-rings, bracelets, and jewels of gold; ſee Gen. xxiv. 22, 30, 47, 53. or of putting on of apparel; that is excellent, or precious, as the Syriac verſion adds; or of great price, as the Ethiopic; that is beyond a perſon's ability or rank; the Apoſtle means ſuch apparel as is unbecoming and unſuitable, for he cannot be thought to forbid the putting on of any apparel; but his ſenſe is, that women ſhould not ſo much regard, and be ſo intent upon the outward adorning of their bodies, with any ſort of cloathing, and eſpecially ſuch as does not become them, as the inward adorning of their minds, next mentioned.

Ver. 4. But let it be the hidden man of the heart, &c.] By which is meant internal grace; which gives a beauty and ornament to the ſoul, far preferable to that which plaiting of the hair, wearing of gold, or any coſtly apparel, can give to the body: and this is called a man, as it is elſewhere the new man, Eph. iv. 24. becauſe it has that which anſwers to what is in man, to his ſoul, and the powers and faculties of it: this man, or new creature, has a new heart and ſpirit; it has a will to that which is ſpiritually good, and an underſtanding of divine things, and affections for Chriſt, for his Goſpel, ordinances, ways, and people, and for things above: it has what anſwers to all the five ſenſes; there is in it a ſeeing of the Son of God in the glories of his perſon, and the fullneſs of his grace, and of the inviſible things of another world; an hearing of the word, of the voice of Chriſt, ſo as to underſtand it, and live, and to diſtinguiſh it from the voice of a ſtranger; a ſmelling a ſweet ſavour in the things of God, and of his Spirit, and in the perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt; a taſting that the Lord is gracious, his fruits pleaſant, and his word ſweeter than the honey, or the honey-comb; and a feeling of the burden of ſin, an handling of the word of life, a laying hold on Chriſt, and retaining him: and it has what anſwers to the parts and members of the body; it has eyes to ſee with, ears to hear with, hands to receive from Chriſt, and work with, to his glory, and feet to walk with: it has, in ſhort, all the parts of a man, tho' theſe are not yet grown up to perfection; and ſo that is not yet a perfect man, or arrived to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fullneſs of Chriſt; but a man it is: and a man of the heart; it has its ſeat there; it is an inward principle in the ſoul; hence it is called the inner and inward man; and nothing outward is it, as external humiliation for ſin, abſtinence from it, reformation of life and manners, a profeſſion of religion, and conformity to Goſpel-ordinances; but it is ſomething inward, as appears from its names, both here and elſewhere; it is called ſpirit, ſeed, the root of the matter, and oil in the veſſels; and from the ſeat and ſubject of it, the heart, the ſpirit, the underſtanding and will, the mind, conſcience, and affections: and it is the hidden man; 'tis wiſdom in the hidden part; it is hidden from the men of the world; they don't know what it is, nor what it means, nor how it is, or can be; the life of it is hidden from them, and the food it lives upon is hidden manna to them, and ſo are both its joys and ſorrows: it is ſometimes hidden from the ſaints themſelves; when they walk in darkneſs, and ſee no light, they are at a loſs to know whether this principle is in them or no; and it is hidden from other believers, till they give an account of it to them, when by comparing it with the word of God, and their own experience, they perceive it is the grace of God in them; and it is hidden from ſatan, it is out of his reach, he cannot touch it; tho' he can touch the old man, and ſtir up the corruptions of it, yet he can't touch the new man, that which is born of God, nor hurt or deſtroy it; but it is not hidden from God; he ſees it where men cannot, being covered with a variety of infirmities and ſins, and knows it is not where men ſometimes think it is. The nature of this hidden man is further expreſſed by what follows, in that which is not corruptible; it is oppoſed to corruptible things, as the outward adorning conſiſts of, ſuch as plaited hair, ſilver and gold, golden chains, rings, &c. and coſtly apparel; nor is it corrupt in itſelf; the old man is corrupt according to its deceitful luſts, but this new man, the hidden man of the heart, has no corruption in it, nor cleaving to it: 'tis the workmanſhip of God, and is created in righteouſneſs and holineſs; tho' it is as yet imperfect, there is nothing impure in it; nor can it ever periſh, or be loſt; it is an incorruptible ſeed, and will always remain when gold will periſh, and the beſt of garments be moth-eaten, and decay: even the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit; this is one, and a principal part of the inward adorning, or hidden man of the heart; and thoſe that are poſſeſſed of ſuch a ſpirit, are not eaſily provoked to anger; patiently bear, and put up with injuries; carry themſelves affably and courteouſly unto all; entertain the meaneſt thoughts of themſelves, and the beſt of others; don't envy the gifts and graces of others, and are willing to be inſtructed and admoniſhed by the meaneſt ſaint; quietly ſubmit to the will of God, in all adverſe diſpenſations of providence; and aſcribe all they have, and are, to the free grace of God, and reckon that when they have done all they can, they are but unprofitable ſervants. This grace of meekneſs, humility, and quietneſs is a fruit of the Spirit, and ſo a part of the hidden man, and is what is very ornamental to a believer; 'tis his cloathing, his inward adorning, and what makes him lovely in the ſight of God, and of his people; ſee 1 Pet. v. 5. and it is very uſeful to him in hearing the word, in giving a reaſon of the hope that is in him, in reſtoring others, and in ſhewing forth a good converſation; and particularly it greatly becomes, and exceedingly beautifies women profeſſing godlineſs; who ought to bear much with their huſbands, and be in ſilence, which is what the Apoſtle has a principal regard unto: and to encourage the more to the exerciſe of it, adds, which is in the ſight of God of great price; which may refer to the whole adorning, to the hidden man of the heart, which is incorruptible, in oppoſition to the outward adorning, which may be eſteemed by men, and be precious in their ſight; and particularly to the ornament of meekneſs, and quietneſs of ſpirit; for God has a great regard to the meek, humble, and quiet ſouls; he lifts them up, when caſt down; he cauſes glad tidings to be preached to them; he increaſes their joy in the Lord; he feeds them, when hungry, to their ſatisfaction; he guides them in judgment, and teaches them his ways; he'll riſe up in judgment for them, and reprove with equity for their ſake; he gives more grace unto them, and beautifies them with ſalvation, and will cauſe them to inherit the earth.

Ver. 5. For after this manner in the old time, &c.] In ages paſt, the years of many generations, ſince the time that God created man upon earth; in the times before the flood, and after it; in the times of the patriarchs, judges, kings, and prophets of Iſrael, under the Old Teſtament diſpenſation. The Apoſtle exhorts and encourages to this inward dreſs and ornament, from the antiquity of it: for in this way, and after this faſhion, the holy women alſo; who were ſanctified by the Spirit of God, and lived holy lives and converſations, ſuch as Sarah, Rebekah, Rachel, Leah, Ruth, Hannah, and others: who truſted in God; that he would ſend the Meſſiah, and make good all his promiſes, judging and believing him to be faithful to his word, and able to fulfil whatever he had promiſed, as Sarah, Heb. xi. 11. Such holy and believing women as theſe are worthy of imitation in their adorning and dreſs, and who, in the manner before deſcribed by the Apoſtle, adorned themſelves; or this were the adorning which they ſought after, valued, and chiefly regarded; not what was external, but internal: and which lay in meekneſs and humility, and in a quiet deportment, and in being in ſubjection unto their own huſbands; according to their original make, and natural relation, and the laws of God, and of creation; which is more becoming and adorning than plaiting of hair, wearing of gold, or coſtly raiment, and recommends them more, both in the ſight of God and men; nothing being a more indecent and uncomely ſight than a woman not in ſubjection to her huſband.

Ver. 6. Even as Sarah obeyed Abraham, &c.] Going along with him where-ever he went, as from Chaldea to Canaan, and into Egypt, and the land of the Philiſtines, ſaying the words he put into her mouth, Gen. xii. 5, 11, 13. and doing the things he bid her do, Gen. xviii. 6. calling him Lord; or my Lord, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render it, and as it appears ſhe did from Gen. xviii. 12. The Jews uſe this inſtance to the ſame purpoſe the Apoſtle does, ſaying [p], “the wife ought to take “care of the family, to educate her children, to “ſerve and miniſter to her huſband in all things, “calling him her own Lord; which is what we learn “from the example of Sarah, who called Abraham “her Lord, ſaying, my Lord is old.” Whoſe daughters ye are; meaning not by natural deſcent, tho' they were, theſe being Jews, the Apoſtle writes to, but by grace, and in a ſpiritual ſenſe; juſt as thoſe are the children of Abraham, who walk in the ſteps of his faith, whether they be Jews or Gentiles; ſo ſuch are the daughters of Sarah, the children of the free woman, who imitate her in faith and obedience; that is, they appear, and are declared to be ſo: as long as ye do well; do acts of beneficence and hoſpitality to ſtrangers, and proper objects, as Sarah did, and all and every good work, according to the will of God, from love, and in faith, and with a view to his glory; and particularly obey and live in ſubjection to their huſbands, as ſhe did: and are not afraid with any amazement; are not deterred from doing well, nor ſcared by the terrors and menaces of wicked men, either their own huſbands, or others; or who with fortitude and intrepidity of mind, continue in the diſcharge of their duty to God and men, and particularly to their huſbands, following them, and obeying their lawful commands, as Sarah did in Egypt, and in Gerar, tho' ſhe expoſed herſelf to great danger: this is ſaid, becauſe women are timorous, and apt to be frighted at every thing, from the performance of their duty.

Ver. 7. Likewiſe ye huſbands dwell with them, &c.] With your wives, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read; which not only included dwelling together in the ſame houſe, and bedding together in the ſame bed, but the whole of conjugal converſation, and all the offices and duties incumbent on men in a married ſtate: according to knowledge; of themſelves, and their wives, and the duties belonging to the conjugal ſtate, and the laws of God and man reſpecting it; and according to their knowledge of the Goſpel, and the chriſtian diſpenſation, which no ways breaks in upon, but ſtrengthens and encourages to the obſervance of things belonging to natural religion, and civil life; and according to that ſuperior knowledge of things, which, generally ſpeaking, men have to women; as alſo wiſely, prudently, becoming their characters as men and chriſtians: particularly giving honour to the wife; by ſpeaking well of her, and reſpectfully to her, and by deeds as well as words; not only by clothing her in a decent and becoming manner, ſuitable to her ſtation; but by providing every thing honeſt and comely for her, food and raiment, a ſuitable maintenance, all the neceſſaries, conveniencies, and delights of life, that are laudable and proper; in which ſenſe the word honour is uſed in 1 Tim. v. 3, 17. and this was agreeable to the doctrine of the Jews [q], who ſay, “let a "man always take care, בכבוד אשתו, of the glory of his wife; for there is no bleſſing found in a man's houſe, but for the ſake of his wife, as it is ſaid, Gen. xii. 16. and he intreated Abraham well for her ſake; and Rabba uſed to ſay to the citizens, אוקירו לנשייכו, honour your wives, that ye may be rich." And indeed, this is what they promiſed in their marriage-contract, which runs thus[r]: "be thou unto me for a wife, according to the law of Moſes and Iſrael, and I, by the word of heaven, or God, will worſhip, ואוקיר, and honour, and nouriſh, and take care of thee, according to the cuſtom of the Jews, who worſhip, and honour, and nouriſh, and take care of their wives." As unto the weaker veſſel; ſo the wife is called a veſſel in 1 Theſſ. iv. 4. ſee the note there, and here the weaker; being ſo, for the moſt part, both as to ſtrength of body, and endowments of mind; and therefore to be uſed gently and tenderly, and not be treated with neglect and contempt, or with inhumanity and ſeverity; but as in every ſtate and condition, the ſtrong are to bear the infirmities of the weak; ſo a man ſhould bear with, and accommodate himſelf to the infirmities of his wife, and hide them as much as he can, and not expoſe them, nor deſpiſe her, on account of them. It is a ſaying of the Jews[s], "if thy wife be ſhort of ſtature, bow thyſelf, and whiſper to her." The meaning of the proverb is, that he ought to ſuit himſelf to her capacity and weakneſs: and as being heirs together of the grace of life; not of a natural life, and the good things of it; tho' huſbands and wives partake of the ſame kind of life, and have a right unto, and ſhare in the ſame neceſſaries of life; ſo Adam and Eve were partakers of the ſame life, and ſharers of the ſame benefits; and which is a reaſon indeed why they ought to live lovingly together: but ſomething more is intended; not the external gifts of the Spirit, which, unleſs in ſome few inſtances, are beſtowed on men, and not on women; nor the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it, which are the means of grace and life; tho' men and women, called by grace, have an equal right to them, and enjoy them; ſee Gal. iii. 28. but grace here, and glory hereafter, are here meant. Some copies, as the Alexandrian, and others, read, heirs together of the manifold grace of life; God's own people, without any difference as to ſex, as men and women, equally ſhare in grace, as it ſignifies the love and favour of God; which is the ſame to all the objects, as to the date of it, which is from everlaſting, one not being loved before another; and as to the quality of it, which is free, ſovereign, ſpecial, diſcriminating and unchangeable, one being loved not with one ſort of love, another with another; and as to the quantity of it, it not admitting of more or leſs; and as to the duration, which is for ever: and ſo they are heirs of it, as it denotes the bleſſings of grace; being equally heirs of, and ſharers in electing, redeeming, juſtifying, pardoning, and adopting grace: and as it may intend the internal graces of the Spirit, as faith, hope, and love; which, as to their principles, are the ſame in all the ſaints, tho' different as to the degree of the exerciſe of them: and which may be called the grace of life; or living grace, as ſome copies, and the Complutenſian edition read, and ſo the Arabic verſion, becauſe by it men and women, who were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, are quickened; and in diſtinction to counterfeit grace, which differs as much from true grace, as the picture of a man from a living man; and becauſe it lives for ever, and never dies, and gives a meetneſs for eternal life, which it ſprings up to, iſſues in, and is inſeparably connected with. Moreover, by it may be meant eternal life and ſalvation, of which the ſaints, without any difference as to ſex, are heirs of: ſo ſome copies read, heirs of manifold grace, and life; by the former, meaning grace here, and by the latter, glory hereafter; which is a life of viſion of God, and uninterrupted communion with him; of perfection and pleaſure, and which will laſt for ever; and may be called the grace of life, becauſe it is the free gift of God's grace: and agreeably the Syriac verſion renders it, the gift of eternal life; and the Ethiopic verſion, glorious life: and this is repreſented as an inheritance, being what belongs only to the children; and which they have not by their own works, as an acquiſition of theirs, but by the free grace of their heavenly Father, and as his gift and bequeſt unto them. Now all the ſaints, of whatever ſtate, condition, or ſex, are equally heirs of this inheritance; for there is but one inheritance, one kingdom, one crown of glory, which all ſhall enjoy; and whatever diſparity there may be, particularly between huſband and wife, in their natural relation, there is none in the things of grace, and with regard to the kingdom of glory; and which is an argument why huſbands ſhould dwell peaceably and comfortably with their wives, and give all due honour to them, ſince they are upon a par in ſpiritual things, there being neither male nor female in Chriſt Jeſus, and becauſe they are now joint-heirs of, and ſhall equally ſhare in eternal life and happineſs. That your prayers be not hindered; as they would be, were they not to dwell together; or ſhould not the huſband give honour to his wife, and take care of her as he ought to do: hence would ariſe ſtrifes and quarrels, when they could not cordially, and to edification, join together in prayer; nor would ſuch prayers, put up in wrath, be acceptable unto God, who requires that men ſhould lift up holy hands every where, whether in public, or in private, in God's houſe, or in their own houſes, without wrath and doubting. From hence we may obſerve, that family-prayer is a duty incumbent on profeſſors of religion, and great care ſhould be taken that it be not neglected and hindered.

Ver. 8. Finally be ye all of one mind, &c.] Not that the Apoſtle was about to conclude his epiſtle; but having finiſhed his exhortations reſpecting the obedience of ſubjects to magiſtrates, and of ſervants to their maſters, and the duties incumbent on huſbands and wives, he proceeds to ſum up what he had further to ſay, in general rules; which regarded all ſorts of chriſtians, magiſtrates, and ſubjects, maſters and ſervants, huſbands and wives, parents and children, old and young, rich and poor, of whatſoever ſtate, age, ſex, or condition; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, the ſum of the commandment is; and the Ethiopic verſion, the ſum of all is this; namely, what follows: be ye all of one mind; whatever difference there might be in their natural and civil relation and character; and which is to be underſtood not of the ſameneſs of affection to one another, or of an humble and condeſcending ſpirit, diſpoſition, and carriage to each other, for theſe are expreſſed in ſome following exhortations; but of ſameneſs of judgment with reſpect to the doctrines and ordinances of the Goſpel, in which ſaints ſhould be perfectly joined together in the ſame mind, and in the ſame judgment; for as the church is but one body, of which Chriſt is the head, there ſhould be but one mind in it; even as there is but one Spirit of God, who convinces, enlightens, and leads into truth; and but one heart, and way, given to fear the Lord; and there is but one hope of our calling, or to which we are called; and one way to it, and therefore ought to agree in every thing reſpecting the way, the truth, and the life; tho' in things which do not, ſhould bear with one another; and there is but one Lord, who gives the ſame laws and ordinances to one, as to another, and which are to be kept alike by all; and there is but one faith, one doctrine of faith, which is uniform and all of a piece, and but one rule and ſtandard of faith, the ſacred ſcriptures; and but one baptiſm to be adminiſtred in the ſame way, and upon the ſame ſort of ſubjects, and in the ſame name of the Father, Son, and Spirit; and but one God and Father of all; all belong to the ſame family, and therefore ſhould preſerve an unity of ſpirit and mind, and ſpeak the ſame things; which is neceſſary to carry on the worſhip of God, honourably and regularly, to the glorifying of him, and for the peace, comfort, and ſafety of the churches of Chriſt: having compaſſion one of another; or ſympathizing with each other, both in proſperity and adverſity, whether in temporal or ſpiritual things; rejoicing with them that rejoice in Chriſt, make their boaſt of him, and have communion with him, and who are alſo bleſſed with health of body, and a competency of the good things of this life; and weeping with them that weep, for the loſs of goods, relations, &c. and being in bonds and afflictions; or becauſe of ſin, the abſence of Chriſt, and the temptations of ſatan; and being concerned alſo for ſuch who are fallen into immorality, or error, and hereſy; endeavouring to reſtore them out of the one or the other, in a ſpirit of meekneſs and tenderneſs: to all which, they ſhould be engaged by the example of Chriſt, the ſympathizing high-prieſt; by the conſideration of the divine compaſſion to them, both in a providential way, and in a way of grace; and on account of their union and relation to each other, as members of the ſame body: love as brethren; not in a natural and civil, but in a ſpiritual relation, being children of God, and brethren of Chriſt, and in a Goſpel church ſtate; and whoſe love to each other ought to be univerſal, fervent, without diſſimulation, and as Chriſt has loved them; and which ſhould ſhew itſelf in praying for each other, in bearing one another's burdens, in forgiving each other, in admoniſhing in love, and building up one another, on their moſt holy faith, and communicating to each other both in temporals and ſpirituals: and of a very excellent nature is it; it is the bond of perfectneſs, and evidence of regeneration; the glory and ornament of a profeſſion, and without which it is nothing; and what renders the communion of the ſaints with each other, pleaſant and profitable, comfortable to themſelves, and honourable in the eyes of others; and to which they ſhould be induced, from the conſideration of the love of God and Chriſt unto them, and from their relation to each other, as brethren: be pitiful; to thoſe that are in diſtreſs; put on bowels of mercy, and relieve and ſuccour them, diſtributing chearfully to their neceſſities: be courteous; gentle and affable, carrying it friendly to one another, ſeeking thoſe things which may be moſt agreeable to each other, ſhunning all moroſeneſs, ſtiffneſs, and incivility. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders it by two words, modeſt, humble; not proud, haughty, and overbearing, but condeſcending to each other, and to men of low eſtates; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, kind and meek.

[s] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 59. 1.

Ver. 9. Not rendring evil for evil, &c.] Doing an ill thing in return to one that has done ill to you, and in a way of revenge for it; which is contrary to what is before adviſed to, and which is taking God's prerogative and work out of his hands, whoſe vengeance is, and which is to be overcome of evil: or railing for railing; returning ill language to ſuch as have given it, but rather ſhould imitate Chriſt, who when he was reviled, reviled not again, ch. ii. 23. and whoſe advice is, inſtead of returning injuries, blows, or words, to turn to him that ſmites on the right cheek the other alſo, and to bleſs them that curſe, do good to them that hate, and pray for them that perſecute, Matt. v. 39, 44. and which is here directed to: but contrariwiſe bleſſing; praying for a bleſſing on them; for if we are to do ſo for our enemies, for them that hate us, deſpitefully uſe and perſecute us, as did Chriſt, Stephen the protomartyr, and the Apoſtles, then much more for our fellow-chriſtians, who may do us an injury, or ſpeak evil of us, or to us; who ſeem to be chiefly intended: the argument to perſuade to it follows, knowing that ye are thereunto called; referring either to what goes before, being called by grace to the diſcharge of all the above duties exhorted to, and particularly to ſuffer patiently all injuries and affronts; and inſtead of making returns in the ſame way, to bleſs and pray for thoſe that have hurt us, either by words or deeds; ſee ch. ii. 20, 21. or to what follows, that ye ſhould inherit a bleſſing; temporal bleſſing, or bleſſings; for godlineſs has the promiſe of this life, and godly perſons ſhall not want any good thing; and even whilſt the bleſſings of others are curſed, they have their outward mercies with a bleſſing, and they are bleſſings indeed to them; wherefore, the little they may have, is better than the large affluence of others: and alſo ſpiritual bleſſing, or bleſſings; ſuch as peace of conſcience, the pardon of all their ſins, a juſtifying righteouſneſs, adopting grace, all ſupplies of grace from Chriſt, his preſence, and communion with him: and alſo an eternal one, even life for evermore; called ſo, becauſe it ſprings from the free favour, good-will, and bleſſing of God, and which its being an inheritance alſo ſhows; and becauſe ſuch that enjoy it are eternally and unſpeakably happy.

Ver. 10. For he that will love life, &c.] This, with what follows here, and in the two next verſes, are taken out of Pſ. xxxiv. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. and are produced as a proof of what is before ſaid; that it is a good man's duty not to do or ſpeak evil in return for what is done or ſaid to him; but on the contrary, it becomes him to avoid evil, do good, and ſeek peace as much as poſſible, and leave it with a righteous God, to vindicate him and his cauſe, who will not fail to do it; and that ſuch ſhall inherit the bleſſing both here and hereafter: in the Pſalm, theſe words are put by way of queſtion, what man is he that deſireth life? that wills it with pleaſure, that loves it with a love of complacency and delight? and which is to be underſtood, not of natural life; for what man is there that don't love that? love of a natural life is natural to men; it is a firſt principle in nature to deſire life, and a preſervation of it, and to a great length; a man will give all that he has for it, as Satan ſaid, Job ii. 4. but both of a ſpiritual life, a life of faith on Chriſt, communion with him, and holineſs from him; the life of God, or to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly, which carnal men are alienated from, and enemies to, and cannot deſire, only ſpiritual men; and of an eternal one; and ſo ſome of the Jewiſh interpreters[u] underſtand by life and good days, in the Pſalm, ſuch as are both in this world, and in that which is to come: and ſee good days; not the days of this life, which are evil, even the days of a good man, Gen. xlvii. 9. and the more ſo, the longer he lives; for the days of old age are evil days, in which there is no pleaſure, Eccl. xii. 1. unleſs ſuch days are meant, in which much good is done to the honour and glory of God, and in which gracious ſouls enjoy much of God, and ſee and taſte of his grace and goodneſs in the land of the living; tho' rather, the good days of eternity, even length of days for ever and ever, which holy men of God ſhall ſee, and enjoy in the other world, when they ſhall be poſſeſſed of fullneſs of joy, and of pleaſure for evermore: in the Pſalm it is, and loveth many days, that he may ſee good; deſires a bleſſed eternity of good things: let him refrain his tongue from evil; bridle that unruly member, which has a world of iniquity in it; let him keep it as with a bit, from the vices incident to it; from all obſcene words, filthy and corrupt communication, whatever is unſavoury and unedifying; from lying, curſing, ſwearing, and particularly from railing and evil ſpeaking, in return for ſuch language, which is chiefly meant; as well as from belching out blaſphemies againſt God, and damnable hereſies among men; for whoever would be thought a religious man, and lays no reſtraint on his tongue, his religion is a vain thing, Jam. i. 26. and his lips that they ſpeak no guile; as flatterers do, who ſpeak that with their mouth which does not agree with their heart, and ſo beguile and deceive perſons; and as falſe teachers, who uſe diſhoneſt arts, walk in craftineſs, handle the word of God deceitfully, uſe ambiguous phraſes, and words of double meaning, and with their good words, and fair ſpeeches, deceive the hearts of the ſimple; but ſuch things don't become perſons that ſeek for glory, honour, and immortality; that profeſs to be Iſraelites indeed; in theſe guile ſhould not be found in their lips, nor in their lives.

Ver. 11. Let him eſchew evil, &c.] Avoid all kind of evil, hate it, abſtain from the appearance of it, and have no fellowſhip with it; and particularly ſhould avoid rendring evil for evil, or taking revenge on perſons for doing him ill: and do good; every thing that is good, all good works, according to the will of God, in the exerciſe of faith, from a principle of love, and with a view to the glory of God; and without truſting to them, and depending upon them for life and ſalvation; and particularly do good for evil; do good to all men, acts of kindneſs and beneficence, even to enemies, and eſpecially to them that are of the houſhold of faith. The Jewiſh interpreters[w] on the Pſalm from whence theſe words are taken, obſerve, that in the firſt of theſe clauſes are contained all the negative precepts, whoſe number with them is three hundred, ſixty, and five; and in the latter of them, all the affirmative precepts, which amount to two hundred and forty-eight: let him ſeek peace and enſue it; or purſue it; let him ſeek after it, in the world, and with all men, as much as poſſible, yea with his very enemies; and live a peaceable and quiet life, in the kingdom, city, town, and neighbourhood where he is; and particularly in the church of God, and with the ſaints; which he ſhould ſeek with all diligence and eagerneſs, and purſue with all vigour to the utmoſt of his power; and endeavour to cultivate all he can, and follow the things which make for it. The note of one of the Jewiſh commentators[x] on this paſſage is, ſeek peace, in thine own place; and purſue it, in another place.

Ver. 12. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, &c.] Who are ſo not merely in the ſight of men, but of God; nor in their own account, and by their own works, but in the eſteem of God, through the imputation of the righteouſneſs of his Son unto them: and becauſe he loves this righteouſneſs, and is well pleaſed with it, ſeeing by it his law is magnified and made honourable, therefore his countenance beholds with pleaſure and delight thoſe righteous ones who are clothed with it; his eyes of omniſcience, love, care, and protection, are always upon them, watching over them, delighting in them, running to and fro in the earth on behalf of them; he ſees every injury done them, and in his own time and way will do them juſtice; which is a reaſon why they ſhould not take vengeance themſelves, but leave it with him, whoſe it is: and his ears are open to their prayers; or prayer; in the Hebrew text, to their cry; he is a God hearing prayer, and his righteous ones have his ear; he hears them whilſt they are ſpeaking, and will ſooner or later anſwer, and avenge his elect, who cry unto him day and night; for as he has an ear to hear their cries, which is not heavy, he has an arm to ſave them, which is not ſhortened; and this is another reaſon why they ſhould behave as before directed, and which is ſtill ſtrengthened by what follows; but the face of the Lord is againſt them that do evil; it is added in the Pſalm, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth: by the face of the Lord, is meant, as the Jewiſh writers[y] interpret it, the anger of the Lord; it intends, not his kind, pleaſant, and loving countenance, but his angry one; with the former he beholds the upright, and with it he looks upon his righteous ones; but the latter is upon, and againſt the wicked, and is dreadful and intolerable, and the conſequence of it is everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.

Ver. 13. And who is he that will harm you, &c.] Or can harm you. God will not; for his eyes are upon the righteous, to protect and defend them, and his ears are open to their cries, to avenge them; he is on their ſide, and he is the only law-giver that is able to ſave, and to deſtroy. Chriſt will not; for when he came the firſt time, it was not to condemn, but to ſave; and when he comes a ſecond time, tho' he'll rule the wicked with a rod of iron, and daſh them in pieces as a potter's veſſel; yet his people, who are his jewels, he will ſpare, as a man ſpares his only ſon. Good angels will not; theſe rejoice at the converſion, and in the ſalvation of ſinful men, encamp about the ſaints, and are miniſtring ſpirits to them: nor the devil; tho' he would devour, he cannot; for greater is he that is in the ſaints, than he that is in the world: nor can ſin; for tho' it wars againſt them, it ſhall not have the dominion over them; and tho' it often breaks in upon their peace and comfort, it cannot damn and deſtroy their ſouls: nor the law; for tho' it pronounces guilty, and curſes thoſe that are under it, and are of the works of it, yet ſince Chriſt has fulfilled it for his people, by obeying its precepts, and bearing its penalty, the curſe, it lies not againſt them, nor can it inflict any puniſhment on them: nor the men of the world; who hate and perſecute the ſaints; theſe can do them no real harm; they cannot hurt their grace, which ſhines the brighter, being tried and proved in the furnace of affliction; they cannot deſtroy their peace and comfort by all the trouble they give them; all the harm they can do them, is to their bodies; they can do none to their ſouls; and even all the evil things they do to their bodies, work together for their good; and they muſt be very wicked men that will do harm in any reſpect to ſuch as behave well in ſtates, cities, towns, or neighbourhoods: if ye be followers of that which is good; of God, who is eſſentially, originally, and infinitely good, and does good to all his creatures, by imitating him in holineſs and righteouſneſs, in kindneſs, mercy, and beneficence; and of Chriſt, the good Shepherd, following him in the exerciſe of grace, as of humility, love, patience, &c. and in the diſcharge of duty; and of good men, the Apoſtles of Chriſt, the firſt churches, faithful miniſters, and all ſuch who through faith and patience have inherited the promiſes, and that both in doctrine and practice; and of all good things, whatever is true, honeſt, juſt, pure, lovely, and of good report, particularly righteouſneſs, godlineſs, faith, love, patience, and meekneſs. Some copies, as the Alexandrian, and others, read, zealots, or zealous of good; of good works, as in Tit. ii. 14. and ſo the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions.

[y] Jarchi & Menachem apud ib. & Aben Ezra in loc.

Ver. 14. But and if ye ſuffer for righteouſneſs ſake, &c.] For the doctrine of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which was the great ſtumbling-block to the Jews, and on account of which they perſecuted the chriſtians; it being not after man, nor according to the carnal reaſon of men, and was contrary to the method they had fixed on, and what excluded boaſting in them, and was thought to be a licentious doctrine; and for a righteous cauſe, for profeſſing Chriſt and his Goſpel; for vindicating both which, whoever did, muſt expect to ſuffer perſecution; and alſo for living ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly; for by a religious life and converſation the ſaints are ſeparated from the world, and are diſtinguiſhed from them, which in effect ſets a mark of infamy and reproach upon them; and ſaints, by an agreeable life, reprove others, and condemn them; all which, irritate and provoke them to hate and perſecute them: now theſe words prevent an objection that might be made to what is before ſaid; that none can, or will harm ſuch as are followers of good; whereas it is a clear caſe, that ſaints for righteouſneſs ſake are hurt, and do ſuffer in their perſons, characters, and eſtate; they are reproached and reviled, and often ſuffer confiſcation of goods, impriſonment, and even death itſelf; to which the Apoſtle anſwers, by granting it, and ſuppoſing that this ſhould be the caſe, as it ſometimes is; yet no hurt is done them, they are ſtill happy perſons: happy are ye; ſince ſuffering on ſuch an account is a gift of God, even as believing in Chriſt itſelf is, and is a real honour done to a perſon, and to be ſo accounted; moreover, ſuch generally enjoy much of the preſence of God, and the comforts of his Spirit; the Spirit of God and of glory reſts upon them; hereby the graces of the Spirit of God in them are exerciſed, tried, and proved, and ſhine out the brighter; the faith and hope of other chriſtians are ſtrengthened, and God is glorified; and beſides, the kingdom of heaven, the crown of life, and eternal glory, with which their ſufferings are not to be compared, are theirs, and which they ſhall certainly enjoy: and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled; referring to a paſſage in Iſ. viii. 12. and the meaning is either, be not afraid with the ſame ſort of fear, as wicked men are; with a worldly, ſlaviſh fear of men, and of the loſs of worldly things, and of life itſelf: or, afraid of them, as the Syriac verſion renders it; who inject fear into you; don't be afraid of their revilings and reproaches, of their threatnings and menaces, and even of death itſelf by them, which is the utmoſt they can do; don't be troubled at any thing they ſay or do to you; ſince nothing can harm you, ſince God is on your ſide, Chriſt has delivered you from this preſent evil world, and ſaved you out of the hands of every enemy; and ſince the love of God, which caſteth out fear, is ſhed abroad in your hearts, and you are encompaſſed with it, and nothing can ſeparate you from it.

Ver. 15. But ſanctify the Lord God in your hearts, &c.] Still referring to Iſ. viii. 13. not by making him holy, which need not, nor cannot be, he being eſſentially, infinitely, and perfectly holy; but by declaring and proclaiming his holineſs, as the Seraphim in Iſaiah's prophecy, and the four living creatures in the Revelation did; and by glorifying of him, praiſing and applauding all his perfections, and among the reſt, this of his holineſs, and giving thanks at the remembrance of it; which he has ſo much diſplayed in the works of creation, providence, redemption, and grace; hence the Arabic verſion renders it, bleſs the Lord God in your hearts: the Lord God is ſanctified by his people externally, when they regard his commands, attend his ordinances, and call upon his name, and praiſe him; but here an internal ſanctification of him, a ſanctification of him in their hearts, is intended, and what is oppoſed to the fear of men, and unbelief, and lies in the exerciſe of the grace of fear upon him; ſee Iſ. viii. 13. and which has for its object his goodneſs, and is a fruit of the covenant of his grace, and is a child-like and godly fear; and in the exerciſe of faith upon him, upon his covenant and promiſes, his faithfulneſs, and power to help, aſſiſt, and preſerve; whereby glory is given to him, a witneſs born to his truth, and he is ſanctified: ſome copies, as the Alexandrian, and one of Stephens's, read, ſanctify the Lord Chriſt; and ſo read the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions; and certain it is that he is intended in Iſ. viii. 13. as appears from ver. 14. compared with Rom. ix. 33. 1 Pet. ii. 8. and be ready always to give an anſwer to every man that aſketh you a reaſon of the hope that is in you with meekneſs and fear; by, the hope that is in the ſaints, is not deſigned, the grace of hope itſelf, which is given to them, and implanted in them in regeneration; the reaſon, ground, and foundation of which, are, the love, grace, and mercy of God, through Chriſt, and his perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, ſacrifice, and redemption; but the Goſpel, the whole chriſtian doctrine, the doctrine of faith, and which the Syriac verſion here calls, the hope of faith; and the profeſſion of chriſtianity, called in Heb. x. 23. the profeſſion of hope; in which perſons profeſs their hope of eternal life and happineſs thro' Chriſt, as the doctrine of the Goſpel directs them to. Now, a reaſon of this is to be given; not that they are to account for the Goſpel, upon the foot of carnal reaſon; for that is not of men, nor according to the carnal reaſon of men; nor is it to be thought that every chriſtian ſhould be capable of defending the Goſpel, either in whole, or in part, by arguments and reaſons, in a diſputatious way, or to give a reaſon and argument for every particular truth; but that he ſhould be well acquainted with the ground and foundation of the chriſtian religion; at leaſt, with the firſt principles of the oracles of God, and be converſant with the ſcriptures, and be able to point out that in them, which is the reaſon of his holding this and the other truth, tho' he is not able to give a gainſayer ſatisfaction, or to ſtop his mouth: and this is to be done, with meekneſs and fear; with meekneſs, before men; in a humble, modeſt way; not with an haughty air, and in a moroſe and ſurly manner, which ſerves only to irritate and provoke; and with fear; either of God, and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, with the fear of the Lord; conſidering the ſubject of the argument, and the importance of it, and how much the honour of God is concerned in it; and taking care leſt the anſwer ſhould be delivered in a light, trifling and negligent manner, and that no part of truth be dropped or concealed, in order to pleaſe men, and be ſcreened from their reſentments; or with all due reverence of, and reſpect to men, to ſuperiors, to the civil magiſtrates, who may aſk the reaſon; for they are to be treated with honour and eſteem, and to be anſwered in an handſome and becoming manner, ſuitable to the dignity of their perſons and office; as the Sanhedrim was by Stephen; and as Felix, Feſtus, and Agrippa, by the Apoſtle Paul: and this anſwer, or reaſon, is to be given to every man; that has authority to aſk, and that aſks in a modeſt manner, and with a reverence ſuitable to the ſubject; for the phraſes, with meekneſs and fear, may reſpect him that aſks the reaſon, as well as him that gives the anſwer; for that which is holy is not to be given to dogs, to impudent perſons, mockers and ſcoffers, nor are pearls to be caſt before ſwine, filthy and irreverent perſons; ſee Matt. vii. 6. the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion read, but with meekneſs and fear; for if it is not aſked in ſuch a way, there is no obligation to give an anſwer: and this is to be given, always; whenever it is aſked in ſuch a manner, and by proper perſons; when there is a neceſſity of it, and as opportunity offers: and ſaints ſhould be always ready to give it; and therefore it becomes them daily and diligently to ſearch the ſcriptures, meditate on them, and get all the help and aſſiſtance they can, to lead them into an acquaintance with them, that they may be ſo; for tho' the Apoſtles had extraordinary aſſiſtance promiſed them, and therefore were bid not to conſider beforehand what they ſhould ſay, when brought before kings and princes; yet this is not to be expected by ordinary perſons, nor in ordinary caſes. Agreeable to this, is the advice of R. Eleazar[z]; "be diligent to learn the law, and know what thou ſhouldſt anſwer to an Epicure," or heretic: ſays R. Jochanan[a], "in every place where the Sadducees object, תשובתן בצידן, their anſwer is at their ſide," or ready; that is, in the ſame ſcriptures on which they form their objections.

Ver. 16. Having a good conſcience, &c.] Meaning not the faculty of the conſcience itſelf, which is naturally evil, and defiled with ſin, and is only made good by the ſanctification of the Spirit, and the ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus, by which the heart is ſprinkled from it, and that itſelf purged from dead works; but a life and converſation according to the dictates of ſuch a conſcience, in the uprightneſs and ſincerity of it, and by the grace of God, and according to the Goſpel, and whereby the doctrines of it are adorned; for, as beſides internal ſanctification of God, or a fearing of him, and believing in him with the heart, there muſt be a profeſſion of him with the mouth, and a reaſon of faith and hope given verbally, when there is an occaſion for it; ſo to both muſt be added a conſcientious diſcharge of duty, both to God and men, which is one way of defending and recommending the doctrines of the Goſpel: that whereas they ſpeak evil of you as of evil doers; as vain, proud, haughty, and arrogant perſons, as ſeditious men, enemies to order and civil magiſtracy; as ſuch that ſpeak evil of dignities, and deſpiſe government; when they ſhall ſee your modeſt and humble deportment in the world, and before them, and with what reverence and eſteem you treat them: they may be aſhamed that falſely accuſe your good converſation in Chriſt; which was in conſequence of their being in Chriſt, and made new creatures by him, and was as became his Goſpel, and by and under the influence of his grace and Spirit.

Ver. 17. For it is better if the will of God be ſo, &c.] For all things are ordered by the will of God, even all the ſufferings and afflictions of the ſaints; and which is a reaſon why they ought to be patiently ſubmitted to, and bore: and better it is, more honourable and profitable, that ye ſuffer for well doing; for believing in Chriſt, profeſſing him and his Goſpel, giving a free and open reaſon for ſo doing, and for exerciſing a good conſcience, and living godly in Chriſt Jeſus: than for evil doing; as a murderer, a thief, an evil doer, or a buſybody in other mens matters, ch. iv. 15, 16.

Ver. 18. For Chriſt alſo hath once ſuffered for ſins, &c.] Not his own, for he committed none, but for the ſins of his people; in order to obtain the remiſſion of them, to make reconciliation for them, and to take and put them away, and finiſh and make an end of them; which ſufferings of his, on account of them, were many and great: he ſuffered much by bearing the griefs, and carrying the ſorrows of his people, whereby he became a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with griefs, from his cradle to his croſs; and from the temptations of ſatan, being in all points tempted, as his members are, tho' without ſin; and from the contradiction of ſinners againſt him, in his name, credit, and character, abuſing him as the worſt of men; and he ſuffered in his ſoul, from the wrath of God, and curſes of the law, which lay upon him; and in his body, by many buffetings, ſcourges, wounds, and death itſelf, even the death of the croſs; and which being the finiſhing part of his ſufferings, is chiefly here meant. The Alexandrian copy reads, died for you; and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, died for our ſins; and this he did once, and but once; he died once, and will die no more; he was offered up once, and will be offered up no more; there is no more offering, or ſacrifice for ſin; the reaſon is, becauſe his one offering is ſufficient to take away ſin, which the legal ſacrifices were not, and therefore were often offered; and the reaſon why this his one offering, or once ſuffering and dying, is ſufficient, is, becauſe of his divine nature, or eternal Spirit, by which he offered himſelf, and gave infinite virtue to his ſacrifice and ſatisfaction: now, this is an argument for ſuffering patiently; ſince Chriſt, the head, has alſo ſuffered, and therefore, why not the members; and ſince he has ſuffered for their ſins, and therefore ſhould not grudge to ſuffer for his ſake; and ſeeing alſo their ſufferings are but once, in this life only, and as it were but for a moment, and not to be compared with his ſufferings for them; and eſpecially when it is conſidered what follows: the juſt for the unjuſt;

[z] Pirke Abot, c. 2. § 14.

[a] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 38. 2.

Chriſt, the holy and juſt one, who is holy in his nature, and righteous in his life and actions, which were entirely conformable to the righteous law of God, and upright and faithful in the diſcharge of his office, and therefore called God's righteous ſervant; he ſuffered, and that not only by unjuſt men, by the Jews, by Pilate, and the Roman ſoldiers, but for and in the room and ſtead of unjuſt men, ſinners, and ungodly, who were deſtitute of righteouſneſs, and full of all unrighteouſneſs; and ſince he did, it need not be thought hard, or ſtrange, that ſinful men ſhould ſuffer at the hands of others; and ſtill it ſhould be born with the greater patience, ſince Chriſt not only ſuffered for them, but ſince an end is anſwered by it, as is here ſuggeſted: that he might bring us to God; nigh to God, who, with reſpect to communion, were afar off from him; and in peace and reconciliation with him, who were enemies to him by wicked works; and that they might have freedom of acceſs, with boldneſs, unto God, through his precious blood, and the vail of his fleſh; and that he might offer them unto God, as the Vulgate Latin, and Syriac verſions render it; as a ſacrifice acceptable unto God, preſenting them to him unblameable and unreproveable in his ſight; that he might bring them into his grace and preſence here, and as the great captain of their ſalvation, bring them to him in glory hereafter: being put to death in the fleſh; in the human nature: fleſh includes the whole of human nature, both body and ſoul; for tho' the body only dies, yet death is the diſſolution of the union between them both; and ſuch was Chriſt's death; for tho' the union between the two natures continued, yet his body and ſoul were diſunited; his body was left on the croſs, and his ſoul, or Spirit, was commended to God, when his life was taken from the earth, and he was put to death in a violent manner by men: but quickned by the Spirit; raiſed from the dead by his divine nature, the Spirit of holineſs, the eternal Spirit, by which he offered up himſelf, and by virtue of which, as he had power to lay down his life, ſo he had power to take it up again; when he was alſo juſtified in the Spirit, and all the elect in him. Now, as the enemies of Chriſt could do no more than put him to death in the fleſh, ſo the enemies of his people can do no more than kill the body, and cannot reach the ſoul; and as Chriſt is quickned and raiſed from the dead, ſo all his elect are quickned together, and raiſed with him, repreſentatively, and ſhall, by virtue of his reſurrection, be raiſed perſonally, and live alſo; which is no inconſiderable argument to ſuffer afflictions patiently, and which is the deſign of this inſtance and example of the ſufferings, death, and reſurrection of Chriſt.

Ver. 19. By which alſo he went and preached unto the ſpirits in priſon.] Various are the ſenſes given of this paſſage: ſome ſay, that Chriſt, upon his death, went in his human ſoul to hell; either, as ſome, to preach to the devils and damned ſpirits, that they might be ſaved, if they would; and as others, to let them know that he was come, and to fill them with dread and terror; but tho' hell may be meant by the priſon, yet the text does not ſay that he went unto it, or preached in it; only that the ſpirits were in it, to whom he ſometimes went, and preached; nor is his human ſoul, but his divine nature meant, by the ſpirit, by which he went, and preached to them: and as for the ends propoſed, the former is impracticable and impoſſible; for after death follows judgment, which is an eternal one; nor is there any ſalvation, or hope of ſalvation afterwards; and the latter is abſurd, vain, and needleſs. Others, as the Papiſts, imagine the ſenſe to be, that Chriſt, at his death, went in his human ſoul, into a place they call Limbus patrum, which they ſuppoſe is meant by the priſon here, and delivered the ſouls of the Old Teſtament ſaints and patriarchs, from thence, and carried them with him to heaven; but this ſenſe is alſo falſe, becauſe, as before obſerved, not the human ſoul of Chriſt, but his divine nature, is deſigned by the ſpirit; nor is there any ſuch place, as here feigned, in which the ſouls of Old Teſtament ſaints were, before the death of Chriſt; for they were in peace and reſt, in the kingdom of heaven, in Abraham's boſom, inheriting the promiſes, and not in a priſon; beſides, the text ſays not one word of the delivering of theſe ſpirits out of priſon, only of Chriſt's preaching to them: add to all this, and which Beza, with others, obſerve, the Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſuch as had been diſobedient, and unbelievers; a character which will not agree with righteous men, and prophets, and patriarchs, under the former diſpenſation: others think the words are to be underſtood of Chriſt's going to preach, by his Apoſtles, to the Gentiles, as in Eph. ii. 17. who were in a moſt miſerable condition, ſtrangers to the covenants of promiſe, and deſtitute of the hope of ſalvation, and ſat in darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death, and as it were, at the gates of hell; were in the bonds of iniquity, and dead in ſin, and had been for a long time paſt, fooliſh and diſobedient, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures, to which they were in bondage. This is indeed, a more tolerable ſenſe than the former; but it will be difficult to ſhow, that men, in the preſent ſtate of life, are called ſpirits, which ſeems to be a word that relates to the ſouls of men, in a ſeparate ſtate from their bodies; and eſpecially that carnal and unconverted men, are ever ſo called; and beſides, the Apoſtle, is ſpeaking of ſuch who were diſobedient, in the times of Noah; and therefore, not of the Gentiles, in the times of the Apoſtles: add to which, that the tranſition from the times of the Apoſtles, according to this ſenſe, to the days of Noah, is very unaccountable; this ſenſe does not agree with the connexion of the words: others are of opinion, that this is meant of the ſouls of the Old Teſtament ſaints, who were εν φυλακη, in a watch, as they think the phraſe may be rendred, inſtead of, in priſon; and ſaid to be in ſuch a ſituation, becauſe they were intent upon the hope of promiſed ſalvation, and were looking out for the Meſſiah, and anxiouſly deſiring his coming, and which he, by ſome gracious manifeſtation, made known unto them: but tho' the word may ſometimes ſignify a watch, yet more commonly, a priſon, and which ſenſe beſt ſuits here; nor is that anxiety and uneaſineſs, which repreſents them as in a priſon, ſo applicable to ſouls in a ſtate of happineſs; nor ſuch a gracious manifeſtation, ſo properly called preaching; and beſides, not believers, but unbelievers, diſobedient ones, are here ſpoken of; and tho' it is only ſaid, they were ſometimes ſo, yet to what purpoſe ſhould this former character be once mentioned, of ſouls now in glory? but it would be tedious to reckon up the ſeveral different ſenſes of this place; ſome referring it to ſuch in Noah's time, to whom the Goſpel was preached, and who repented; and tho' they ſuffered in their bodies, in the general deluge, yet their ſouls were ſaved; whereas the Apoſtle calls them all, the world of the ungodly, 2 Pet. ii. 5. and others, to the eight ſouls that were ſhut up in the ark, as in a priſon, and were ſaved; tho' theſe are manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed in the text from the diſobedient ſpirits. The plain and eaſy ſenſe of the words is, that Chriſt, by his Spirit, by which he was quickned, went in the miniſtry of Noah, the preacher of righteouſneſs, and preached both by words and deeds, by the perſonal miniſtry of Noah, and by the building of the ark, to that generation who was then in being; and who being diſobedient, and continuing ſo, a flood was brought upon them which deſtroyed them all; and whoſe ſpirits, or ſeparate ſouls, were then in the priſon of hell, ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, בשיול, in hell, ſee Rev. xx. 7. when the Apoſtle Peter wrote this epiſtle; ſo that Chriſt neither went into this priſon, nor preached in it, nor to ſpirits that were then in it when he preached, but to perſons alive in the days of Noah; and who being diſobedient, when they died, their ſeparate ſouls were put into priſon, and there they were when the Apoſtle wrote: from whence we learn, that Chriſt was, that he exiſted in his divine nature before he was incarnate, he was before Abraham, he was in the days of Noah; and that Chriſt alſo, under the Old Teſtament, acted the part of a mediator, in his divine nature, and by his Spirit diſcharged that branch of it, his prophetic office, before he appeared in human nature; and that the Goſpel was preached in thoſe early times, as unto Abraham, ſo, before him.

Ver. 20. Which ſometime were diſobedient, &c.] To all the inſtructions and warnings which God gave them, to all the ſtrivings of his Spirit, and to the miniſtry of Chriſt, by Noah; they continued in their prophaneneſs and impiety, and to corrupt their ways, and fill the earth with violence and wickedneſs; not believing what they were threatned with, or that ever a flood would come upon them, and deſtroy them: and this ſometime, refers to the time of their being upon earth, who were now in hell; to the days of Noah, hereafter mentioned; and which the Syriac verſion connects with this clauſe, reading it thus, who of old were diſobedient in the days of Noah; at which time it was, that Chriſt, by his Spirit in Noah, went and preached to them: when once the long-ſuffering of God waited in the days of Noah; that is, when God, who is long-ſuffering and patient, waited on theſe diſobedient ones, in Noah's time, for the ſpace of an hundred and twenty years: while the ark was preparing; by Noah, according to the directions which God gave him, Gen. vi. 14—22. and which, as R. Tanchuma ſays [b], was fifty-two years a building; others ſay [c], an hundred years; but Jarchi ſays [d], it was an hundred and twenty; and which ſeems moſt likely, that being the term of time in which God's long-ſuffering waited on them; during which time, Noah was preaching to them, and building the ark: wherein few, that is, eight ſouls, were ſaved by water; the eight perſons were, Noah, and his wife, and his three ſons, Shem, Ham, and Japhet, and their three wives. It is a common tradition with the Jews [e], that beſides theſe, Og, king of Baſhan, eſcaped the flood; and who, they ſay, is the ſame that eſcaped, and told Abraham of Lot's being carried captive by the kings [f]; the manner of his eſcape at the flood, they relate thus [g]; "Og came, who was delivered from the men that died at the flood, and he rode upon the ark, and he had a covering upon his head, and was fed with the food of Noah; but not for his worthineſs was he delivered, but that the inhabitants of the world might ſee the power of the Lord;" and elſewhere [h], after this manner, citing thoſe words, and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark, Gen. vii. 23. they add, "except Og, king of Baſhan, who ſat on a certain piece of wood which belonged to the ſcaffolding of the ark, and he ſwore to Noah, and his ſons, that he would be their ſervant for ever. What did Noah do? he bored an hole in the ark, and every day reached out food to him, and he remained alive, according to what is ſaid, Deut. iii. 11. only Og, king of Baſhan, &c." But this is all a mere fiction; and equally fabulous, is the account the Arabians give, who ſay [i], that eighty perſons, together with Noah, were taken into the ark, among whom was Jorham, their father; for there were no more than eight perſons ſaved; and this is the Apoſtle's ſenſe; and agreeably, the Syriac verſion renders it, and eight ſouls, בלחוד, only entred into it, and were ſaved by water; and we are told by ſome of the eaſtern writers [k], that when theſe eight went out of the ark, they built a city, which they called Themanin, which, in the Arabic language ſignifies eight, according to their number. The ark was a type of Chriſt, into whom, whoever enters by faith, or in whom whoever believes, ſhall be ſaved; but as they that entered into the ark were but few, ſo are thoſe that enter in at the ſtrait gate, or believe in Chriſt; and they that went into the ark were ſaved by the water bearing up the ark, even by that by which others were deſtroyed; as the very ſame things, for different reaſons, is the cauſe or means of deſtruction and ſalvation; ſo, Chriſt is ſet, for the fall and riſing of many, is a ſtumbling-block to ſome, and the power and wiſdom of God to others; and the Goſpel, and the miniſters of it, are the ſavour of life unto life to ſome, and the ſavour of death unto death to others. This inſtance of the diſpenſation of the providence of God to the old world, is very appoſitely, tho' by way of digreſſion, introduced by the Apoſtle; ſhewing, that in times paſt, as then, God's uſual method has been, to afford the outward means to ungodly men, and to bear with them long, and then bring down his vengeance upon them, and ſave his own people; and this, ſuffering ſaints might depend upon would be their caſe, and therefore ſhould bear their afflictions patiently.

Ver. 21. The like figure whereunto even baptiſm doth alſo now ſave us, &c.] The ark, and deliverance by it, as it was a type of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him, ſo it was a figure of baptiſm, and baptiſm was the antitype of that; or there is ſomething in theſe which correſpond, and anſwer to, and bear a reſemblance to each other: as the ark was God's ordinance, and not man's invention, ſo is baptiſm, it is of heaven, and not of men; and as the ark, while it was preparing, was the ſcorn and deriſion of men, ſo is this ordinance of the Goſpel; it was rejected with diſdain by the ſcribes and phariſees, as it ſtill is by many; and as the ark, when Noah and his family were ſhut up in it by God, repreſented a burial, and they ſeemed, as it were, to be buried in it, it was a lively emblem of baptiſm, which is expreſſed by a burial, Rom. vi. 4. Col. ii. 12. and as they in the ark had the great deep broke up under them, and the windows of heaven opened over them, pouring out waters upon them, they were, as it were, immerſed in, and were covered with water, this fitly figured baptiſm, by immerſion; nor were there any but adult perſons that entered into the ark, nor ſhould any be baptized but believers; to which may be added, that as the one ſaved by water, ſo does the other; for it is water-baptiſm which is here deſigned, which John practiſed, Chriſt gave a commiſſion for, and his diſciples adminiſtred: it ſaves not as a cauſe, for it has no cauſal influence on, nor is it eſſential to ſalvation. Chriſt only is the cauſe and author of eternal ſalvation; and as thoſe only that were in the ark, were ſaved by water, ſo thoſe only that are in Chriſt, and that are baptized into Chriſt, and into his death, are ſaved by baptiſm; not every one that is baptized, but he that believeth, and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved, Mark xvi. 16. for baptiſm is not the putting away of the filth of the fleſh; the deſign of it is not to take off the ſordid fleſh, as circumciſion did; or in a ceremonious way, outwardly, to ſanctify to the purifying of the fleſh, as the Jewiſh baptiſms did; ſee Heb. ix. 10, 13. or to take away either original or actual ſin; this only the blood of Chriſt can do; and it is not a mere external cleanſing of the body: but the anſwer of a good conſcience towards God; the Vulgate Latin renders it, the interrogation of a good conſcience; referring, it may be, to the interrogations that uſed to be put to thoſe who deſired baptiſm; as, doſt thou renounce ſatan? doſt thou believe in Chriſt? ſee Acts viii. 36, 37. others render it, the ſtipulation of a good conſcience; alluding alſo to the ancient cuſtom of obliging thoſe that were baptized, to covenant and agree to live an holy life and converſation, to renounce the devil and all his works, and the pomps and vanities of this world; and baptiſm does certainly lay an obligation on men to walk in newneſs of life; ſee Rom. vi. 4, 5. the Ethiopic verſion renders it, confeſſion of God; and to this the Syriac verſion agrees, rendring it, confeſſing God with a pure conſcience; for, to baptiſm, profeſſion of faith in Chriſt, and of the doctrine of Chriſt in a pure conſcience, is requiſite; and in baptiſm, perſons make a publick confeſſion of God, and openly put on Chriſt before men: the ſenſe ſeems plainly this; that then is baptiſm rightly performed, and its end anſwered, when a perſon, conſcious to himſelf, of its being an ordinance of Chriſt, and of his duty, to ſubmit to it, does do ſo upon profeſſion of his faith in Chriſt, in obedience to his command, and with a view to his glory; in doing which, he diſcharges a good conſcience towards God: and being thus performed, it ſaves, by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt; being a means of leading the faith of the baptized perſon, as to the blood of Chriſt, for pardon and cleanſing, ſo to the reſurrection of Chriſt, for juſtification; ſee Acts ii. 38. and xxii. 16. Rom. iv. 25. moreover, the ſenſe of the paſſage may be this, that baptiſm is a like figure as the ark of Noah was; that as the entrance of Noah and his family into the ark, was an emblem of a burial, ſo their coming out of it, was a figure of the reſurrection; and juſt ſuch a figure is baptiſm, performed by immerſion, both of the reſurection of Chriſt from the dead, and of the reſurrection of ſaints to walk in newneſs of life. The Arabic verſion renders the whole verſe thus; of which thing baptiſm is now a type ſaving us, not by removing the filth of the fleſh only, but by exhilarating a good conſcience towards God, by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 22. Who is gone into heaven, &c.] After he had been riſen forty days, where he is received, and will remain, until the reſtitution of all things; and where he appears in the preſence of God for his people, and ever lives to make interceſſion for them; and is entred as their forerunner, and is preparing manſions of glory for them; and will come again, and take them to himſelf, to be for ever with him, and from hence they expect him: and is on the right hand of God; where Stephen ſaw him; and which is an honour never conferred on any angel, or man; and ſhews that Chriſt had done his work, and that in a way acceptable to God; the Vulgate Latin verſion here adds, ſwallowing up death that we might be made heirs of eternal life; but is not ſupported by any copy or verſion: angels, authorities, and powers being made ſubject unto him; by angels, may be meant, angels both good and bad, who are all in ſubjection to Chriſt; and by authorities and powers, the kings, princes, and governors of this world, who hold their dominions from and under the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and which is an argument why believers ſhould patiently bear all their ſufferings and afflictions, ſince Chriſt has the government in his hands, and he rules and over-rules all things for good; and when he pleaſes, he can put a ſtop to the rage and perſecutions of men; and ſo the Apoſtle returns to his former argument, in the following chapter.

CHAP. IV.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle goes on to exhort to an holy life and converſation, and to the ſeveral duties of religion, and to ſuffer chearfully for the ſake of Chriſt. From the conſideration of Chriſt's ſufferings, he exhorts the ſaints to arm themſelves with the ſame mind, and ceaſe from ſin, and live no longer to the luſts of men, but to the will of God, ver. 1, 2. the reaſon, or argument engaging to it, is taken from the paſt time of life, in which, they walked in all manner of ſin, and which ought to ſuffice, tho' they ſhould be ſpoken evil of by wicked men, for not continuing therein, ver. 3, 4. and to fortify their minds againſt ſuch abuſes, the Apoſtle takes notice of the general judgment, when ſuch perſons muſt give an account for their evil ſpeaking to the judge of quick and dead; and that tho' thoſe to whom the Goſpel is preached, and embrace it, ſuffer death for it, being judged of men in their bodies, yet they live to God in their ſouls, ver. 5, 6. and ſeeing the end of all things is near, he exhorts to various things, as, to ſobriety, watchfulneſs unto prayer, and eſpecially to fervent charity, ſince that covers a multitude of ſins, ver. 7, 8. and to hoſpitality, without grudging, and to a communication of all good things, as faithful ſtewards of them, ver. 9, 10. and particularly to the diſpenſation of the Goſpel, according to the word of God; and to a miniſtration to the poor, according to a man's ability, with a view to the glory of God, by Chriſt, ver. 11. and next, the Apoſtle proceeds to comfort the ſaints under reproaches and perſecutions, and to inſtruct them how to behave under ſuch circumſtances; as that they ſhould not think ſuch things ſtrange, tho' grievous, ſince they were for the trial of their graces, ver. 12. but ſhould rather rejoice, ſince they were partakers of the ſufferings of Chriſt now, and ſhould ſhare in his glory when revealed, which would make them exceeding glad, ver. 13. yea, inaſmuch as it was for the name of Chriſt they ſuffered reproach, they ought to reckon themſelves happy perſons; ſince the glorious Spirit of God reſted on them, and ſince the iſſue of it was, the glorifying of God by them, tho' he was evil ſpoken of by thoſe that reproached them, ver. 14. indeed, they ought not to ſuffer as perſons guilty of capital crimes; ſhould they, they would have reaſon to be aſhamed, but not ſince they ſuffered as chriſtians; but on the contrary, ſhould give glory to God for it, who had done them ſo much honour as to call them to it, ver. 15, 16. and to reconcile their minds to ſufferings, he obſerves, that the time was come, that afflictions ſhould begin with the people of God, on account of which, the righteous are ſcarcely ſaved, tho' certainly; and that therefore, ſad muſt be the ſtate of the diſobedient and ungodly, even of their wicked perſecutors, ver. 17, 18. wherefore, upon the whole, ſeeing it was the will of God they ſhould ſuffer, they ought to ſuffer patiently, and in well doing, commit the care of their ſouls to their faithful creator, ver. 19.

Ver. 1. Foraſmuch then as Chriſt hath ſuffered for us in the fleſh, &c.] The Apoſtle having finiſhed his digreſſion concerning Chriſt's preaching in the miniſtry of Noah, to men, whoſe ſpirits were now in priſon, and concerning the ſalvation of Noah's family in the ark, by water, and concerning its antitype, baptiſm, its nature and effect, returns to the ſufferings of Chriſt, he had before made mention of; and argues from thence, to holineſs of life, and patience in ſufferings, after this manner; ſeeing then, Chriſt, the eternal Son of God, the Lord of glory, the holy and juſt one, ſuffered ſuch indignities, reproaches, and perſecutions from men, the wrath of God, the curſes of the law, and death itſelf; and that not for himſelf, nor for angels, but for men, and theſe not all men, otherwiſe his death, with reſpect to ſome, muſt be in vain; but for a particular number of men, in diſtinction from others, deſcribed in the beginning of this epiſtle, as elect, according to the foreknowledge of God; and theſe ſufferings he endured in the room and ſtead of thoſe perſons, in the days of his fleſh, whilſt here on earth, and in his human nature, both ſoul and body, and was crucified through the weakneſs of his fleſh, and for the ſins of our fleſh, and which he bore in his own: arm yourſelves likewiſe with the ſame mind; that was in Chriſt; as he ſuffered for you, do ye likewiſe ſuffer for him, in his cauſe, for righteouſneſs ſake, for the ſake of him and his Goſpel; and bear all reproaches, afflictions, and perſecutions on his account, willingly, and chearfully, with meekneſs and patience, as he did, and with the ſame view; not indeed to make ſatisfaction for ſin, which was his principal deſign, but that being dead unto ſin, you might live unto righteouſneſs. The Apoſtle ſpeaks to the ſaints, in this exhortation, as to ſoldiers, and who had many enemies to engage with, and therefore ſhould put on their armour, and be in a readineſs to meet any attack upon them: for he that hath ſuffered in the fleſh hath ceaſed from ſin; meaning either Chriſt, who having ſuffered in human nature for the ſins of his people, whereby he has made ſatisfaction for them, is now clear of them; the ſins that were imputed to him being took and bore away, finiſhed and made an end of, and he juſtified from them, and freed from all the effects of them, and puniſhment for them, as from all the infirmities of human nature, from mortality and death: or, the perſon that has ſuffered in and with Chriſt, his head and repreſentative, which is all one as if he had ſuffered himſelf, in perſon; by virtue of which, his ſin ceaſes, and he ceaſes from being chargeable with it, as if he had never ſinned; which is the caſe of every criminal, when he has ſuffered the penalty of the law for his crime: or elſe the perſon that is dead to ſin, by virtue of the death of Chriſt, and in imitation of it, who has been baptized into Chriſt's death, and planted in the likeneſs of it; whoſe old man is crucified with Chriſt, and he is dead with him; who has crucified the affections with the luſts, and through the Spirit has mortified the deeds of the body; which way the generality of interpreters go: ſuch a man has ceaſed from ſin; not from the being and indwelling of it in him; nor from the burden of it on him; nor from a continual war with it in him; nor from ſlips and falls by it, and into it; no, nor from it in the moſt ſolemn and religious ſervices; but as from the guilt of it, and obligation to puniſhment by it, through the death of Chriſt, ſo from the ſervitude and dominion of it, through the power of divine grace, in conſequence of Chriſt's death: or rather, the believer that ſuffers death in his body, for the ſake of Chriſt, ſuch an one immediately ceaſes from the very being of ſin, and all commiſſion of it; he becomes at once perfectly pure, and holy, without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; and a noble argument this is to meet death without fear, and to ſuffer it chearfully and willingly, ſince the conſequence of this will be, an entire freedom from ſin, than which nothing can be more deſireable by a believer: to this agrees the Syriac verſion, which renders the words thus; for whoever is dead in his body hath ceaſed from all ſins; but the Arabic verſion more fully confirms this ſenſe, and is the beſt verſion of the text, and is this; be ye armed with this (ſame) thought, that (not for) he that hath ſuffered in the fleſh hath ceaſed from ſin; that is, fortify your minds againſt all the fears of ſufferings, and of death, for the ſake of Chriſt, with this ſingle thought; that he that has ſuffered martyrdom for Chriſt, in his body, or has ſuffered death for his ſake, or dies in the Lord, is free from ſin, and ſo from ſorrow, and is the moſt happy perſon imaginable; ſo that this laſt clauſe is not a reaſon of the former, but points out, and is explanative of what that ſame mind or thought is, chriſtians ſhould arm themſelves with, againſt the fears of death; and it is the beſt piece of armour for this ſervice, a ſaint can make uſe of.

Ver. 2. That he no longer ſhould live, &c.] The Arabic verſion reads, that ye no longer ſhould live. This expreſſes the end of being armed with the above thought, that a ſuffering ſaint after death is clear of ſin; and the uſe that is to be made of it in the preſent time of life, and the remainder of it, that ſuch a perſon who ſo thinks, and is thus guarded and fortified againſt the fears of death, ſhould no more, or any longer live, the reſt of his time in the fleſh, to the luſts of men, but to the will of God: the phraſe, his time in the fleſh, means the preſent time of life, in the body, and is the ſame with thoſe phraſes, in the days of his fleſh, to abide in the fleſh, and be at home in the body; and the words of the text ſuppoſe the former part of this time to have been ſpent in ſinful luſts and pleaſures, as the former part of the time of God's elect, even that before converſion is; and that the remaining part of it, be it longer or ſhorter, ought to be ſpent otherwiſe: not to the luſts of men; of wicked and unregenerate men, unconverted Gentiles; which they are addicted to, immerſed in, and ſerve; and which they are deſirous others ſhould live in; and which are ſometimes called divers, worldly and fleſhly luſts; and are fooliſh, and hurtful, and deceitful, and drown men in perdition, and therefore not to be lived unto: but to the will of God; revealed in his word, and which is good, acceptable, and perfect; one part of which is ſanctification, holineſs of heart, life, and converſation, as alſo patient ſuffering all reproach, injury, and perſecution, for the ſake of the Goſpel; to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly, to ſtudy to exerciſe a conſcience void of offence towards God and men, and to ſuffer patiently for his name ſake, is to live to the will of God; and nothing more ſtrongly ſhould engage to this, than the conſideration of a ſinleſs life after death; ſee 2 Pet. iii. 11, 13, 14. The luſts of men, and the will of God, being oppoſed to each other, ſhews, that the nature of man is ſadly corrupted, and is oppoſite to God; and that the will of man is depraved, and that the deſires of it are not to that which is good, but are contrary to the will of God.

Ver. 3. For the time paſt of our life may ſuffice us, &c.] The word our is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions. The Arabic verſion reads, the time of your paſt life; and to the ſame purpoſe the Ethiopic verſion; and which ſeems to be the more agreeable reading, ſince it can hardly be thought that the Apoſtle would put himſelf among the Jews diſperſed among the Gentiles, who had walked with them in their unregeneracy, in all the ſins hereafter mentioned, and beſt agrees with the following verſe: to have wrought the will of the Gentiles; or when ye wrought, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions; when we walked, or were walking in laſciviouſneſs, luſts, exceſs of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries. Theſe converted perſons in the paſt time of their life, before converſion, walked in ſin; which denotes a ſeries and courſe of ſinning, a perſiſting and progreſs in it, with delight and pleaſure, promiſing themſelves ſecurity and impunity: the particular ſins they walked in are reducible to theſe three heads, unchaſtity, intemperance, and idolatry: in laſciviouſneſs, luſts; which belong to the head of uncleanneſs, and take in all kinds of it; as fornication, adultery, inceſt, ſodomy, and all unnatural luſts: exceſs of wine, revellings, banquetings; which refer to intemperance of every ſort, by eating or drinking; as gluttony, drunkenneſs, ſurfeitings, and all luxurious feaſts and entertainments, attended with riotings, revellings, and obſcene ſongs; and which are here mentioned in the Syriac and Arabic verſions, and which lead to laſciviouſneſs, and every unclean luſt: and abominable idolatries; which ſome underſtand of worſhipping of angels; but they ſeem rather to intend the idolatries the Jews were led into by the feaſts of the Gentiles, either at their own houſes, or in the idols temple; by which means they were gradually brought to idolatry, and to all the wickedneſs and abominations committed by them at ſuch times: and it is eaſy to obſerve, that the two former, uncleanneſs and intemperance, often lead men into idolatry; ſee Exod. xxxii. 6. Numb. xxv. 1, 2. Now when they walked in theſe things, they wrought the will of the Gentiles; they did the things which the ſinners of the Gentiles, the worſt of men, that knew not God, took pleaſure in, and what they would have others do; and therefore, ſince the paſt time of their life had been ſpent in ſuch a way, it was ſufficient, and more than ſufficient; ſee Ezek. xliv. 6. for no time is allowable for ſin; and therefore it became them for the future, and in the remaining part of life, to behave in another manner; not to do the will of the Gentiles, but the will of God; to which that grace of God obliged them, that had made a difference between what they were themſelves formerly, and themſelves now, and between themſelves and others.

Ver. 4. Wherein they think it ſtrange, &c.] Here the Apoſtle points out what the ſaints muſt expect from the men of the world, by living a different life; and he chuſes to mention it, to prevent diſcouragements, and that they might not be uneaſy and diſtreſſed when they obſerved it; as that they would wonder at the change in their converſations, and look on it as ſomething unuſual, new, and unheard-of, and treat them as ſtrangers, yea, as enemies, on account of it: that you run not with them into the ſame exceſs of riot; to their luxurious entertainments, their Bacchanalian feaſts, and that profuſion of laſciviouſneſs, luxury, intemperance, and wickedneſs of all ſorts, which, with ſo much eagerneſs of mind, and bodily haſte, they ruſhed into; being amazed that they ſhould not have the ſame taſte for theſe things as before, and as they now had; and wondering how it was poſſible for them to abſtain from them, and what that ſhould be that ſhould give them a different caſt of mind, and turn of action: ſpeaking evil of you; and ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions ſupply you as we do; but in the Greek text 'tis only, ſpeaking evil of, or blaſpheming; God, Chriſt, religion, the Goſpel, and the truths of it, and all good men; hating them becauſe different from them, and becauſe their lives reprove and condemn them; charging them with incivility, unſociableneſs, preciſeneſs, and hypocriſy.

Ver. 5. Who ſhall give account to him, &c.] To God himſelf, as the Syriac verſion reads; of all their blaſphemies, and hard ſpeeches ſpoken by them againſt God, Chriſt, the Goſpel, and good men, and receive their juſt puniſhment. This the Apoſtle ſays, to calm the minds of God's people, and make them to ſit eaſy under all cenſures, reproaches, and calumnies, and not think of avenging themſelves, but commit themſelves to him that will judge righteouſly; even to him, that is ready to judge the quick and the dead; that is, all men, ſuch as will be found alive when he comes, and thoſe that have died before, who will then be raiſed from the dead, to receive their judgment; and by whom is meant the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to whom all judgment is committed; and who is ordained to be the judge of quick and dead, and will judge both at his appearing and kingdom; yea, the day is appointed when this judgment will proceed by him, and he is at the door; ſo that he may be truly ſaid to be ready for it, as he is every way equal to it, and will finiſh it with righteouſneſs.

Ver. 6. For, for this cauſe was the Goſpel preached alſo, &c.] Not for what goes before, becauſe Chriſt was ready to judge quick and dead; and becauſe wicked men muſt give an account to him, and therefore the Goſpel is preached to them alſo, that they may be left without excuſe; but for what follows, and which does not ſo much deſign the reaſon of the preaching of it, as the event conſequential upon it. By the Goſpel is meant the good news of the incarnation, ſufferings, and death of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; and includes all the doctrines of grace, as of pardon, righteouſneſs, and eternal life; and by its being preached is meant, the publiſhing of it openly, freely, and boldly, with faithfulneſs, and conſiſtence: the perſons to whom it was preached, are to them that are dead; not in a figurative ſenſe, dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; tho' this is the caſe of all mankind, and of God's elect, in a ſtate of nature, whether Jews or Gentiles; and the Goſpel is preached to ſuch, as it is ordered to be preached, to all nations, to every creature, and is the means of quickening dead ſinners; and this follows upon it, that ſuch as receive it are judged and condemned by men, and live ſpiritually here, according to the will of God, and an eternal life hereafter; but the word dead is uſed in the ſame ſenſe as in the preceding verſe, where it manifeſtly ſignifies ſuch who had been alive, but were now dead in a natural ſenſe, whom Chriſt would judge, as well as thoſe that will be found alive when he comes; wherefore the Goſpel has been preached alſo to them that are already dead, as well as to thoſe who are now alive. And by theſe are meant, not the dead, whoſe ſouls are in hell, for to them there, the Goſpel never was, nor never will be preached, nor they ſaved, as Origen, and his followers, have vainly thought: nor the deceaſed patriarchs, before the coming of Chriſt, whoſe ſouls, by the Papiſts, are ſaid to be in Limbus, whither Chriſt, they ſay, went upon his death, and preached to them, and delivered them; but theſe never were in any ſuch place, but in peace and reſt; nor did Chriſt, in his human ſoul, deſcend thither, but went to paradiſe: nor the dead in general, before the Apoſtle's writing of this Epiſtle; for tho' the Goſpel had been preached from the beginning, from the fall of Adam, to certain perſons, and at certain periods of time, yet not to all the individuals of mankind, who were then dead, eſpecially in the Gentile world; nor the Old Teſtament ſaints in general, who were now dead, though they had the Goſpel preached to them in types and figures, in promiſes and propheſies; nor the men in the times of Noah, to whom the Goſpel was preached by him, and who, ſome of them, as ſuppoſed, tho' they were judged and puniſhed in their bodies in the view of men, being drowned in the waters of the flood, yet repenting and believing, upon Noah's preaching to them, they live in their ſpirits in eternal life, according to the free mercy and grace of God; but tho' the Goſpel was preached to them, yet they remained diſobedient to it, even all of them, but Noah's family, for any thing that appears; and are ſtiled the world of the ungodly, and are now ſpirits in the priſon of hell, and therefore can't be ſaid to live according to God in the ſpirit: but ſuch are intended, to whom the Goſpel had been preached, and to whom it had been effectual unto ſalvation; who had received it in the love of it, had ſincerely profeſſed it, and had ſuffered for it even death itſelf; ſuch are deſigned who had ſuffered in the fleſh, or were dead in their bodies, ver. 1. who either were dead in the Lord, or eſpecially had ſuffered death for his ſake, as Stephen and others: and this, with what follows, is mentioned with a general view to encourage the ſaints to patient ſuffering for Chriſt; to fortify them againſt the ill opinion and judgment the world have formed of them; and to aſſure them, that Chriſt will judge his people, both quick and dead, and avenge their cauſe, ſince the Goſpel has been preached to one as well as to another, and attended with the ſame power: the effect and conſequence of which is, that they might be judged according to men in the fleſh; meaning, either that ſuch perſons that receive and profeſs the Goſpel, and ſuffer for it, are judged according to the judgment of men that are in the fleſh, in an unregenerate eſtate, that is, carnal men, to be a ſtrange and unaccountable ſort of people, as in ver. 4. to receive ſuch a ſtrange ſett of notions, ſo ſtrenuouſly to contend for them, and ſo conſtantly to abide by them, and to debar themſelves of ſo many pleaſures of life, and expoſe themſelves to ſo much reproach and ſhame, to ſuch dangers, and even to death itſelf; one while they are judged to be by theſe men enthuſiaſts, mad men, and fools; and at other times to be knaves and villains, hypocrites and deceivers; and this is the common effect of the Goſpel, being preached and coming with power to any; ſee 1 Cor. iv. 3. or the ſenſe is, that ſuch perſons, according to men, or in their apprehenſions, are judged of God, or have the judgments of God inflicted on them in their fleſh, in their bodies, for ſome ſins of theirs; and therefore they ſuffer what they do in the fleſh, vengeance purſuing them; being ignorant that when they are judged, as they reckon it, they are only chaſtened by the Lord in a fatherly way, that they might not be eternally condemned with the world, 1 Cor. xi. 32. or elſe to compleat the ſenſe, for all may be taken into it; theſe perſons who were formerly alive, but now dead, and had embraced and profeſſed the Goſpel preached to them, were judged, and condemned, and put to death in the fleſh, according to the will of wicked men, and which was all that they were capable of; but tho' this were their caſe, tho' they were thus judged, cenſured, and condemned, yet live according to God in the Spirit; whilſt they were here on earth, the Goſpel preached to them had ſuch an effect upon them, as to cauſe them to live ſpiritually, to live by faith on Chriſt, to live a life of holineſs from him, and communion with him, and to live according to the will of God, in righteouſneſs and true holineſs; and now, tho' dead in their bodies, they live in their ſpirits or ſouls, an eternal life of comfort, peace, pleaſure, and happineſs with God, according to his eternal purpoſe, unchangeable covenant, promiſe, grace, and love.

Ver. 7. But the end of all things is at hand, &c.] With reſpect to particular perſons, the end of life, and which is the end of all things in this world to a man, is near at hand; which is but as an hand's breadth, paſſes away like a tale that is told, and is but as a vapour which appears for a while, and then vaniſhes away. Or this may be ſaid with regard to the Jews, the end of their church, and civil ſtate was near at hand, of their ſacrifices, temple, city, and nation; or with reſpect to the whole univerſe, to the ſcheme and faſhion of this world, which will ſoon be gone, tho' the ſubſtance will abide; when the heavens ſhall paſs away, and the earth, and all therein, will be burnt up; when there will be an end of all the purpoſes and promiſes of God reſpecting the preſent ſtate of things concerning his church and people, and of the judgments of God upon his enemies here; when the man of ſin will be deſtroyed, and the wickedneſs of the wicked will be come to an end, and the ſorrows, afflictions, and perſecutions of the ſaints will be no more; and when will be an end put to the preſent diſpenſation of things; there will be an end of the miniſtry of the word, and of the adminiſtration of ordinances; time will be no more, and the final ſtate of both good and bad men will take place: this may be ſaid to be at hand in the Apoſtles time, tho' ſo long ago, becauſe that was the laſt time, and the laſt diſpenſation of things; and whereas they knew not the exact time when it would be, they frequently ſpoke of it as near, in order to ſtir up the ſaints to the more diligent diſcharge of duty, and fervent exerciſe of grace, as here: be ye therefore ſober; or temperate, as the Arabic verſion renders it; and ſo is oppoſed to intemperance in eating and drinking, which is an abuſe of the creatures of God, and unfits a man for the duties of religion; when ſatan eaſily gets an advantage, and is often the cauſe of other ſins, and is frequently diſſuaded from, for the ſame reaſon as here; ſee 1 Cor. vii. 31. Luke xxi. 34, 35. or chaſte, as the Syriac verſion; and ſo is oppoſed to immodeſty in words, actions, or apparel, in which ſenſe ſobriety is uſed in 1 Tim. ii. 9. or prudent, as the Vulgate Latin verſion; and is oppoſed to all ſelf-conceit and vanity of mind, and imprudence in conduct and converſation; ſee Rom. xii. 3. and to all immoderate care of the world, which has the ſame effect upon the ſoul, as ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs on the body: it hinders the ſoul in the ſervice of God, chokes the word, and makes it unprofitable, and runs men into many ſins, ſnares, and temptations; and the conſideration of the end of all things being at hand, ſhould draw off from it. It may alſo ſignify ſoundneſs of mind and judgment, in the doctrines of faith, which are words of truth and ſoberneſs; and the rather this may be exhorted to, ſince towards the cloſe of time there will be little of the doctrine of faith in the earth, and men will not be able to endure ſound doctrine: it follows, and watch unto prayer; watch all opportunities of praying, or of attendance on that ordinance, both in private and in public; watch and obſerve both your preſent wants, and preſent mercies, that ye may know what to pray for, and what to return thanks for; and that you have a due reverence of the divine majeſty, in whoſe preſence you are entring. The Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions render it, watch, or be awake in prayers; be careful that you lift up your hearts with your hands to God; that you pray for ſuch things as are agreeable to the revealed will of God; that you pray in faith, and lift up holy hands without wrath and doubting; and watch for the Spirit of God to enlarge your hearts in prayer, and to aſſiſt you both as to the matter and manner of praying. And perſons ſhould alſo watch after prayer for a return of it; and that they do not depend upon the duty performed; and that they are not negligent to return thanks for the mercy prayed for, when received. Very rightly does the Apoſtle join the above exhortation with this, ſince a man that is not ſober, is neither fit to watch, nor pray; and a drunken man, according to the Jewiſh canons, might not pray[l]: "one that is a drinker, or in " drink, let him not pray, or if he prays, his " prayer is deprecations; a drunken man, let him " not pray, and if he prays, his prayer is blaſ" phemies." Or as it is elſewhere[m] expreſſed, " let not a drunken man pray, becauſe he has no " intention; and if he prays, his prayer is an " abomination, therefore let him return and pray " when he is clear of his drunkenneſs: let no one " in drink pray, and if he prays, his prayer is " prayer, (unleſs the word, תפלה, ſhould rather " be rendered folly, as it may); who is a drunken " man? he that can't ſpeak before a king; a " man in drink can ſpeak before a king, and not " be confounded; even tho' he drinks but a fourth " part, or a quarter of wine, let him not pray " until his wine is departed from him."

Ver. 8. And above all things have fervent charity among yourſelves, &c.] Not but that charity, or love, is to be exerciſed towards all men, even towards enemies, but more eſpecially towards the ſaints, and that under ſuch a conſideration in which it cannot be exerciſed towards others; namely, as their brethren in Chriſt, and as belonging to him, as the children of God, as redeemed by Chriſt, and ſanctified by the Spirit; and theſe not only ſuch as are of the ſame nation, and belong to the ſame particular church and community, or of the ſame denomination, but all the ſaints every where, whether Jews or Gentiles, or of whatſoever name, and in whatſoever ſtate and condition: and this love ought to be mutual and reciprocal, and to be warm and fervent, and not lukewarm and indifferent, as it too often is; and ſhould be conſtant, continued, and perpetual, as the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions here read: and this the Apoſtle exhorts to above all things elſe; ſince outward ſobriety, and watchings, and prayer, and all other duties, are nothing without this; this is the ſum and ſubſtance of the law, and the fulfilling of it; and without this a mere knowledge of the Goſpel, and a profeſſion of it, are in vain, and therefore in the firſt place to be attended to. And eſpecially for the following reaſon, for charity ſhall cover the multitude of ſins; referring to Prov. x. 12. not a man's own ſins, but the ſins of others; and not from the ſight of God, for from that only the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt cover ſins, even all the ſins, the whole multitude of the ſins of God's elect; but from the ſight of men, both of thoſe againſt whom they are committed, and others; ſince charity, or true love, thinks no ill, but puts the beſt conſtructions upon the words and actions of fellow-chriſtians, and does not take them up, and improve and exaggerate them, but lets them lie buried in oblivion: it takes no notice of injuries, offences, and affronts, but over-looks them, bears with them, and forgives them, ſo that they are never raked up, and ſeen any more; which prevents much ſcandal, ſtrife, and trouble. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions read, covereth, as in Prov. x. 12.

Ver. 9. Uſe hoſpitality, &c.] Or be lovers of ſtrangers, as the phraſe may be rendered, and as it is in the Syriac verſion; that is, ſuch as are of a diſtant country, or come from afar, and are unknown by face, eſpecially good men, that are obliged to remove from their native country for the ſake of religion, or by one providence or another; and theſe are to be loved: and love is to be ſhewn them, both negatively, by not vexing them, and making them uneaſy in body or mind; by not oppreſſing them by violence and injuſtice, and making any exorbitant demands upon them; or by not perverting judgment with reſpect to them; and poſitively, by directing, counſelling, and adviſing them, and if need be, by giving them food, and raiment, and lodging: and it is what men have been led to by the very light of nature, as in the inſtances, of Jethro the Midianite, towards Moſes, and the inhabitants of Melita with Publius, the chief man of the iſland, towards the Apoſtle Paul, and his company; and is what God enjoined the Iſraelites by divers laws, ſince they had been ſtrangers in the land of Egypt; and various are the exhortations to it in the New Teſtament; and ſome, by the practice of it, have entertained angels unawares, as Abraham and Lot; and even Chriſt himſelf, as the two diſciples travelling to Emmaus; and is what is highly regarded and commended by Chriſt, and the contrary is reſented by him; and therefore it ought to be uſed and practiſed frequently; ſaints ſhould inure themſelves to it, be given to it, purſue and follow hard after it; ſee the notes on Rom. xii. 13. Heb. xiii. 2. The Apoſtle adds here, one to another; which clauſe is left out in the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions; the reaſon of which may be, becauſe the authors of theſe verſions might think this not ſo conſiſtent with the duty exhorted to, ſince the objects of it are ſtrangers; but it ſhould be obſerved, that ſo were theſe perſons the Apoſtle writes to; ſee ch. i. 1. they were ſcattered about, and lived in different countries, and were ſtrangers to one another, and therefore the clauſe is pertinent enough; and the ſenſe is, that as they were in foreign countries, and at a diſtance one from another, whenever by any providence they were brought where each other were, that they would be hoſpitable to one another: and that without grudging; food, raiment, and lodging, or what they want, whether direction or advice, thinking it no trouble to give them either; or without murmurings, as it may be rendered, as if they were burdenſome, and they were too chargeable to them, and their ſtay too long; and without complaints of them, finding fault, and picking quarrels with them, and laying charges againſt them, in order to get rid of them. This is one branch of charity before recommended.

Ver. 10. As every man hath received the gift, &c.] That is, from God, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions add. This is a general rule laid down by the Apoſtle, according to which, diſtribution of every kind, whether in things temporal or ſpiritual, is to be made, even according to the nature, quality, and quantity of the gift received: the greateſt gift God beſtows on men, next to himſelf, Son, and Spirit, and received by them in this life, is ſpecial grace; which God gives of his ſovereign will and pleaſure, liberally, abundantly, without the deſerts of men, or conditions to be performed by them; of this kind are faith, repentance, hope, and love: the next to this is the miniſterial gift, or what qualifies men for the work of the miniſtry; which is not any thing in nature, or what is acquired by art and induſtry, but is a gift of grace, which is beſtowed on ſome in a higher, on others in a lower degree: and beſides theſe, there are the gifts of nature and providence, as human wiſdom, and the knowledge of things natural and civil, riches and wealth, and the various good things of life; for there is nothing a man has in nature, and in grace, but what is a gift to him, and what he has received: and according to the meaſure of the gift received, be it what it will, the exhortation is, even ſo miniſter the ſame one to another; or to, and among yourſelves; to your neighbours or companions, as the Syriac verſion renders it; if the gift be ſpecial grace, tho' that itſelf cannot be imparted from one to another, yet the knowledge of it may; and it becomes ſuch who have an experience of the grace of God upon their hearts, to make it known, both to particular friends in private converſation, and to the church of God in publick, for the uſe and edification of others, and the glory of God's grace: if the gift be a miniſterial one, whether it be greater or leſs, for it is not in all alike; it is not to be wrapped up in a napkin, and hid in the earth, or to lie neglected, but to be ſtirred up, and uſed for the benefit of the ſouls of men: and if it is a temporal one, the good things of this life, according to the meaſure of them, that a man has, he is to miniſter to the ſupply of the poor; and as God has proſpered him, he is to diſtribute to the neceſſities of others; as men freely receive, be it what it will, they ſhould freely miniſter it, according to the nature and meaſure of it: as good ſtewards of the manifold grace of God; for they are but ſtewards of whatſoever gifts they have; and therefore, if they would approve themſelves good ſtewards, they ſhould miniſter the ſame in proportion to their reception of them. Manifold and various are the graces of the Spirit of God, and the rich experiences communicated to men, which are not only for themſelves, but for the good of others alſo: gifts for publick uſefulneſs are different one from another; one man has one gift, and another has another; or the ſame gift is not alike in all, in ſome greater, and in others leſs; and all are but ſtewards; they are accountable for them, and the uſe of them, to their great Lord and maſter: and various are the doctrines of the grace of God; of the grace of the Father, in election, in the everlaſting covenant, in the miſſion of his Son, in the free juſtification of ſinners by his righteouſneſs, in the free and full pardon of all their ſins, in the adoption of any into his family, and in the gift of eternal life; and of the Son of God, in engaging as the ſurety of his people from everlaſting, in aſſuming their nature in time, in obeying, ſuffering, and dying in their room and ſtead; and of the Spirit of God in regeneration and ſanctification; and of all theſe myſteries of grace the miniſters of the Goſpel are ſtewards; and it is required of them that they be faithful. Temporal good things are given to men, not for their own uſe only, but for others; and they are but ſtewards of them; the original proprietor is God, and to him they muſt give an account of their ſtewardſhip, and how they have uſed and diſpoſed of the manifold gifts which God, of his goodneſs, has put into their hands; ſo that this laſt clauſe contains a reaſon or argument enforcing the above rule.

Ver. 11. If any man ſpeak, let him ſpeak as the oracles of God, &c.] This is an application of the above general rule to a particular caſe, the public miniſtry of the word, for that is here meant: if any man ſpeak; not in any manner, or on any ſubject; not in a private way, or about things natural and civil; but in public, and concerning divine things: let him ſpeak; this is rightly ſupplied in our tranſlation; and in which it is ſupported and confirmed by the Syriac and Arabic verſions, who both ſupply the ſame way: as the oracles of God; by which are meant the writings of the Old Teſtament, the ſacred ſcriptures; ſee Rom. iii. 2. ſo called, becauſe they come from God, are breathed and ſpoken by him, and contain his mind and will, and are authoritative and infallible; and according to theſe he is to ſpeak, who ſpeaks in public on divine ſubjects, both as to the matter and manner of his ſpeech: the matter of it muſt be agreeable to the divinely inſpired word of God, muſt be fetched out of it, and confirmed by it; and he is to ſpeak every thing that is in it, and keep back nothing, but declare the whole counſel of God, and only what is in it, without mixing his own chaff, or the doctrines of men with it; and it ſhould be ſpoken in a manner agreeable to it, not as the word of man, but as the word of God; and not in words which man's wiſdom teacheth, but in the words of the Holy Ghoſt; and with all boldneſs, for ſo the Goſpel ought to be ſpoken; and with all certainty and aſſurance, conſtantly affirming the things of it, for nothing is more ſure than they are; and with all openneſs, plainneſs, and freedom, making truth manifeſt, laying it plain and open before men, as it ought to be; and that with all reverence and godly fear, which becomes both ſpeaker and hearer. The Apoſtle next proceeds to mention another caſe, to which the above rule is applicable; if any man miniſter, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth; that is, if any man miniſter in temporal things to the ſupply of the poor; if a private man, and in a private way, let him do it in proportion to his ability, as God has proſpered him in the world; or if an officer of the church, a deacon, and which ſeems to be the ſenſe, for ſo the word uſed ſignifies; διακονει, if any man perform the office, or act the part of a deacon, let him do it according to what God, in his providence, has put into his hands; that is, of the churches ſtock, which he ſhould miniſter with ſimplicity and chearfulneſs. A like diviſion of church offices into public preaching of the word, and miniſtring to the wants of the poor, is here made, as in Rom. xii. 6, 7, 8. The end of all this is, that God in all things may be glorified through Jeſus Chriſt; or by all means, as the Arabic verſion renders it; by all ways and methods proper; for the glory of God ſhould be the principal view in every action of life: hence the Syriac verſion adds to the phraſe, in all things, for the ſake of explanation, which ye do; by ſobriety, by prayer, by watching unto it; by exerciſing fervent charity, and uſing hoſpitality one to another; by miniſtring the gift, as it is received; by the public miniſtration of the word; and by ſupplying the wants of the poor, whether in a perſonal, or in a church way: or in all gifts, whether private or publick, temporal or ſpiritual; ſince they all come from God, and men are accountable to him for them; and therefore ſhould be uſed ſo as to glorify him by them, and give him the glory of them; and not glory in them, as if not received from him: or in all the members of the church, whether officers, as paſtors and deacons, or private chriſtians; all ſhould ſo behave in their reſpective ſtations, as God may have glory: thro' Jeſus Chriſt; thro' whom all grace is communicated, by whom all gifts are beſtowed, and by virtue of grace and ſtrength received from him, every good work is performed to the glory of God: to whom be praiſe, and dominion, for ever and ever; meaning either to God the Father, from whom every good gift comes; who is the God of all all grace, of whom, and through whom, and to whom, are all things; and therefore the praiſe and glory of all belongs to him; and who has the dominion over all creatures and things, and has the diſpoſal of all in nature, providence, and grace: or to Jeſus Chriſt, out of whoſe fulneſs manifold grace, grace for grace is received; and who having aſcended on high, has received gifts for men, and gives them to them, and ſo is worthy of all praiſe; and who, as God, has the kingdom of nature and providence, equally with the Father, and as mediator, the kingdom of grace, the goverment of the church; and whoſe dominion will be from ſea to ſea, and from the rivers to the ends of the earth; and of whoſe kingdom there will be no end. Amen; ſo let it be, ſo ſhall it be.

Ver. 12. Beloved, think it not ſtrange concerning the fiery trial, &c.] By which may be meant either the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which was at hand, and of which the Apoſtle may be thought to give the Jews, he writes to, notice of before hand; that they might be prepared for it, and not be overwhelmed with conſternation and amazement, when they ſhould hear of it; who, tho' in other countries, muſt be affected with it, and would be a trying diſpenſation to them: or elſe the afflictions and perſecutions which daily come upon them, for the ſake of Chriſt, and his Goſpel; ſignified by fire or burning, becauſe grievous to the fleſh, and gave great uneaſineſs, diſtreſs, and pain to it; and becauſe of the fury of men, and the violence and fierceneſs of their rage, expreſſed thereby; as alſo becauſe the people of God under them, are ſometimes ready to conceive, that the wrath of God is poured out, like fire, upon them. But the Apoſtle would not have theſe ſaints entertain any ſuch thoughts, and therefore he calls them beloved; that is, of God, as they were notwithſtanding all the fiery trials and afflictions, which were brought upon them; or he means, that they were beloved by him, and dear unto him, and other ſaints, tho' they were ill treated and reproached by the world: the Syriac and Arabic verſions read, my beloved; and the Ethiopic verſion, our brethren: and the Apoſtle exhorts them not to look upon their afflictions, that either did, or ſhould attend them, as ſtrange and uncommon things; ſince afflictions, of whatſoever kind, are not things of chance, and do not riſe up out of the duſt, but are by the appointment, and according to the will of God; and are alſo the common lot of the people of God in all ages, from the beginning of the world, the ſame afflictions are accompliſhed in others; yea, Chriſt himſelf endured the ſame hatred, reproach, and contradiction of ſinners, againſt himſelf; and they are what he has given his people reaſon to expect, having told them of them before hand, that they might not be offended at them; and as they lay in his way to glory, it need not ſeem ſtrange, that the ſaints alſo ſhould, thro' many tribulations, enter the kingdom. Moreover, this fiery diſpenſation, be it what it will, was not to deſtroy them, but to try them, and that for their good, profit, and advantage; juſt as gold and ſilver are tried in the fire, and loſe their droſs, and become purer and brighter: which is to try you; afflictions try the graces of the ſaints; as their faith in Chriſt, which becomes thereby much more precious than of Gold, that periſheth; and their love to him, by which it appears, that no tribulation can ſeparate them from it, nor many waters and floods of afflictions drown it; and their hope of eternal life, which grows more lively and ſtrong, and is as an anchor, ſure and ſtedfaſt, amidſt the greateſt ſtorms. Theſe try a man's profeſſion of religion, whether it is took up on good principles, and without ſiniſter views; ſince, if it is not, when perſecution, becauſe of the word, comes, he is offended and gone; and likewiſe, what a man's principles are, whether worth ſuffering for or no; and whether they will bear him up, and he abide by them, when called to ſuffer for them; and therefore, ſince ſuch ends are anſwered by fiery trials, they ſhould not be looked upon as ſtrange and unuſual things: as tho' ſome ſtrange thing happened unto you; which was never known and heard of before; and as if uſeleſs, and of no ſervice, and as foreign to the characters, caſes, and circumſtances of the ſaints in this world. The Apoſtle in this verſe returns to his former argument, to animate and encourage the ſaints in ſuffering afflictions patiently for righteouſneſs ſake.

Ver. 13. But rejoice, inaſmuch as ye are partakers of Chriſt's ſufferings, &c.] Not of his perſonal ſufferings; though they were partakers of the benefits and bleſſings which come through them, and reſult from them, ſuch as juſtification, peace, and pardon, and which are matter and ground of rejoicing; but of the ſufferings of his body, the church, which is myſtically himſelf; and are called his, becauſe of the union between him and his people, and the ſympathy he bears to them, and becauſe they are endured for the ſake of him, and his Goſpel, and conform the ſaints, and make them like unto him; and therefore ſuffering ſaints ſhould rejoice in this, that their ſufferings are accounted by Chriſt as his own, who in all their afflictions is afflicted; and that they are honoured to ſuffer for his name's ſake, and are hereby made like unto him: that when his glory ſhall be revealed; the glory of his divine nature, as the only-begotten Son of God, in which he'll come and appear at the laſt day; and which, tho' incommunicable, will be more manifeſt to all men, and eſpecially to the ſaints, who will know more of him, as the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; and when the glory of his office, as mediator, will be more conſpicuous, and ſhall be beheld by all that the Father has given to him; and alſo the glory of his human nature, which is now crowned with glory and honour at the right hand of God; and likewiſe the glory which he has in his hands for his people, even eternal glory and happineſs: this is now, in a great meaſure, unſeen, but it will then be revealed, both to the ſaints, and in them; they'll appear with Chriſt in glory, and have a glory both upon their ſouls and bodies. As they ſuffer with him, and for his ſake, they'll be glorified with him, when he ſhall come in his own glory, and in his Father's glory, and in the glory of his holy angels: the conſideration of which, as it muſt greatly encourage to ſuffer for his ſake, ſo muſt be matter of great joy, as follows: ye may be glad alſo with exceeding joy; a joy unſpeakable, and full of glory, being made partakers of the glory of Chriſt, either in beholding, or in poſſeſſing it.

Ver. 14. If ye be reproached for the name of Chriſt, &c.] For being called by his name; for bearing the name of chriſtians; for believing in him, and profeſſing him; and for the ſake of his Goſpel, which is ſometimes called his name, Acts ix. 15. not that the Apoſtle makes any doubt of this, for nothing is more certain, than that the ſaints ſhall be reproached, and all manner of evil ſpoken of them falſly for Chriſt's name ſake; but he ſuppoſes it, and takes it for granted, that they are, and will be reproached, and yet pronounces them bleſſed perſons: happy are ye; ſome ſupply it, ſhall ye be, as the Vulgate Latin verſion; that is, in the other world, becauſe the kingdom of heaven, the crown of life and glory, belongs to ſuch perſons; they'll be happy at death, in judgment, and to all eternity: others, with our tranſlators, ſupply, are ye, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions; for ſuch are happy now in themſelves, being both comfortable in their frames, and honourable in their perſons and characters, however uncomfortable, miſerable, and diſhonourable they may appear to the men of the world: for the Spirit of glory, and of God, reſteth upon you; alluding to Iſ. xi. 2. that is, the glorious Spirit of God, as the Syriac verſion renders it; who is glorious in himſelf, in the perfections of his nature, being poſſeſſed of the ſame glorious divine eſſence with the Father and Son; and in his works both of nature, being equally concerned with the other perſons in the Godhead, in the works of creation and providence, and alſo of grace, eſpecially the latter; and in all his gifts and graces with which he adorns the ſaints, and makes them glorious: and his reſting on them denotes his inhabitation in them, and his abiding with them, and remaining in them; and which appears by the comfort they enjoy in their ſouls amidſt all the reproaches and revilings of men, and by the ſtrength which they have to bear up under, and endure ſhame and perſecution for the ſake of Chriſt; and which caſts an honour upon them, and makes them both glorious and chearful. The Jews have a ſaying [a], that the Holy Ghoſt does not dwell on any, but on him that has a chearful heart: on their part he is evil ſpoken of, but on your part he is glorified; on the part of the revilers, the perſon, office, work, and grace, the operations and influences of the Spirit are blaſphemed and ridiculed; the power of the Spirit, with which the ſaints ſpeak, the experiences of grace they expreſs, the comforts of the Spirit they declare that they enjoy under ſuffering circumſtances, as well as their courage, patience, and chearfulneſs, he gives them, are generally bantered by perſecutors; and indeed, all the reproaches they caſt upon the people of God, fall upon the Spirit of God, by whom they are animated and influenced: but on the part of the ſufferers, he is glorified; inaſmuch as they continue to bear a teſtimony to his grace, depend upon his ſtrength, and aſcribe all their comfort, and gracious experience unto him. This clauſe is wanting in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, but is in all Beza's Greek copies, excepting one; and is alſo in the Arabic verſion.

Ver. 15. But let none of you ſuffer as a murderer, &c.] The puniſhment for murder was death by the law of God, Gen. ix. 6. or as a thief; whoſe fine or mulct, according to the Jewiſh law, was a fivefold or fourfold reſtitution, according to the nature of the thing that was ſtolen, Exod. xxii. 1. or as an evil doer; a breaker of any of the laws of God or men, which are of a moral nature, and for the good of civil ſociety: or as a buſy-body in other mens matters; or as a biſhop in another man's dioceſs; that concerns himſelf in things he has nothing to do with, and neglects his own affairs, and lives in idleneſs, and upon the ſpoil of others; or takes upon him to manage, direct, order, and command other mens ſervants, or perſons that don't belong to him, to do his buſineſs, or whatſoever he pleaſes. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, a deſirer of others goods; and the Ethiopic verſion, a covetous deſirer of others things; and ſo is led on by an inſatiable thirſt for them, to obtain them in an evil way, either by ſecret fraud, or open violence and oppreſſion. To ſuffer in any ſuch caſes is ſcandalous and diſhonourable, and unbecoming the character of a chriſtian. This laſt clauſe is left out in the Syriac verſion.

Ver. 16. Yet if any man ſuffer as a chriſtian, &c.] Becauſe he is one, and profeſſes himſelf to be one. This name was firſt given to the diſciples at Antioch, either by themſelves, or by the Gentiles; however, it being agreeable to them, was retained; it is only mentioned here, and in Acts xi. 26. and xxvi. 28. let him not be aſhamed; neither of Chriſt, and his Goſpel, for which he ſuffers, nor of the name he bears, nor of the puniſhment he endures, however ignominious and ſhameful it may be among men; but let him, as his Lord and maſter did, endure the croſs, and deſpiſe the ſhame, Heb. xii. 2. but let him glorify God on this behalf; that he beſtows this gift upon him to ſuffer for Chriſt, as well as to believe in him; and that he does him ſo much honour to call him to ſuch ſervice, and to ſtrengthen him in it, ſo as to take it joyfully, and endure it patiently and chearfully. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and alſo the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, inſtead of, in this behalf, read, in this name; that is, of a chriſtian.

[a] T. Hieroſ. Succa, fol. 55. 1.

Ver. 17. For the time is come that judgment muſt begin at the houſe of God, &c.] By the houſe of God is either meant the temple at Jeruſalem, which is often ſo called, becauſe it was built for God, and where were the ſymbol of his preſence, and his worſhip; and now the time was come, or at hand, that God would begin at his ſanctuary, and leave this houſe deſolate, and not one ſtone ſhould be left upon another, as Chriſt had foretold: or elſe the church of God, which is frequently called the houſe of God, becauſe it is of his building, where he dwells, and grants his gracious preſence, and which he beautifies, fills, repairs, and defends; and ſo may deſign believers in Chriſt, thoſe that are of the houſhold and family of God: and by judgment is meant, not puniſhment for ſin, ſtrictly ſpeaking, becauſe Chriſt has endured this in the room and ſtead of his church and people, and therefore in juſtice can't be inflicted on them; but afflictions and perſecutions, and which are fatherly chaſtiſements, and different from God's judgment on the world, and condemnation with it; ſee 1 Cor. xi. 32. and theſe may be ſaid to begin with them, becauſe it is only in this life the ſaints have their afflictions; and which are in love to them, and therefore are betimes brought upon them to try them, and purge them, and make them partakers of his holineſs: beſides, wicked men are often made uſe of as inſtruments, by which God chaſtizes his people; upon which account they are reſerved till laſt, to be the objects of his vengeance, when they have filled up the meaſure of their ſins; and then what is begun in love at the houſe of God, will end in wrath and ſevere puniſhment on them: and whereas it is ſaid, the time is come, or at hand, it may be obſerved, that as God has his ſet time to favour his Zion, ſo likewiſe to chaſtize her; all his peoples times are in his hand, as of comfort, ſo of temptation, affliction, and perſecution. The firſt times of chriſtianity, or of the preaching of the Goſpel, were times of trouble and diſtreſs; for as it was neceſſary the Goſpel ſhould be confirmed by ſigns and wonders, ſo that it ſhould be tried and proved by the ſufferings of the ſaints for it: and the phraſe alſo ſuggeſts, that theſe ſufferings and afflictions were but for a time, and even as it were for a moment, for a little while; and is a reaſon why the ſaints ſhould glorify God, as theſe words imply, being introduced with the cauſal particle, for; that they have their ſufferings now, and not with the wicked in the world to come, which will have no end: and if it firſt begin at us; either us Jews, for Peter, and thoſe he writes to were ſuch; or us chriſtians, who believe in Chriſt, have embraced his Goſpel, and profeſs his name: what ſhall the end be of them that obey not the Goſpel of God? of which God is the author, and which contains things relating to him; as, the grace of God, the righteouſneſs of God, peace with him, pardon from him, juſtification before him, and acceptance with him; and which he commits to men, and qualifies them for preaching it, and ſucceeds the miniſtry of it; and it being his Goſpel, as it makes it the more valuable in itſelf, ſo it is to be had in the greateſt reverence and eſteem; and the greater is the ſin of ſuch who deſpiſe, and reject it, as did the unbelieving Jews, who ſeem chiefly deſigned here; it was firſt preached to them, but they diſbelieved the doctrines of it, and ſubmitted not to its ordinances, and rejected Chriſt, the Saviour, the ſum and ſubſtance of it; and put it away from them, judging themſelves unworthy of everlaſting life: and what ſhall the end of ſuch be? in this world wrath came upon them to the uttermoſt, ruin upon their nation, city, and temple; and in the world to come, everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, and eternal vengeance in flames of fire. The Jews have various phraſes, and frequent expreſſions in their writings, which reſemble theſe, and ſerve to illuſtrate them. When Noah told the old world of the flood, and called upon them to repent, they are repreſented as ſaying to him, "where does puniſhment begin? מן ביתיה, at the "houſe of that man does it begin? when Methuſelah "died, they ſaid unto him, does not puniſhment "begin at the houſe of that man?" and elſewhere[o], ſays R. Jonathan, "puniſhment does not come "into the world, but in the time that the wicked "are in the world; and it does not begin (i. e. at "them) אלא מן הצדיקים תחלה, but it begins at "the righteous;" and again[p], "when God exe- "cutes judgment on the righteous, he is praiſed; "for if he executes this on them, how much more "on the ungodly?" ſee Iſ. x. 11, 12. Jer. xxv. 29. and xlix. 12. Ezek. xix. 6.

Ver. 18. And if the righteous ſcarcely be ſaved, &c.] Reference is had to Prov. xi. 31. where in the Septuagint verſion are the ſame words as here: the righteous are ſuch, not who are ſo in their own opinion, or merely in the eſteem of others, nor on account of their civility, morality, and external righteouſneſs before men, or by the deeds of the law; but who are made righteous by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to them: and ſuch are ſcarcely ſaved; not as if they were but in part ſaved, for they are compleatly ſaved; Chriſt has wrought out and finiſhed a compleat ſalvation for them; and they are ſaved from all enemies, and every thing that might hurt them; from ſin, ſatan, the law, the world, hell, and death; and they are compleatly juſtified, and have all their ſins pardoned, and ſhall be perfectly ſaved: nor as if their ſalvation was doubtful; for tho' they are ſcarcely, yet certainly ſaved; for they are choſen to ſalvation, and Chriſt has obtained it for them, and they have the application of it already made to them by the bleſſed Spirit; and being juſtified, or made righteous perſons, nothing is more certain than that they ſhall be glorified: but they are ſaid to be ſcarcely ſaved, becauſe of the difficulty of it, both with reſpect to Chriſt, who met with difficulties in working out their ſalvation; by reaſon of the ſtrictneſs of divine juſtice, and the demands of the righteous law, which would make no abatement; the ſins of his people he had to bear, and make atonement for; the many enemies he had to grapple with, and the accurſed death of the croſs, he had to undergo; tho' they were ſuch he was able to ſurmount, and did: and eſpecially with reſpect to the ſaints themſelves; for tho' their ſalvation is certain and compleat, being finiſhed by Chriſt, yet their enjoyment of it is attended with many difficulties; by reaſon of the corruptions of nature, a law in their members, warring againſt the law of their minds; the frequent temptations of ſatan, who ſeeks to devour them, and their wreſtlings with principalities, and powers, which are above their match; and alſo by reaſon of various afflictions and perſe-perſecutions, and many tribulations, which make their way to eternal life a ſtrait way, and through which they muſt enter into the kingdom of heaven: and if this be their caſe, as it is, where ſhall the ungodly and the ſinner appear? the prophane ſinner, the Chriſtleſs, impenitent, unbelieving and unregenerate man; otherwiſe, all men are ſinners in themſelves; but here it means, ſuch as are deſtitute of the ſanctifying grace of the Spirit, and the juſtifying righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and that live and die in their ſins: where ſhall ſuch appear? not in the congregation of the righteous; nor at the right hand of Chriſt; nor in heaven, into which no defiled ſinner ſhall enter; nor even on earth, among and under the rocks and mountains, which will not be able to hide them from the face of the judge, and his wrath, when he ſhall come; but at Chriſt's left hand, and in hell, and among the devils and damned there.

Ver. 19. Wherefore let them that ſuffer according to the will of God, &c.] This is the concluſion made from the foregoing premiſes; that ſeeing the ſtate and condition of the ſaints in this world, at worſt, and which is but for a time, is infinitely preferable to the dreadful ſtate and condition of diſobedient perſons, ungodly men, and ſinners, and which will endure to all eternity; they ſhould not think ſtrange of their ſufferings, or complain of them, but patiently endure them; and eſpecially when they conſider that theſe are not the effects of chance, or merely owing to the malice and wickedneſs of men, or to any ſecond cauſe only; but they are the will of God, are by his appointment, under his direction, and by his order, and for their good, and his own glory: and therefore it becomes them to commit the keeping of their ſouls to him, in well doing, as unto a faithful creator; and which is not only their duty, but their privilege: and the ſenſe is, that when they are called to ſuffer for Chriſt, they ſhould commit their cauſe to God, who, as he is the creator, is the governor of the univerſe, and will judge righteouſly; and when they are even called to lay down their lives for his ſake, they ſhall not loſe them; tho' their bodies are killed, they may and ſhould commit their ſouls, when departing from their bodies, into the hands of God; as Stephen, the firſt martyr, committed his into the hands of Chriſt, in imitation of him; where he that made them, as he is able to keep them, will faithfully preſerve them in happineſs and glory, till the reſurrection morn, when their bodies ſhall be raiſed and re-united to them: and this is to be performed, in well doing; for which they ſuffer, and in which they ſhould continue to the laſt; not rendring evil for evil, but bleſſing; and in imitation of Chriſt, and his ſervant Stephen, pray for their worſt enemies, and wiſh them all the good, and do them all the acts of kindneſs that lie in their power.

CHAP. V.

IN this chapter, the Apoſtle firſt exhorts paſtors and members of churches, to their reſpective duties, as ſuch; and then to thoſe which were common to them all, as chriſtians; and cloſes the epiſtle with prayers for them, ſalutations of them, and with his apoſtolic benediction. He begins with the paſtors, or elders, and deſcribes himſelf as a fellow-elder, an eye-witneſs of Chriſt's ſufferings, and a partaker of his glory, ver. 1. and theſe he exhorts to feed the flock of God, where they were; to take the charge and overſight of them, freely, readily, and willingly, and not through force or covetouſneſs; and not to exerciſe a tyrannical dominion over them, but to be examples to them, ver. 2, 3. and the argument made uſe of to encourage them to all this is, that at the appearance of Chriſt, the chief ſhepherd, they ſhould receive a never-fading crown of glory, ver. 4. and next, the members of the churches are exhorted to ſubmit to the rule and government of their paſtors, being according to the word of God; and to be ſubject to one another; and particularly to put on humility, as a garment very ornamental to them; and the rather, ſince God oppoſes himſelf to men that are proud, but gives more grace to the humble, ver. 5. and eſpecially he exhorts them to be humble under the hand of God, ſince that is a mighty one, and this is the way to be exalted in due time; and alſo to caſt their care upon him, ſeeing he cared for them, ver. 6, 7. and then the Apoſtle proceeds to the common duties of chriſtians, and to exhort them to ſobriety and watchfulneſs, ſince ſatan their adverſary was a cruel and indefatigable one, and ever ſeeking the ruin of men; and to reſiſt him in the ſtedfaſt exerciſe of faith, and patiently bear all afflictions, ſeeing the ſame were accompliſhed in their brethren, in the world, ver. 8, 9. and then he puts up ſome petitions for them, that they might be perfected, ſtabliſhed, ſtrengthened, and ſettled, ver. 10. and aſcribes glory and dominion for ever to the God of grace, to whom he prays, ver. 11. after which, he names the perſon by whom he ſends this epiſtle, giving a ſummary of it; that it was an exhortation and a teſtimony to the true doctrine of grace wherein they ſtood, ver. 12. and next follow the ſalutations of the church at Babylon, and of his ſon Marcus, to them, ver. 13. and laſtly, he deſires they would ſalute one another with a kiſs of love, and gives them his benedictory wiſh, ver. 14.

Ver. 1. The elders which are among you I exhort, &c.] The Apoſtle returns to particular exhortations, after having finiſhed his general ones, and which chiefly concern patient ſuffering for Chriſt; and having particularly exhorted ſubjects to behave aright to civil magiſtrates, ſervants to their maſters, and huſbands and wives mutually to each other, here proceeds to exhort elders to the diſcharge of their office and duty; by whom are meant, not the elder in age, or the more ancient brethren in the churches, tho' they are diſtinguiſhed from the younger, in ver. 5. but men in office, whoſe buſineſs it was to feed the flock, as in ver. 2. and tho' theſe might be generally the elder men, and whoſe office required, at leaſt, ſenile gravity and prudence, yet they were not always ſo; ſometimes young men, as Timothy, and others, were choſen into this office, which is the ſame with that of paſtors, biſhops, or overſeers; for theſe are ſynonimous names, and belong to perſons in the ſame office: and theſe are ſaid to be among them, being members of the churches, and called out from among them to the paſtoral office, and who were ſet over them in the Lord, and had their reſidence in the midſt of them; for where ſhould elders or paſtors be, but with, and among their flocks? they were fixed among them; and in this an elder differs fers from an Apoſtle; an elder was tied down to a particular church, whereas an Apoſtle was at large, and had authority in all the churches; and theſe the Apoſtle Peter does not command in an authoritative way, tho' he might lawfully have uſed his apoſtolic power; but he choſe rather to exhort, intreat, and beſeech, and that under the ſame character they bore: who alſo am an elder; or, who am a fellow-elder; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it; and which expreſſes his office, and not his age, and is entirely conſiſtent with his being an Apoſtle; for tho' that is an higher office than a paſtor, or elder, yet it involves that, and in ſome things agrees with it; as, in preaching the word, and adminiſtring ordinances; and is mentioned to ſhew the propriety and pertinency of his exhortation to the elders; for being an elder himſelf, it was acting in character to exhort them; nor could it be objected to, as impertinent and unbecoming; and ſince he was ſtill in an higher office, on which account he could have commanded, it ſhews great humility in him to put himſelf upon a level with them, and only intreat and beſeech them; he does not call himſelf the prince of the Apoſtles and paſtors, and the vicar of Chriſt, as his pretended ſucceſſor does, but a fellow-elder: and a witneſs of the ſufferings of Chriſt; as he was even an eye-witneſs of many of them; of his exceeding great ſorrow in his ſoul, of his agony and bloody ſweat in the garden, and of his apprehenſion, and binding by the officers and ſoldiers there; and of the contumelious uſage he met with in the high-prieſt's hall, where he was mocked, blindfolded, buffeted, and ſmote upon the face; if not of his ſufferings on the croſs; ſince it is certain, John was then preſent; and quickly after, we read of Peter and he being together, John xix. 26. and xx. 2. and therefore a very fit perſon to exhort theſe elders to feed the churches under their care, with the preaching of a crucified Chriſt, ſince he, from his certain knowledge, could affirm his ſufferings, and his death: moreover, he was a witneſs, that is, a miniſter, and preacher of the ſufferings of Chriſt, and of the doctrines of peace, pardon, juſtification and ſalvation through them; as appears from all his ſermons recorded in the Acts of the Apoſtles, and from theſe his Epiſtles: and beſides, he was a partaker of the ſufferings of Chriſt; he bore witneſs to him, by ſuffering for him; and as the Apoſtle Paul did, filled up the afflictions of Chriſt in his fleſh; he, with other Apoſtles, were put into the common priſon by the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, for preaching Chriſt, as he afterwards was by Herod; and had, doubtleſs, by this time, gone through a variety of ſufferings for the ſake of Chriſt and his Goſpel, as he afterwards glorified God by dying that death, which his Lord and maſter ſignified to him before-hand; and therefore a very proper perſon to exhort theſe elders to diſcharge their work and office, and perſevere in it, whatever they were called to ſuffer for it: and alſo a partaker of the glory that ſhall be revealed; which ſome think, has reference to the transfiguration of Chriſt upon the mount, where Peter was preſent, and ſaw the glory of Chriſt, and of thoſe that were with him, Moſes and Elias, and enjoyed their company, and heard their converſation with ſo much pleaſure and delight, that he was for continuing there; and which was an emblem and pledge of the glory of Chriſt, that was afterwards to be revealed, and ſtill is to be revealed; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, a partaker of his glory; of the glory of Chriſt; ſee ch. iv. 13. or it regards the eternal glory and happineſs of the ſaints, which is at preſent hid, and unſeen, but ſhall be revealed at the laſt time, at the coming of Chriſt, when he ſhall appear in his glory, both to the ſaints, in them, and upon them; a glory which ſhall be both upon body and ſoul; and this the Apoſtle calls himſelf a partaker of, as in Chriſt, his head and repreſentative, and becauſe of his intereſt in it, his aſſurance of right unto it, and meetneſs for it, and the certainty of enjoying it; nothing being more ſure than this, that thoſe that ſuffer with Chriſt, and for his ſake, ſhall be glorified with him. Now, the exhortation of a perſon in ſuch an office, as before expreſſed, and of one that was an eye-witneſs of Chriſt's ſufferings, and had endured ſo much for Chriſt, and had had ſo large an experience of his grace, and ſuch full aſſurance of glory, muſt carry great weight and influence in it, and is as follows.

Ver. 2. Feed the flock of God which is among you, &c.] Some read, as much as in you is; that is, to the utmoſt of your power, according to your abilities, referring to the manner of feeding the flock, doing it in the beſt way they are capable of; but the phraſe is rather deſcriptive of the flock to be fed, which points it out, and diſtinguiſhes it from all others, and for which they ſhould have a particular regard; it being the flock, as the Syriac verſion renders it, which is delivered unto you; which was committed to their care, and they were made overſeers of, and ſtood in a ſpecial relation to; wherefore it was incumbent on them to regard them, ſo as they did not, and were not obliged to regard any other diſtinct flock: by the flock of God, or, of Chriſt, as ſome copies read, is meant, not the whole world, which Philo the Jew [r] calls, the greateſt and moſt perfect, τȣ οντος Θεȣ ποιμνη, flock of the true God; but the church of God, over which they were elders or paſtors, conſiſting of Chriſt's ſheep and lambs, he ordered Peter to feed, as he now does his fellow-elders; and becauſe they are the flock of God, which he has choſen, diſtinguiſhed, and ſeparated from the reſt of the world, and has made the care and charge of Chriſt; put them into his hands, whence they are called the ſheep of his hand; which he has purchaſed with his blood, and effectually called by his grace, and returned them to himſelf, the ſhepherd and biſhop of ſouls, who before, were as ſheep going aſtray, and folded them together in a Goſpel-church ſtate; all this is a reaſon, and a ſtrong one, why they ſhould be fed; not with every wind of doctrine, which blows up the pride of human nature, and ſwells men with vain conceits of themſelves; nor with the chaff of human doctrines; nor with trifling and ſpeculative notions; but with knowledge and underſtanding of divine and evangelical truths, with the words of faith and ſound doctrine, with the wholeſome words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; with the Goſpel of the grace of God, which contains milk for babes, and meat for ſtrong men; and with a crucified Chriſt himſelf, who is the bread of life, and whoſe fleſh is meat indeed, and his blood drink indeed; by directing them to his perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs, to live by faith on; by preaching the doctrines of peace and pardon by his blood, atonement, and ſatisfaction by his ſacrifice, and juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and compleat ſalvation by his obedience and death: in ſhort, feeding includes the whole of the paſtors work, the miniſtry of the word, the adminiſtration of ordinances, and the rule and government of the church, in the ſeveral branches of it; for the ſame word ſignifies to rule, as to feed; and which work is further expreſſed by, taking the overſight thereof; that is, of the flock; or take the care of it, as the Syriac verſion renders it, and adds, ſpiritually; in a ſpiritual manner; which is an interpretation of the phraſe: an acting the part of a biſhop or overſeer of it, as the word ſignifies; looking diligently to it, inſpecting into the various caſes of the members of the church; uſing diligence to know the ſtate of the flock, and performing all the offices of a careful ſhepherd; as feeding the flock, and not themſelves; ſtrengthening the diſeaſed; healing the ſick; binding up that which was broken; bringing again that which was driven away, and ſeeking that which was loſt; watching over them that they go not aſtray; and reſtoring of them in the ſpirit of meekneſs, when they are gone out of the way; and overlooking both their practices, and their principles; admoniſhing, reproving them for ſin, as the caſe requires; and preſerving them as much as in them lies, from wolves, and beaſts of prey; from falſe teachers, and from all errors and hereſies: all which is to be done, not by conſtraint; or with force, in a rigorous and ſevere manner; for this may be underſtood actively of paſtors not forcing their flock, over driving them, or ruling them with force and cruelty, complained of in Ezek. xxxiv. 4. or paſſively, of their being forced to feed the flock, and ſuperintend it; as ſuch may be ſaid to be, who enter into the miniſtry, and continue in it, becauſe obliged to it for want of a livelihood, and not knowing how to get one any other way; or through the preſſing inſtances of relations, acquaintance, and friends; this ought not to be a matter of neceſſity, but of choice; they ſhould be induced to it by no other neceſſity than what Chriſt has laid upon them, by calling them to the work, and furniſhing them for it with the gifts of his Spirit; and ſhould engage and continue in it by no other conſtraint than that of his love; wherefore it follows, but willingly. The Vulgate Latin verſion adds, according to God, and ſo ſome copies; according to the will of God, and agreeable to his word; and the Ethiopic verſion renders it, with equity for God; with all uprightneſs and integrity, for the ſake of the honour and glory of God; this ſhould be done with all a man's heart and ſoul, and ſhould ſpring from pure love to Chriſt; for no man is fit to feed Chriſt's lambs and ſheep, but thoſe who ſincerely love him; ſee John xxi. 15, 16, 17. and from a cordial and affectionate concern for the good of ſouls; and from an hearty deſire unto, and delight in the work itſelf; otherwiſe all he does will be as a taſk and burden; he will do it grudgingly, and with negligence, and will murmur under it, at leaſt, ſecretly. The Arabic verſion renders it, watching, not forced watches, but willing ones. This contraſt of phraſes ſeems to be Jewiſh, or Rabbinical[q]; it is a tradition of the Rabbans; “blood which is defiled, and they ſprinkle it ignorantly, 'tis accepted; preſumptuouſly, not accepted; of what things are theſe ſaid? of a private perſon; but of a congregation, whether ignorantly, or preſumptuouſly, tis accepted; and of a ſtranger, whether ignorantly or preſumptuouſly, בין באונס בין ברצון, whether by conſtraint or willingly, it is not accepted:” it follows here, not for filthy lucre; not from a covetous diſpoſition, which is a filthy one; and for the ſake of gaining money, and amaſſing wealth and riches, as the falſe prophets in Iſaiah's time, who were never ſatisfied; and the falſe teachers in the Apoſtles time, who, through covetouſneſs, made merchandize of men, and ſuppoſed that gain was godlineſs; whereas there is no ſuch thing as ſerving God and mammon; and as the work of the miniſtry ſhould not be entred upon, and continued in, with any ſuch ſordid view; ſo neither for the ſake of gaining glory and applauſe, a preſidence, and chief place in the churches, and a name among the miniſters of the goſpel, and credit and eſteem among men: but of a ready mind; or, from the whole heart, as the Syriac verſion renders it; and in a chearful view of reproaches and perſecutions, of the loſs of credit and reputation, of worldly ſubſtance, and of life itſelf; and with a ſincere concern for the glory of God, and the good of immortal ſouls; being ready to do every thing with chearfulneſs, that may contibute to either of theſe. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, in the fullneſs of your heart with joy.

[r] De Agricultura, p. 195.

Ver. 3. Neither as being lords over God's heritage, &c.] Or clergy; meaning not eccleſiaſtical perſons, as preſbyters, and deacons, who are ſuppoſed to be under the government of biſhops, tho' not to be governed with tyranny, and in a haughty, imperious, and arrogant manner; to which ſenſe the Arabic verſion inclines, rendring the words thus; not as thoſe who domineer over ſuch that are appointed in the dignities of the prieſthood; but ſuch cannot be deſigned, becauſe they are preſbyters, or elders, which are here exhorted not to uſe ſuch tyrannical power and authority; wherefore the flock, or church of God, the people of Chriſt, and members of churches, in common, are here intended: the Ethiopic verſion renders it, his own people; who are the lot, portion, and inheritance of God, and Chriſt; and moreover, the ſeveral churches are the parts, portions, and heritages, for the word is in the plural number, which are aſſigned to the care of their reſpective paſtors, and elders, in alluſion to the land of Canaan, which was diſtributed by lot: the word clergy is common to all the ſaints, and not to be appropriated to a particular order of men, or to officers of churches; and theſe are not to be lorded over by their elders, in a domineering and arbitrary way; for tho' they are ſet over them in the Lord, and have the rule over them, and ſhould be ſubmitted to, and obeyed in their right and lawful miniſtrations of the word and ordinances, and are worthy of double honour when they rule well; yet they are not to take upon them an abſolute authority over the conſciences of men; they are not to teach for doctrines the commandments of men; nor to have the dominion over the faith of men, but to be helpers of their joy; and are not to coin new articles of faith, or enact new laws, and impoſe them on the churches; but are to teach the doctrines of Chriſt, and rule according to the laws he has given: but being enſamples to the flock. The Ethiopic verſion reads, to his own flock; that is, the flock of God; and the Vulgate Latin verſion adds, heartily; the meaning is, that they ſhould go before the flock, and ſet an example to believers, in word, in converſation, in charity, in ſpirit, in faith, in purity; and be patterns of good works to them, and recommend the doctrines they preach, and the duties they urge, by their own lives and converſations; and particularly ſhould be enſamples to the ſaints, in liberality and beneficence, in lenity and gentleneſs, in meekneſs and humility, in oppoſition to the vices before warned againſt.

Ver. 4. And when the chief ſhepherd ſhall appear, &c.] This is the encouraging motive and argument to engage the elders and paſtors of churches to diſcharge their office faithfully, chearfully, and in an humble manner: by the chief ſhepherd, is meant, Chriſt; who may well be called ſo, ſince he is God's fellow, and in all reſpects equal with him, and is the ſhepherd and biſhop of the ſouls of men; all other biſhops, paſtors, and elders are under him; they receive their commiſſions from him, to feed his lambs and ſheep; are made paſtors and overſeers by him; and have their gifts, qualifying them for ſuch offices, from him; and have their ſeveral flocks aſſigned unto them by him; and from him have they all the food with which they feed them, and are accountable to him for them, and the diſcharge of their office: ſo that Chriſt is the chief ſhepherd, in the dignity of his perſon, he being God over all, bleſſed for ever; in his qualifications for his office, having all power, grace, and wiſdom in him, to protect his flock, ſupply their wants, guide and direct them; and in the nature and number of his flock, being rational creatures, the ſouls of men, even elect men; and tho' they are, when compared with others, but a little flock, yet conſidered by themſelves, are a great number; and eſpecially the general aſſembly will be, in compariſon of the little bodies and ſocieties of ſaints under paſtors and teachers, of Chriſt's ſetting over them, with reſpect to whom, principally, he is called the chief ſhepherd: the alluſion is to the principal ſhepherd, whoſe own the ſheep were, or however, had the principal charge of them; who uſed to have others under him, to do the ſeveral things relating to the flocks he directed, and were called little ſhepherds; ſo Aben Ezra ſays[s], it was cuſtomary for the ſhepherd to have under him רועים קטנים, little ſhepherds; the ſame perhaps with the hirelings, whoſe own the ſheep are not, John x. 12. who are retained, or removed, according to their behaviour; theſe, in the Talmudic language are called ברולי[t], or כרולי; tho' according to Guido[u], the word pronounced in the latter way, ſignifies, a chief ſhepherd, who takes cattel of men, and has other ſhepherds, ſervants under him; and ſuch an one uſed to be called הרועה הגדול, the great, or chief ſhepherd; ſo Maimonides[w] ſays, it was the cuſtom of ſhepherds to have ſervants under them, to whom they committed the flocks to keep; ſo that when הרועה הגדול, the chief ſhepherd, delivered to other ſhepherds what was under his care, theſe came in his room; and if there was any loſs, the ſecond ſhepherd, who was under the chief ſhepherd, was obliged to make good the loſs, and not the firſt ſhepherd, who was the chief ſhepherd; and to the ſame purpoſe, ſays another of their commentators[x]; it is the cuſtom of הרועה הגדול, the chief ſhepherd, to deliver (the flock) to the little ſhepherd that is under him; wherefore the ſhepherd that is under him, is obliged to make good any loſs: now, ſuch a ſhepherd is Chriſt; he has others under him, whom he employs in feeding his ſheep, and who are accountable to him, and muſt give up their account when he appears: at preſent he is out of the bodily ſight of men, being received up to heaven, where he will be retained till the time of the reſtitution of all things; and then he will appear a ſecond time in great glory, in his own, and in his Father's, and in the glory of his holy angels: and when he thus appears, ye ſhall receive a crown of glory which fadeth not away; in diſtinction from thoſe crowns which were given to the conqueror, in the Olympic games; which were made of divers flowers, of the olive, wild olive, pine-tree, and of parſly, and inſerted in a branch of the wild olive-tree[y], and which quickly faded away; or in alluſion to crowns made of Amarantus[z], the plant everlaſting, ſo called, from the nature of it, becauſe it never fades: the eternal glory and happineſs, which is here meant by a crown of glory, or a glorious crown, never fades away, but ever ſhines in its full luſtre; and this, faithful miniſters ſhall receive at the hands of the chief ſhepherd, as a gift of his, as a reward of grace; when they have finiſhed their work, they will enter into the joy of their Lord, and ſhine as the ſtars for ever and ever; they ſhall reign with Chriſt, as kings, on a throne of glory, wearing a crown of glory, and enjoying a kingdom and glory to all eternity.

Ver. 5. Likewiſe ye younger, &c.] Not in office, as if inferior officers to biſhops were here intended, who ought to be ſubject to them; for elders and paſtors are the ſame with them, nor is there any other office but that of deacons; nor younger paſtors and overſeers, ſuch an one as Timothy was; not but that a deference is to be paid, and proper reſpect had to ſuch who are of greater age, and longer ſtanding and experience, by younger brethren in the miniſtry; nor ſuch as are only younger in years, who ought to riſe up unto, and honour hoary hairs, which may be done where ſubjection is not required, as here; nor ſuch as are young in grace and experience, ſince there are little children, young men, and fathers in the church; but all the members of churches in common are here intended, as diſtinguiſhed from their officers; for as paſtors and overſeers were, for the moſt part, choſen from among thoſe that were ſenior in age, ſo the members generally conſiſted of the younger ſort; and beſides, as it was uſual to call chief men and rulers, whether in church or ſtate, fathers, ſo thoſe that were ſubjects, the younger; ſee Luke xxii. 26. Theſe the Apoſtle exhorts as follows, ſubmit yourſelves unto the elder; not merely in age, but in office, as before; for as he had exhorted the elders to a diſcharge of their work and office, he proceeds in the next place, and which is ſignified by the word likewiſe, to ſtir up the members of the churches to their duty to their elders, or paſtors, who had the overſight of them; and that is to ſubmit themſelves to them, as in Heb. xiii. 17. which is done by attending conſtantly on the word preached by them, and receiving it, ſo far as it agrees with the ſcriptures of truth; and by joining with them in all the ordinances of Chriſt, and their adminiſtrations of them; by being ſubject to the laws of Chriſt's houſe, as put in execution by them; by taking their counſel and advice, regarding and hearkening to their admonitions and reproofs, and taking them in good part, looking upon them, and behaving towards them as their ſpiritual guides and governours. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, to your elders; ſuch as were particularly ſet over them in the Lord, and had taken the care of them, for to no others are they obliged to ſubmit themſelves. Yea all of you be ſubject one to another; other; that is, all the members of the churches ſhould not only ſubmit themſelves to their paſtors, but to their fellow-members, as in Eph. v. 21. they ſhould ſubmit to the ſuperior judgments of one another, eſteeming each other better than themſelves, and not be tenacious of their own way of thinking and judging of things; yea, condeſcend to men of low eſtates, and weaker minds, bear the infirmities of the weak, and take all admonitions and reproofs given in a friendly manner kindly; and chearfully perform all offices of love, and by it ſerve one another in things temporal and ſpiritual; doing the meaneſt ſervices for the good of each other, ſuch as waſhing the feet of one another, in imitation of their Lord and maſter. And be clothed with humility; without which there will be no ſubjection, either to the elders, or one another. This is a grace which ſhows itſelf in a man's thinking and ſpeaking, the beſt of others, and the worſt of himſelf; in not affecting places and titles of eminence; in being content with the loweſt place, and patiently bearing the greateſt contempt; in not aſpiring to things too high for him, always acknowledging his own meanneſs, baſeneſs, and unworthineſs; aſcribing all he is, and has, to the grace and goodneſs of God, whether it be gifts of nature, providence, or grace: and this is a believer's clothing, not the robe of his juſtifying righteouſneſs before God, but is a conſiderable part of his inward garment of ſanctification, which is in the ſight of God of great price; and makes a large ſhow in his outward converſation-garments before men, and renders him lovely and amiable: it is an ornament to him, which is precious with God, and recommends him to the eſteem of men, and the religion and Goſpel he profeſſes, and his profeſſion of it. Some think there is a metaphor in the words, taken from knots of ribbands, and ſuch like things, wore by women on their heads, or breaſts, for ornament; and that the Apoſtle's advice to the ſaints is, that their breaſt-knot, or ornament ſhould be humility. Others think it is taken from a ſort of badge which ſervants wore over their garments, by which they were diſtinguiſhed; and ſo ſaints are directed to put on this badge, by which they may be known to be the ſervants of Chriſt: the former ſeems more agreeable: but as the word ſignifies to bind, or faſten any thing, by tying of knots, it may denote the retaining of this grace in conſtant exerciſe, ſo as never to be without it; and to be clothed or covered with it, is always to have it on, and in exerciſe, in every action of life, in all our deportment before God and men, in all public and religious worſhip, and throughout the whole of our converſation, in the family, in the world, or in the church. The phraſe ſeems to be Jewiſh, and is to be met with in the writings of the Jews. It is ſaid [a], "he that has fear, ונתלבש בענוה, and is clothed with humility; humility is the moſt excellent, and is comprehended in all, as it is ſaid, Prov. xxii. 4. He who has the fear of God, is worthy of humility, and every one that hath humility is worthy of kindneſs or holineſs." And it is a ſaying of R. Meir [b], "he that loves God loves men; he that makes God glad, makes men glad; and it (the law) מלבשתו ענוה, clothes him with humility and fear." For he reſiſteth the proud; or ſcorneth the ſcorners, as it is in Prov. iii. 34. from whence theſe words are taken: the Lord treats them as they treat others; as they deſpiſe all other men and things, he deſpiſes them; he is above them, in that they have dealt proudly, and has them in deriſion; he eludes all their artifices, and fruſtrates their ſchemes, and diſappoints their ambitious views, and ſcatters them in the imagination of their hearts, and brings their counſels to confuſion, and oppoſes himſelf to them, and as their adverſary; and a dreadful thing it is for perſons to have God ſtand up againſt them, and reſiſt them. This is a reaſon diſſuading from pride, and exciting to humility, as is alſo what follows: and giveth grace to the humble; that is, more grace; ſee James iv. 6. The firſt grace cannot be intended, for no man is truly humble before he has received the grace of God, 'tis that which makes him ſo; or it may deſign larger gifts of grace, which God beſtows on thoſe who acknowledge him to be the author and giver of what they have, and who make a proper uſe of them to his glory; when he takes away from the vain and oſtentatious, that which to themſelves, and others, they ſeemed to have. Moreover, God grants his gracious preſence to ſuch as are of an humble, and of a contrite ſpirit; and at laſt he gives them glory, which is a free grace-gift, and the perfection of grace; the poor in ſpirit, or humble ſouls, have both a right and meetneſs for, and ſhall enjoy the kingdom of heaven.

Ver. 6. Humble yourſelves therefore, &c.] Or be ye humbled before God, and in his ſight; quietly ſubmit to his will; patiently bear every affliction without murmuring, repining, or replying againſt him; be ſtill under the rod, and deſpiſe not the chaſtening of the Lord; mourn over ſin as the cauſe, acknowledge your vileneſs and unworthineſs, and ſtand in awe of his majeſty, conſidering yourſelves as under the mighty hand of God; a phraſe expreſſive of his omnipotence, which can't be ſtayed, and it would be madneſs to oppoſe it; and which is able to caſt down the proud, and daſh them to pieces, as well as to exalt the humble. This hand, upon men, in a way of chaſtiſement, preſſes ſore, and in a way of puniſhment preſſes down, and cruſhes to pieces; but to be under it in an humble manner, is ſafe and profitable; ſuch are hid as in the hollow of his hand, and are ſafe as in a pavilion, and comfortable under the ſhadow of his wings; and ſuch humiliation and ſubmiſſion to him, and putting themſelves under his mighty hand and care, is the way to exaltation: that he may exalt you in due time; the Arabic verſion reads, in the time of exaltation; when his time to exalt is come, either in this world, or more eſpecially at the appearance of Chriſt, and his kingdom. The Vulgate Latin verſion, and two copies of Beza's, one of Stephens's, and the Alexandrian, read, in the time of viſitation; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion, when he ſhall have viſited you; which ſeems to be taken out of ch. ii. 12. ſooner or latter ſuch who are humbled ſhall be exalted; it is the uſual way and method which God takes to abaſe the proud, and exalt the humble; for humble ſouls honour him, and therefore ſuch as honour him he will honour; and this he does in his own time, in a time that makes moſt for his glory, and their good; oftentimes he does it in this life, and always in that which is to come.

Ver. 7. Caſting all your care upon him, &c.] Upon God, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read. The words are taken out of, or at leaſt refer to Pſ. lv. 22. where, inſtead of, caſt thy burden upon the Lord, the Septuagint have it, caſt thy care upon the Lord; the care of the body, and of all the affairs of life, concerning which ſaints ſhould not be anxiouſly thoughtful, but depend upon the providence of God, tho' in the diligent uſe of means, which is not forbidden, nor diſcourged by this, or any ſuch like exhortation; as alſo the care of the ſoul, and the ſpiritual and eternal welfare of it, which ſhould be committed into the hands of Chriſt, on whom help is laid, and who is become the author of eternal ſalvation; nor ſhould this ſlacken and make perſons negligent in the uſe of means, for the good, comfort, and advantage of their ſouls: for he careth for you; for the bodies of his people, and their outward concerns of life, for food and raiment for them, and for the preſervation of them, who will not ſuffer them to want, nor with-hold any good thing from them, or ever leave them, and forſake them; and for their ſouls, for which he has made proviſion in his Son, and in the covenant of his grace has laid help upon a mighty ſaviour; and who has obtained an eternal redemption for them, beſtows his grace upon them, and gives every needful ſupply of it to them, and keeps them by his power thro' faith unto ſalvation.

[a] Zohar in Num. fol. 60. 3.

[b] Pirke Abot, c. 6. §. 1.

Ver. 8. Be ſober, be vigilant, &c.] The Apoſtle had exhorted to each of theſe before; ſee ch. i. 13. and iv. 7. but thought fit to repeat them; ſobriety and watchfulneſs being exceeding neceſſary and uſeful in the chriſtian life; and the one can't well be without the other: unleſs a man is ſober in body and mind, he will not be watchful, either over himſelf, or others, or againſt the ſnares of ſin, ſatan, and the world; and if he is not on his watch and guard, he is liable to every ſin and temptation. The Syriac verſion renders the words, watch, and be ye mindful, or remember; watch with diligence, care, and induſtry, keeping a good look-out, minding and obſerving every thing that preſents, and remembring the power and cunning of the enemy; and the Ethiopic verſion renders them thus, be ye prudent, and cauſe your heart to underſtand; referring them not to temperance of body, but ſobriety of mind, and to a prudent conduct and behaviour, as having a ſubtle, as well as a malicious enemy to deal with: becauſe your adverſary the devil; he who is a defamer and calumniator; who accuſes God to men, and men to God, and is therefore ſtiled the accuſer of the brethren; he is the ſaints avowed and implacable enemy. Satan is an enemy to mankind in general, but more eſpecially to the ſeed of the woman, to Chriſt perſonal, and to Chriſt myſtical, to all the elect of God: the word here uſed is a forenſic term, and ſignifies a court-adverſary, or one that litigates a point in law, or oppoſes another in an action or ſuit at law. The Jews [c] have adopted this word into their language, and explain it by, בעל דין, a law adverſary, or one that has a ſuit of law depending againſt another. Satan accuſes men of the breach of the law, and pleads, that juſtice might take place, and puniſhment be inflicted, and which he purſues with great violence and diligence: as a roaring lion; ſo called, both on account of his ſtrength, and alſo becauſe of his rage, malice, and cruelty, which he breathes out againſt the ſaints, who, tho' he can't deſtroy them, will do all he can to terrify and affright them; ſo the young lions in Pſ. civ. 21. are, by the cabaliſtic Jews [d], underſtood of devils; to which, for the above reaſons, they may be truly compared: walketh about; to and fro in the earth; ſee Job i. 7. as a lion runs about here and there, when almoſt famiſhed with hunger; and it alſo denotes the inſidious methods, wiles, and ſtratagems ſatan takes to ſurprize men, and get an advantage of them: he takes a tour, and comes round upon them, upon the back of them, at an unawares, ſo that they have need to be always ſober, and upon their guard: ſeeking whom he may devour; this is the end of his walking about: and the like is expreſſed in the Targum on Job i. 7. and ii. 2. "and ſatan anſwered before the Lord, and ſaid, from going about in the earth, למבדק בעובדי, to ſearch into the works of the children of men, and from walking in it;" that ſo he might have ſomething to accuſe them of, and they fall a prey into his hands. This is the work he is continually employed in; he's always ſeeking to do miſchief, either to the ſouls, or bodies, or eſtates of men, eſpecially the former; tho' he can do nothing in either reſpect without a permiſſion, not unleſs he may; and though this, with reſpect to body and eſtate, is ſometimes granted, as in the caſe of Job, yet never with reſpect to the ſouls of any of God's elect, which are ſafe in Chriſt's hands, and out of his reach; this hinders not but that ſaints ſhould be ſober and watchful.

Ver. 9. Whom reſiſt, &c.] By no means give way to him, by indulging any ſin, or yielding to any temptation, but oppoſe him, and ſtand againſt his wiles, his cunning and his power: ſtedfaſt in the faith; both in the doctrine of faith, which ſatan endeavours to remove from, or cauſe to ſtagger in; and in the grace of faith, exerciſing it on the promiſes of God, and his perfections, particularly his power and faithfulneſs concerned in them, and in the blood, righteouſneſs, ſacrifice, and perſon of Chriſt, which faith is capable of making uſe of, as a ſhield, to good purpoſe, againſt all the fiery darts of ſatan; as alſo in a profeſſion of faith, which, as it ſhould be held faſt without wavering, and which the devil is very buſy to keep perſons from making, or to cauſe them to drop it when they have made it, by violent ſuggeſtions, ſtrong temptations, and a flood of reproaches and perſecutions; all which ſhould be diſregarded: knowing that the ſame afflictions are accompliſhed in your brethren, that are in the world; and therefore ſhould not be ſurprized and ſtaggered by them, nor think them ſtrange, but endure them without murmuring, and with patience and chearfulneſs; ſince they are the ſame afflictions and trials, which others have been exerciſed with, in all ages; the ſame which the fraternity or brotherhood, as the word ſignifies, ſee ch. ii. 17. who ſtand in the ſame relation to God and Chriſt as they do, endure; yea, the ſame which Chriſt himſelf, who ſtands in this relation to them, has endured: and which muſt be expected whilſt they are in the world; but this is the great mercy, that they are only endured in this world; there will be none in the world to come; they'll be accompliſhed and finiſhed here; and every believer has his meaſure, which muſt be filled up; and ſo has the whole body of Chriſt, his church, and when they are fulfilled, they'll be no more.

Ver. 10. But the God of all grace, &c.] Who has riches of grace, an immenſe plenty of it in himſelf; has treaſured up a fulneſs of grace in his Son; is the author of all the bleſſings of grace, of electing, adopting, juſtifying, pardoning, and regenerating grace; and is the giver of the ſeveral graces of the Spirit, as faith, hope, love, repentance, &c. and of all the ſupplies of grace; and by this character is God the Father, deſcribed as the object of prayer, to encourage ſouls to come to the throne of his grace, and pray, and hope for, and expect a ſufficiency of his grace in every time of need; as well as to ſhew, that the ſufferings of the ſaints here are but for a while; that they are in love and kindneſs; and that they ſhall certainly enjoy the glory they are called unto by him; and which is the next thing by which he ſtands deſcribed, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Jeſus Chriſt. This call is not a mere external one, by the miniſtry of the word, which is not always effectual and unto ſalvation; but an internal, ſpecial, and efficacious one, and which is high, holy, heavenly, and unchangeable. The perſons who are the ſubjects of it are us, whom God has choſen in Chriſt, and are preſerved in him, and redeemed by him; and who are a ſelect people, and diſtinguiſhed from others, and yet in themſelves no better than others; nay, often the vileſt, meaneſt, and moſt contemptible. Some antient copies read you, and ſo do the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions: what they are called to, is his eternal glory; that which is glorious in itſelf, and is ſignified by what is the moſt glorious in this world, as a kingdom, crown, throne, inheritance, &c. and lies in conſtant and uninterrupted communion with Father, Son, and Spirit; in a compleat viſion of the glory of Chriſt, and in perfect conformity to him; in a freedom from all evil, and in a full enjoyment of all happineſs: and this is his, God the Father's; which he has prepared and provided for his people of his own grace, and which he freely gives unto them, and makes them meet for: and it is eternal; it will laſt for ever, and never paſs away, as does the glory of this world; it is a continuing city, a never-fading inheritance, an eternal weight of glory: and to this the ſaints are called, by, or in Jeſus Chriſt; the glory they are called to is in his hands; and they themſelves, by being called unto it, appear to be in him, and as ſuch, to belong unto him, or are the called of Chriſt Jeſus; and beſides, they are called by him, by his Spirit and grace, and into communion with him, and to the obtaining of his glory. After that ye have ſuffered a while, make you perfect, ſtabliſh, ſtrengthen, ſettle you; ſome copies, and alſo the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions, read theſe words in the future tenſe, not as a prayer, but as a promiſe, ſhall make you perfect, &c. the ſenſe is the ſame; for if it is a prayer, it is a prayer in faith, for what ſhall be done; for God will make his people perfect: and which reſpects not their juſtification; for in that ſenſe they are perfect already in Chriſt, their head, who has perfectly fulfilled the law for them, and fully expiated their ſins; has compleatly redeemed them, and procured for them the pardon of all their treſpaſſes; and has juſtified them from all their iniquities: but their ſanctification; for tho' all grace is implanted in them at once, yet it is gradually brought to perfection; there is a perfection of parts, of all the parts of the new man, or creature, but not of degrees; and there is a comparative perfection with reſpect to themſelves, before converſion, or with reſpect to hypocrites; for perfection oftentimes means no other than integrity and ſincerity; or with reſpect to other chriſtians, who are weaker in knowledge and experience: and there is a perfection of holineſs in Chriſt, who is their ſanctification, but not in themſelves; for every part of the work of grace is imperfect, as faith, love, knowledge, &c. and ſin dwells in them, and they ſtand in need of freſh ſupplies of grace; and even the beſt of them diſclaim perfection, tho' they greatly deſire it, as here the Apoſtle prays for it; and which ſhows, that as yet, they had it not, tho' they will have it hereafter in heaven, where there will be perfect knowledge, and perfect holineſs, and perfect happineſs. He alſo prays, that God would ſtabliſh them, or believes and promiſes that he would. The people of God are in a ſafe and eſtabliſhed ſtate and condition already; they are in the arms of everlaſting love, and in the hands of Chriſt, and in a ſure and inviolable covenant of grace, and are built on the rock of ages; and are in a ſtate of grace, of juſtifying, adopting, and ſanctifying grace, from whence they can never finally and totally fall; and yet they are very often unſtable in their hearts and frames, and in the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty, and in their adherence to the doctrines of the Goſpel; and need to be eſtabliſhed, and to have a more firm perſuaſion of their intereſt in the love of God, and a more ſteady view of their ſtanding in Chriſt, and the covenant of his grace, and a more lively and comfortable exerciſe of grace on him, and a more conſtant diſcharge of duty, and a more firm and cloſer adherence to the truths and ordinances of the Goſpel; and they will have a conſummate ſtability in heaven, where are ſure dwelling-places. Another petition, or promiſe, is, that God would ſtrengthen them; which ſuppoſes them to be weak and feeble, not as to their ſtate and condition, for their place of defence is the munition of rocks; nor in the ſame ſenſe as natural men are, or as they themſelves were before converſion; nor are they all alike weak, ſome are weaker in faith and knowledge, and of a more weak and ſcrupulous conſcience than others, and are more eaſily drawn aſide by corruptions and temptations, and are in greater afflictions: and this is to be underſtood, not of bodily, but ſpiritual ſtrength; that God would ſtrengthen their ſouls, and the work of his grace in them, their faith, hope, and love; and ſtrengthen them to perform their duties, to withſtand temptations, oppoſe their own corruptions, bear the croſs, reproaches, and perſecutions, and do their generation work: and he further adds, and ſettle you, or found you; not that God would now lay the foundation, Chriſt, for he had been laid by him already in his counſels and decrees, and in the covenant of his grace, in the miſſion of him into this world, and by his Spirit in their hearts; nor that he would afreſh lay them on Chriſt, the foundation, for they were there laid already, and were ſafe; but that he would build them up, and ſettle their faith on this foundation, that they might be rooted and grounded in the love of God, have a lively ſenſe, and firm perſuaſion of their intereſt in it, and be grounded and ſettled in the faith of the Goſpel; be ſettled under a Goſpel miniſtry, have a fixed abode in the houſe of God, enjoy the ſpiritual proviſions of it, and have fellowſhip with Chriſt, and his people here; and at laſt enter and dwell in the city which has foundations, where they will be never more ſubject to wavering, inſtability, and inconſtancy, and from whence they will never be removed; this will be their laſt and eternal ſettlement: and this will be after they have ſuffered a while; in their bodies, characters, and eſtates, thro' the malice and wickedneſs of men; and in their ſouls, from their own corruptions, the temptations of ſatan, and the hidings of God's face; which will be but for a very little while, for a moment, as it were; theſe are only the ſufferings of this preſent time, and in the preſent evil world; nor are they inconſiſtent with God, being the God of all grace unto them, or with their being called to eternal glory, the way to which lies thro' them; and they are the means of perfecting, ſtabliſhing, ſtrengthening, and ſettling them.

[d] Lex. Cabal. p. 231, 417.

Ver. 11. To him be glory, and dominion, for ever and ever, Amen.] The Syriac verſion begins this doxology in the preceding verſe, reading the words thus, to the God of grace, and then putting what follows, who hath called us, &c. into a parentheſis, connects them with theſe, be glory, and power, and honour, &c. glory is due to God for all the grace he beſtows on men; and to give it to him, ſhows a ſenſe of divine goodneſs, and a grateful heart; and to him very fitly is dominion aſcribed, whoſe kingdom rules over all, and who diſpenſes his grace, as well as his providential favours, in a ſovereign way; and whom the ſaints are in a peculiar manner, under obligation to obey; to which is added, Amen, ſignifying that ſo the Apoſtle prayed, it might be, and believed it would be.

Ver. 12. By Sylvanus, a faithful brother, unto you, &c.] Sylvanus is the ſame with Silas, ſo often mentioned in the Acts of the Apoſtles, as a companion of the Apoſtle Paul; whom Peter met with in his travels, and ſent this letter by him, or uſed him as his amanuenſis, or both: his character is, that he was a faithful brother to thoſe perſons, to whom this Epiſtle is written; that is, he was a faithful miniſter of the Goſpel to them, who, with great ſincerity and integrity, preached the word unto them, as the Apoſtle was well informed, and had reaſon to believe; for what follows, as I ſuppoſe, does not ſuggeſt any doubt of it, but, on the contrary, a firm belief; for the word uſed, ſignifies to repute, to reckon, to conclude a thing upon the beſt and ſtrongeſt reaſons; tho' ſome connect this phraſe, as that alſo unto you, with the following clauſe, I have written briefly; as does the Syriac verſion, which renders the whole thus, theſe few things, as I think, I have written unto you, by Sylvanus, a faithful brother; and then the ſenſe is, this ſhort Epiſtle, as in my opinion it is, I have wrote and ſent to you by Sylvanus, who is faithful and upright, as a brother, a miniſter, and a meſſenger. The Arabic verſion ſeems to refer the above clauſe, as I ſuppoſe, neither to the character of Sylvanus, nor to the brevity of the Epiſtle, but to the matter of it, rendering it thus, theſe things, in a few words, I have written unto you, according to my ſenſe; according to my judgment and reaſon, as I think, by which you will ſee and know my real ſentiments and thoughts of things; for what I have written is according to the beſt of my underſtanding and knowledge: exhorting and teſtifying, that this is the true grace of God wherein ye ſtand; or have ſtood, and ſtill continue to do ſo: the Syriac verſion renders it, I am perſuaded and teſtify; expreſſing his great confidence and aſſurance, that the Goſpel of the grace of God, which ſprings from the grace of God, is full of it, and declares it, and which he had delivered in this Epiſtle, and they had formerly received, and had ſtood faſt in, and abode by, was the true Goſpel. The Arabic verſion gives another ſenſe, rendering the words thus, intreating and beſeeching, that this grace of God, in which ye ſtand, may be true and firm; that is, that ye may ſtill continue truly to embrace and profeſs it, and firmly abide by it; tho' the meaning rather is, that the Apoſtle bears a teſtimony to the truth of the Goſpel, and of the chriſtian religion, as held and profeſſed by them, with conſtancy hitherto; and exhorts them unto the conſideration of the truth of it, which might be depended upon, to cleave unto it with full purpoſe of heart.

Ver. 13. The church that is at Babylon, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions ſupply the word church, as we do. Some, by Babylon, underſtand Rome, which is ſo called, in a figurative ſenſe, in the book of the Revelations: this is an ancient opinion; ſo Papias underſtood it, as [e] Euſebius relates; but that Peter was at Rome, when he wrote this Epiſtle, cannot be proved, nor any reaſon be given, why the proper name of the place ſhould be concealed, and a figurative one expreſſed. It is beſt therefore to underſtand it literally, of Babylon in Aſſyria, the metropolis of the diſperſion of the Jews, and the centre of it, to whom the Apoſtle wrote; and where, as the miniſter of the circumciſion, he may be thought to reſide, here being a number of perſons converted and formed into a Goſpel church-ſtate, whereby was fulfilled the prophecy in Pſ. lxxxvii. 4. perhaps this church might conſiſt chiefly of Jews, which might be the reaſon of the Apoſtle's being here, ſince there were great numbers which continued here, from the time of the captivity, who returned not with Ezra; and theſe are ſaid by the Jews [f] to be of the pureſt blood: many of the Jewiſh doctors lived here; they had three famous univerſities in this country, and here their Talmud was written, called from hence [g] Babylonian. The church in this place is ſaid to be elected together with you; that is, were choſen together with them in Chriſt, before the foundation of the world, to grace here, and glory hereafter; or were equally the elect of God, as they were, for as ſuch he writes to them, ch. i. 2. and this the Apoſtle ſaid in a judgment of charity of the whole church, and all the members of it, being under a profeſſion of faith in Chriſt; and nothing appearing to the contrary, but that their faith was unfeigned, and their profeſſion right and ſincere. This church, he ſays, ſaluteth you; wiſhes all peace, happineſs, and proſperity of every kind, and ſo doth Marcus, my ſon; either in a natural ſenſe, his ſon according to the fleſh; ſince it is certain Peter had a wife, and might have a ſon, and one of this name: or rather in a ſpiritual ſenſe, being one that he was either an inſtrument of converting him, or of inſtructing him, or was one that was as dear to him as a ſon; in like manner as the Apoſtle Paul calls Timothy, and alſo Titus, his own ſon. This ſeems to be Mark the Evangeliſt, who was called John Mark, was Barnabas's ſiſter's ſon, and his mother's name was Mary; ſee Col. iv. 10. Acts xii. 12, 25. He is ſaid [h] to be the interpreter of Peter, and to have wrote his Goſpel from what he heard from him; and who approved of it, and confirmed it, and indeed it is ſaid to be his.

Ver. 14. Greet ye one another with a kiſs of charity, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions read, with an holy kiſs; and ſo ſome copies, as in Rom. xvi. 16. and elſewhere; ſee the note there; and intends ſuch a kiſs, as is not only oppoſite to every thing that is laſcivious and impure, but is expreſſive of true love and affection, and is hearty and ſincere: and ſuch a love the Jews call, as the Apoſtle does here, נשיקה דרחימו, a kiſs kiſs of love[l]; for as Philo the Jew[k] obſerves, a kiſs and love differ, the one may be without the other, a mere compliment, a ſhew of friendſhip, and not ariſe from ſincere love. Peace with you all that are in Chriſt Jeſus; who were choſen in him before the foundation of the world; and appeared to be in him by effectual vocation; and were at leaſt by profeſſion in him, and were in Chriſt myſtical, and incorporated in a Goſpel church; the Arabic verſion reads, who are in the love of Jeſus Chriſt. To theſe the Apoſtle wiſhes peace, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal. The Vulgate Latin reads grace, which is moſt uſual in Paul's Epiſtles. The Epiſtle is cloſed with Amen, as is common; the Apoſtle wiſhing that this might be the caſe, and believing that it would be.

AN

EXPOSITION, &c.

The Second Epiſtle General of PETER.

THOUGH there was, among the ancients, a doubt concerning the authority of this Epiſtle, which is firſt mentioned by Origen[a], and afterwards by Euſebius[b] and Jerom[c], yet it prevailed not among the churches, nor hindered the diligent reading and uſe of it, together with other ſcriptures; it appearing to be uſeful and profitable, as Euſebius declares; and in proceſs of time, this doubt was entirely removed, and it was univerſally received by fathers and councils into the canon of the ſcriptures, where it is juſtly retained, it having plain ſignatures of its divine original. Nor is there any thing in it unworthy of ſo great an Apoſtle, whoſe name it bears; but the whole of it is agreeable to the analogy of faith, to the reſt of the ſacred writings, particularly to the Epiſtle of Jude, between which, and the ſecond chapter of this, there is a great likeneſs. The only reaſon of the doubt of the genuineſs of this Epiſtle, and whether it was written by the Apoſtle Peter, is the difference of its ſtile from the former; but the Holy Ghoſt, the dictator of the ſacred writings, is not limited to a man's natural ſtile, but could vary it, as he pleaſed: beſides, a man's ſtile is not the ſame at different times, and when writing on different ſubjects; add to which, that this objection can only regard the ſecond chapter, for the firſt and third agree with the former Epiſtle. And ſome have thought, that the ſecond chapter is an extract out of ſome ancient Hebrew book deſcribing the characters of the old falſe prophets; which book Peter and Jude having before them, took the characters of the old prophets, and, under divine direction, applied them to the falſe teachers of the preſent age; and if ſo, 'tis not to be wondered at, that the ſtile of the Epiſtle ſhould differ from the former, and even from itſelf in this part. But that it was written by the Apoſtle Peter, not only the inſcription ſhews, which, if falſe, would indeed diſcredit the genuineneſs of the book, but the account that is given of the writer of it, as one that was with Chriſt at his transfiguration, ch. i. 16, 17, 18. Now there were only the three following diſciples there, Peter, John, and James. The laſt of theſe had been dead ſome time when this Epiſtle was written, and it was never aſcribed by any to the Apoſtle John, and therefore it remains that Peter muſt be the writer of it. As for Symeon, biſhop of Jeruſalem, that ſucceeded James, whom Grotius would ſuggeſt as the author of it, the character does not agree with him; he was not with Chriſt on the holy mount, nor heard the voice from heaven, aſſerting the Sonſhip of Chriſt, and the divine complacency in him: moreover, this Epiſtle is called a ſecond Epiſtle, ch. iii. 1. and ſuppoſes a firſt, and manifeſtly refers to the former Epiſtle of Peter's, about which there never was any doubt, as the authors before-mentioned obſerve. It was written by the Apoſtle in his old age, when upon the decline of life, juſt as he was about to put off his tabernacle, ch. i. 13, 14, 15. a little before his martyrdom, in the year 68, tho' Dr. Lightfoot places it in 66; and it is ſent to the ſame perſons as his firſt, namely, to the believing Jews ſcattered throughout ſeveral parts of Aſia, he being the miniſter of the circumciſion; ſee 1 Ep. i. 1. compared with 2 Ep. iii. 1. The ſcope and deſign of it are, to put them upon a concern for a larger increaſe of grace and ſpiritual knowledge; to confirm and eſtabliſh them in the preſent truth of the Goſpel; to warn them againſt falſe teachers, which he largely deſcribes; and he puts them in mind of the diſſolution of all things, and of what will precede and follow it; from whence he draws ſeveral uſeful hints and inferences.

CHAP. I.

IN this chapter, after the inſcription and ſalutation, the Apoſtle takes notice of gifts of grace beſtowed; and exhorts to the exerciſe of holineſs and good works; and gives the reaſons why he was ſo preſſing to them; and endeavours to eſtabliſh the ſaints in the Goſpel that had been preached among them. In the inſcription, the writer of the Epiſtle deſcribes himſelf by his names, the one given him by his parents, the other by his Lord and maſter, and by his character and office; and the perſons to whom he writes, are deſcribed as having faith, and that of the ſame kind with the Apoſtles, and which they obtained thro' the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, ver. 1. The ſalutation is the ſame with that in the former Epiſtle, only here is added a wiſh for an increaſe of divine knowledge, ver. 2. and which might be expected, ſince by the power of divine grace, every thing neceſſary to a ſpiritual and godly life had been given them in effectual vocation, thro' the knowledge of Chriſt; even exceeding great and precious promiſes, whereby they partook of the divine nature, and eſcaped the vices which prevailed in the world, ver. 3, 4. upon which he exhorts not to reſt where they were, but to go on in the exerciſe of grace, and performance of duties, many of which he enumerates, ver. 5, 6, 7. to enforce which he adds ſeveral arguments, as that thro' an abounding in theſe things they would appear not to have a ſuperficial and ſpeculative knowledge of Chriſt, ver. 8. or otherwiſe it would be evident, that they were blind and ignorant, and in an unrenewed ſtate, ver. 9. whereas by theſe things they would make their calling and election ſure and manifeſt to men, and would never fall totally and finally, and in the iſſue have an abundant entrance into the everlaſting kingdom of Chriſt, ver. 10, 11. and then he gives the reaſons of his conduct, why he ſo much urged a regard to theſe things, and put them in mind of them; namely, the uſefulneſs of them for their eſtabliſhment, the duty of his office, which required it, the ſhort time he had to live, and the profitableneſs of ſuch exhortations to them, after his deceaſe, ver. 12, 13, 14, 15. and in order to eſtabliſh them in the truths of the Goſpel, and particularly in that which concerns the coming of Chriſt in power and glory, on which he enlarges in the latter part of this Epiſtle; he obſerves, that this was not a cunningly deviſed fable, but was what he, and others, were eye-witneſſes of, even of that which was an emblem and pledge of it; namely, the transfiguration of Chriſt on the mount, when they ſaw the glory he received from God his Father, and heard the voice from heaven which declared him to be his well-beloved Son, ver. 16, 17, 18. and beſides, they had a ſurer proof of the certainty of his coming; namely, the propheſies concerning it, which ſhould be regarded and given heed to, being as a lamp to direct in the preſent ſtate of darkneſs and imperfection, until the illuſtrious day of Chriſt's coming appears, ver. 19. and the rather this ſhould be attended to, ſince no ſcriptural prophecy is an invention and device of men; nor was it formerly given out at the pleaſure of men, but by ſaints, who were influenced and moved unto it by the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 20, 21.

Ver. 1. Simon Peter, a ſervant, and an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] The writer of this Epiſtle is deſcribed firſt by his names, Simon Peter; the firſt of theſe was the name by which he was called from his infancy by his parents, and by which he was known when Chriſt called him to be a diſciple and follower of him, and is the ſame with Simeon; and ſo it's read in moſt copies; ſee Acts xv. 14. a name common with the Jews; the latter is what was given him by Chriſt at his converſion, John i. 42. and anſwers to Cephas in the Syriac language; and both ſignify a rock or ſtone, becauſe he was built upon Chriſt, the rock, and foundation, and chief corner-ſtone, and with a view to his future ſolidity, firmneſs, and conſtancy: and he is next deſcribed by his character as a ſervant, not of ſin, nor ſatan, nor man, but Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe ſervant he was, not only by creation, but by redemption, and grace; and not merely a ſervant of his, in common with other believers, but in a miniſterial way, as a preacher of the Goſpel, which this phraſe ſometimes deſigns. The uſe of it ſhews the Apoſtle's humility, his ſenſe of obligation to Chriſt, and acknowledgment of him as his Lord, and that he eſteemed it an honour to ſtand in ſuch a relation to him: but to diſtinguiſh him from a common ſervant of Chriſt, and an ordinary miniſter of the word, 'tis added, an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt; one that was immediately ſent by Chriſt, had his commiſſion and doctrine directly from him, and a power of working miracles, in confirmation of his miſſion and miniſtry being divine, and an authority at large to go every where and preach the Goſpel, plant churches, and put them in due order, and place proper perſons over them. This is ſaid to give weight and authority to his Epiſtle: and further, in this inſcription of the Epiſtle, the perſons are deſcribed to whom it is written, as follows, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us; they were believers in Chriſt, who had a faith of the right kind; not a faith of doing miracles, which was not common to all, nor was it ſaving; nor an hiſtorical faith, or a mere aſſent to truths, nor a temporary one, or a bare profeſſion of faith; but that faith which is the faith of God's elect, the gift of his grace, and the operation of his power; which ſees the Son, goes to him, ventures on him, truſts in him, lives upon him, and works by love to him. This is ſaid to be precious, as it is in its own nature, being a rich and enriching grace, of more worth and value than gold that periſheth, or than thouſands of gold and ſilver; it is not to be equalled by, nor purchaſed with the riches of the whole world; it is precious in its object, it being converſant with the precious perſon, precious blood, and precious righteouſneſs and ſacrifice of Chriſt, and is that grace which makes Chriſt, and all that is his, precious to ſouls; it is precious in its acts and uſefulneſs; it is that grace by which men go to God and Chriſt, receive from them, and give all glory to them, and without which it is not poſſible to pleaſe God: to which add the durableneſs of it; it is an abiding grace, and will never fail, when the moſt precious things in nature do: and it is like precious with that the Apoſtles had; for there is but one faith, and which is called a common faith, even common to all the elect; and which is the ſame in all, not as to degrees, for in ſome it is ſtrong, and in others weak; or as to the actings of it, which are not in all alike, nor in the ſame perſons at all times; in ſome 'tis only a ſeeing of the Son, his glory, fullneſs, and ſuitableneſs, and longing for views of an intereſt in him; in others a reliance on him, and truſting in him; and in others a holy confidence, and full aſſurance of being his: but then it is alike with reſpect to its nature, as it is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not ſeen; and as it works by love to Chriſt, and his people; it ſprings from the ſame cauſe, the love and favour of God, and has the ſame object, Jeſus Chriſt, and is followed with the ſame ſalvation; for tho' it is but as a grain of muſtard-ſeed, yet being genuine, the perſon that has it ſhall certainly be ſaved: wherefore, for the comfort and encouragement of theſe ſcattered believers, the Apoſtle aſſures them, that their faith was the ſame with their brethren that dwelt at Jeruſalem, and in Judea, who believed in Chriſt, and even with them that were the Apoſtles of Chriſt; and this he ſays they had obtained, not by their own merits or induſtry, but by the grace of God; for faith is not of a man's ſelf, it is the gift of God, and the produce of his grace and power. Some have rendered it, obtained by lot; not by chance, but by the all-wiſe, good, and powerful providence of God, ordering, directing, aſſigning, and giving this grace unto them. And which came to them thro' the righteouſneſs of God, and our ſaviour Jeſus Chriſt; or of our God, and ſaviour Jeſus Chriſt, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read; that is, of Chriſt Jeſus, who is our God and ſaviour: ſo that here is a teſtimony of the deity of Chriſt, as well as of his character as a ſaviour, who is an able, and a willing one, a full, compleat, ſuitable, and only ſaviour: and the reaſon why he is ſo, is, becauſe he is truly and properly God; and why he is ſo to us, bebecauſe he is our God: wherefore by righteouſneſs here, cannot be meant the goodneſs and mercy of God, as ſome think, tho' faith undoubtedly comes thro' that; nor the faithfulneſs of God making good his purpoſe and promiſe of giving faith to his elect, as others think; but the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is not the righteouſneſs of a creature, but of God; that is wrought out by one that is God, as well as man, and ſo anſwerable to all the purpoſes for which it is brought in. Now faith comes in, or with this righteouſneſs, as the phraſe may be rendered; when the Spirit of God reveals and brings near this righteouſneſs to a poor ſenſible ſinner, he at the ſame time works faith in him to look to it, lay hold upon it, and plead it as his juſtifying righteouſneſs with God: or it comes thro' it; hence it appears, that faith and righteouſneſs are two diſtinct things; and that faith is not a man's righteouſneſs before God, for it comes to him thro' it; as alſo, that righteouſneſs is before faith, or otherwiſe faith could not come by it; and moreover, is the cauſe and reaſon of it; faith has no cauſal influence upon righteouſneſs, but righteouſneſs has upon faith: the reaſon why a man has a juſtifying righteouſneſs, is not becauſe he has faith; but the reaſon why he has faith given him, is, becauſe he has a juſtifying righteouſneſs provided for him, and imputed to him.

Ver. 2. Grace and peace be multiplied unto you, &c.] By a multiplication of grace may be meant a larger diſcovery of the love and favour of God; which tho' it admits of no degrees in itſelf, being never more or leſs in God's heart, yet as to the manifeſtations of it, it is different, and capable of being increaſed, and drawn out to a greater length; or elſe an increaſe of the internal graces of the Spirit of God, as to the actings and exerciſe of them; or a larger meaſure of the gifts of the Spirit, for greater uſefulneſs among them; or a clearer view, and a more enlarged knowledge of the Goſpel of the grace of God, and the truths of it; and indeed, the word grace may take in all theſe ſenſes: and by a multiplication of peace, which the Apoſtle in this ſalutation alſo wiſhes for, may be deſigned an affluence of all kind of proſperity, temporal and ſpiritual, external and internal; and more eſpecially an increaſe of ſpiritual peace, a fullneſs of joy and peace in believing, ariſing from a ſenſe of free juſtification by Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and full pardon and atonement by his blood and ſacrifice: thro' the knowledge of God, and of Jeſus our Lord; which is to be underſtood, not of a natural, but of a ſpiritual and evangelical knowledge; of a knowledge of God, not as the God of nature and providence, but as the God of all grace, as in Chriſt, and a covenant God in him, and of the perſon, offices, and grace of Chriſt; and which deſigns true faith in him, by which means larger diſcoveries of the grace of God are made, and a greater enjoyment of ſpiritual peace is had: or it may be rendered, with the knowledge of God, &c. and the ſenſe then is, that the Apoſtle prays, as for a multiplication of grace and peace, ſo along with it, an increaſe of ſpiritual and evangelical knowledge; which in the beſt is imperfect, but may be increaſed by the bleſſing of God, on thoſe means which he has appointed for that end, ſuch as the word and ordinances. The Syriac verſion renders this clauſe, through the knowledge of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, leaving out the word God, and the copulative and, and adding the word Chriſt; and the Ethiopic verſion reads, in the knowledge of our God, Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, without any diſtinction. After the inſcription and ſalutation begins the Epiſtle, with an account of various ſpecial favours beſtowed upon theſe perſons; and are mentioned by the Apoſtle to encourage his faith, and theirs, in expectation of enjoying what he here wiſhes unto them, ſince already ſuch great and good things had been beſtowed upon them.

Ver. 3. According as his divine power, &c.] Meaning either the power of God the Father, to whom belong eternal power and Godhead; and he is ſometimes called by the name of power itſelf; ſee Matt. xxvi. 64. being all-powerful and mighty; or rather the power of Chriſt, ſince he is the next and immediate antecedent to this relative; and who, as he has the fullneſs of the Godhead in him, is almighty, and can do all things; and is El-ſhaddai, God all-ſufficient, and can communicate all things whatſoveer he pleaſes, and does, as follows: for he hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godlineſs; referring not ſo much to a temporal life, tho' he gives that, and preſerves it, and furniſhes with all the mercies and comforts of it; and which come to his, from him, in a covenant way, as his left hand bleſſings, and in great love; but rather a ſpiritual life, which he is the author and maintainer of, all the joys, pleaſures, bleſſings, and ſupports of it, being given by him; as alſo eternal life, for that, and every thing appertaining to it, are from him; he gives a meetneſs for it, which is his own grace, and a right unto it, which is his own righteouſneſs; and he has power to give that itſelf to as many as the Father has given him, and he does give it to them; and likewiſe all things belonging to godlineſs, or internal religion; and which is the means of eternal life, and leads on to it, and is connected with it, and has the promiſe both of this life, and of that which is to come; and every thing relating to it, or is in it, or it conſiſts of, is from Chriſt; the internal graces of the Spirit, as faith, hope, and love, which, when in exerciſe, are the principal parts of powerful godlineſs, are the gifts of Chriſt, are received out of his fullneſs, and of which he is the author and finiſher; and he is the donor of all the freſh ſupplies of grace to maintain the inward power of religion, and to aſſiſt in the external exerciſe of it: all which things are given thro' the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue. The call here ſpoken of, is not a bare outward call, by the miniſtry of the word, but an internal, ſpecial, and powerful one, which ſprings from the grace, and is according to the purpoſe of God, and is inſeparably connected with juſtification and glorification; and is either of God the Father, who, as the God of all grace, calls to eternal glory by Chriſt; or rather of Chriſt himſelf, who calls by his Spirit and grace; and hence the ſaints are ſometimes ſtiled, the called of Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. i. 6. what they are called unto by him is, glory and virtue; by the former may be meant, the glorious ſtate of the ſaints in the other world, and ſo anſwers to life, eternal life, in the preceding clauſe; and by the latter, grace, and the ſpiritual bleſſings of grace here, and which anſwers to godlineſs in the ſaid clauſe; for the ſaints are called both to grace and glory, and to the one, in order to the other. Some render it, by glory and virtue; and ſome copies, as the Alexandrian, and others, and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion read, by his own glory and virtue; that is, by his glorious power, which makes the call as effectual, and is as illuſtrious a ſpecimen of the glory of his power, as was the call of Lazarus out of the grave; unleſs the Goſpel ſhould rather be intended by glory and virtue, which is glorious in itſelf, and the power of God unto ſalvation, and is the means by which perſons are called to the communion of Chriſt, and the obtaining of his glory: ſo then this phraſe, him that hath called us to glory and virtue, is a periphraſis of Chriſt, thro' a knowledge of whom, and which is not notional and ſpeculative, but ſpiritual, experimental, fiducial, and practical, or along with ſuch knowledge all the above things are given; for as God, in giving Chriſt, gives all things along with him, ſo the Spirit of Chriſt, which is a Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of him, when he makes him known in the glory of his perſon, grace, and righteouſneſs, alſo makes known the ſeveral things which are freely given of God and Chriſt: and this is what, among other things, makes the knowledge of Chriſt preferable to all other knowledge, or any thing elſe.

Ver. 4. Whereby are given unto us, &c.] Or by which, that is, glory and virtue; by the glorious power of Chriſt, or by the glorious and powerful Goſpel of Chriſt; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, by both of which; or by whom, as the Vulgate Latin verſion reads; that is, by Chriſt; for as in him are all the promiſes of God, ſo they are at his diſpoſe, and by him are given unto the ſaints: exceeding great and precious promiſes; meaning the promiſes of the new and everlaſting covenant, of which Chriſt is the mediator, ſurety, and meſſenger; and which are exceeding great, if we conſider the author of them, who is the great God of heaven, and earth, and who was under no obligation to make promiſes of any thing to his creatures; and therefore muſt ariſe from great grace and favour, of which they are largely expreſſive, and are like himſelf; are ſuch as become his greatneſs and goodneſs, and are confirmed by his oath, and made good by his power and faithfulneſs: and they are alſo great, as to the nature and matter of them; they are better promiſes than thoſe of the covenant of works; they are not merely temporal ones, nor are they conditional and legal; but as they relate to things ſpiritual and eternal, to grace here, and glory hereafter, ſo they are abſolute, free, and unconditional, and are irreverſible and unchangeable; and they anſwer great ends and purpoſes, the glory of God, and the everlaſting good and happineſs of his people; and therefore muſt be precious, of more value and worth than thouſands of gold and ſilver, and to be rejoiced at more than at the finding of a great ſpoil, being every way ſuited to the caſes of God's people, and which never fail. The end of giving them is, that by theſe you might be partakers of the divine nature; not eſſentially, or of the eſſence of God, ſo as to be deified, this is impoſſible, for the nature, perfections, and glory of God, are incommunicable to creatures; nor hypoſtatically and perſonally, ſo as the human nature of Chriſt, in union with the Son of God, is a partaker of the divine nature in him; but by way of reſemblance and likeneſs, the new man, or principle of grace, being formed in the heart, in regeneration, after the image of God, and bearing a likeneſs to the image of his Son; and this is ſtiled, Chriſt formed in the heart, into which image and likeneſs the ſaints are more and more changed, from glory to glory, thro' the application of the Goſpel, and the promiſes of it, by which they have ſuch ſights of Chriſt as do transform them, and aſſimilate them to him; and which reſemblance will be perfected hereafter, when they ſhall be entirely like him, and ſee him as he is: having eſcaped the corruption that is in the world thro' luſt; not the corruption and depravity of nature, which is never eſcaped by any, nor got rid of ſo long as the ſaints are in the world; but the corrupt manners of the world, or thoſe corruptions and vices which are prevalent in the world, and under the power and dominion of which the world lies; and particularly the ſins of uncleanneſs, adultery, inceſt, ſodomy, and ſuch like filthy and unnatural luſts, which abounded in the world, and among ſome that called themſelves chriſtians, and eſpecially the followers of Simon Magus. Now the Goſpel, and the precious promiſes, being gratiouſly beſtowed, and powerfully applied, have an influence on purity of heart, and converſation, and teach men to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly; ſuch are the powerful effects of Goſpel-promiſes, under divine influence, as to make men inwardly partakers of the divine nature, and outwardly to abſtain from, and avoid the prevailing corruptions and vices of the times.

Ver. 5. And beſides this, giving all diligence, &c.] Or upon this, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions read, beſtow all your labour, diligence, and care; namely, on what follows, and that from the conſideration of what goes before; for nothing can more ſtrongly animate, and engage to the diligent exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty, than a conſideration of the high favours, and free grace-gifts of God, and the exceeding great and precious promiſes of his Goſpel: add to your faith virtue; or with your faith, ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, and the like, in the following clauſes. They had faith, even like precious faith with the Apoſtles, not of themſelves, but by the gift of God, and which is the firſt and principal grace; it leads the van, or rather the chorus, as the word rendered add, ſignifies; and tho' it is in itſelf imperfect, has many things lacking in it, yet it can't be added to, or increaſed by men; miniſters may be a means of perfecting what is lacking in it, and of the furtherance and joy of it, but it is the Lord only that can increaſe it, or add unto it, in that ſenſe, and which is not the meaning here: but the ſenſe is, that as it is the baſis and foundation of all good works, it ſhould not ſtand alone, there ought to be virtue, or good works along with it, by which it may be perfected, not eſſentially, but evidentially, or might appear to be true and genuine; for by virtue, may be either meant ſome particular virtue, as juſtice towards men, to which both the grace and doctrine of faith direct; and indeed pretenſions to faith in Chriſt, where there is not common juſtice done to men, are of little account; or, as others think, beneficence to men; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, proceed to bounty by your faith; and faith does work by love and kindneſs to fellow-creatures and chriſtians; but this ſeems rather deſigned by brotherly kindneſs and charity, in ver. 7. or boldneſs, courage, conſtancy, and fortitude, which ought to go along with faith. Where there is true faith in Chriſt, there ſhould be a holy boldneſs to profeſs it, and conſtancy in it, and courage to fight the good fight of faith, and firmneſs of mind to ſtand faſt in it, notwithſtanding all difficulties and diſcouragements; or virtue in general is here meant, not mere moral, but chriſtian virtues, which are the fruits of the Spirit of God, and of his grace; and differ from the other, in that they ſpring from the grace of God, are done in faith, by the aſſiſtance of the Spirit of Chriſt, and by ſtrength received from him, and in love to him, and with a view to the glory of God; whereas moral virtues, as exerciſed by a mere moral man, ſpring from nature, and are performed by the mere ſtrength of it, and are deſtitute of faith, and ſo but, ſplendida peccata, ſplendid ſins, and proceed from ſelf-love, from ſiniſter ends, and with ſelfiſh views: and to virtue, knowledge; not of Chriſt, mentioned ver. 8. and which is included in faith, for there can be no true faith in Chriſt, where there is not knowledge of him; but of the will of God, which it is neceſſary men ſhould be accquainted with, in order to perform it; or elſe tho' they may ſeem zealous of good works, their zeal will not be according to knowledge; they ought to know what are virtues or good works in God's account, and what are the nature and uſe of them, leſt they ſhould miſtake and miſapply them; or of the ſcriptures of truth, and of the myſteries of the Goſpel, which ſhould be diligently ſearched, for the increaſe and improvement of knowledge in divine things, and which has a conſiderable influence on a juſt, ſober, and godly living; or by knowledge may be meant, prudence and wiſdom, in ordering the external converſation aright towards thoſe that are without, and in ſhewing good works out of it, to others, by way of example, and for the evidence of the truth of things, with meekneſs of wiſdom.

Ver. 6. And to knowledge, temperance, &c.] Avoiding all exceſs in eating and drinking, and all impure and unclean luſts; for it ſignifies nothing what a man knows, or profeſſes to know, if his life is a ſcene of intemperance and debauchery: this ſeems to be levelled againſt the followers of Simon Magus, who aſcertained ſalvation to knowledge, tho' the life was ever ſo impure. Moreover, this may include abſtinence, not only from hurtful luſts, but from the uſe of things indifferent, when the peace and comfort of a weak brother are endangered; for then, to knowledge, muſt be added love, otherwiſe that knowledge will not be right, at leaſt not rightly uſed; ſee 1 Cor. viii. 1, 2, 7, 10, 11. and to temperance, patience; which is neceſſary to the running of the chriſtian race, which is attended with many difficulties, and exerciſes; and under affliction from the hand of God, that there be no murmuring nor repining; and under reproaches and perſecutions from men, that they faint not, and are not diſcouraged by them; and in the expectation of the heavenly glory: this is proper to be ſuperadded to the former, becauſe there may be intemperance in paſſion, as well as in the uſe of the creatures; a man may be inebriated with wrath and anger, and overcome with impatience, as well as with wine and ſtrong drink: and to patience, godlineſs; either internal, which is diſtinguiſhed from bodily exerciſe, or outward worſhip, and lies in the inward and powerful exerciſe of grace, as faith, hope, love, fear, &c. and the Syriac verſion here renders it, the fear of God; or rather external, and intends the whole worſhip of God, as prayer, praiſe, hearing of the word, and attendance on all ordinances.

Ver. 7. And to godlineſs, brotherly kindneſs, &c.] Without which, godlineſs, or external worſhip, or a profeſſion of religion, is a vain ſhow; for this is both the evidence of regeneration, and of the truth and power of real godlineſs; and alſo the beauty, comfort, and ſecurity of chriſtian ſociety and worſhip, and without which they can't be maintained with peace, profit, and honour: and to brotherly kindneſs, charity; or love; that is, to all men, enemies, as well as to the houſhold of faith; and to God and Chriſt, to his houſe, worſhip, ordinances, people, and truths. Charity is more extenſive in its objects and acts than brotherly kindneſs, or love. As faith leads the van, charity brings up the rear, and is the greateſt of all.

Ver. 8. For if theſe things be in you, &c.] Are wrought in you by the Spirit of God, and exerciſed and performed by his aſſiſtance, who works in his people both to will and do: and abound; increaſe in their acts and exerciſes by the frequent performance of them: they make you; both by way of influence and evidence, that ye ſhall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. There is a knowledge of Chriſt which is barren and fruitleſs; and thoſe that have it are ſo in their converſations, and it will be of no avail to them another day: and this is a mere notional and ſpeculative knowledge, ſuch as is not attended with any inward experience and application of Chriſt to themſelves, or any fruits of righteouſneſs in their lives, and is a bare theory of things relating to his perſon, offices, and works; but there is a knowledge of him that is ſpiritual and experimental, by which a ſoul not only approves of Chriſt, but places its truſt and confidence in him, and appropriates him to himſelf, and practically obſerves his commands and ordinances in the faith of him; and in love to him, he performs the above duties, and exerciſes the above graces; from whence it appears, that he is neither barren, nor unfruitful himſelf in the profeſſion of his knowledge of Chriſt; or in the acknowledgment of him, as it may be rendered; nor is that a vain, empty, and uſeleſs thing: he is not like the barren fig-tree, or the earth that bears briars and thorns, and is nigh to curſing and burning, but like a tree planted by a river of water, and is green, flouriſhing, and fruitful. This is uſed as an argument to enforce the foregoing exhortation, to add to, that is, to exerciſe and perform the above graces, and duties, in conjunction with each other.

Ver. 9. But he that lacketh theſe things, &c.] Or in, and with whom, they are not; that is, theſe virtues, as the Arabic verſion reads, as faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godlineſs, brotherly kindneſs, and charity; where the principles of thoſe things are not, and they are not exerciſed and performed, ſuch an one is blind; let him boaſt ever ſo much of his light and knowledge, and value himſelf upon it, and expect to be ſaved by it, let him live as he will; for he has no true knowledge of God, as in Chriſt, as the God of all grace, as his covenant God and Father; nor does he know what it is to have communion with him in Chriſt; he only profeſſes to know him in words, whilſt in works he denies him; nor has he any right knowledge of Chriſt, only notional and general, not ſpiritual, experimental, particular, and practical; he does not ſee the Son, ſo as truly to believe in him; he has no true ſight of his beauty, ſuitableneſs, and fulneſs, and of him for himſelf; nor any experience of the work of the Spirit of God upon his heart, when he neither receives, ſees, nor knows ſpiritually, any more than the world itſelf does; nor does he ſee the plague of his own heart, the corruptions of his nature, and the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin; nor has he any true ſpiritual light into the Goſpel, and the doctrines of it, only a form of godlineſs, without the power of it: and therefore whatever natural underſtanding of things he has, he is ſpiritually blind, and cannot ſee afar off; at leaſt, not the good land that is afar off, the kingdom of heaven; the inviſible glories of the other world; things that are not ſeen, which are eternal, which one that has true faith has a glimpſe and ſight of; nor Chriſt, who is in heaven at the right hand of God, and the things of Chriſt, his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, carried within the vail; nor even what is within himſelf, the ſins of his heart, the pollution of his nature, and the evil that dwells there; he ſees not that he is poor, and wretched, and miſerable, but fancies himſelf to be rich, and in need of nothing; he ſees nothing but outward things, the things of time and ſenſe, worldly and earthly things, which are near him, and all around him, which he minds, on which his heart is ſet, and he purſues with vigour. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, trying with the hand, as blind men do, feeling and groping to find the way; ſee Acts xvii. 27. and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old ſins; not by baptiſm, from the ſins committed before it, for that does not purge from any ſins, old or new, but that which it leads the faith of believers to, for pardon and cleanſing, even the blood of Chriſt; but this alſo, and purification by it, is not meant here, tho' generally interpreters give this as the ſenſe, and underſtand it of the ſin of ingratitude in ſuch a perſon, who had received ſo great a benefit by Chriſt, and was unmindful of it; ſince it can't be thought that one ſo deſcribed, as above, ſhould ever have had his conſcience purged by the blood of Chriſt from his old ſins, or thoſe before converſion, unleſs it be by profeſſion; and then the ſenſe is, that he has forgotten that he once profeſſed to have been purged from all his ſins by Chriſt; which, if he had, would have made him zealous of good works, and put him upon glorifying Chriſt both in body and ſpirit. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, and he hath forgot to purge himſelf from old ſins; which he would have been concerned for, had he had a true and ſpiritual knowledge of Chriſt, and his Goſpel, and an application of the exceeding great and precious promiſes of it, or had been made a partaker of the divine nature thro' them; ſee 2 Cor. vii. 1. but the words are better rendered agreeable to the original text, and hath forgotten the purification of his old, or former ſins; or ſins of old, as they are rendered by the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions; that is, he does not conſider, nor think of it, that he was a ſinner of old, a ſinner in Adam, that he was conceived and ſhapen in ſin, and went aſtray, and was called a tranſgreſſor from the womb; he does not think that he ſtands in any need of being purged from former ſins; and is entirely unmindful of, and neglects the purification of them by the blood of Chriſt.

Ver. 10. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence, &c.] To exerciſe the afore-mentioned graces, and to perform the above duties, ſince this is the way to make your calling and election ſure; by calling is not meant, a call to any office in the church, nor an external call, either by the voice of nature, or by the miniſtry of the word; but an internal and effectual call by ſpecial grace, to grace here, and glory hereafter; inſtead of calling, the Alexandrian copy reads, comfort: and by election is meant, not a national, nor church-election, but a particular and perſonal one, ſince ſcattered ſaints, and particular believers are here written to, and each called upon to be diligent to make their own, and not another's, calling and election ſure; nor is a choice of perſons to an office deſigned, ſeeing the Apoſtle writes not to officers of churches in particular, but to believers in common; nor a ſeparation of perſons from the world by effectual vocation, ſince theſe two are both mentioned here, and as diſtinct from each other, and to be made ſure; but an election of particular perſons to eternal life and ſalvation is here intended, which is an eternal act of God, ariſes from his free grace and favour, and is according to his ſovereign will and pleaſure; and is abſolute, and independent of any condition, foreſeen, or required in men, as faith, holineſs, and good works; all which are fruits and effects, and not cauſes and conditions of electing grace. Theſe may be made ſure, not in themſelves, or with reſpect to God, for in this ſenſe they can't be made ſurer than they are: effectual calling is according to the purpoſe of God, which can't be fruſtrated, and is, without repentance, irreverſible, and irrevocable, and is inſeparably connected with eternal glory; and election ſtands not upon the foot of works, but upon the free grace of God, which cannot be made void, and upon the will of God, which cannot be reſiſted; and is alſo cloſely connected with glorification; ſee Rom. viii. 30. nor are thoſe to be made ſure by ſaints, with reſpect to themſelves; for tho' they may ſometimes be at a loſs about them, and may have ſome ſcruples and doubts in their minds concerning their intereſt in them, and an aſſurance of their being both called and choſen, may be after all attained unto by them; yet this is not their work, but it is the work of the Spirit of God, to certify and make ſure unto them, or aſſure them of, their vocation and election of God: but the ſenſe is, that diligence is to be uſed by the ſaints, to make their calling and election ſure to others; not their election by their calling only, which is to themſelves; for both are to be made ſure, and that to others, and by ſome third thing; either to their fellow chriſtians, which they may do by giving them an account of the work of God upon their ſouls, joined with a teſtimony of their good lives and converſations; or rather to the world by good works, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, and two copies of Beza's read; or by your good works, as the Alexandrian copy, and the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read; or by the exerciſe of the graces, and the diſcharge of the duties before mentioned, whereby the men of the world may be certified and aſſured, by the beſt evidence the ſaints are capable of giving to them, or they of receiving, that they are the called and choſen of God, they profeſs themſelves to be; and which is a reaſon why thoſe things ſhould be done: and another follows, for if ye do theſe things, ye ſhall never fall; or ſin, as the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions render it; not that they ſhould never fall at all, or in any ſenſe, for in many things we all offend or fall; or ſhould ever commit any act of ſin, or fall into ſin, for there is no man that lives, and ſins not; or that they ſhould not fall from a degree of the lively exerciſe of grace, or from a degree of ſtedfaſtneſs in the doctrine of faith, but that they ſhould never ſin the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, or fall totally and finally; for tho' they fall, they ſhould riſe again by faith and repentance, thro' the grace and power of Chriſt, who is able to keep them from falling: and beſides, whilſt they were exerciſing thoſe graces, and doing thoſe duties, they ſhould not fall; for theſe are the means of final perſeverance, and therefore the rather to be regarded. Another argument, ſtrengthening the exhortation, follows:

Ver. 11. For ſo an entrance ſhall be miniſtred unto you abundantly, &c.] An abundant ſupply of grace and ſtrength ſhall be freely afforded, to carry thro' all the duties and trials of life; and when that ſhall be ended, an admiſſion will be granted into the everlaſting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; meaning, not the Goſpel-diſpenſation, or the ſpiritual kingdom of Chriſt, which is not of this world, but lies among his people, who are called out of it, in whom he reigns by his Spirit and grace, according to laws of his own enacting; nor his perſonal kingdom on earth with his ſaints, which will laſt only a thouſand years, and not be for ever; but the kingdom of heaven, or the ultimate glory, which will be everlaſting; and is called a kingdom, to denote the glory and excellency of that ſtate; and an everlaſting one, becauſe it will never end; and the kingdom of Chriſt, becauſe it is in his poſſeſſion, for his people; it is prepared by him, and he will introduce them into it, when they ſhall be for ever with him, and reign with him for ever and ever. Some copies read, the heavenly kingdom. There is an entrance of ſeparate ſouls into this kingdom at death; and which may be ſaid to be miniſtred abundantly to them, or richly, as the word ſignifies, when they depart out of this world with joy and comfort; triumphing over death, and the grave, in a full view by faith of their intereſt in the love of God, the grace of Chriſt, and the glories of another world; and there is an entrance into it at judgment, and which will be abundantly, when all the ſaints, together, in their ſouls and bodies, ſhall be introduced by Chriſt into the full joy of their Lord. As the ſaints enter the kingdom thro' many tribulations, the gate is ſtrait, and the way is narrow, and they are ſcarcely ſaved, and many of them, ſo as only by fire; but when the abundant grace given unto them by the way to heaven, the great conſolation many enjoy in their laſt moments, and eſpecially the free and full admiſſion of them both at death, and at judgment, to eternal happineſs, are conſidered, the entrance miniſtred may be ſaid to be abundantly; or, as the Arabic verſion renders it, with a breadth; the entrance is large and broad.

Ver. 12. Wherefore I will not be negligent, &c.] The Apoſtle having made uſe of proper arguments to excite the ſaints he writes to, to regard the exhortation he had given, to the diligent exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty, proceeds to give the reaſons of his own conduct, why he gave ſuch an exhortation to them, and preſſed it, and continued to do ſo, and determined for the future to go on with it, as particularly the uſefulneſs and profitableneſs of it; and therefore, ſeeing it would be attended with ſo many advantages before mentioned, he was reſolved, that he would not be careleſs, nor omit any opportunity that ſhould offer: to put you always in remembrance of theſe things; of the exerciſe of the above graces, and the performance of the above duties, which ſaints are too apt to forget, and therefore ſhould be reminded of; and it is the duty and buſineſs of the miniſters of the word, frequently to inculcate thoſe things: tho' ye know them, and be eſtabliſhed in the preſent truth; for thoſe that know the moſt, know but in part, and may have their knowledge increaſed; and thoſe that are the moſt eſtabliſhed in the truths of the Goſpel, may be confirmed yet more and more. This the Apoſtle mentions as an apology for himſelf, and to prevent an objection that might be made, as if he had ſuggeſted, that they were ignorant and unſtable; or which might inſinuate, that there was no neceſſity of ſuch frequent putting in remembrance; ſince they were both knowing and ſtable: by the preſent truth may be meant, either the whole ſcheme of the Goſpel, which was now come by Chriſt, in oppoſition to the exhibition of it under the former diſpenſation, by promiſe and type; and it being ſo called, ſhews, that it is always now, and new; that there will be no alteration in it, nor addition to it, it being like the author of it, the ſame yeſterday, to-day, and for ever, and will not give place to another ſcheme of things; or elſe the particular truth of the coming of Chriſt, either to take vengeance on the Jewiſh nation, or to judge the world in righteouſneſs, and introduce his own people into the new heavens, and new earth, ch. iii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 10, 12, 13.

Ver. 13. Yea, I think it meet, &c.] Or juſt. This is the Apoſtle's other reaſon for his conduct, taken from the duty of his place and office; judging it to be what became him, as an Apoſtle, and elder, and the miniſter of the circumciſion, and was what was due to God and Chriſt, whom he ſerved, and the ſouls of men, under his care: as long as I am in this tabernacle; or body, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render it, and ſo ſome copies; for the body is as a tabernacle for the ſoul to dwell in, pitched for a time, and 'ere long, to be taken down; ſee the note on 2 Cor. v. 1. to ſtir you up; to the lively exerciſe of grace, and conſtant performance of duty: by putting you in remembrance; of the ſaid things; for ſaints are apt to be forgetful of their duty, and backward to it, and ſluggiſh and ſlothful in it.

Ver. 14. Knowing that ſhortly I muſt put off this my tabernacle, &c.] Which is another reaſon why the Apoſtle was ſo preſſing in this caſe, and ſo much urged the exhortation, and was ſo diligent in reminding the ſaints of it, and ſtirring them up to obſerve it, becauſe he knew he had but a little time to live, and which therefore he was willing to improve for their good. He ſets forth his death in a very eaſy and familiar way, it being not at all terrible and diſtreſſing to him; it was but like the putting off of a garment, or unpinning of a tabernacle, or a removing from a tent to a palace. Saints are pilgrims here, they dwell in tents or tabernacles, at death they remove to their own country, and Father's houſe. Death is not a deſtruction of man, an annihilation of him, neither of his ſoul nor body: the ſoul is not mortal, it dies not with the body; it only removes from this world to another, from a cottage to a kingdom; and the body, tho' it dies, it is not reduced to nothing, it is only like a tabernacle put off, or taken down, which will be put together again in better order than now it is. Even as our Lord Jeſus hath ſhewed me; by ſome ſpecial revelation lately made to him; or by ſome ſtrong impulſe upon his mind; juſt as the Apoſtle Paul knew that the time of his departure was at hand, 2 Tim. iv. 7. or this may have reſpect to the words of Chriſt to Peter, above thirty years before, in John xxi. 18. which both ſignified what kind of death he ſhould die, and when it ſhould be; namely, when he was old, as now he was.

Ver. 15. Moreover, I will endeavour, &c.] He ſignifies, that he ſhould not only uſe all diligence to ſtir them up to, and put them in remembrance of the neceſſary duties of their calling whilſt he was alive, but ſhould make it his ſtudy to concert ſome meaſures, and take ſome ſteps, that you may be able, after my deceaſe; or Exodus, meaning his going out of this world by death, in alluſion to the Iſraelites going out of Egypt, and marching for Canaan's land; this world being like Egypt, a place of wickedneſs, miſery, and bondage; as heaven, like Canaan, a place and ſtate of reſt and happineſs. To have theſe things always in remembrance; by which they might be always put in mind of them, or by recurring to which they might have their memories refreſhed; and what he means is, to leave theſe exhortations and admonitions in writing, which they might read, and be of uſe to them when he was dead and gone; and indeed by this, and his former Epiſtle, tho' being dead, he yet ſpeaketh.

Ver. 16. For we have not followed cunningly deviſed fables, &c.] Such as Jewiſh fables cautioned againſt, Tit. i. 14. which their traditionary and oral law, their Talmud, and other writings, mention; as concerning the temporal kingdom of the Meſſiah, the ſumptuous feaſt, and carnal pleaſures, and entertainments of that ſtate, with many other things; ſome of which indeed are not very cunningly put together, but weak enough: or Gentile fables concerning the theogony and exploits of their deities; and which may be meant by fables and endleſs genealogies in 1 Tim. i. 4. and eſpecially reference may be had to the metamorphoſes of their gods, and their fables relating to them, deviſed by Ovid, and others, ſince the Apoſtle is about to ſpeak of the metamorphoſis, or transfiguration of Chriſt; and alſo other fables, with which their poets and hiſtories abound; and likewiſe the propheſies of the ſybils, and the oracles at Delphos, and elſewhere: or the fabulous accounts of the followers of Simon Magus concerning God, angels, the creation of the world, and the ſeveral Æones; or the more artful compoſures of the falſe teachers, ſet off with all the cunning, ſophiſtry, wit, and eloquence they were maſters of. Now in order to ſet forth the nature, excellency, and certainty of the doctrine the Apoſtle taught, eſpecially that part of it which reſpected the coming of Chriſt; and to ſhew that it was worth his while to put them in mind of it, and theirs to remember it; he obſerves, that he and his fellow Apoſtles did not proceed in their account of it, on ſuch a foundation, but upon an evidence which they had received, both with their eyes and ears, and alſo on a word of prophecy ſurer than that: when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; not his firſt coming, tho' that, and the benefits ariſing from it, were the ſubject of their miniſtry; and that was attended with divine power, which appeared in the incarnation of Chriſt itſelf, which was owing to the power of the higheſt; and was ſeen in his doctrine and miniſtry, which were with great authority; and in the miracles which he wrought, which proved him to have power equal with God, his Father; and in the work of redemption, which he came about and finiſhed; in doing which he made an end of ſin, and ſaved his people from it, redeemed them from the curſe of the law, overcame the world, deſtroyed ſatan, and aboliſhed death; and eſpecially in his reſurrection from the dead, when he was declared to be the Son of God with power: but notwithſtanding his firſt coming was in great humility, in much meanneſs and imbecility, he grew up as a tender plant, and was encompaſſed with infirmities, and at laſt was crucified thro' weakneſs. This therefore was to be underſtood of an after coming of his, which the Apoſtle had wrote of, and made known in his former Epiſtle, ch. i. 7, 13. and iv. 5. and which he puts them in mind of in this, ch. iii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 10, 12, 13. nor is the word παρουσια uſed of any other coming of Chriſt, and this will be with power; and it deſigns his more near coming to take vengeance on the Jewiſh nation, and deliver his people from the afflictions and perſecution they laboured under, and which was with great power; ſee Matt. xxiv. 3, 30. Mark ix. 1. or more remote, namely, at the laſt day, when there will be a great diſplay of power in raiſing the dead, gathering all nations before him, ſeparating them one from another, paſſing the final ſentence on each, and executing the ſame in the utter deſtruction of the wicked, and the compleat glorification of the ſaints. But were eye-witneſſes of his majeſty; meaning, not of the glory of his divine nature by faith, and with the eyes of their underſtanding, while others only conſidered him as a mere man; nor of the miracles he wrought, in which there was a diſplay of his glory and majeſty, of all which the Apoſtles were eye-witneſſes; but of that glory and greatneſs which were upon him, when he was transfigured on the mount before them; then his face was as the ſun, and ſuch a glory on his whole body, that it darted thro' his clothes, and made them glitter like light, and as white as ſnow, and ſo as no fuller on earth could whiten them; at which time alſo Moſes and Elias appeared in glorious forms: and now this was a prelude and pledge of his power and coming, of his kingdom coming with power, and of his coming in his own, and his Father's glory, and in the glory of the holy angels. This was a proof, that notwithſtanding his meanneſs in his incarnate ſtate, yet he was glorified, and would be glorified again; and this was a confirmation of it to the Apoſtles, and might be to others; ſee Matt. xvi. 27, 28. and xvii. 1. Mark viii. 38. and ix. 1. Luke ix. 26, 27, 28.

Ver. 17. For he received from God the Father honour and glory, &c.] Not as an inferior from a ſuperior, for he was equal in glory with the Father, and was, and is the brightneſs of his Father's glory; nor eſſentially, having the ſame glory as his Father, and to which nothing can be added; but declaratively, God the Father teſtifying of his glory, declaring the honour that belonged to him, as the Son of God, at the ſame time that an external glory was put on him, and received by him, as the ſon of man: when there came ſuch a voice to him from the excellent glory; from the bright cloud which overſhadowed Jeſus, Moſes, and Elias, and was a ſymbol of the glory and preſence of God, as the cloud in the tabernacle and temple were, Exod. xl. 35, 36. 1 Kings viii. 10, 11. or from heaven, the habitation of the holineſs and glory of God, and where he diſplays the glory of his being and perfections; or from himſelf, ſelf, who is the God and Father of glory, and is glorious in himſelf, in all his attributes and works. So כבוד, glory, with the Cabaliſtic Jews, ſignifies the Shekinah, or divine preſence[d]; and every number in the Cabaliſtic tree is called by the name of glory; the ſecond number, which is wiſdom, is called the firſt glory; and the third number, underſtanding, is called, כבוד עליון, the ſupreme, or chief glory[e]: ſo the firſt path, which is the ſupreme crown, is ſometimes called the firſt glory, as the Father is here the moſt excellent glory; and the ſecond path, which is the underſtanding enlightening, the ſecond glory[f]. And this voice was not that at his baptiſm; for tho' that was from heaven, and from God the Father, and expreſſed the ſame words as here; yet it was not on a mount, nor from a cloud, nor was it heard by the Apoſtles, who, as yet, were not with Chriſt, nor called by him; nor that of which mention is made in John xii. 28. for tho' that alſo was from God the Father, and from heaven, and which declaratively gave honour and glory to Chriſt, yet did not expreſs the words here mentioned; but that voice which came from the cloud, when Chriſt was transfigured on the mount, and which was heard by his three diſciples, Peter, James, and John, when the following words were articulately pronounced, this is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 5. The Vulgate Latin verſion adds here, as there, hear ye him.

Ver. 18. And this voice, which came from heaven, we heard, &c.] Peter, who wrote this Epiſtle, and James and John, the favourite diſciples of Chriſt; and who were a ſufficient number to bear witneſs of what they then ſaw and heard: when we were with him; and ſaw his glory, and the glory of Moſes and Elias, and were ſo delighted with his company, and theirs, and with communion with him, that Peter, in the name of the reſt, deſired to ſtay there: in the holy mount; the Ethiopic verſion reads, in the mountain of his ſanctuary; and ſo Grotius underſtands it of mount Moriah, on which the temple was built, called the holy hill, and the holy hill of Zion; and ſuppoſes that this voice was heard in the temple, and that it refers to John xii. 28. but without any foundation; for the mount on which Chriſt was transfigured is here meant; and which was either, as is generally ſaid, Tabor, a mountain in Galilee; or it may be Lebanon, which was near Cæſarea Philippi, in the parts of which Chriſt then was: and it is called holy, from his preſence or transfiguration on it, who is the holy one; juſt as the land on which Moſes was, and the city and temple of Jeruſalem, and mount Sion, and Sinai, are called holy, from the preſence of the holy God there, Exod. iii. 5. Matt. iv. 5. Pſ. ii. 6. and lxviii. 17. Now ſuch a declaration of the honour and glory of Chriſt, as the Son of God being made by God, the Father, in a voice from heaven, which the Apoſtles heard with their ears, at the ſame time that they ſaw with their eyes, his human body glorified in an amazing manner, was to them a confirming evidence that he would come again in power and glory; and upon this evidence, they declared, and made known to the ſaints, the power and coming of Chriſt; tho' not on this evidence only, but alſo upon the more ſure word of prophecy, which entirely agrees with it.

Ver. 19. We have alſo a more ſure word of prophecy, &c.] Tho' this word of prophecy is generally underſtood of the writings and propheſies of the Old Teſtament concerning Chriſt, yet different ways are taken to fix the compariſon: ſome think the ſenſe is, that they are more ſure than the cunningly deviſed fables, ver. 16. but as theſe have no certainty nor authority in them, but are entirely to be rejected, the Apoſtle would never put the ſacred writings in compariſon with them: and it is moſt clear, that the compariſon lies between this word of prophecy, and the teſtimony of the Apoſtles, who were eye and ear-witneſſes of the majeſty and glory of Chriſt; but how prophecy ſhould be a ſurer evidence of Chriſt, and the Goſpel, than ſuch a teſtimony, is difficult to underſtand; and is a ſenſe which all agree to reject, by different methods: ſome think, that a comparative is uſed for a poſitive, and that the meaning is, that beſides the teſtimony of the Apoſtles, prophecy is a very ſure evidence; and this is countenanced by the Syriac verſion, which renders it, and we have alſo a firm, or true word of prophecy; to which the Arabic agrees, and we have a word of prophecy very true: others chuſe to retain the compariſon, and which indeed ought not to be thrown out; but theſe are divided about it; ſome are of opinion, that it is to be underſtood of the Jews to whom the Apoſtle writes, and he himſelf was one, and the ſenſe to be this; not that prophecy in itſelf was ſurer than an apoſtolical teſtimony, but that it was ſurer to the Jews, and more valid with them, who had been trained up in, and long uſed to the prophetic writings; and who had a greater eſteem for the prophets of the Old Teſtament, than for the Apoſtles of the New; but it is ſcarcely credible that the Apoſtle, who had been an eye and ear-witneſs in the holy mount, would put himſelf in among them, and ſay, we have, &c. for what ever prophecy was to them, it could not be ſurer to him than what he had ſeen with his eyes, and heard with his ears. Others ſuppoſe that the meaning is, that prophecy was now ſurer to the chriſtians, than it was before, it being confirmed and eſtabliſhed by facts and events, and alſo by miracles, and even by the atteſtation of this voice heard on the mount, and by the majeſty of Chriſt ſeen there; but if this had been the ſenſe of the Apoſtle, he would have uſed theſe words, now and before; and beſides, this puts the compariſon quite out of its place, which manifeſtly ſtands between former prophecy, and the preſent teſtimony of the Apoſtles: but the truth of the matter is, that this word of prophecy is not to be underſtood of the prophetical writings of the Old Teſtament; for tho' theſe are the word of God, and do teſtify of Chriſt, and are to be taken heed, and attended to, as proofs and evidence of Goſpel truths, and are a light to direct and guide in matters, both of faith and practice, yet they are not the only light, and are far from being the cleareſt, and what are only to be attended to; for the Goſpel that came by Chriſt, and is preached by his Apoſtles, and is contained in the writings of the New Teſtament, is a much clearer light, and at leaſt equally to be attended to: nor are the propheſies of the Old Teſtament, which particularly relate to Chriſt, deſigned; there are many of this kind, which put together, may very well be called the word of prophecy, and which were to the Jews a light in a dark place, until Chriſt came in the fleſh; and though they are to be attended to, and compared with facts, to ſhew the truth of the divine revelation, yet they are not a ſurer evidence, nor ſo ſure an evidence, as the evangelical teſtimony is, which is of facts, and theſe ſupported by miracles; for now the day ſpring from on high hath viſited us, and Chriſt, the bright and morning-ſtar has appeared: but the word of prophecy, concerning Chriſt's ſecond coming, is here intended, whether it lies in the words of the prophets of the Old Teſtament, as in Pſ. xcvi. 13. Dan. vii. 9, 10, 13. or in the words of Chriſt, Matt. xvi. 27, 28. and xxiv. 3, 30, 44. which latter is moſt likely. The Ethiopic verſion underſtands this of ſome particular prophecy, and as if the words were a citation of ſome prophet, rendering the words thus, and we have a voice more ancient than this, of a prophet, ſaying, ye do well who take heed, &c. Sir Iſaac Newton is of opinion, that the Apoſtle refers to the book of the Revelation of St. John, which would not be unlikely, could it be proved that it was then written. Now this prophecy, or prediction, concerning Chriſt's coming again with power and great glory, was a ſurer evidence of it, than what the Apoſtles ſaw with their eyes, and heard with their ears upon the mount; nothing was ſurer to them, nor could any thing make it ſurer to them, that he was honoured and glorified, than what they ſaw and heard; but then this did not ſo certainly prove, that he would hereafter be glorified, or come again in glory. What they ſaw and heard was a preſumptive proof that it might be ſo, and was a confirming pledge and evidence to them that ſo it would be, and was a glorious repreſentation of it; but Chriſt's prophecy or prediction, that ſo it ſhould be, more ſtrongly aſcertained it, ſince he ſaid it, to whom all things were known from the beginning, and whoſe counſel ſhall ſtand, and not one word of his ſhall ever fail. Whereunto ye do well, that ye take heed as unto a light that ſhineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-ſtar ariſe in your hearts. The prophecy concerning Chriſt's ſecond coming, is as a light; 'tis a revelation of that which was in the dark, lay hid as a ſecret and myſtery in the heart of God; and which could not be known by men, had it not been foretold by God; and 'tis made as prophecy in all other caſes is, by throwing light, as to this affair, into the mind of him, or them, to whom it is revealed; and is a light to them to whom it is delivered, and which they ſhould attend unto, as to a lamp or torch, to guide and direct them; tho' in ſome ſenſe it is but a feeble one, and is as a light that ſhineth in a dark place; meaning not the world, which is a place of darkneſs, ignorance, and error; nor merely the ſtate of the ſaints in general in this life, who at moſt, and beſt, ſee but thro' a glaſs darkly; but has a particular reſpect to the darkneſs which attends the ſaints, concerning the ſecond coming of Chriſt, and which will eſpecially attend them a little before that time. Prophecy holds out clearly, that Chriſt will come again; that he will come in great glory, in his Father's, and in his own, and in the glory of his angels, and with great power, to raiſe the dead, and judge mankind; and tho' it gives hints, that upon this, the ſaints ſhall be with Chriſt in the air, on earth, and in heaven; and that there will be new heavens, and a new earth; and that the ſaints ſhall reign here with Chriſt a thouſand years, after which the Gog and Magog army will attack them without ſucceſs; yet theſe are not ſo clear, as for ſaints to be agreed in the ſenſe of them; and much more are they in the dark about the time of his coming. Now prophecy is the ſureſt evidence, and beſt light the ſaints have concerning this matter, until the day dawn; not the Goſpel-day, ſo much ſpoken of by the prophets, that had dawned already; rather a more clear knowledge of Chriſt, and Goſpel truths, which will be in the ſpiritual kingdom and reign of Chriſt hereafter; or elſe the latter day-glory, at the perſonal coming of Chriſt, when the light of the moon ſhall be as that of the ſun, and that of the ſun ſhall be ſeven-fold as the light of ſeven days; yea, when there will be no need of ſun or moon, but Chriſt ſhall be come, and be the light of his people; ſee Iſ. xxx. 26. and lx. 1, 2. Rev. xxi. 23, 24. after which will follow the everlaſting day of glory, when all darkneſs will be gone, and ſaints ſhall ſee face to face, and know as they are known: and the day-ſtar ariſe in your hearts; or the ſun, as the Syriac verſion renders it; not Chriſt, the morning-ſtar, the day-ſpring from on high, and the ſun of righteouſneſs, who was already riſen upon them; nor the grace of God implanted in their hearts, by which they were already called out of darkneſs, and made light in the Lord; but as the day-ſtar is the bringer of light, as the word uſed ſignifies, or the fore-runner of the day, ſo it here intends the immediate ſigns and forerunners of the coming of Chriſt; which when obſerved in their hearts, and by their underſtandings, as being come to paſs, they may lift up their heads with joy, becauſe their redemption draws near, Luke xxi. 28. and ſo the Ethiopic here renders it, and redemption ariſe for you in your hearts. Now till this time, the ſure word of prophecy concerning Chriſt's ſecond coming is to be taken heed unto, as a lamp, light and torch, to direct us to it, to encourage us to love it, long for it, and haſten to it: and in ſo doing we ſhall do well; it will be well for the glory of God and Chriſt, this being ſetting our ſeals to them as true; and well for ourſelves, to keep up our faith, hope, and expectation of it unmoved.

Ver. 20. Knowing this firſt, &c.] Eſpecially, and in the firſt place, this is to be known, obſerved, and conſidered; that no prophecy of the ſcripture, that is contained in ſcripture, be it what it will, is of any private interpretation: not that this is levelled againſt the right of private judgment of ſcripture; or to be underſtood, as if a private believer had not a right of reading, ſearching, examining and judging, and interpreting the ſcriptures himſelf, by vertue of the unction which teacheth all things, and who, as a ſpiritual man, judgeth all things; otherwiſe, why are ſuch commended as doing well, by taking heed to prophecy, in the preceding verſe, and this given as a reaſon to encourage them to it? the words may be rendred, of one's own interpretation; that is, ſuch as a natural man forms of himſelf, by the meer force of natural parts and wiſdom, without the aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God; and which is done without comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual; and which is not agreable to the ſcripture, to the analogy of faith, and mind of Chriſt; tho' rather this phraſe ſhould be rendred, no prophecy of the ſcripture is of a man's own impulſe, invention, or compoſition; is not human, but purely divine: and this ſenſe carries in it a reaſon, why the ſure word of prophecy, concerning the ſecond coming of Chriſt, ſhould be taken heed to, and made uſe of as a light, 'till he does come; becauſe as no ſcripture prophecy, ſo not that, is a contrivance of man's, his own project and device, and what his own ſpirit prompts and impells him to, but what is made by the dictates and impulſe of the Spirit of God; for whatever may be ſaid of human predictions, or the falſe prophecies of lying men, who deliver them out, how and when they pleaſe, nothing of this kind can be ſaid of any ſcripture prophecy, nor of this concerning the ſecond coming of Chriſt; and this ſenſe the following words require.

Ver. 21. For the prophecy, &c.] The whole ſcripture, all the prophetic writings; ſo the Jews call the ſcriptures הנבואה, the prophecy[g], by way of eminence, and from the ſubject matter of the ſacred word: came not in old time by the will of man; was not brought into the world at firſt, or in any period of time, as and when man would, according to his pleaſure, and as he thought fit: neither Moſes, nor David, nor Iſaiah, nor Jeremiah, nor Ezekiel, nor Daniel, nor any other of the prophets, propheſied when they pleaſed, but when it was the will of God they ſhould; they were ſtirred up to propheſy, not by any human impulſe, but by a divine influence: with this agrees what R. Sangari ſays, "that the ſpeech "of the prophets, when the Holy Spirit clothed "them, in all their words was directed by a di"vine influence, and the prophet could not ſpeak "in the choice of his own words," or according to his will: but holy men of God; ſuch as he ſanctified by his Spirit, and ſeparated from the reſt of men to ſuch peculiar ſervice; and whom he employed as publick miniſters of his word: for ſo this phraſe men, or man of God often ſignifies, 1 Sam. ii. 27. 2 Tim. iii. 17. ſpake, as they were moved by the Holy Ghoſt; who illuminated their minds, gave them a knowledge of divine things, and a foreſight of future ones; dictated to them, what they ſhould ſay or write; and moved upon them ſtrongly, and by a ſecret and powerful impulſe, ſtirred them up to deliver, what they did, in the name and fear of God: which ſhews the authority of the Scriptures, that they are the word of God, and not of men; and as ſuch ſhould be attended to, and received with all affection and reverence; and that the Spirit is the beſt interpreter of them, who firſt dictated them; and that they are to be the rule of our faith and practice; nor are we to expect any other, until the ſecond coming of Chriſt.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter contains a deſcription of falſe teachers, that were then in Chriſtian churches, as there had been falſe prophets among the Jews; and they are deſcribed by the doctrines, which they privily introduced; in general, damnable hereſies; in particular, denying the Lord that bought them; and by their ſucceſs, having many followers of them in their pernicious ways; and by the ſad effects, following hereupon; with reſpect to the way of truth, that was blaſphemed; with reſpect to their hearers, they, through the covetouſneſs of theſe falſe teachers, were made merchandize of; and with reſpect to themſelves, ſwift and ſure deſtruction would be brought upon them, ver. 1, 2, 3. which is illuſtrated and confirmed by the inſtances of puniſhment in the angels, the men of the old world, and the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, ver. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. and whereas, in theſe inſtances, notice is taken of the deliverance of ſome righteous perſons, as Noah and Lot, when wicked men were deſtroyed; the Apoſtle draws this concluſion from the whole, that the Lord knows, both how to deliver the ſaints out of afflictions, and to reſerve wicked men until the day of judgment, then to be puniſhed, ver. 9. eſpecially ſuch ſhall be then puniſhed, who are deſcribed by their impure courſe of life, their contempt of civil government, and their preſumption and ſelf-will, ver. 10. which ſins of theirs are aggravated by the different conduct of angels, ſuperior to them; and by their being like brute beaſts, as ignorant as they, and even below them; whoſe puniſhment will be to periſh in their corruption, as the juſt reward of their unrighteouſneſs, ſince they are open in ſin, take pleaſure in it, and ſport themſelves with it, and are ſpots and blemiſhes in chriſtian ſocieties, ver. 11, 12, 13. and theſe, who are no other than the falſe teachers before ſpoken of, are further deſcribed by their adulterous eyes, which cannot ceaſe from ſin; by their beguiling unſtable ſouls; by the covetous practices their hearts were exerciſed with; by their juſt deſert, curſed children; by the courſe they ſteer, forſaking the right way, going aſtray from it, and following the way of Balaam in his covetouſneſs, and other wicked practices, for which he was reproved by his aſs; and by various metaphors, which expreſs the emptineſs of theſe perſons, and which alſo point at their deſtruction, and deſcribe their boaſts and brags, and the influence they have, through their laſciviouſneſs and uncleanneſs, on ſome perſons, who have been outwardly reformed, ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. and this they obtain over them in a very ſtupid and ſenſeleſs way, by promiſing them liberty, when through being overcome by them, and drawn into ſin, they were brought into bondage, and become ſervants of corruption; and ſo their caſe is worſe, than it was before their reformation, and profeſſion of religion; and better it would have been, not to have had the knowledge they had, than after it to turn from the paths of truth and holineſs; which is illuſtrated by a true ſcripture proverb, which expreſſes the filthy nature of ſin, the character of theſe men, and their irrecoverable ſtate and condition, ver. 19, 20, 21, 22.

Ver. 1. But there were falſe prophets alſo among the people, &c.] As well as holy men of God, who gave out prophecies by the inſpiration and impulſe of the Holy Spirit; that is, among the people of the Jews, God's profeſſing people, whoſe God was the Lord, and who had choſen them to be a ſpecial and peculiar people, above all people of the earth; and had diſtinguiſhed them by his favours from all others: among theſe, tho' the Syriac verſion reads in the world, there were falſe prophets, who ran, and were not ſent; and who propheſied, and the Lord ſpake not to them: of theſe there were many in Jeremiah's time, and in the times of Ezekiel; and in Ahab's time, beſides the four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal, ſlain by Elijah, there were four hundred that called themſelves the prophets of the Lord; among whom went forth a lying ſpirit, encouraging Ahab to go up to Ramoth Gilead, promiſing him proſperity and ſucceſs; Zedekiah the ſon of Chenaanah, with whom Micajah, the true prophet, had much contention, was at the head of them; and ſuch there were among that people in all ages, until the times of Chriſt, and in his likewiſe; ſee Matt. vii. 15. now from theſe, by an eaſy tranſition, the Apoſtle proceeds to another part of his deſign in this Epiſtle, to deſcribe the characters of falſe teachers under the preſent diſpenſation, ſation, that ſaints may beware, and avoid their pernicious principles and practices: even as there ſhall be falſe teachers among you; which need not to be wondered at, or ſtumble any, it being no new or ſtrange thing, but what was always more or leſs the caſe of the people of God. This is a prophecy of what ſhould be, and agrees with the prediction of our Lord, Matt. xxiv. 11, 24. and which regards not only the times immediately following, in which it had a remarkable fulfilment, for falſe teachers now began to ariſe, and appeared in great numbers in the age ſucceeding the Apoſtles, but to all periods of time from hence, to the ſecond coming of Chriſt; and theſe were to ſpring from, and be among ſuch that bore the chriſtian name, and ſo regards not Mahometans and deiſts; and it is to be obſerved, that the phraſe is varied in this clauſe, and theſe are called not prophets but teachers; becauſe as prophecy was more peculiar to the former diſpenſation, ſo is teaching to the preſent: who privily ſhall bring in damnable hereſies; errors in the fundamental doctrines of the Goſpel; ſuch as relate to a Trinity of perſons in the Godhead; and to the perſon of Chriſt, to his proper deity, diſtinct perſonality, eternal Sonſhip, and real humanity; and to his office, as mediator, rejecting him as the true Meſſiah, and as the only Saviour of ſinners; denying his ſacrifice and ſatisfaction, and the imputation of his righteouſneſs; and to the Holy Spirit, his deity, perſonality, and divine influences and operations: theſe are damnable, or deſtructive, or hereſies of deſtruction; which lead to eternal deſtruction both thoſe that introduce and propagate them, and thoſe that embrace and profeſs them; for they remove, or attempt to remove, the foundation of eternal life and happineſs: the manner in which theſe are uſually introduced, is privily; at unawares, ſecretly, under a diſguiſe, and gradually, by little and little, and not at once, and openly; and which is the conſtant character and practice of ſuch men, who lie in wait to deceive, creep into churches at unawares, and into houſes privately; and inſinuate their principles under ſpecious pretences and appearances of truth, uſing the hidden things of diſhoneſty, walking in craftineſs, handling the word of God deceitfully, and colouring things with falſe gloſſes and feigned words: and even denying the Lord that bought them; not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but God the Father; for the word κυριος, is not here uſed, which always is where Chriſt is ſpoken of as the Lord, but δεσποτης; and which is expreſſive of the power which maſters have over their ſervants [1], and which God has over all mankind; and wherever this word is elſewhere uſed, it is ſpoken of God the Father, whenever applied to a divine perſon, as in Luke ii. 29. Acts iv. 24. 2 Tim. ii. 21. Rev. vi. 10. and eſpecially this appears to be the ſenſe, from the parallel text in Jude 4. where the Lord God denied by thoſe men is manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and by whom theſe perſons are ſaid to be bought: the meaning is not, that they were redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, for Chriſt is not intended; and beſides, whenever redemption by Chriſt is ſpoken of, the price is uſually mentioned, or ſome circumſtance or another which fully determines the ſenſe; ſee Acts xx. 28. 1 Cor. vi. 20. and vii. 23. Eph. i. 7. 1 Pet. i. 18. 19. Rev. v. 9. whereas here is not the leaſt hint of any thing of this kind: add to this, that ſuch who are redeemed by Chriſt are the elect of God only, the people of Chriſt, his ſheep and friends, and church, and who are never left to deny him ſo as to periſh eternally; for could ſuch be loſt, or deceive, or be deceived finally and totally by damnable hereſies, and bring on themſelves ſwift deſtruction, Chriſt's purchaſe would be in vain, and the ranſom price be paid for nought; but the word bought regards temporal mercies and deliverance, which theſe men enjoyed, and is uſed as an aggravation of their ſin in denying the Lord; both by words, delivering out ſuch tenets as are derogatory to the glory of the divine perfections, and which deny one or other of them, and of his purpoſes, providence, promiſes and truths; and by works, turning the doctrine of the grace of God into laſciviouſneſs, being diſobedient and reprobate to every good work; that they ſhould act this part againſt the Lord who had made them, and upheld them in their beings, and took care of them in his providence, and had followed them with goodneſs and mercy all the days of their lives; juſt as Moſes aggravates the ingratitude of the Jews in Deut. xxxii. 6. from whence this phraſe is borrowed, and to which it manifeſtly refers: do ye thus requite the Lord, O fooliſh people and unwiſe! is not he thy father that hath bought thee? hath he not made thee, and eſtabliſhed thee? nor is this the only place the Apoſtle refers to in this chapter, ſee ver. 12, 13. compared with Deut. xxxii. 5. and it is to be obſerved, that the perſons he writes to were Jews, who were called, the people the Lord had redeemed and purchaſed, Exod. xv. 13, 16. and ſo were the firſt falſe teachers that roſe up among them; and therefore this phraſe is very applicable to them: and bring upon themſelves ſwift deſtruction; either in this life, being ſuddenly cut off in the midſt of their days, and by the immediate hand of God, as Arius and other hereticks have been; or eternal damnation in the other, which their tenets lead unto, and which will ſwiftly come upon them when they are promiſing themſelves peace and ſafety.

Ver. 2. And many ſhall follow their pernicious ways, &c.] Their principles and their practices, which lead to deſtruction. The Complutenſian edition, the Alexandrian copy, and ſix copies of Beza's, and others, read their laſciviouſneſſes; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, their luxuries; and all the Oriental verſions ſeem to have read in like manner. The Syriac verſion renders it, their impurity; and the Arabic verſion, their unchaſtities; and the Ethiopic verſion their luſt; and which ſeems to have reſpect to the impure converſation of the followers of Simon Magus, the Nicolaitans, the Gnoſtics, Carpocratians, and others, who indulged themſelves in all unnatural luſts and uncleanneſs; and generally, when men make ſhipwrack of faith, they alſo do of a good conſcience, and become immoral in their converſations; and yet, as deſtructive as their principles, and as diſhonourable and ſcandalous as their practices be, many were, and are their followers; ſo it was foretold by Chriſt, Matt. xxiv. 11. and ſo it has been, Rev. xiii. 3. The road both of error and wickedneſs is a broad one, in which many walk; and a multitude is no proof of the truth of a church, or of the principles of men, nor to be followed: by reaſon of whom the way of truth ſhall be evil ſpoken of; that is, either Chriſt, who is truth itſelf, and the true way to eternal life and happineſs; or the Goſpel, the word of truth, which holds forth Chriſt the truth, and points to him, and every other truth, and nothing but truth; or the chriſtian religion, which is the true way, in oppoſition to all ſects and hereſies; and is what ſhould be blaſphemed and ſpoken againſt, either by theſe men or their followers; lowers; for the phraſe may be rendered, by whom, as it is in the Vulgate Latin verſion, and the meaning be, that they ſhould, in a blaſphemous way, ſpeak and write againſt Chriſt and his truths, reproach and revile them, and in a virulent manner oppoſe them, and trample them under foot: or for the ſake of them, as other verſions read; and as we do, by reaſon of them; they ſhould be the occaſion, by their impure lives, of the name of Chriſt, and his doctrines, being blaſphemed by prophane and irreligious men; ſee Rom. ii. 24. The Alexandrian copy, and one of Stephens's, read the glory of truth; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion, the glory of his truth.

Ver. 3. And thro' covetouſneſs, &c.] Which is generally a prevailing vice among falſe teachers, they having no other end in view than themſelves; either to gain popular applauſe and vain-glory, which they are always covetous of; or to amaſs riches to themſelves, after which they have an inſatiable deſire: ſhall they with feigned words; made words, words of their own deviſing, and not which the Holy Ghoſt teacheth; whereby they cover themſelves, and privily introduce their pernicious principles; and therefore new words and phraſes, are always to be ſuſpected and guarded againſt, eſpecially in articles of moment and importance: or with flattering words and fair ſpeeches, great ſwelling words of vanity, having mens perſons in admiration, becauſe of worldly advantage; and in this way they gain their point: make merchandize of you; deal with the ſouls of men, as merchants do with their goods, carry them to market and ſell them; ſo falſe teachers deal with the ſouls of their followers, draw them into their deſtructive principles and practices at their own expence, enrich themſelves by the price of them, and ſell them to ſatan, and they themſelves pay for it; ſee Zech. xi. 5. Rev. xviii. 13. but in the iſſue, and that in a ſhort time, they'll be no gainers by ſuch practices: whoſe judgment now of a long time lingereth not; that is, their condemnation, which God in righteouſneſs has determined, from the creation of the world, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, or from all eternity, ſee Jude 4. to bring them into, for their vile principles and practices is not retarded and delayed; it does not linger and ſtay behind, or ſlacken its pace; it will not tarry, it will come upon them at the appointed time: and their damnation ſlumbereth not; an avenging God, who has appointed them to damnation for their ſins, ſlumbers not; the juſtice of God is not aſleep, nor careleſs and negligent, but is awake, and watches over them, to bring the evil upon them they have deſerved, and is in reſerve for them, and will haſten to perform it; the determined deſtruction does not lie dormant, but in a little time will be ſtirred up, and fall with dreadful weight on ſuch ſinners, as may be concluded from the following awful inſtances.

Ver. 4. For if God ſpared not the angels that ſinned, &c.] By whom are meant, the devil and his angels; who are ſpirits created by God, and as ſuch were good; their firſt eſtate which they left was pure and holy, as well as high and honourable; they were at firſt in the truth, though they abode not in it; they were once among the morning ſtars and ſons of God, and were angels of light; their numbers are many, and therefore are here expreſſed in the plural number, angels, though it cannot be ſaid how large; a legion of them was in one man; one at firſt might be in the rebellion, and draw a large number with him into it, at leaſt was at the head of it, who is called Beelzebub, the prince of devils: what their firſt ſin was, and the occaſion of it, is not eaſy to ſay; it is generally thought to be pride, affecting a likeneſs to, or an equality with God; ſince this was what man was tempted to by them, and by which he fell as they are thought to do; and becauſe this is the ſin of ſuch, who fall into the condemnation of the devil; 1 Tim. iii. 6. and is the ſin that goes before a fall in common; as it did before the fall of man, ſo it might before the fall of angels, Prov. xvi. 18. The paſſage in John viii. 44. ſeems moſt clearly of any to expreſs their ſin, which was not abiding in the truth; in the truth of the Goſpel, particularly the great truth of the ſalvation of men, by the incarnate Son of God; and which they could by no means brook, and which might ſpring from pride, they not bearing the thought, that the human nature ſhould be exalted above theirs; hence the Jews, in oppoſing Chriſt as the Meſſiah and Saviour, is ſaid to be of their father the devil, and to do his luſts; and Judas that betrayed him, and fell from his Apoſtleſhip, and the truth, is called a devil; and the hereſies of men, reſpecting the perſon and offices of Chriſt, are ſtiled doctrines of devils; and men that have profeſſed this truth and afterwards deny it, are repreſented in the ſame irrecoverable and deſperate caſe with devils, and muſt expect the ſame puniſhment, John viii. 44. and vi. 70. 1 Tim. iv. 1. Heb. vi. 6. and x. 26, 29. and alſo it may be obſerved on the contrary, that the good angels that ſtand, greatly love, value, eſteem, and pry into the truths of the Goſpel; particularly the ſcheme of man's ſalvation, by the incarnation, obedience, ſufferings, and death of Chriſt: now theſe God ſpared not; or had no mercy on, as the Arabic verſion renders it; he did not forgive their ſin, nor provide a Saviour for them; but directly, and at once, notwithſtanding the dignity and excellency of their nature, in ſtrict juſtice, and awful ſeverity, without any mercy, inflicted due puniſhment on them; wherefore it cannot be thought that falſe teachers, who as they, abide not in the truth, but deny and oppoſe it, ſhould eſcape the vengeance of God: but caſt them down to hell; they were hurled out of heaven, from whence they fell as lightning, into the loweſt, or inferior places, as the Syriac verſion renders it; either into the air, as in Eph. ii. 2. or into the earth, as in Rev. xii. 9. or into the deep, the abyſs, the bottomleſs pit, where they are detained, as in a priſon, Luke viii. 31. Rev. ix. 11. and xx. 3, 7. though for certain reaſons, and at certain times, are ſuffered to come forth, and rove about in this earth, and in the air: and theſe, when removed from their antient ſeats in heaven, were not merely bid to go away, as the wicked will at the day of judgment; or were drove out, as Adam was from the garden of Eden, but caſt down; with great power, indignation, wrath, and contempt, never to be raiſed and reſtored again: and delivered them into chains of darkneſs; leaving them under the guilt of ſin, which is the power of darkneſs, and in black deſpair; ſhutting them up in unbelief, impenitence, and hardneſs of mind; being holden with the cords of their ſins, and in the moſt dreadful ſtate of bondage and captivity to their luſts, in juſt judgment on them; and in the moſt miſerable and uncomfortable condition, being driven from the realms of light, deprived of the face and preſence of God, in the utmoſt horror and trembling, and fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation to conſume them; and in utter darkneſs, without the leaſt glimmering of light, joy, peace, and comfort; and where there is nothing but weeping, wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth; and being alſo under the reſtraints of the power and providence of God, and not able to ſtir or move, or do any thing without divine permiſſion; and being likewiſe by the everlaſting, unalterable, and inſcrutable purpoſes and decrees of God, appointed to everlaſting wrath and deſtruction; by which they are conſigned and bound over to it, and held faſt, that they cannot eſcape it: to be reſerved unto judgment; to the day of judgment, to the laſt and general judgment; the judgment of torment, as the Syriac verſion here calls it; the words may be rendred, and delivered them to be kept at judgment, in chains of darkneſs; when they will be in full torment, which they are not yet in; and then they will be caſt into the lake of fire prepared for them, and be everlaſtingly ſhut up in the priſon of hell, from whence they'll never more be ſuffered to go out; till which time they are indeed under reſtraints, and are held in by Chriſt, who has the power of binding and looſing them at pleaſure; and who then, as the judge of men and devils, will bring them forth, and paſs and execute ſentence on them. The Jews give an account of the dejection, fall and puniſhment of the angels, in a manner pretty much like this of Peter's, whom they ſpeak of under different names; ſo of the ſerpent that deceived Adam and Eve, whom they call Samael, and becauſe of that ſin of his, they ſay, [k] that the Lord "caſt "down Samael and his company from the place of "their holineſs, out of heaven;" and of Aza and Azael, angels, who they ſay, ſinned by luſting after the daughters of men, they frequently affirm, that God caſt them down from their holineſs [l], and that, he אפיל לון לתתא, caſt them down below in chains [m]; and that God caſt them down from their holineſs from above; and when they deſcended, they were rolled in the air—and he brought them to the mountains of darkneſs, which are called the mountains of the eaſt, and bound them in chains of iron, and the chains were ſunk into the midſt of the great deep [n]: and elſewhere they ſay [o], that God caſt them down from their holy degree, out of heaven—from their holy place out of heaven—and bound them in chains of iron, in the mountains of darkneſs.

Ver. 5. And ſpared not the old world, &c.] In diſtinction from the preſent world, that now is; which was, as it were, formed anew out of that, which was deſtroyed by the deluge. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, the original world; and the Ethiopic verſion, the firſt world; it deſigns the antient inhabitants of the world, as it was from the beginning, before the flood; who being wicked, were not ſpared by God, but had juſt puniſhment inflicted on them: but ſaved Noah the eighth perſon; not the eighth from Adam, as Enoch is ſaid to be the ſeventh from him, Jude 14. for he was the tenth; nor is it to be read with the following clauſe, the eighth preacher of righteouſneſs; but he was the eighth perſon, or one of the eight perſons, ſaved from the flood; ſee 1 Pet. iii. 20. hence the Ethiopic verſion, rather as a paraphraſe than a verſion, renders it, but cauſed to remain ſeven ſouls with Noah, whom he ſaved; Hottinger [p], and Dr. Hammond [q] obſerve, from the Arabic writers, that the mountain on which the ark reſted, and a town near it, were called Themanim; that is, the eight, from the number of perſons then and there ſaved: a preacher of righteouſneſs; of the righteouſneſs of God, in all his ways and works, and in caſe he ſhould deſtroy the world by a flood, as he had threatned; and of civil and moral righteouſneſs among men, both by words, during the building of the ark, and by works, by his own example, in his righteous life and converſation; and of the righteouſneſs of faith, or of Chriſt, by which he was juſtified, and of which he was an heir, Heb. xi. 7. the Jews [r] ſay, that Noah was a prophet; and they repreſent him alſo as a preacher, and even tell us the very words he uſed in his exhortations to the old world [s], ſaying, "be ye turned from your "evil ways and works, leſt the waters of the flood "come upon you, and cut off all the ſeed of the "children of men:" but though Noah, a preacher of righteouſneſs, was ſaved, falſe teachers can't expect to eſcape divine vengeance; who only are transformed as miniſters of righteouſneſs, but in truth are miniſters of unrighteouſneſs; oppoſers of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and live unrighteous lives and converſations, and ſo their end will be according to their works: bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly; or the the ungodly of the world, as רשעי ארעא, the ungodly of the earth [t]; ſee Pſ. lxxv. 8. though here it indeed means a whole world of wicked men, all but a very few, which were deſtroyed by the flood. This expreſſes both the wickedneſs of the men of that generation, the imagination of the thoughts of whoſe heart, were evil continually; and whoſe lives were filled up with uncleanneſs, violence, rapine, oppreſſion, injuſtice, and corruption, of all ſorts; and likewiſe the large numbers of them, there was a whole world of them; and yet this did not ſecure them from the wrath of God, but ſerved to ſtir it up the more; wherefore falſe teachers and their followers, muſt not build upon their numbers, or hope to be ſcreened from juſt puniſhment on that account; ſince a world of ungodly men, were for their wickedneſs, at once ſwept away, with a flood of God's bringing upon them; cauſing that very uſeful and ſerviceable element of water, to be the means of their deſtruction; for this was not a caſual thing, which came of itſelf, or by chance, but was of God himſelf, who broke up the fountains of the great deep, and opened the windows of heaven, and deſtroyed at once, all mankind, men, women, and children, and every living creature, excepting what were with Noah in the ark: and ſince they were perſons of ſuch a character as here deſcribed, it is not to be thought their puniſhment is ended here; it is the general notion of the Jews [u], that "the generation of the flood, ſhall "have no part in the world to come, nor ſhall they "ſtand in judgment."

Ver. 6. And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha into aſhes, &c.] By raining brimſtone and fire upon them, from heaven, Gen. xix. 24. which ſoon reduced them to aſhes, with Admah and Zeboim, Deut. xxix. 23. cities delightfully ſituated, which were as the garden of God, and the land of Egypt, together with the inhabitants of them; and after they had received a ſignal mercy, in being reſcued by Abraham from the kings who had carried them captive; and tho' Abraham, the friend of God, interceded for them, and righteous Lot dwelt among them. The firſt of theſe cities, is in the Hebrew language called Sedom; Philo the Jew [w] calls it Sodoma, as in Rom. ix. 29. and in the Septuagint on Gen.

Gen. xiii. 10. and xviii. 22; and xix. 1. and Iſ. i. 9. here it is ſaid to be a city, and Joſephus[x] always calls it the city of the Sodomites, but in Matt. x. 15. and xi. 24. we read of the land of Sodom; and ſo Philo[y] the Jew ſpeaks of χωρα, the region or country of the Sodomites; here the word is of the plural number, as in Matt. x. 15. and xi. 23, 24. Luke xvii. 29. as it is alſo in the Septuagint in Gen. x. 19. and xiii. 13. and xiv. 2, 8, 10, 11, 12, 16, 17, 21, 22. and in Philo the Jew,[z] and ſo is Gomorrha in ſome copies of this place, as in Matt. x. 15. Solinus the hiſtorian, gives an account of theſe cities, in agreement with this; "a good way off of Jeruſalem, "he ſays[a], is opened a ſorrowful gulph, which "the black ground, in cinerem ſoluta, reduced "to aſhes, ſhews it to be touched by heaven; "there were two towns, or cities, the one called "Sodom, and the other Gomorrha; where an apple "is produced, which altho' it has an appearance of "ripeneſs, cannot be eat; for the outward ſkin "that encompaſſes it, only contains a ſort of ſoot, "or embers within, which, ever ſo lightly ſqueezed, "evaporates into ſmoke and duſt;" and ſo the author of the book of Wiſdom, ch. x. 7. ſpeaking of the five cities, on which fire fell, ſays, "of whoſe "wickedneſs, even to this day, the waſte land that "ſmoketh is a teſtimony; and plants bearing fruit, "that never come to ripeneſs." Philo the Jew[b] ſays, that "there are ſhewed to this day in Syria, "monuments of this unſpeakable deſtruction, that "happened; as ruins, aſhes, ſulphur, ſmoke, and "a weak flame, breaking forth as of a fire burning:" condemned them with an overthrow; by this ſad cataſtrophe, God condemned the ſins of thoſe men of Sodom and Gomorrha, and adjudged their perſons to everlaſting damnation; of which their temporal puniſhment, was an emblem and figure; ſee Jude 7. the word overthrow, is generally uſed, when this deſtruction is ſpoken of, Deut. xxix. 23. Iſ. xiii. 19. Jer. l. 40. Amos iv. 11. and therefore retained by the Apoſtle here: making them enſamples unto thoſe, who after ſhould live ungodly; in the commiſſion of any ſins, and be open, bold, and impudent in them, and declare them as they did; and eſpecially that ſhould live in the commiſſion of the ſame ſins, thoſe unnatural luſts and uncleanneſſes, which to this day go by the name of ſodomy, and ſodomitical practices; now the puniſhment of the inhabitants of theſe cities was an enſample to ſuch wicked livers, ſhewing what they muſt expect, and was a repreſentation of thoſe everlaſting burnings, which ſuch ſinners, as a righteous retaliation for their burning luſts, ſhall be caſt into. The Jews ſay[c] the ſame of the men of Sodom and Gomorrha as of the old world; "the men of "Sodom have no part in the world to come, as is "ſaid Gen. xiii. 13. but the men of Sodom were wicked, "and ſinners before the Lord exceedingly; wicked in "this world, and ſinners in the world to come;" ſee the note on Jude 7.

Ver. 7. And delivered juſt Lot, &c.] Who was a juſt man, being juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to him; and having the new man formed in him, which is created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs; and living ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly, though not without ſin; for there is not a juſt man that lives and ſinneth not; this righteous man was delivered from the burning of Sodom by the means of angels, Gen. xix. 16, 17. The Jews are very injurious to this good man's character, and give a very different one of him from this of the Apoſtle's; they call him a wicked man, a perfect wicked man, as wicked as the inhabitants of Sodom[d]; and ſay, that becauſe they abounded in ſin, therefore Lot choſe to dwell among them[e]; and affirm[f], that all the time he was with Abraham, God did not join himſelf to him, and did not commune with Abraham on his account; but when he was ſeparated from him did; they call him the evil imagination, and the old ſerpent that was accurſed, and curſed Lot[g]; but Philo the Jew[h] ſpeaks better of him, and ſays, that he did not embrace and delight in the iniquities of the inhabitants, though he did not arrive to the perfection of wiſdom; and the author of the book of Wiſdom, ch. x. 6. calls him the righteous man, as the Apoſtle does here; and very truly, ſince it follows: vexed with the filthy converſation of the wicked; the inhabitants of Sodom, who had no regard to the laws of God or man, or to the law and light of nature; but as worſe than brute beaſts, lived daily in the commiſſion of unnatural luſts; and therefore their converſation is rightly ſaid to be filthy, and was a grievous burden to righteous Lot; for to a good man, not only his own ſins, but the ſins of others, whether profeſſors or prophane, are a burden, and make him groan under them, being grievouſly fatigued with them, as this good man was, and weary of life becauſe of them, as Rebekah was, thro' the daughters of Heth.

Ver. 8. For that righteous man dwelling among them, &c.] Which is ſometimes the lot of good men, to their great ſorrow and grief, Pſ. cxx. 5, 6, 7. Iſ. vi. 5. Upon mentioning thoſe words in Gen. xiii. 12, 13. and pitched his tent towards Sodom, but the men of Sodom were wicked, &c. ſays R. Eleazar[i]; "he is a righteous man that dwells between "two wicked men, and does not learn their "works;" and ſuch an one was Lot, whatever they are elſewhere pleaſed to ſay of him: in ſeeing and hearing; the Vulgate Latin verſion reads this in connexion with the word righteous, thus, in ſeeing and hearing he was righteous: he could not bear to ſee their filthy actions, and hear their obſcene language, but turned away from them, and ſhut his eyes, and ſtopped his ears, by which he appears to be a righteous and good man; tho' rather this belongs to what follows, ſeeing their wicked practices, and hearing their filthy talk: vexed his righteous ſoul from day to day with their unlawful deeds; either they vexed him, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read; or rather he vexed himſelf; he fretted and teazed himſelf, and became exceeding uneaſy, and was put upon a rack and torture, as the word ſignifies, continually, with their wicked actions; ſee Pſ. cxix. 158.

Ver. 9. The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly, &c.] That fear him, as the Syriac verſion renders it; or that rightly worſhip, as the Arabic; ſuch as Noah and Lot, men that know God in Chriſt ſpiritually and experimentally; that believe in him, love him, fear him, worſhip him in ſpirit and truth, and live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly. This verſe is a concluſion from the preceding inſtances and examples, reſpecting both the mercy and juſtice of God; the mercy of God in delivering the godly and righteous out of temptations; by which are meant, not the temptations of ſatan to ſin, diſtruſt, and deſpondency, tho' the Lord knows how, and is both able and willing to, and does deliver them from them; but afflictions and tribulations, ſuch as Noah and Lot were expoſed to; and which are ſo called, becauſe they try the graces, particularly the faith and patience of the godly; and to deliver from theſe is the Lord's work: he grants his preſence in them; he ſupports under them; he ſanctifies them to them, and in his own time delivers out of them; for he knows how, and by what means, and when to do it, and is both able and willing: he has determined to do it, for the nature, meaſure, and duration of afflictions are fixed by him, and in his providence he does do it, as the inſtances before given prove. And to reſerve the unjuſt unto the day of judgment to be puniſhed. This is that part of the concluſion from the above premiſes, reſpecting the juſtice of God; and by the unjuſt are deſigned, perſons without a righteouſneſs, and that are full of all unrighteouſneſs, and take pleaſure in it, and live unrighteous lives, committing acts of injuſtice, both with reſpect to God and men; and the Lord that has reſerved the fallen angels in chains of darkneſs unto judgment, knows how to reſerve in priſon, as the Arabic verſion renders it, the ſouls of thoſe in hell, and their bodies in the grave unto the day of judgment; of the laſt and general judgment, when Chriſt ſhall judge both quick and dead, and bring every ſecret thing to light, which that day ſhall declare, God has appointed to judge the world in; in order to be puniſhed in ſoul and body, with everlaſting and compleat deſtruction, which, as yet, is not. This phraſe, the day of judgment, is uſed in Judith xvi. 17. and is a Jewiſh one.

Ver. 10. But chiefly them that walk after the fleſh, &c.] Not merely after the dictates of corrupt nature, as all men, and even God's elect do, in a ſtate of unregeneracy; but after ſtrange fleſh, as Jude expreſſes it, after the fleſh of men: in the luſt of uncleanneſs; not of fornication and adultery, but of ſodomy, and ſodomitical practices; ſins exceeding great, not only contrary to the law and light of nature, but diſhonourable to human nature; and are what prevail where idolatry, infidelity, errors, and hereſies do; and which, as they are ſins of the deepeſt dye, deſerve the greater damnation, and are chiefly, and more eſpecially puniſhed by God with great ſeverity: and deſpiſe government; of parents, to whom theſe proud boaſters and blaſphemers are generally diſobedient; and of maſters, pretending it to be contrary to their chriſtian liberty; and of magiſtrates on the ſame account, and as being a reſtraint upon their luſts; which is to deſpiſe the ordinance of God, his repreſentatives, and to introduce anarchy and confuſion, and to open a door to all manner of ſin; and alſo the government of Chriſt, as head of the church, and king of Zion, whom they will not have to reign over them, and therefore reject his laws, and ſubmit not to his ordinances; and likewiſe the government of the world itſelf by God; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, deſpiſe their creator; denying his omniſcience and his providence, giving out, that he neither ſees, obſerves, and takes notice of what is done in the world; nor does he himſelf do either good or evil, or concern himſelf about what is done by men. Preſumptuous are they; bold and daring, not fearing to ſpeak againſt men of the moſt exalted character on earth, and againſt God himſelf in heaven; ſee Pſ. lxxiii. 8, 9. Self-willed; pleaſed with themſelves, and their own conceits, their dogma's and opinions, with their high ſenſe, and profound judgment; and being obſtinate in their ſentiments, and reſolutely bent to retain and defend them. They are not afraid to ſpeak evil of dignities; or glories; of the Apoſtles, who were ſet in the firſt place in the church, and were the glory of Chriſt, 1 Cor. xii. 28. 2 Cor. viii. 23. or of angels, ſtiled thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers; or rather of civil magiſtrates, ſet in high places, and to whom glory and honour are due; which to do is contrary to the law of God, and of dangerous conſequence, Exod. xxii. 28. Eccl. x. 20.

Ver. 11. Whereas angels, which are greater in power and might, &c.] Which is not to be underſtood of evil angels, or devils; for beſides, that they are greatly weakned and impaired by their fall, they are the accuſers of men, and railers and ſlanderers of the beſt and greateſt of men, and the origin of all the blaſphemies that are vented againſt God or men; but of good angels, who excel in ſtrength, who are not only guardians to particular men, and encamp about the ſaints, but preſide over provinces and kingdoms, for which their power and might do abundantly qualify them; and in which they are greater, that is, not than the devils, or than the falſe teachers, tho' both are true, but than dominions and dignities, than kings, princes, and civil magiſtrates: and yet theſe bring not railing accuſation againſt them before the Lord; either againſt themſelves, as the Arabic verſion, and one of Beza's copies read; againſt one another, againſt thoſe of their own ſpecies, that are in a higher or lower claſs or office than themſelves; and therefore men ought not to deſpiſe magiſtracy, or the higher powers that are over them: or elſe againſt the fallen angels, the devils, as ſhould ſeem from Jude 9. or rather againſt civil magiſtrates, kings, and princes of this world, who, tho' ſo much below them, they vouchſafe to take under their care, and protect them, even heathen princes, Dan. x. 20. and tho' there may be oftentimes many things unbecoming in them, yet they don't accuſe them, or rail againſt them before the Lord; and even when, by his orders, they inflict puniſhment on their perſons, as on Sennacherib, and Herod, and others, yet they do not ſpeak evil of their office; and therefore, ſince angels, who are ſo much above men, even above the moſt dignified among them, behave in this manner, it muſt be an aggravation of the ſin of theſe perſons, who are ſo much below them, to ſpeak evil of them.
